TO THE RENOWMED Pieres and noble Lordes, the Conſuls, and the whole ſenate of the famous Citie of Frankeford. I. Caluine.

IF euer it ſeemed expedient that the pageants of vertues ſhould be ſhewed openly to the imitation of others (which might bee a ſpurre as well to the laſie lingerers, as to the reſtie runners): ſurely the ſlouthfull dealing and ſluggiſh behauiour whiche is vſed in theſe our corrupt dayes maketh it ſeeme neceſſarie: that the greater part of men which rather ſtart back, then willingly ſtep forward, ſhold bee conſtrained at the leaſt with ſhame of negligence to doe their dutie. For we ſee euery man buſilie bent to a certaine contention who ſhall excell in wicked practiſes, and that both in priuate and publike affaires: that no Monarche doth ſeeme to be inferiour to the nations that border vpon him either in policie, or vigilancie, or power, or bolde attempt, whereby he may enlarge the boundes of his empire: that no citie or common weale doth giue place to any in craftineſſe and all captious dealing: that no man is the ſecond in ſubtletie among the proud and ambitious: finally there is no man which hath not conſpired with his companie, and that in the way of contention, ſtilie to incite the reſt as it were with a becke to all vitious vanitie, and he that is ringleader in all naughtineſſe ſoneſt ſtirreth vp other to his lewdneſſe, whereas in the rankeſt route of ribalds is ſcarce one found out that fauoureth honeſtie: which maketh me thinke it very profitable that ſuch rare vertues as ſometime raigne in noble perſonages, ſhould bee aduaunced to the loftie theater or ſtage of due commendation, to the intent that they being ſpied a farre of might allure the greater number to like them and liue accordingly. And this I confeſſe (right honorable) was the chiefeſt cauſe that moued me to publiſh this my labour abroad, vnder the title of your names. For although I ſhall perſuade my ſelfe to haue profited very wel, if any that beginne of their owne accorde to creepe forward, ſhalbe incouraged by me to runne faſter: yet did not I ſo muche reſpect this, as that I might perſuade other to ioyn hands with you, or at the leaſt to tread the ſame path that you do. Notwithſtading I haue not purpoſed to recite as out of a rolle all the godly qualities wherewith you are throughly furniſhed: only it ſhall ſuffice at this time to ſet forth that one vertue wherewith you haue bound to your honours as with a more holy bond, aſwell mee, as diuers other faithfull ſeruants of Ieſus Chriſt. This one thing is worthie highly to be prayſed that fiue yeeres ſince when as an horrible feare had affrighted the mindes of all men in euery place: whenas the ouerthrowe that our enemies had giuen vs did threaten a miſerable ruine to the churches throughout Germany, & almoſt an vtter extinguiſhing of the Goſpel, you euen at that time beeing placed in the fore front of the battaile ſtood ſtoutly to the free confeſsion of your faith, which was hated to death, and retained with all con-ſtancie that ſincere doctrine of pietie which before you receiued: which is a manifeſt argument that when you were toſſed with greeuous cares and dangerous turmoyles, you deſired nothing more then to fight manfully vnder Chriſtes banner. But that which followeth will ſurely make your names immortall: that you doe not only ſet out amongeſt your ſelues the true worſhip of God, and imploy your faithfull labour, to cõteine your citizens within the ſheepfold of Chriſt: but alſo gather togeather the diſperſed relikes of his church, thruſt out of other nations, which are as it were, members of the ſame, all rent and pulled in peeces. Doubtles, it did greatly reioice my hart (cõſidering the troubleſom time) to heare that the true worſhipers of God, which fled in exile from England and other countries, were gently receiued and entertained among you: and that you did not only releeue and eaſe their heauie baniſhment but that you had alſo a due conſideration of the glory of the ſonne of God, inſomuch that you made his Goſpel to be ſounded in your citie euen by the tongues of aliants, and that in a ſtraunge language. The like curteſie was ſhewed of late by the Magiſtrates of Tigurine to the afflicted citizens of Lo. whom they did not only receiue & foſter within the walles of their Citie, when at home they coulde not worſhip God as they woulde: but alſo erected a Temple for them wherein they might celebrate Gods holy ſeruice: neither were they diſwaded by the diuerſitie of tongues from ſuffering Chriſt to ſpeake Italian, euen in the middeſt of Tigurine: but I let them paſſe and come againe to that I was about to ſay of you. As ſoone as I vnderſtoode that your curteſie ſtretched ſo farre, as to ſuffer my countrimen to haue a holy congregation in your citie: perceiuing my ſelfe bound vnto you by a priuate benefit: I thought good to teſtifie my thãkful hart by this gift which now I preſent vnto you. For as the condition of our countrie men is rightly to be lamented, who dwelling in their natiue ſoyle, ſeeme by the tyrannous ſacriledge of the Pope to be cleane baniſhed from Chriſts kingdome: ſo on the contrary part, it is not a little to bee reioyced at, that they haue a reſting place graunted them in a ſtraunge countrie, where they may render due honour vnto the liuing God. And ſurely this holy hoſpitalitie which you haue vſed, not ſo much towardes men as to Chriſt himſelfe, ſhall bee a meane as I truſt, to moue God to powre his rare benefites vpon you, and ſtill to continue his liberalitie towarde you, which do alredie floriſh in all proſperitie. Doubtleſſe it conſtrained mee (as I ſignified before) to dedicate this my booke vnto you, which is a Commentarie vpon the Harmonie made of the three Euangeliſts: in making wherof, I haue takẽ ſome paines with no leſſe fidelitie thẽ induſtry. But as it is to ſmal purpoſe to declare how ſeriouſly I haue traueled herein; ſo do I ſubmit my ſelf to other mens iudgmẽts: for ỹ learned, wiſe, and diſcreete Readers, who as they take great delight in the common vtilitie, ſo they be not aſhamed like rude & barbarous caytifes, to learne & augment their knowledge by reading and ſtudie. But as for peruers and ouerthwart wranglers, I little eſteeme, I meane not cowled Monkes, who for the maintenance of the Popes tyrannie fight in open place againſt vs: but alſo thoſe vnnaturall drones which, being mingled amõg vs, deſire nothing more, then clean to extinguiſh al ſight of learning, to this intent that they may cloke and couer their own ignorance.

For

For although like dogges they despitefully bark at me, yet wil I vse this exception alwaies, that I neede not submitte my selfe to their censure or iudgement, either by the law of God or of men, which are not onely to be kept vnder like children for their blamefull and infamous vnskilfulnes: but also most seuerely to be punished for their malitious obstinacie, & to stubbern impudecie. But whatsoeuer they say, I trust the better sort wil graunt, that it is lawfull for me to acknowledge without arrogancie, that faithfull labour, which I haue imploied to the profit of Gods Church. There came forth two yeeres since the gospel of Iohn, with my interpretation, which I truste hath not beene fruiteleſſe. And thus like an apparitor, I haue endeuoured to my power, to set forth Christe, ryding princelike in his foure wheeled chariot, very gloriously: By reading of which worke, when the gentle readers haue profited them selues, they wil not be loath to confesse, that they haue not studied it in vaine: which Euangelicall history being described and sette forth by foure witnesses, appointed by God himselfe, I do not without cause compare vnto a chariot: for of this sweete and pleasaunt consent God seemeth purposelye to haue made as it were, a triumphant chariot for his son, out of which he might plainly appeare to be seene of al his faithful people, and by the swiftnes whereof he might lightly passe, and as it were, raunge ouer the whole world. Neither doth Augustine vnfitly compare the foure Euangelistes to trumpets, the noyse whereof doth sound in al coastes, that the Churche of Christe beeing summoned out of the foure quarters of the world, might flock and gather together from the East and the VVeste, from the South and the North, vnto an holy consent of faith. VVherefore their absurd curiositie is the lesse to be borne withal, who being not content with these Gospels (which be as it were proclamations proceeding from heauen) thrust out their own toyes, and corrupt imaginatiõs, which do nothing but defile the puritie of faith, & cause Christes name to be scorned and had in derision of the vngodly. As for you, which doe farre excel the common sort, since you deteſt in minde al that corrupt leuen, wherewith the true sinceritie of the Gospell is infected, and shewe your selues to delight in nothing more then in maintaining and allowing the plaine and simple doctrine, as it is set forth by Christ himselfe: I am not only perswaded that you wil very wel like of this my watchful worke, which expoundeth the treasure of glad tidings: but also I haue a good hope, that this signe or token of my good will and loue to you ward, will be aswel acceptable, in that I haue dedicated the same vnto you. Thus I bid you farewel, right honourable Lordes, and wisse that Christ may direct you with his holy spirit, strengthen you with his power, preserue you vnder his protection, and enrich your Citie and common wea- with his plenteous benediction. At Geneua, the first of Aug. The yeere of our Lordes natiuitie, 1555.

¶TO THE RIGHT HOnorable, Fraunces Earle of Bedford, of the noble order of the Garter Knight, one of the Lordes of her Maieſties moſt honorable priuie Counſel, grace and peace from God, with the encreaſe of that true honour which is from God and laſteth for euer.

He choice (right honorable) whiche Luke the Euangeliſt made, in dedicating this hiſtorie of the goſpel, which he wrote to that noble mā Theophilus, & which that man of worthie memory. M. Iohn Caluine tooke in dedicating theſe his labours to the lords of Frankeford, drieueth mee to dedicate this my ſmall labour of tranſlating this booke into the Engliſh tongue, and though it is but little that I haue done, in compariſon of the labors of the other two, and not woorth the offering to men of great eſtate: yet leaſt that I ſhould ſeeme ſinguler in diſſenting from theſe two ſinguler inſtruments in the Churche of God, & that in one and the ſelf ſame booke, I haue preſumed to make bolde of your Lordſhips name, hoping that your H. will not miſlike to haue it witten in the forehead of this boke with noble Theophilus & the Lords of Frankeford, ſpecially ſith that I doe it, in teſtimonie of my dutifull loue to you, for the manifolde graces of God in you, and benefites which I haue receiued from you. Men doe commonly in their Epiſtles write, either in the commendation of the worke, or in the prayſe of their patrone, or in diſcharging of themſelues of the diſcredite which their enemies woulde lay vppon them : but I craue pardon of your honour, if in ſtudying to bee ſhort, I omit theſe thinges. For firſt the verye name of the goſpell of Ieſu Chriſte, and then the names of Matthew, Marke, and Luke the Euangeliſts, and of M. Caluine the gatherer of the Harmonie, & the writer of the Commentarie, do yeeld more credite and commendation to the matter, then all that I can ſay of it all the dayes of my life. Only this I ſay of M. Caluines labours here, that in my ſimple iudgement it is one of the profitableſt workes for the church that euer he did write. Next for your praiſes, as you like not to heare them, ſo I will not offend you in ſetting thē down, nor giue others occaſiō to cōdemne me of flatterie. They which haue beſt knowen you, ſay, that you began a good courſe in your youth, that you witneſſed a good confeſsion in the laſt time of perſecution, that your conſtancie hath beene teſtified by your troubles at home, and trauels in forraine countries : you haue continued your profeſsion in the midſt of your dignitie, Lordſhips, and liuing left by your parents, and in the ſeat of gouernment, wherein our Soueraigne & moſt gracious Queene hath placed you, not falling a ſleepe in ſecuritie in this ſo peaceable a time. My good L. continue to the end, ſo ſhall you bee ſafe. I ſpeake not this as if it were your owne ſtrength that hath holden you vp all this while. But meditate ſomtimes, I pray you, vpon the 71. Pſalme, and pray that Lorde as Dauid did, who kept you in your youth, that he will keepe you in your old age, now that your head is hoare and hayres gray. And I beſeech the mighty Lord to thruſt them forward which are drawen back by their youthly affections, and to raiſe vp them that fell away for feare of troubles, & to waken thoſe which in this quiet and calme time do ſleepe in ſecuritie, or waxe wanton with the wealth of the worlde, that we may meete the Lord with true humilitie and earneſt repentaunce, to ſee if hee will bee intreated to continue his mercies towards vs, leaſt he turn his correcting rod, which he hath ſo ofte ſhaken ouer vs, into a deuouring ſwoord to conſume vs. Of my ſelfe I will ſay nothing, the mouthes of the wicked cãnot be ſtopt, their falſe tongues I hope ſhall teach me to Walke warilie, & I haue learned, I thanke my God, to paſſe through good report and through euill, and to commit my ſelfe and my cauſe to him that iudgeth right. The Lord of Lords preſerue your honour in ſafetie, and multiply all ſpirituall bleſsings vpon you and yours: From Kiltehampton in Cornewall, this 28. of Ianuarie. 1584.

that

Heere endeth the Table of the Harmonie.

The argument of the Gospell of Iesus Christ, according as it is sette foorth by MATHEVVE, MARKE, and LVKE.

THAT we may read this Euangelicall hystorie to our profite and commoditie, it shall not be litle auaileable to vnderstand the sence of this word EVANGELIVM, which we call in English the GOSPEL: for thereby we shall easily discerne what moued these heauenly witnesses to commit these things to wryting, and to what ende all things that they haue wrytten, are to be referred. For these hystories were not so named by other men, but that the authours themselues did so intitle them, it is manifest by Marke: which sayeth in plaine woordes, that he declareth the beginning of the Gospel of Iesus Christ. Moreouer, the perfecte and plaine definition of the Gospell is gathered specially out of a certaine place in Paule, where he sayeth that it was promised of GOD in the scriptures by the Prophets as concerning his sonne which was borne of the seede of Dauid, and declared mightely to be the sonne of God, through the spirit of sanctification, by the rising againe of the deade. First, he sheweth that it is a testimonie of saluation offered, which was promised long agoe to the fathers by continuall succesſe of ages, wherein doeth appeare a plaine difference betweene those promises which did hold in doubt the mindes of the faithfull, and those glad tidinges whereby God witnesseth that he hath now throughly performed all things which before he woulde haue them to hope for. Like as a little after the same Paule sayeth that the iustice of God is sette foorth in the same Gospel, which before was signified by the lawe and the prophets. And therefore in an other place, the Apostle calleth it an ambassage, wherin is daily declared vnto men a reconciliation which is once for all concluded betweene God & the world, by the death of Christ. He signifieth also that Christ is not only a pledge of all good things that euer were graunted vnto vs by God, but also that in him they are fully and wholely offred vnto vs, according as he sayeth else where, that all the promises of God are fulfilled in Christ, euen so, and Amen. And doubtlesse, that free adoption whereby we are made the children of God, as it proceedeth from the euerlasting good wil of the father: so is it opened vnto vs in that, that Christe (who is the onely naturall sonne of God) taking our flesh vpon him, did chuse vs to be his brethren. Neither ought we to seeke any where else, but onely in the sacrifice of his death, for that expiation or blessing, wherewith our sinnes are blotted out: so that the curse or sentence of death cannot fall vpon vs. Righteousnesse, saluation, and perfect felicity haue a sure foundation in his resurrection. Wherfore the Gospel may be defined to be a solemne publishinge or proclamation, wherein the sonne of God is declared to haue beene offred vppe in the flesh, to the intent that he might renew the wicked worlde, and restore mennethat were dead, to life. Neither is it without cause called good and glad tidings, since in it is comprehended the summe of our felicitye: for the ende thereof is, that it, hauing begun in vs the kingdome of God, and hauing abolished the corruption of our flesh, might bring vs, being renewed through the spirite, vnto the celestial and heauenly glory. In which sense it is oft times called the kingdome of heauen, and a reparation of a blisseful life, atchieued by Christ: and sometime it is called the kingdom of God. As when Marke sayeth that Ioseph looked for the kingdom of God, doubtlesse

2. Cor. 5. 20.

lesse it is to be vnderstoode of the commynge of Messias: whereby it is manifest that the name of the Gospel doeth properly pertaine to the Newe Testament: and that those wryters speake very craftely, which thinke it to be like common to all ages, and that the prophets may as aptly be called ministers of the Gospel, as the Apostles. Christes woordes sounde farre otherwise, who making mention that the lawe and the Prophets were of force till the commynge of Iohn, declareth that then the kingdome of God began to be preached. And Marke (as before was mentioned) signifieth that the Gospell did beginne with the preachinge of Iohn: but this name and title was not without good aduisement giuen to these hystories, wherin is declared, that Christ toke vpon him the office & function of a mediator. For since that in the birth, death, & resurrection of Christ, is comprised the sum of our saluation, and they are the very matter whereof it doeth consiste, they may very well and fitly be called Euangelists: that is to say, bringers of merrye newes, whiche portraite out before our eyes Christ sent of his father, so that by faith we may acknowledge him to be the only authour of our felicitie. The force and effecte of his comming is more plainely put downe in other bookes of the Newe Testament. And Iohn in this respect differeth farre from the other three, who is wholely occupied in expressing the vertue of Christe, and the fruite that we reape thereby, where as the rest stand more vppon this poynt, that our Christe is the sonne of God which was promised to be the redeemer of the world. In deede they doe teache heere and there the doctrine of Christes office: that we may be certified of his fauour towarde vs, and to what ende he was giuen vnto vs: but this (as I sayde) is the chiefest matter they handle, that Christe Iesus did fully finish all things in his owne person, whatsoeuer was promised by God euer since the beginning of the worlde. For their purpose and intent was not by their wrytings to abolishe and destroy the lawe and the Prophets, as diuers brainsicke persons doe vainly dreame, that the Olde Testament hath beene to none effecte, euer since the veritie of the heauenly wisedome hath been reuealed vnto vs by Christ and his Apostles: Nay, they rather pointing out Christe vnto vs, as it were with a finger, put vs in minde to seeke at his handes what soeuer the law and the Prophets haue ascribed vnto him. Wherfore then we shall frutefully and effectually read the Gospel, when we shall learne to conferre it with the promises of the olde Testament. As concerning the three Euangelists which nowe I take in hand to interpreat, Mathewe is sufficiently knowen, and some thinke Marke to haue lived familiarly with Peter as his scholler, and to haue receiued the Gospel, which he wrote woorde by woorde out of Peters mouth, so that he supplied only the roume of a Scribe or Notarie. But this matter needeth no curious disputation, for it little appertaineth vnto vs to know more, then that he is a lawfull witnesse ordained of God, and that he publisheth nothing in wryting, but that which was reuealed vnto him, and putte into his head by the holy Ghost. But Ieromes opinion seemeth to haue smal grounde, who thinketh his Gospel to be a briefe summe, drawne out of the Gospel of Mathewe. For he differeth from him in handling his matter euen in the entrance: neither doeth he obserue the same Methode that Mathew doeth, and he reckeneth vppe diuers things, lefte vntouched of the other: and some things mentioned in Mathewe, he declareth more at large. I thinke it more probable, and so may I gather by the woorke it selfe, that he had neuer seene Mathewes booke, when he wrote his owne, much lesse did he of purpose make an Epitome or Abridgement of it. And the very same doe I iudge of Luke. For, as concerning the clausses wherein they seeme to differ, I thinke not that they brought them in of sette purpose, but when they all determined truely and faithfully to set foorth those thinges which they had thorowly knowen and approoued, euery one of them followed what order hee thought best him self. And like as this came to passe, not by blinde chance & fortune, but by the diuine prouidece of God: euen so, the holy ghost minstred vnto them a marueilous consent, vnder a contrary stile and forme of wryting. The which Harmonie it selfe, were sufficient to confirme their credite, had they not elsewhere receiued greater, and more stedfast authoritie.

Luke. 16. 16.

Now

Nowe, as for Luke, he credibly witneſseth of himſelfe, that hee was a companion of Paule, continually conuerſant with him. But that which Euſebius reporteth, is very childiſh, that Paule was the true authour of Lukes Goſpel, becauſe in a certaine place, he maketh mention of his owne Goſpel. As though it were not manifeſt, by that whiche enſueth in the text, that Paule ſpeaketh of his common preaching, and not of any one booke wrytten. For 2. Tim. 2. 8. he ſayeth: For the which Goſpell I ſuffer affliction, as an euill doer, euen vnto bondes. And who knoweth not, that Paule was accuſed, not for any Booke he had Compiled, but for that he was a Miniſter of the woorde, and preached openly the Goſpel of Chriſt: wherby it appeareth that Euſebius was a man very painful, but of ſmall iudgement, ſince without diligent hede, he heapeth vp together ſo many ſenceles notes, wherof I thought good to admoniſh the readers, leaſt they chaunce to ſtumble at ſuch like blockes, which lye heere and there, ſcattered throughout all his woorkes. Moreouer, becauſe I haue choſen a kinde of Interpretation, which may perhaps diſpleaſe diuers at the firſt bluſh, I meane to yeelde a reaſon of my doing, truſting thereby to ſatiſfie the vnpartial and godly readers. This firſt is without controuerſie, that none of the three Euangeliſts, can be truely and rightly interpreated, vnleſſe he be conferred with the two other. Wherefore faithful and skilful interpreaters, heerein take moſte paines, that all things may be reconciled, which are ſpoken by the three Euangeliſts. But ſince that meane wittes cannot eaſily conferre the Euangeliſts together, whileſt ſtill they turne and returne from the one to the ether, I thought this briefe Methode would ſeeme pleaſant and profitable, if by a continual preceſſe or diſcours, like as it were in one table, the three hyſtories were ioyned together: wherein the readers may ſee and diſcerne at once, what is diſſonant and agreeable to them all. So I will ouerſlip nothing which is wrytten by any one of the three: and I will declare in one diſcourſe what ſoeuer is handled by diuers. Nowe, whether my paines be wel beſtowed (as I hope) or no, let euery manne iudge according to the profite he taketh in reading. Truely it was ſo farre from my thought to catche after praiſe and commendation by my newe inuention, that I freely confeſſe (as becommeth euery good nature) that in this manner of interpretation I haue imitated other men. And moſt of all I followed Bucer, a man of holy memorie, and a famous teacher in the churche of God, who (in my iudgement) hath trauailed heerein to no ſmal purpoſe. And like as he hath had great furtherance by the diligence of ancient wryters, which haue taken paines in the ſame ſtudie before him: ſo I profeſſe my ſelfe to haue beene as much eaſed by his labour and induſtrie. But whereas I differ from him in ſome places (the which libertye I graunted my ſelfe ſo ofte as ſeemed neceſſarye,) I thinke that he himſelfe, if he now lived on earth, would not be offended with it.

Luke 1.

Matthew. | Marke.

I

Oraſmuch as many haue taken in hande, to ſette forth the ſtorie of thoſe thinges, whereof we are fully perſwaded,

2. As they haue deliuered them vnto vs, which from the beginning ſaw them their ſelues, and were Miniſters of the word:

3. It ſeemed good alſo to me (moſt noble Theophilus) as ſoone as I had ſearched out perfectly all thinges from the beeginning, to write vnto the thereof from poynt to poynt;

4. That thou mighteſt acknowledge the certentie of thoſe things, wherof thou haſt beene inſtructed.

ONely Luke doth make a preface to his Goſpell, that briefly he may ſhew the cauſe wherby he was moued to write. That he ſpeaketh to one man, it ſeemeth to be abſurd: when that rather it was his duetie by open ſound of trumpet to call all men together to the fayth. Therefore it ſeemeth not to be conuenient, that he ſhould dedicate to his Theophilus onely, that doctrine which is not proper to one or other, but common for all. Hereof it came to paſſe, that diuers thought it to be a name appellatiue, and all godly men to be called Theophilos, of louing God: but the Epitheton that is ioyned with it differeth from that opinion. Neyther yet is that abſurdity to be feared, which cõſtrained them to ſeeke ſuch refuge. Neither doth the doctrine of Paule leſſe belong to all men, becauſe that of his Epiſtles, he directed ſome to certaine Cities, and ſome to certaine men. And truly if we conſidered the eſtate of their times, we ſhould confeſſe that Luke herein did godly and wiſely. There were tyrants ready on euery ſide, which with feare and terrors would hinder the courſe of wholſome doctrine. This gaue an occaſion or libertie to Sathan and his miniſters, to ſcatter cloudes of errors, which might dimme the pure light. And becauſe that in keeping the puritie of the Goſpell, the cõmon ſorte were little carefull, and fewe did diligently conſider what ſathan would deuiſe, and how much daunger lay hidde in ſuch deceites. Therefore as euery one did excell other with rare fayth and ſingular giftes of the holy Ghoſt, ſo with greater ſtudie and diligence hee ought to apply himſelfe, that he might as much as in him lyeth preſerue the doctrine of godlines pure and free from all corruption. Such (as holy layers vppe of bookes, wherein lawes are written) were choſen of GOD, truthfully to deliuer to their poſteritie the heauenly doctrine cõmitted to them. Wherfore Luke doth dedicate his Goſpel to Theophilus, that he ſhould faithfully keepe the ſame, which things Paule alſo dooth enioyne and charge his Timothy with 2. Ep. 1. 14. & ca. 3. 14.

1. For as much as many. Hee ſeemeth to alleage that, as a cauſe of his writing, which rather ſhould haue withdrawne him from writing. For, it were but a needeleſſe labour, to writ againe a hiſtorie already entreated of by many, if they had done their duetie; Neither doth he charge them with any word, either of deceite, or of negligence, or of any other faulte: Therefore it is as much, as if he ſhould ſay, he would doe a thing alreadie done. I anſwere, although he ſpareth them that had written beefore, yet doth he not throughly allow the labours of all of them. He doth not plainely ſay, that they haue written of thinges ſlenderly prooued: but challenging the certaine knowledge of theſe thinges vnto him ſelfe, modeſtly dooth diſable ſome of them of certaine and vndoubted knowledge. If any do obiect, that if thèy had erred, hee ſhoulde haue ſharply inueied againſt them; I anſwere againe, it may be, that they did a litle offende, and that of an vnaduiſed zeale, rather then of malice: and therefore, that there was no cauſe why he ſhould more vehemently haue enforced him ſelfe againſt them. And it is credible, that there were certaine pamphlets, which were not then ſo hurtefull: but if they had not beene ſpeedily preuented, they might afterwardes haue more grieuouſly annoied the faith. But it is worth the labour to note, how GOD, by Luke hath applyed a remedie againſt thoſe ſuperfluous writinges, and that by his meruailous counſell, he hath brought to paſſe, that by common conſent, all other being reiected, theſe onely doe keepe their credit, in which his reuerent maieſtie moſt manifeſtly doth ſhine. And ſo much leſſe to be borne with is the doting folly of them, which thruſt into the world fond and filthy fables, vnder the name of Nichodemus, or any other.

VVes are fully perſwaded. The participle, which Luke doth vſe, doth ſignifie thinges very well approued and voide of doubt: in the which the old interpreter hath beene ofte deceiued. And by this vnskilfulneſſe hee hath left vs diuers excellent places corrupted. Amongſt the which is that place of Paule, Rom. 14. 5: VVhere hee commaundeth, that euery man be fully perſwaded in his minde: Leſt the conſcience being toſſed with doubtfull opinions, ſhould wauer, and neuer ſtand ſure. Thereof alſo cõmeth the nowne Plerophoria, which he corruptly hath tranſlated plenitudinem, i. a fulnes, when that it is a certaine and ſtrong perſwaſion grounded of faith, in the which godly mindes doe ſafely take their reſt. And there is, as I ſayde, a ſecrete contrarietie: For he challenging vnto himſelf the credit of a faithfull witneſſe, doth take away the credit from others, that deliuer contraries. This phraſe (Inter nos) amongſt vs, ſignifieth as much as apud nos, with vs. But he buildeth faith, as it ſeemeth, very ſlenderlie, that buildeth vpon the report of men, which ought to be built vpon the onely word of God, and the ful perſwaſion and aſſuraunce of fayth is wrought and ſealed by the holy ghoſt. I anſwere, that fayth is not ſatiſfied with any teſtimonies of men; except the auctoritie of God doe hold the chiefeſt places. Yet, where the inward confirmation of the ſpirit doth goe before, there may ſome place be giuen them in the hiſtoricall know-knowledge of thinges. I call that historicall knowledge, which we haue cõceaued either by our own beholding of things don, or by the speach of others. For we may not giue lesse eare to them that are eye witnesses of the manifest workes of God, then wee are to giue credit to experience. Adde this also, that Luke followeth not priuate authours, but them that were also ministers of the word: By which commendation he extolleth them aboue the degree of mans auctoritie. For he sheweth, that they vttered the Gospell to him, to whom the Lord had committed the office of preaching the same. From hence also ryseth that assured safetie, wherof he speaketh a litle after, which vnlesse it leane vpon God, may easily by disturbed. It is of great waight and force, that he calleth them ministers of the word, of whom he receiued his Gospell. For the faythfull do gather hereof, that against witnesses no exception can be taken (as the Lawyers say) and which it is not lawfull to refuse. Erasmus (who out of Virgill borowed that which he translated to haue beene some part) did not sufficiently weigh, how much the calling of God is to be esteemed, or of what auctoritie the same is. For Luke doth not speake prophanely: but he biddeth vs in the person of his Theophilus to looke vppon the commaundement of Christ, that we may with reuerence heare the sonne of God, speaking vnto vs by his Apostles. If any man had rather take and vse this phrase Verb. for the thing or substaunce, which is Christ, let him vse his own sense. That some doe vnderstand by it Christ, it should please me very well, but that it were forced against the sense of the text, and too farre stretched. It is much, that he saith, they were beholders or eye witnesses. But in that he calleth them ministers, he exempteth them from the common order of men, to that end that our fayth might haue his stay in heauen, and not on earth.

This in summe is Lukes minde, that hauing faythfully engraued in letters that which thou hadst learned before with liuely voice, thou mightest the more safely repose thy selfe in the doctrine which thou haste receiued: whereby it dooth appeare, that God doth euery where prouide, least we depending vpon the doubtfull wordes of men, our faith should fayle, or wauer. Whereby the vnthankefulnes of the world is so much the lesse excusable, which as it were of purpose rashly desireth strayed and dispearsed rumors: whereby it might be vnconstant, and dooth wilfully forsake so great a benefit of GOD. But let vs hold that excellent difference, which the Lord hath put betweene them, lest foolish light beliefe doe vaunt it selfe for fayth. In the meane while let vs suffer the world, as it is worthy to be deceiued with the baightes of foolish curiousnes, to to commit and giue ouer it selfe willingly to the deceites and iuglings of Sathan.

3. Assoone as I had searched out perfectly. The olde translation hath (omnia assecuto) I hauing followed all thinges. The Greeke word is metaphorically deduced from them, whiche treade in others steppes, least ought should escape them. For Luke would declare vnto vs a diligent studie and manner of learning. Euen as Demosthenes vseth the same word, when as he boasteth himselfe to haue bin so diligent in examining the embassage, which he accuseth: saying that he saw al things that were done, as if he him selfe had beene a beholder of them.

Luke 1.

Matthew.	Marke.

5. In the time of Herod, king of Iudea, there was a certaine prieſte, named Zacharyas, of the courſe of Abia, and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth.

6. Both were iuſt before God, and walked in al the commaundementes and ordinaunces of the Lord without reproofe.

7. And they had no childe, becauſe that Elizabeth was barren, and both were well ſtricken in age.

8. And it came to paſſe, as hee executed the prieſtes office before God, as his courſe came in order,

9. According to the cuſtome of the prieſtes office, his lot was to burne incenſe when he went into the temple of the Lorde.

10. And the whole multitude of the people were without in prayer, while the incenſe was burning.

11. Then appeared vnto him an Angell of the Lord, ſtanding on the right ſide of the Altar of incenſe.

12. And when Zacharias ſaw him, he was troubled, and feare fell vppon him.

13. But the Angell ſaide vnto him: feare not Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth ſhall beare a ſonne, and thou ſhalt call his name Iohn.

Luke very aptly doth begin his Goſpell with Iohn Baptiſt, euen as if hee that ſhould ſpeake of the light of the daye, ſhould beginne with the morning: For like vnto the morning he did goe before the ſonne of righteouſnes, which now was about to riſe. Other alſo make mētion of him, but they deſcribe him executing of his office. But Luke doth purchaſe authoritie to him not yet borne, when that he declareth the wonders of diuine power euen in his infancie, and ſheweth him to bee appoynted of God to be a Prophet, before that men could know what manner of man he ſhould be: And for this purpoſe he doth it, that with greater reuerence he might be heard, when that he ſhould take vpon him that publike office, to goe forth for the aduauncement of the glory of Chriſt.

5. In the time of Herod. He was the ſonne of Antipater, whō his father did promote euen to the kingdō, for the augmentation of the which, he had ſo great care, & did with ſo great diligēce labour, that therfore there was giuē vnto him the ſurname of Great. Certaine do think that he was named heire of Luke, becauſe he was the firſt forreine king that reigned there, and therefore to be a fitte time for their deliueraunce, beecauſe that their ſcepter was now tranſpoſed to a ſtraunge nation. But they that ſo ſay, doe not very wel vnderſtand the propheſie of Iacob: whereas the comming of the Meſsias is not ſimply promiſed after that the Iewes ſhalbe deprined of their empyre: But after that the ſame ſhoulde be taken ken away from the tribe of Iuda: neither yet is this the holy Patriarkes minde, that the tribe of Iuda ſhould be depriued of their princely gouernaunce, before the comming of Chriſt: But that the rule of the people ſhould be eſtabliſhed in that ſtocke, vntill Chriſtes comming: in whoſe perſon, the ſure euerlaſting continuaunce of the ſame ſhould be. And although that what time the Machabeyes floriſhed, the tribe of Iuda was brought into a narrow ſtreight, and ſhortly after Duke Iohn, the laſt of that ſtocke was ſlaine: yet notwithſtanding was not that rule altogether extinguiſhed: For yet there remayned the Synedrion, as it were a choſen counſell of the ſtocke and poſteritie of Dauid, whoſe auctoritie was great: And did continue to Herod, who with moſt horrible ſlaughter of Iudges, reuenged puniſhment layde vppon him before: becauſe that he being condemned of murder, was conſtrained to goe into voluntarie exile, that he might eſcape the loſſe of his head. The reigne therefore of Herod, becauſe he was a ſtraunger brake not the ſcepter of the trybe of Iuda, but becauſe that what reſidue of renoume ſoeuer there remained in that ſtocke, by his theeuiſh dealing was abolyſhed: That the kingly dignitie fayled long before, and that the rule by litle & litle fel almoſt downe: that diſcontinuaunce dooth not repugne with the propheſie of Iacob. For to the outwarde ſhewe GOD hath promiſed two diuerſe thinges, the throane of Dauid to laſt for euer: that after it were ouerthrowne, he would repayre the ruines of the ſame: the power of that kingdome to be euerlaſting: and yet notwithſtanding a young ſlyppe ſhould ryſe out of the ſtock of Ieſſe: both the which things ought to be fulfilled.

God did ſuffer the rule which he had erected in the trybe of Iuda to be kept downe for a ſeaſon, that the greater might be the diligence of the people, to hope for the kingdome of Chriſt. VVhen the hope of the faythfull was as it were cutte off by the deſtruction of that choſen counſell, ſodenly the Lorde clearely ſtone forth. And now this belongeth to the courſe of the hiſtorie, whilſt that the time of this thing being done, was noted. But not raſhlye, vnder the name of the king was alſo noted the miſerable ſtate of the tyme, that the Iewes might knowe, that they ſhould turne their eyes vnto the Meſſyas, if that they aſſuredly had in eſtimation the leagues of God.

Zacharias of the courſe of Abia. It is knowne by ſacred hyſtorie, that the familyes of the Prieſtes were deuided by Dauid into certaine orders. In the which thing Dauid attempted nothing againſt the commaundement of the lawe, GOD did appoynt the prieſthoode to Aaron and his Sonnes, the reſt of the Leuites he appoynted to leſſer offices: In that thing nothing was altered of Dauid: but his deuice was partely to beware leaſt any thing ſhould be doone tumultuouſly among the people: And partely to preuent ambition, and alſo to bring to paſſe, that a few ſhould not take all the charge vnto them ſelues, and the greater parte ſitte ydle at home. And in that diſtribution Abia, the Sonne of Eliazar poſſeſſed the eight place. Zachary therefore was of the prieſtly ſtocke, and alſo of the poſteritie of Eleazar, who ſucceeded his father in the hygh Prieſtes office. But how Elizabeth, when that ſhe was of the daughters of Aaron could be cofine to Mary, I will ſhewe in his place.

And Luke dooth mention the ſtocke of Elizabeth for honours ſake: for it was lawefull for Zachary, according to the lawe, to take vnto him to wife, a daughter of a Leuite, of the common ſort: Of this equall wedlock therfore it doth appeare, that this man was not deſpiſed in his degree.

6. Both were iuſt before God. A right and good teſtimonie doth he giue vnto them, not onely that they behaued them ſelues holily and vprightly before men, but they were accounted iuſte before GOD. And alſo Luke doth briefly define that iuſtice. That they walked in the commaundementes of the Lorde, both are diligently to be noted. For although that to this end Zachary and Elizabeth are praiſed, that we might knowe that the lantern, which bare light before the Sonne of God was not choſen out of an vnknowne ſtocke, but out of a moſt famous holy place: yet notwithſtanding vnder their examples there is ſhewed to vs a rule of lyuing godly and righteoully. Therefore in framing of a mans lyfe well, this is chiefeſt: that we ſhould endeuour our ſelues to be approued, before god. And we know a ſincere heart & pure conſcience, chiefly to be required of him. Therfore an ouerthwart order it is, if any man litle eſteeming the vprightneſſe of his heart, ſhould only frame his outward life in obedience of the lawe. For it is to be kept in memorie, that God, (to whome we are commaunded to haue regarde) looketh not vpon the outward viſor of workes, but eſpecially the heart. Furthermore, in the ſeconde place let obedience be added: that is, let not any man frame vnto him ſelfe, without the word of GOD, a newe kinde of righteouſneſſe, which ſhall pleaſe him: but let vs ſuffer our ſelues to be ruled by the power of God. For neither is this definition to be neglected, thoſe to bee righteous, which frame their life after the preceptes of the lawe, in the which it is agreed, all faigned worſhippings to bee nothing regarded with God, and the courſe of mans life to bee wandring and erronious, aſſoone as it ſhall departe from his lawe. Betweene preceptes and iuſtifyinges there is this difference, that the latter name is properlye referred to the exerciſes of godlyneſſe, and diuine worſhippinges: the firſt is more vniuerſall, and it dooth aſwell pertaine to the woorſhippe of God, as to the duetie of charitie. For hukim which with the Hebreves doth ſignifie ſtatutes or decrees, the Greeke interpreter hath tranſlated iuſtifications. hukim commonly in holye ſcripture dooth ſignifie ceremonies, in the which the people exerciſed them ſelues in, worſhipping of God, and confeſsion of fayth. And although that hypocrites in that poynt are meruailous curious and exquiſite: yet they haue nothing like with Zacharyas and Elizabeth.

For ſincere woorſhippers of GOD, as theſe two were, doe not greedily ſnatch vnto them naked and vaine ceremonies, but being bente vppon the trueth, they ſpiritually obſerue them. But leawde and counterfeite menne, although they dayly wearie them ſelues in outwarde ceremonies: yet beecauſe they doe not obſerue them, as they were commaunded of the Lorde, they doe nothing but loſe their labour. Chiefely in theſe two woordes Luke dooth comprehende the whole law. But if Zachary and Elizabeth were vnblamable, as concerning the keeping of the law, they had no neede of Chriſt: For the ful obſeruing of the law doth bring with it life, and where there is no tranſgreſsion, the arrained ſtate doth ceaſe. I anſwere, that theſe reportes of praiſe. Where-withall theſe children of God royally are adorned, are to be taken with ſome exception. For it is expedient to cõſider diligently, how God ſhould deale with them, euen according to his couenaunt, which he made with them, whereof the chiefeſt poynt is free reconciliation, and dayly forgiuenes, whereby he pardoneth them their offences. Iuſt and vnreprouable therefore are they thought, becauſe that all their life doth witneſſe them to be auowed to righteouſneſſe, the feare of GOD to reigne in them, while there is a certaine example of godlynes. But when their godly endeuour did farre differ from perfection, it could not pleaſe God, without forgiuenes and mercy: VVherefore the iuſtice which is prayſed in them, dependeth vppon the free mercie of God. VVhereby it commeth to paſſe, that he accounteth not what vnrighteouſnes ſoeuer remaineth in them. So it is neceſſary to vnderſtand what ſoeuer is found in ſcripture of the righteouſnes of men, that it ouerthrow not forgiuenes of ſinnes, to the which it leaneth no otherwiſe, then the building to the foundation. They that ſay that Zachary and Elizabeth were ſimply iuſt by faith, becauſe that they freely pleaſed God by the mediatour, doe wrieth Lukes wordes into a contrary ſenſe. As concerning the matter it ſelfe, they neither ſay nothing, nor yet all. I graunt the righteouſnes which is aſcribed to them, ought not to be imputed to the deſert of woorkes, but to the loue of Chriſt. The Lord yet notwithſtanding, becauſe he imputed not ſinne vnto them, hath thought their holy life, although vnperfect, to bee worthy the title of iuſt. The fooliſhnes of the Papiſtes will eaſily be refelled: For they lay this, which is attributed to Zachary againſt the iuſtice of faith: the which, as it is certaine to proceede from the ſame: ſo ought it to be made ſubiect and brought vnder to the ſame: or as they commonly ſay, to be brought into a ranke vnder, to auoyde contention between them. And that which they ſo paint in reſpect of that one word is fryuolous. They ſay the commaundementes of the lawe are iuſtifications, therefore that they iuſtifie vs. As though we denied true iuſtice to be taught in the lawe, or that we ſhould ſay, the fault to be in the doctrine, becauſe it doth not iuſtifie: and that rather the cauſe is not in our weake fleſh. Therefore that a hundred times I may graunt lyfe to bee contained in the precepts of the law: yet notwithſtanding nothing therby ſhal come vnto men, which by nature are altogether turned away frõ the ſame. And now being borne againe by the ſpirit of GOD, yet notwithſtanding they are farre from the pure obſeruation of the ſame: Albeit, as I ſhewed of late, it is a faint and a vaine cauillation about the word, whẽ it ſignifieth nothing els, thẽ ſtatutes & appointed ceremonies.

7. And they had no childe. It was appoynted by the ſingular prouidence of God, that Iohn ſhould be borne contrary to the common and accuſtomed order of nature The ſame thing alſo was done in Iſaac, in the which God determined to ſhew a token of his loue, not often ſeene, and worthy of remẽbraunce. Elizabeth was barren, euẽ in the flower of her age. And old age doth finiſh childbearing, euen in fruitful womẽ: therefore in theſe two lettes a duble miracle of diuine power doth appear, and that to this ende, that the Lorde woulde witneſſe that prophet to be ſent of him, as it were with ſtretched hande from heauen. And a mortall man was he borne of earthlye parentes: but a meane aboue nature, (if I maye Gen. 18. 10 ſo ſaye) no otherwiſe commended him, then if he had fallen from heauen.

9. According to the cuſtome of the Prieſtes office. The law did commaund to burne incenſe twiſe daylye: that is to witte, in the morning, and in the euening. That the Prieſtes had their order diſpoſed amonge them, that Dauid did appoynt euen as we haue ſaide before. Therefore the lawe of GOD dooth eſpecially commaunde that, which here is ſayde of incenſe. The other thinges came from Dauid, that euerie family ſhoulde haue their courſe: notwithſtanding Dauid did appoynt nothing, but out of the commaundement of the lawe. For he onely did ſhewe the way, whereby they all might fulfill their charge enioyned them of God.

The name of the Temple here is taken for the holy place, that therfore is to be noted, becauſe that ſometyme it ſignifieth the Poarch. It is ſaide that Zachary went into the Temple, into the which it is not lawefull for any to goe, but for the Prieſtes. Therefore Luke dooth ſaye, the people ſtoode a farre off, betweene whom and the Altar of incenſe was a great diſtaunce. For betweene them was the altar, where-vppon the ſacrifice of beaſtes were offered. And it is to be noted, that Luke dooth ſaye, before God. For as ofte as the Prieſte did enter into the holy place, he did goe as it were into the ſight of God, that he might be a mediatour betweene him and the people. For the Lorde woulde haue this thing teſtified vnto his people, that the entraunce into heauen was not open to any mortall men, except the prieſt did goe before.

Nay, how long ſoeuer men liue here vppon earth, they cannot come to the heauenly throane, that they may finde fauour there, but in the perſon of the mediatour. Therefore when there were manye Prieſtes, it was not lawfull for two of them together to execute the ſolemne office of interceſsion for the people: but therefore were they deuided into companies, that one onely ſhould enter into the ſanctuarie: and therfore there was but one Prieſt at once.

Furthermore hyther belonged that ſweete perfume, that the faythfull might bee admoniſhed, that the odor of their prayers aſcended not into heauen, but by the ſacrifice of the mediatour. And it is to bee ſought out of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, how theſe figures ſhall agree to vs.

12. Zacharyas was troubled. Although that therefore GOD doth not appeare vnto his ſeruauntes, that he ſhould feare them: yet it is profitable, yea and neceſſarie for them to be mooued with feare, that they being diſmayed with them ſelues, might learne to yeelde iuſt honour to GOD. Neyther dooth Luke onely ſhew Zacharias to haue beene troubled: But he addeth, a feare fell vpon him. VVherby he declareth him to haue bin ſo diſmayed, that hee was ſubdued to feare. Neyther dooth feare of the preſence of God ſo much ſtrike men, that it ſhould inſtruct them to reuerence, but that it might humble the pride of the fleſhe, the which is ſo hautie, that they will neuer ſubmitte them ſelues to GOD, vnleſſe they be violently driuen to it. VVherof alſo we doe gather, that men onely in the abſence of GOD, (that is, when they hide them ſelues from his ſight) are proude, and flatter them ſelues. For if they had God as a iudge before their eyes, it should be necessarie for them to fall downe flatte.

And if that this did befall to Zacharyas (to whom the praise of righteousnesse was giuen) at the beholding of an Angell, which is but a sparke of diuine light: what shall become of vs wretches, if that the maiestie of God should bring vs to his shining brightnes? And now by the example of holy fathers we are taught, that no other are moued with the liuely feeling of the diuine presence, but they that quake and tremble at his sight, and also that they are foolish and dull, which doe heare him without feare.

Feare not Zachariæ. It is to be noted, that the glory of GOD is so fearfull to the godlye, that they are not altogether deuoured of feare: but onelye they are throwne downe from their vaine boldenesse, that they might humbly looke vppon him. Assoone therefore as GOD hath vanquished the pride of the flesh in his faythfull, with his outstretched hande, he rayseth them vppe againe. Hee dealeth otherwise with the reprobate. For as oft as they are drawen to the iudgement seate of God meere desperation ouerwhelmeth them. And God doth giue againe this, as a iust rewarde vnto their vaine pleasures, in the which they haue made them selues dronken to wantonnes of sinning. VVherefore this comfort is to bee imbraced of vs, in that the Angell dooth vppholde Zachary, that it is not to be feared, where God is present with vs. For they deceyue them selues much, who, that they might enioy peace, doe hyde them from the face of GOD, seeing wee shoulde seeke peace at him.

Thy prayer is heard. Zachary might seeme to haue doone amysse, and contrary to the trade of his office, if he entring into the holy place in the name of all the people, as a priuate man shoulde pray for the obtayning of offspring. For the priestе taking vppon him to bee a common person, should be as it were forgetfull of him selfe, and should praye for the common safegarde of the congregation. If wee shall saye, that it was not inconuenient, that Zacharias hauing persourmed his chiefest parte of prayer, should then secondly haue some priuate consideration of him selfe, it were not an vnapt answere. But it is scarse probable, that Zachary shoulde then haue prayed for the obtayning of a Sonne, whereof he was past hope by the olde age of his wife. Neither is there any certaine moment of tyme gathered of the woordes of the Angell. VVherefore simply I interpreet, that his desire was nowe heard, which long beefore he had powred out before GOD. Furthermore, the desire of hauing offspring (so there be no excesse) is godly and holy, as may be gathered out of scripture, which esteemeth this not in the last place among the blessings of God.

Thou shalt call his name. The name of Baptist I thinke was giuen vnto him, to declare the effecte of his office: יוחנן, For the whiche the Greekes say Iohn, with the Hebrewes doth signifie the grace of God. But manye thinke the Sonne of Zachary so to bee called, as beeloued of God. I doe not thinke that fauour here to bee commended, which god thought him priuatly to be worthy of: but that which his message was about to bring to al men. The time doth encrease the authoritie and estimation of his name: becausse that before he was borne, God imprinted in him a signe of his loue.

Luke 1.

Matthew.	Marke.
		14. And thou shalt haue ioye and gladnesse, and manye shall reioyce at his byrth.
		15. For hee shall be great in the sight of the Lorde, and shall nether drinke wine, nor strong drinke, and hee shal be filled with the holy Ghost, euen from his mothers wombe.
		16. And many of the children of Israel shall he turne to their Lord God.
		17. For hee shall goe beefore him in the spirite and power of Elyas, to turne the heartes of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient, to the wisdom of the iust men, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

14. Thou shalt haue ioye. The Angell dooth signifie greater ioy, then that Zacharyas could comprehende, of his new offspring: For he declared, that hee shoulde haue such a sonne, as he durst not wish for: And streight wayes hee gooth further, that that ioye shoulde not be priuate, whereof the onelye parentes shoulde take their delectation, or that it might keepe it selfe in priuate houses, but shoulde bee common also to straungers, to whome the profitte of his natiuitie shoulde bee declared. Therefore it is like, as if the Angell had sayde; not a sonne to haue beene borne alone to Zacharias, but a teacher and a prophet to all people.

The Papistes abused this place, that they might bring in a prophane custome, in celebrating the birth day of Iohn. I let passe this, that they woorshippe this day too much contrary to all good order, with daunsinges, leapings, and all kinde of lasciuiousnesse, with libertie of banketting, which order they faigne to bee sacred vnto them: and that they suffer them selues in that celebration to bee deluded with magicall artes, and deuylish deuises, no otherwise then as in the ceremonies of Ceres.

At this present it shall be sufficient for mee briefly to declare the Angelles woordes to haue beene wrested of them vnwisely, to the annuall celebrating of his byrth day: when the Angell simplye did commende the ioy which should come to all godly men, by the fruit of his doctrine: For they reioyced for a prophet to be borne vnto them, by whose ministerie they were brought in hope of saluation.

15. For he shall be great. Hee confirmeth that which he sayde of ioy: becausse that Iohn was appoynted to a thing great, and vnaccustomed: Neither yet are the vertues wherein hee did excell so much, here prayssed, as the greatnesse and excellencie of his office is extolled. Lyke as Christe, when he affirmeth him to bee the chiefest among the children of women, he hath not respect so much to the holynesse of his life, as Mat. 11. 11 to his ministerie. That which streight wayes after followeth: Hee shall neither

Neither drinke wine nor ſtrong drinke, is not ſo to bee vnderſtoode, as though it were an eſpecial vertue of Iohn, to be a refrayner frō wine: but becauſe that by that eſpeciall marke, God would note his ſeruaunt, whereby the worlde might know an euerlaſting Nazarite. The prieſts alſo refrayned from wine and ſtrong drinke, when they ſupplyed their courſes in the temple. The ſame abſtinence was preſcribed to the Nazarites, vntill their vow were fulfilled. And GOD would ſhewe by a notable token that Iohn in all his life was a Nazarite, dedicate vnto him, as we read alſo the ſame of Sampſon. But vnder this colour there is not to be faigned a woorſhipping of GOD, in abſtinence from wine, as Apes, that with ambition will followe whatſoeuer they may perceiue of their fathers deedes. Onely let all men haue temperaunce in eſtimation: they that finde hurte in drinking of wine, let them willingly abſtaine: they that lacke, let them take the want of it in good parte. For that which pertayneth to the name of Sicera, I willingly agree to their iudgement, which ſhed with the Hebrewes doe thinke to be called euery kind of made wine. Num. 6. 3 Iud. 13. 5

Hee ſhall be filled with the holy Ghoſt. This more inwarde note, wherewithall the Angell ſaieth Iohn ſhall be ſigned, was farre excellenter, then the outwarde and viſible ſigne. In theſe woordes I thinke nothing els to be noted, then his apparaunt towardneſſe, which might ſhew a hope of his excellencie to come. Further, I ſaye not ſuch towardneſſe, as is alſo in prophane men, but ſuch as might accorde to the greatnes of his office.

The ſenſe therefore is that the power and grace of the ſpirite ſhoulde not then onely ſhewe it ſelfe in him, when that hee ſhould aſpyre to his office: but that euen from his mothers wombe hee ſhoulde excell in the giftes of the ſpirite, which as certaine ſignes ſhoulde teſtifie what hee ſhould be: For from his mothers wombe is as much to ſay, as from his firſt infancie. I graunt truely the power of the ſpirite to haue wrought in Iohn, when he was yet included in his mothers wombe. But in my iudgement the Angell here meant an other thing, that Iohn being yet an infant, ſhould be brought as it were into the theatre with a ſingular commendation of the grace of God: of the fulneſſe it is not meete, that we ſhould more ſubtilly diſpute, or rather trifle with ſophiſters.

For the ſcripture doth by this name ſignifie no other thing, then the excellent, and not common aboundaunce of the giftes of the ſpirite. To Chriſt alone we knowe the ſpirite to haue beene giuen without meaſure, that wee might all drawe of his fulneſſe: and to be giuen to other by a certaine meaſure. But they that aboue our common capacitie are endued with more plentifull grace, are ſayde to bee full of the holye Ghoſte. Ioh. 1. 6. 1. Cor. 12 11. Eph. 4. 7.

But as the larger power of the ſpirite was an extraordinarie gyfte of GOD in Iohn: ſo it is to bee noted the ſpirite not to bee beeſtowed vppon all menne by and by in theyr infancie, but when it ſhall pleaſe GOD.

Iohn from the wombe did beare the token of his dignitie to come, Saule beeing yet but a Sheaphearde, did beere no kingely ſhewe, yet at length hee beeing choſen king, was ſodainely chaunged into a newe man.

By this example therefore let vs learne, that the free woorking of the ſpirite is free in menne from the firſte infancie, to the laſte poynte of age.

16. And manye of the children of Iſraell. In theſe wordes he declareth a deteſtable deuiſion, which then was in the Church. For it was neceſſarye to haue ſuch Apoſtles, in whome conuerſion to GOD might haue ſome place.

And truelye there was ſo much corruption of doctrine, ſo much depraying of manners, ſuch a confuſe gouernment, that it myght bee accounted a myracle, to finde a fewe to perſiſte in godlyneſſe. If ſuch exceeding diſſention was in the olde Church, there is no cauſe, that the Papiſtes ſhoulde with a vayne cloake defende theyr ſuperſtions, as if it were impoſſyble the Church ſhould erre: For becauſe that vnder this name they doe vnderſtande not the true and electe Sonnes of GOD, but the companye of the wicked.

But wee ſee more heere to bee attrybuted to Iohn, then ſhoulde agree to manne. For when conuerſion vnto GOD doth renewe in menne a ſpirituall lyfe, it is not onelye the proper woorke of God, but it dooth excell euen the creation of menne. Therefore by this meanes the miniſters maye ſeeme to bee equall with God, yea, and to bee preferred in as much as hee is creator, ſeeing it is more to bee borne agayne into a heauenlye lyfe, then to be borne mortall men vpon the earth.

The anſwere is eaſie: For the Lorde, when hee attributeth ſuch praiſe to his outwarde doctrine, he doth not ſeperate the ſame from the ſecret power of his ſpirite. For, becauſe God chuſeth men vnto him for miniſters, whoſe ayde hee vſeth in buylding of his Church, together by them hee worketh with the ſecret power of his ſpirite, that their labour might be effectuall and fruitfull, as oft as the ſcripture commendeth this efficacie in the miniſterie of men, let vs learne to yeelde the thing receiued to the
2. Cor. 3. 6 grace of the ſpirite, without the which mans voyce to no effecte ſhould be ſpread abroad in the ayre. So Paule, while hee reioyſeth himſelfe to bee the miniſter of the ſpirite, challengeth nothing aparte vnto himſelfe, as though with his voyce he ſhould pierce the heartes of men, but he declareth in his miniſterie the power and grace of the ſpirite. Theſe ſayinges are worthy to be noted: For Sathan very artificially worketh to diminiſhe the effect of doctrine, that hee might weaken the grace of the ſpirite ioyned to it. I graunt that externall preaching ſeparately by it ſelfe can doe nothing, but becauſe it is an inſtrument of diuine power for our ſaluation, and an effectuall inſtrument by grace of the ſpirite: let not vs ſeperate thoſe thinges which GOD hath ioyned. But that the glory of conuerſion and of fayth, may remaine whole towardes one GOD. The ſcripture doth admoniſh vs oftentimes, miniſters through themſelues to be nothing, but then he compareth them with God, leaſt any man taking the honour from God, ſhould beſtow it amiſſe on them.

In ſumme, the miniſter is ſayd to turne them, whom God doth conuert, through the work of his miniſter. For he is nothing but the hand of God

God,and in this place both are expreſſed very well, now of the effect of doctrine there is enough ſpoken. That the ſame is not in the appointment or hand of the miniſter to conuert men vnto God, of this we gather becauſe that Iohn did not conuert al commonly to God: (the which thing without doubt he would haue done, if all thinges had beene giuen him that he deſired)but he turned them onely, whom it pleaſed God effectually to call. In concluſion, the ſame is taught here of the Angell, which Paule taught to the Romanes: Fayth commeth of hearing, but by fayth none are lightned, but they to whome the Lorde hath inwardly reuealed his arme. Rom. 10. 17.

17. Hee shall goe before him. In theſe wordes he defineth what the office of Iohn ſhould be.& by this note he diſtinguiſheth him from the reſt of the Prophetes,to whom a peculyar and proper meſſage was commanded.when that Iohn for this thing onely was ſent, that he might goe before Chriſt, as an offycer before a king. So the Lord ſpeaketh by Malachy. Behold,I ſend my Angell, which ſhall prepare my way before me. In ſumme,to no other poynt belonged the calling of Iohn,but to prepare an audience for Chriſt,and to get him diſciples. And in that no expreſſe mention is here made of Chriſt,but that the Angell maketh Iohn a forewalker or ſtandert bearer of the eternall God: hereof the eternall diuinitie of Chriſt is gathered. Mal. 3. 1.

With the ſpirite and power of Elyas. The ſpirite and power I take for the power or excellency of the ſpirite, wherewithall Elyas was endued. For neither muſt we inuent the dreame of Pythagoras, that the ſoule of the Prophet ſhould goe into the body of Iohn: But that ſpirit of God,which wrought mightily in Elyas,ſhould after exerciſe like power and effect in the Baptiſt: But the latter name is added expoſitiuely, to expreſſe the kinde of grace, wherein Elyas moſt did excell: namely,that he being furniſhed with heauenly power,might merueilouſly reſtore the decaied worſhippe of God: For ſuch repairing paſſed the power of man. Now that which is begunne of Iohn was no leſſe merueilous,wherfore it is no merueil,if it behooued him to be adorned with the ſame gift.

That he may turne the hearts of the fathers. Here the Angell doth note what eſpeciall ſimilitude Iohn had with Elyas. Therefore he ſaith he was ſent that he might gather people diſpearſed into vnitie of fayth: for the turning of fathers to ſonnes,is a reduction from diſcord to loue. Whereof it followeth that there was a certaine breach, the which might cutte,or as it were rend the people. We know in the time of Elias what a horryble defection of the people there was,how ſhamefully they were degenerate from their fathers,they were ſo deuided, that they could be nothing leſſe thought,then the ſonnes of Abraham. Elyas brought them againe into a holy conſent. Such a gathering together of fathers with children there beganne to be by Iohn,the which Chriſt at length finiſhed: wherefore Malachy when he ſpeaketh of bringing againe, dooth ſignifie that the ſtate of the Church ſhould be ſo deuided (when the other Elyas ſhould come)as it is ſuffyciently knowne by hiſtories, to haue beene then, and ſhall more apparantly be ſeene in their places. The doctrine of the ſcripture was polluted by innumerable lyes,the worſhipping of God was corrupt with more then groſſe ſuperſtitions, religiõ was deuided into diuers ſectes. The prieſtes openly wicked and Epicures, the common people it ſelfe was drowned in wickednesse. Furthermore nothing was ſounde. That is ſayde here, the heartes of fathers to children, it is vnproper. For it behoueth rather to conuert the ſonnes, which were truce breakers, and had gone from the right faith of fathers. But although the Euangeliſte dooth not ſo warily expreſſe the order, yet the ſenſe is not obſcure, that GOD to bring to paſſe, by the worke of Iohn, that they againe ſhould growe together into holy concorde, which firſt were deuided amongſt them ſelues: Eyther part is had of the Prophet, which notwithſtanding meant nothing elſe then to ſignifie mutuall agreement. But beecauſe that oftentimes men ſo conſpire among themſelues, that ſome ſhoulde more alienate ſome from GOD: the Angell doth therewithall define, what manner of conuerſion it ſhoulde bee, which hee doth promiſe: yea ſuch as ſhould call the diſobedient to the wiſdome of the righteous. That therefore is to be noted, that wee knitte not our ſelues faſt with the wicked, vnder the falſe cloake of concord. Becauſe the name of peace is goodly and pleaſaunt, as ofte as it commeth in the ſcriptures it is greedily ſnatched of the Papiſtes, to procure vs enuie: as though that we (which endeuour to call the world from diſloyall reuolting, to Chriſt) were the aucthours of diſcorde. But by this text, their fooliſhnes is very well refelled: becauſe the Angell doth ſhew the manner of true and lawfull converſion, he maketh the ſtay and bande of it to be the wiſdome of the righteous. Accurſed therefore be that peace and vnitie, wherein men agree amongſt themſelues againſt GOD. Furthermore, it is not to be doubted, but that fayth is vnderſtoode by the wiſdome of righteous men, as of the contrary, the vnfaythful are called diſobedient.

Truelye an excellent teſtimonie of fayth, whereby wee learne, that we then are wiſe to ſaluation, when wee are obedient to the woord of God. The worlde alſo hath his wiſdome, but corrupt, and therefore deadlye: and which is condemned of vanitie. Although the Angell ſignifieth ouerthwartly ſhadowed wiſdome, wicked and accurſed before God, wherein the ſonnes of this world pleaſe themſelues. Nowe wee vnderſtand men ſo to be reconciled amongſt them ſelues, that chiefly they might come againe in fauour with god. That which ſtreight waies followeth of making ready a people, prepared for the Lord, doth agree with that parte, that Iohn ſhould be the cryer of Chriſte, that he might walke before his face, for the end of his preaching was to make the people diligent to heare the doctrine of Chriſte. Although the participle Kateskeuaſmenon doth not ſo much ſignifie perfection with the Greekes, as the fourme and aptneſſe, whereby thinges are made fitte for their vſe. The which ſignification ſhall not ill agree with this place, that Iohn was ſent to prepare and frame that people for Chriſte, which otherwiſe being rude and vnpoliſhed, woulde neuer ſhew it ſelf eaſie to be taught.

Luke. 1.

| Matthew. | Marke. | 18. Then Zacharias ſayde vnto the Angell, whereby ſhall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife is of a great age.
19. And the Angell anſwered, and ſayde vnto him: I am Gabryell, that ſtand in the preſence of of God,and am ſent to ſpeake vnto thee,and to ſhew thee theſe good tidings.

20. And behold thou ſhalt be dumb,and not be able to ſpeak,vntil the day that theſe things be done, becauſe thou beleeuedſt not my woords, which ſhalbe fulfilled in their ſeaſon.

18. Then Zacharias ſayde vnto the Angell. Here followeth the infidelitie of Zacharyas,and the puniſhment which the Lord layde vppon his vnfaithfulnes.He prayed for the obtaining of offspring: now,when it is promiſed,as forgetfull of his vowes and fayth,he diſtruſteth: Albeit at the firſt bluſh it might ſeeme a harde thing, that with his anſwere God ſhoulde ſo grieuouſly be offended. He obiecteth his olde age: euen ſo did Abraham, whoſe fayth yet is ſo much praiſed, that Paule ſhould ſay, his body which now was dead,was not conſidered. Nor the vnfruitefull wombe of Sara: but ſimply that he repoſed himſelfe in the trueth and the power of God.Zachary doth aske how, or by what argument he may bee the more aſſured.And Gedeon was not reprehended, though that twiſe hee required a ſigne: And alſo a litle after there is the like exception giuen of Mary: How ſhall this thing be,when I know not man? The which notwithſtanding the Angell dooth diſſemble as if there were no faulte in her: how commeth it then, that the Lord ſhoulde ſo ſeuerely chaſten Zacharyas,as guiltie of moſt grieuous ſinne? Verily I graunt, if the wordes onely ſhould be looked on, eyther that they did all offend a like, or Zachary not to haue offended at all.But when it is conueniēt to iudge the dooinges and ſayings of men,according to the affection of the heart, it is rather to be ſtoode to the iudgement of God, to whome the priuye ſecrete places of the heart are open. The Lord without doubt dooth ſee ſomething worſe in Zachary,then his wordes doe ſhew: And therefore the Lord waxed angry with him, that by diſtruſt he ſhould put away his promiſed fauour to him.It is not our dutie to preſcribe a law for God,but let it be free for him to puniſh that in one,which offence he doth pardon in others.But it doth eaſily appeare, that the cauſe of Zacharye differed from the cauſe of Abraham,Gedeon,or Mary.That in words is not diſcerned.The knowledge therfore is to be left to god,whoſe eies do pearſe euen to the fountaine of the hart.So God diſcerned betweene the laughter of Sara & of Abraham:when notwithſtāding, the one differed not,in likenes from the other. Furthermore, the cauſe of diſtruſt in Zacharyas, was,that he ſtaying in the order of nature,did attribute leſſe to the power of God,then was meete.For ouer ſtraightly & ſparingly do they think of the works of God,which beleeue not him to be able to do more, thē according to nature is credible,as though his hand were ſubiect to our ſēce, or included in earthly meanes; but it is the propertie of fayth much more to beleeue,then the reaſon of the fleſh could ſay might come to paſſe.Zacharias doubted not,whether it were the voyce of God,or no:But when he was ouermuch bent vpō the world,an ouerthwart doubting crept into his mind,whether that ſhould come to paſſe,that he heard or no.And in that thing he did no ſmal iniury to god:for it were as much,as if he ſhould diſpute whether god might be accounted true or no,whō he ſurely knew had ſpokē it,which was ſufficient:although it is to be knowyn Zacharias not to haue beene ſo vnbeleeuing, that altogether hee ſhoulde ſtrinke from faith. For there is a generall faith, which dooth take hold of the promiſe of eternall ſaluation, and the teſtimonie of free adoption. And euen as after God hath once receiued vs into fauour,he ſpecially promiſeth many thinges that he will feede, that he will take vs out of perilles, he will be a defender of our innocencie, and preſerue our life: ſo there is a perticular fayth,which anſwereth to euery ſuch promiſes. Therefore ſometime it may be,that ſome man truſting in God of forgiuenes of ſins, and of ſaluation, yet in ſome point ſhould wauer: for either he ſhoulde feare too much in the daunger of death, or be too much carefull for daily ſuſtenaunce,or ouer doubtfull in his counſailes. Such was the incredulitie of Zachary,becauſe that he hauing the roote and foundatiō of faith, did onely ſtick in this one poynt,whether God would giue him a ſonne. VVherefore let vs know, that they doe not by and by fall and departe from the fayth,when their infirmities in ſome particular affaires doe diſturbe or moue thē, nor faith to faile at the roote, as oft as the boughes doe ſhake at diuerſe inuaſions or blaſtes. Graunt that Zachary meant nothing leſſe then to call to triall the aſſurance of the diuine promiſe. But when that generally he was perſwaded God to be true, he was drawen by ſtelth into a ſhrewd eſtate, by the crafte and deceites of Sathan. So much the rather it becommeth vs to be ready bent to watching day and night. For which of vs ſhall be ſure from the deceites of Sathan, into the which we ſee a man of ſingular holynes to haue fallen,who diligently in al his life tooke heede to himſelf?

19. I am Gabryell. In theſe words the Angell doth ſhew,that the credit was taken not from him,but from God,of whome he was ſent, and whoſe meſſage he brought: and therefore he reproueth Zachary, that he was diſobedient againſt God. To ſtand before God, ſignifieth as much as to be readie at commaundement: as if he ſhoulde ſay, that he was no mortal man,but a heauēly ſpirit,neither raſhly to haue come,but as it becāe the miniſter of God,faithfully to fulfill his office: whereof it followeth, that God,the authour of the promiſe is vnworthily hurt, and deſpiſed in the perſon of his meſſenger. To that purpoſe tēdeth the ſaying of Chriſt, He that doth deſpiſe you,deſpiſeth me. For although the preaching of the Goſpell is not by Angels,brought vnto vs from heauen: yet becauſe GOD dooth witneſſe by ſo many miracles the ſame to proceede from him,and Chriſt the prince and chiefe of Angels publyſhed the ſame once with his own mouth,that he might ſanctifie and eſtabliſh the ſame for euer, no leſſe maieſtie ought to perſiſt in it,then if al the Angelles openly crying from heauen ſhould witneſſe the ſame. Nay,the Apoſtle in his Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, not being ſatiſfied to ſay, that the voyce of the Goſpell,which is founded out by the voyce of men, is equall to the lawe giuen by Angelles: but dooth gather his argument from the leſſer to the greater: If the word(ſaith he) brought by Angelles being reiected, was not without puniſhment,much leſſe ſhal they eſcape reuenge,which this day deſpiſe the voyce of Chriſt,who can ſtrike the heauen and earth. Let vs therefore learne to perfourme obedience of fayth to GOD, the which he doth more account then all ſacrifices.

Heb.10.28 & 12.25.

Gabryell doth ſignifie might or ſtrength, or the gouernaunce of God, and this name was giuen to the Angel for our ſake,that we might learne to attribute nothing as proper to Angels, when that what vertue soeuer they haue is diuine, and of God. The Participle Paresteeca, is of the preter tence: but in such wordes it is very well knowne, the preter tence to be put in the place of the presēt tence, especially where continual action is signified.

to

Furthermore, the Angell, as it was lately saide, doth affirme in those wordes, him selfe to be the perpetuall messenger of God. That phrase of shewing good tidinges dooth amplifie the fault of Zachary, that he should be vngratefull to God, promising him gently a thing ioyfull, and to be wished for of all.

20. And beholde, thou shalt be dumbe. This kinde of punishment was like to be layde on Zachary, that hee being dumbe might loke for the comming of the promise, the which when hee ought to haue hearde it with silence, he as it were brake it off with grieuous repyning murmuring. Fayth keepeth silence, that it may be attentiue to the woorde of GOD. Furthermore, it hath also the courses of speaking: That it may answere Amen, according to that of Osee. 2. 23. I will say to them, you are my people: And they shall saye to mee, thou art our GOD. And beecause that Zachary answered rashly to the word of God; this fauour was not graunted to him, that streightwayes he should breake forth into giuing of thankes: but the vse of his tongue, which was ouer hastie was taken from him, for a time: Yet notwithstanding God doth gentlye mittigate his paine. First, beecause hee dooth ende the same in tenne monethes: then that he suffered Zachary not to be depriued of that benefit, whereof he was vnworthy. He vseth the same gentleneſſe dayly towardes vs. For as our fayth is small, and we obiect many impedimentes, it is needefull that the trueth of GOD, by some meanes shoulde breake out, that it might continue his course towardes vs'. That is the meaning of the Angell, when accusing Zachary of vnbeleefe, he doth yet pronounce, that thing should be finished, which Zachary did not beleeue: Therefore Zachary is not a litle cheered, when he heareth that his fayth is not ouerthrowne of God, by reason of his faulte: but that at length it should appeare victorious. And sometime it commeth to passe, that the Lord doth perfourme and fulfill that, which was promised to vnbeleeuers, how much soeuer they resist: of the which thing we haue an example worthy of remembraunce, in king Achaz: who when he forsooke his promised safegarde, was yet deliuered from his enimies. But that tended not to his profit, but for the saluation of the chosen people. There is an other thing in Zachery to be considered, to whom the Lord doth so forgiue the lacke of fayth, that therewithall hee yet correcteth it. Isai 7. 11

Luke. 1.

Matthew.	Marke.	21. Nowe the people wayled for Zacharyas, and marueiled that hee taryed so long in the temple. 22. And when hee came out, hee coulde not speake vnto them: then they perceiued, that he had seene a vision in the Temple, for he made signes vnto them, and remained dumbe.

23. And it came to passe, when the dayes of his office were fulfilled, that hee departed to his owne house,

24. And after those dayes his wife Elizabeth conceaued, and hidde her selfe fiue monethes, saying:

25. Thus hath the Lorde dealt with me in the dayes wherein hee looked on mee, to take from mee my rebuke among men.

21. And the people waited. Luke declareth that the people also was a witnesse of this visiõ. Zachary taryed longer in the temple then the wont was: Hereon suspition grewe, some vnaccustomed thing to haue befalne to him: he being come out, by gestures and signes dooth shew, that hee is become dumbe. And it is credible, that some tokens of feare remayned in his countenaunce, whereby they gather that God had appeared to him. And there were in that age few or no visions: but the people did remember that they had beene common before in their fathers time. Wherefore not without cause did they iudge of these manifest signes. For it was not cõmon, that sodenly without sicknes he should be dumbe: And that after longer delay then neede was, he should come so amased out of the temple. Furthermore, the name of the temple, as we now said, is vsed for the holy place, where the altar of incense was: from thence the Sacrifice being finished, the priests were woont to goe into their porche, and thence they blessed the people.

23. When the dayes were fulfilled. Luke doth put the word Liturgian for the executing of the office, which did goe by course in order to euery one, euen as we haue said. That it is said, that Zachary returned to his house, the time of his charg being past: hereout we gather the priests so long as
1. Reg. 6. 5 they were in their courses did refrain frõ their houses, that they might altogether be giuen and fixed to the seruice of God. For this purpose there were Galeries made in the sides of the temple in the which they had chãbers. The law did not forbid the priest from his own house: but that it
1. Sam. 21. 4 restrained them from touching of their wiues, when they should eat the Leui. 10. 9 holy bread: It is probable, that when Many with smal reuerence did handle the holy things, this remedie was inuented, that they being removed from all allurements, might keepe them selues cleane & free from all pollution: Neyther was the lying with their wiues onely forbidden then, but also the drinking of wine and strong drink. Therefore when the order of their diet was chaunged, it was profitable not to depart from the tẽple, that the sight of the place might teach them to seeke and esteeme of puritie, euen as it was appointed of the lord. It was also profitable that all occasion of wantonnesse should therby be taken away, that with more diligence they might apply their charge. The Papistes this day vnder this pretence doe defend their tyrranous law of vnmarried life: For thus they reason, seeing the priests in times past were commanded to abstain from their wiues, when they were busied in holy affaires: now worthily may perpetuall continence be required of our priestes, which not by course of times, but daily, doe sacrifice: Chiefly, for that the dignitie of holy rites is farre more excellent, then vnder the law. But I would knowe, why they

doe not also abstaine from wine and strong drinke. For neyther, is it lawfull to seperate those commaundements, which God hath ioyned that onely halfe should be obserued, and the other part neglected. The companie with their wiues is not so expressly forbidden, as the drinking of wine. If vnder the colour of the law, the Pope doth inioyne to his priests single life, why doth he permit them wiues? Nay, by this reason he ought to shutte vp his priestes in some innermost roomes of his Temples, that they being shutte in prisons, might passe all their life without the fellowshipe of women and people. Now we see plainely they wickedly pretende the law of God, from which they depart: But notwithstanding a ful answere dependeth of the difference of the law and the Gospell. The priest did place him selfe before God, to purge awaye the sinnes of the people, that he might be as it were a mediatour of God and men: it behooued him, vpon whom that office was layd, to haue some note, whereby he being exempted from the common order of men, might be knowne as the figure of the true mediatour. For this purpose were appointed the holye garments and annoynting: Now in the publike ministers and pastors of the Church there is no such like thing, I speake of the ministers, which Christ instituted to feede his flock, not of those which the Pope maketh, rather butchers to sacrifice Christ, then priestes. VVherefore let vs repose our selues in that sentence of the holy Ghoste, which pronounceth that matrimonie is honourable in all men. Ezec. 34. 28 Heb. 13. 4

24. Shee hidde herselfe. This seemeth to bee absurd, as though that shee should be ashamed of diuine blessing. Some thinke, that the thing being yet doubtfull, shee durst not come abroad, least that shee should make her selfe a laughingstocke, if her opinion should be made frustrate, which shee had conceaued. And I doe so accompt of the promise made, that shee was assured it should come to passe. For when shee perceaued such grieuous punishment to be layde vppon her husband, for the vnadui sed fall of his tongue, howe could shee siue monethes space nourish such doubt in her heart: and her woordes doe plainely declare that her hope was not wauering, or doubtfull: For when shee saieth, the Lorde hath doone it, shee wisely and without feare declareth the Lordes known fauour.

There might be two causes of her hiding. First, that the miracle of God should not be layde open to the diuers speaches of men, beefore it should apparauntly be knowne. For it is the custome of the worlde to speake oftentimes rashly and verie vnreuerentlye of the workes of God.

The other cause was, that when men of a sodaine shoulde see her great with childe, they should the more be stirred to praise the Lorde. For those workes of GOD, which by litle and litle rise vppe amongst vs, in processe of time are naught serte by. Therefore Elizabeth hydde and absented her selfe not for her owne sake, but for the cause of others.

25. Thus hath the Lorde dealt with mee. Shee setteth forth the goodnesse of God priuately, vntill the appoynted time should come of publishing the same vnto the worlde. It is to bee supposed that her husbande by writing had enformed her of the promised childe, in that the more certainely and with the cheerefuller minde shee sheweth that GOD is the authour of this benefitte. And that shee approoueth in her nexte woordes. In the dayes wherein he looked on me, to take from me my rebuke among men. Shee declareth, that the cause of barrennesse was, for that the fauour of God was turned from her.

Amongst the earthly blessinges, which God doth giue, the scripture accounteth this as chiefe, that he vouchsafeth to giue vs children. For if the increase of bruit beastes is a blessing of God: then how much more excellent man is then beastes, so much more to be esteemed and accounted of, is the increase of men then of beastes. Neither is it a slight or common honour, that when God alone deserueth to be accounted a father, hee yet admitteth earthly men into the fellowshippe of this name with him. Therefore that doctrine is diligently to be considered, that children are the inheritaunce of the Lord. Psalm. 127.3. and the fruite of the womb his reward. But Elizabeth had a further regarde: because that beyonde the common order of nature, she being barren and olde, had now conceaued by a wonderfull miracle of God.

To take from me my rebuke among men. Barrennesse was not without cause esteemed as a reproach, seeing that the blessing of the wombe was accounted amongst the especial testimonies of gods fauour & loue. Some thinke that this did specially appertaine to the people of the old lawe, beecause that Christe was to come of the seede of Abraham. But that belonged onely to the tribe of Iuda. Others more rightly affirme, that the encrease of the people of GOD was prosperous and happye, for that it was sayde to Abraham, Gene. 13.15. Thy seede shall bee as the sande of the sea, and as the starres of the heauen: But the generall blessing which reacheth vnto all mankinde, and the promise made vnto Abraham, which is peculiar to the Church of God, ought to be ioyned together.

Let parentes learne to be thankfull to God for their children, but let them that want, learne by the same to humble them selues. Elizabeth accounteth that this reproach is but before men, beecause that it is but a temporall chastisement, by which we are nothing the further from the kingdome of heauen.

Luke. 1.

Matthew. | Marke.

26. And in the sixt moneth the Angell Gabriell was sent from God vnto a citie of Galile, named Nazareth.

27. To a virgin affianced to a man, whose name was Ioseph, of the house of Dauid: and the virgins name was Mary.

28. And the Angell went in vnto her, and sayde, Hayle, thou art freely beloued, the Lorde is with thee: Blessed art thou among women.

29. And when shee saw him, shee was troubled at his saying, and thought what manner of salutation that should be.

30. Then the Angell sayde vnto her, Feare not Marye: for thou haste founde fauour with God.

31. For

31. For loe, thou shalt conceaue in thy wombe, and beare a ſonne, and call his name Ieſus.

32. Hee ſhall be great, and ſhall bee called the Sonne of the moſte heigh: and the Lorde God ſhall giue him the throane of Dauid his father.

33. And hee ſhall reigne ouer the houſe of Iacob for euer, and of his kingdome ſhall be no ende.

26. In the ſixt moneth. The order of Gods counſell is wonderful, and much differeth from the common iudgement of men. In that he woulde that the beginning of the generation ſhould be more famous in his forerunner, or cryer, then in his owne ſonne. The prophecie of Iohn Baptiſt vttered in the temple, is knowne in euery place. But Chriſt is promiſed to a virgin, in an vnknowne towne of Iuda, and this prophecie remayneth buried in the boſome of one maide. But ſo it was requiſite to bee, that euen in Chriſtes birth that might be fulfilled. That God by fooliſhneſſe might ſaue them that beleeue. 1. Cor. 1. 21. But ſo was this treaſure of this ſecrete miſterie layde vp with the virgin, that at the length in his time it might come forth to all the godly. This ſecrete repoſing of it is (I graunt) contemptible: but ſuch as was moſt meete both for the triall of the humilitie of our faith, and alſo for the beating downe of the pride of the wicked.

And let vs (although the reaſon doe not at the firſt appeare) learne with modeſtie to ſubmit our ſelues to GOD: neyther in this let it grieue vs to learne of her, that bore Chriſt the eternal wiſdome of God, in her wombe. Nothing is more to be taken heede of, then that we through our proud contempt bereaue not our ſelues of the knowledge of the incomparable miſterie, which God wil ſhould be hidde in his litle ones, and ſuch as ſeeke for knowledge. This ſeemeth to me to be the cauſe, why he choſe a virgin eſpouſed to a man. The imagination of Origen, that he ſo wrought it, that hee might keepe ſecrete from Sathan the ſaluation, which he prepared to giue to men, hath no lykelyhoode with it. The veile of matrimonie was therefore ſpread beefore the eyes of the worlde: that he whom they commonly ſuppoſed to be the ſonne of Ioſeph, the godly at length by fayth ſhould knowe to be the ſonne of God. And yet Chriſt came not forth in ſuch baſe and meane ſorte, but that the heauenly father ſhewed forth in him euen at the beginning, the glorye of his Godhead. For the Angelles declared, that the Sauiour was borne. But their voice being heard only of the Shepheards was not ſpread farre.

There was one wonder famous amongſt the reſt, that the wiſe men which came from the Eaſt, did euery where reporte, that a ſtarre appeared vnto them, as a teſtimonie of the birth of the great king: yet we ſee howe GOD kept his ſoone, as it were in ſecrete, vntill the time came, that he ſhoulde fully be ſhewed. Then he erected, as one ſhould ſaye, a theatre, from whence he might plainly be beholden. The participle, Memneſteumenen, which the Euangeliſte doth vſe, doth ſignifie, that ſhee then was a virgin, promiſed to a husbande, but not deliuered as a wife to a husbande. For it was a cuſtome amongſt the Iewes, that the parentes ſhould keepe their daughters at home with them, for a time, after that they were eſpouſed vnto men: Or elſe that law for the ſlaundered wife, which is in Deut. 22.13. were in vaine. Luke ſaith, that Ioſeph was of the ſtock of Dauid: becauſe that the familyes were woont to be accounted by the names of men: of the which matter we will ſpeake more in an other place.

28. Hayle thou that art freely beloued. Becauſe that the meſſage was wonderfull, and almoſt incredible: therefore the Angell beganne with a commendation of the fauour and grace of GOD: And ſeeing that by reaſon of our dull vnderſtanding, our mindes are driuen to ſuch a ſtraight, that they cannot cõprehend the wonderful greatnes of God his works: This is the beſt remedie, that we ſtir vp our mindes to meditate and conſider the infiniteneſſe of his grace. Therefore ſince that the vnderſtanding of GOD his goodneſſe is the gate of fayth: The Angell tooke this (and not without cauſe) as the beſt order, that by occupying the minde of the virgin in meditating of the fauour of GOD, ſhe might be the better prepared to receiue and vnderſtand that incomprehenſible miſterie. For the participle Kecharitomene, which Luke dooth vſe, ſignifieth the free fauour of God, as appeareth more plainely in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians. 1.6. where Paule intreating of our reconciliation with GOD, ſaieth that God, by his beloued Sonne Echaritoſen, that is, receiued vs into his grace, and through his fauour he embraced vs, which beefore were his enemies. Afterwardes the Angell ſaieth, that God was with her. For vppon whom GOD vouchſafeth once to beſtow his loue, vnto them he declareth him ſelfe to bee mercifull and bountifull, and to them hee giueth and beſtoweth his giftes, and therefore is the thirde parte of the ſentence added, Bleſſed art thou amonge women: For hee vſeth this woorde Bleſſing as the effecte and proofe of the fauour of GOD. For in myne opinion, it is not heere vſed for a prayſing of her, but it dooth rather ſignifie a happyneſſe or bleſſedneſſe.

So Paule vſeth to praye, that the faythfull might haue firſt grace, then peace: that is, all kind of good things, ſignifying thereby that we are then becõe bleſſed & rich, when we are beloued of God, the auctour of al good things. Then if the bleſſednes, righteouſnes and lyfe of Mary doe come of the free loue of God, and that her vertues and all her excellencie is the meere liberalitie of God: Then deale they very prepoſterouſly, that teach vs to aske thoſe things of her, which ſhee with vs recieueth from an other.

But very groſſe is the folly of the Papiſtes, which as it were by a magicall coniuring, haue turned this ſalutation into a prayer. And by want of reaſon they haue beene this farre drawne, that their Preachers might not praye in the pulpitte for the aſsiſtaunce and grace of God his ſpirite, but by their Hayle Mary. And beſides that, this is to be accompted as a ſalutation onely, they raſhlye take vnto them ſelues the office of an other, which God inioyned not to any but to the Angell: but twiſe more foolifhis that imitation, that they ſalute one that is abſent.

29. When

29. VVhen shee sawe him, shee was troubled. Luke doth not say that shee was troubled at the sight of the Angell, but at his saying: why then dooth he also make mention of the sight? This, (as I interprete it) was the cause: Marye seeing some portion of heauenly glory in the Angell, through the reuerence of GOD, she conceaued a sodaine feare. Therefore shee was troubled, for that shee perceiued, that it was not a mortall manne that did salute her, but an Angell of GOD. But Luke dooth not say, that shee was so troubled, that shee was thereby amased: but rather sheweth the signe of an attentiue and verye readye minde, when that he presently addeth, that shee thought with her self what manner of salutation this should bee: that is, whereto it tended, and what it meant. For presently shee thought, that the Angell was not sent to her for nothing.

And by this example wee are admonished: First, that the woorkes of GOD are not sleightly to be passed ouer: Then likewise wee ought so to weighe and consider them, that reuerence and feare may goe before.

30. Feare not Marye. In that he willeth her not to be afrayde, let vs alwayes remember, howe weake our flesshe is, and that it cannot be, but that we shoulde be afrayde, so oft as but the least sparke of God his glorye doth appeare. For when we earnestly consider the presence of God, wee cannot imagine a vaine or ydle presence. Therefore when wee are all in daunger of his iudgement, out of feare there riseth a trembling, vntill hee shewe him selfe as a father. The holye Virginne sawe amongst her people such a vile heape of sinnes, that there was good cause why shee should be afrayd of the greater vengeaunce.

VVherefore, that the Angell might put this feare awaye, hee saieth, that hee is a witnesse and tydinges bringer of that, which is wonderful good. Luke vsed this Hebrewe phrase, to finde fauour, for to haue God mercifull. For it cannot be sayde, that hee found fauour, that sought the same: but hee to whom it was offered, and seeing that examples of the same are sufficiently knowne, it were but vaine heere to alleage them.

31. For loe, thou shalt conceaue in thy wombe. The Angell frameth his woordes, first to the propheſie of Esaye, and then to other places of the Prophetes, that it might thereby the better sincke into the Virgins minde. For such Propheſies were knowne and common, euerye where among the godly: yet with all it is to be noted, that the Angell did not whisper that onely in the eare of the Virgin, but he brought that gladde tidinges of saluation, which not long after was to be spread throughout the whole world.

VVherefore it is not doone without the counsell of God, that hee so plainely expresseth the consent betweene the olde propheſies and the present message of the comming of Christe. The woord Conceauing, is sufficient to confute the witlesse fancie, aswell of Marcyon, as of Manicheus. For thereby may be easily gathered, that Mary did not bring for than aiery body or Ghost, but such frui as she before had conceaued in her wombe.

And thou shalt call his name Iesus. Mat. 1. 21. rendreth the cause why this name was giuen him. For that he should saue his people frō their sinnes: so that in the verye name saluation is promised, and the cause is shewed to what end Christ was sent of his father into the worlde. As he saieth him selfe, that he came not to destroy, but to saue the worlde. Ioh. 12. 47. Let vs also remēber that this name was not giuen him by the will of man, but by the Angell, at the commaundement of God, that our faith might be fastened in heauen, and not vppon earth. It is deryued of ishg which with the Hebrewes is saluation: and from thence commeth that word, which signifieth to saue. Furthermore, they doe but fondlye reason, which endeuour to deriue it of that Hebrewe nowne ihusshua.

It appeareth that the Rabbynes did deale very malitiously, in that they neuer giue him that honourable title of Christ, but in euery place write Iesu: or rather imagine him to haue beene some base or degenerate Iew. Therfore their writing deserueth as much credit and authoritie, as doth the barking of a dogge. That they obiect that he should be farre inferior to the dignitie of the sonne of GOD, if hee shoulde haue a name common with others, may also be pretended of Christe. But the answere to them both is very easie. For that which before was shadowed vnder the lawe, is fully and wholye perfourmed in the Sonne of God: or that he had the substaunce of that in him, which was before but figured. The other obiection is of no greater force. They denie that the name of Iesu is holy and reuerent, before whom euery knee Philip. 2. 9. ought to bowe, vnlesse it did onely belong to the sonne of God. Paule ooth not attribute vnto him a magicall name, in whose syllables the maiestie were included: but his wordes were to this purpose, as if he should haue said; great power was giuen vnto Christ of his father, vnder the which al the worlde should bowe. Therefore let vs bid such faigned inuentions farewell, and let vs know that the name of Iesu was giuen vnto Christ, that the faythfull might learne to seeke in him that, which beefore was shadowed vnder the law.

32. Hee shall be great. The Angell sayde the same of Iohn Baptist, whom yet hee would not make equall with Christ. But the Baptist was great in his order: And presently after he declareth that the greatnes of Christ extolled him farre aboue all creatures. For this hath he alone proper and peculyar to him selfe, that he should be called the sonne of God, as the Apostle proueth Heb. 1. 5.

I graunt, that sometimes in the scripture the Angelles and kinges are adorned with this title: but these are in common called the sonnes of God, for the excellencie which God hath giuen them. And it is cleare, and not to be doubted, but that God exempteth his sonne from all the rest, when that he peculiarly saieth vnto him, Psalme. 1. 7. Thou art my Sonne: Therefore Christ is accounted here neither among Angels nor men, that he might be accounted one of common sort or company of the children of God: for that which is giuen vnto him, it is lawful for none other to take to them selues.

It is true that Kings are the children of God, but not by right of nature, but because the Lord hath bestowed that honour vpon them. Neither doth this title belong vnto Angels, but as they vnder their chief head excell excell amongſt the creatures. And we alſo are children but by adoption which we obtaine by faith, for wee haue it not of nature. But Chriſt is the onely, and the onely-begotten ſonne. That interpretation is very falſe and deceitfull, which that filthie dogge Seruetus wreſteth, the woorde of the future tence, that he mighte prooue that Chriſt was not the eternall ſonne of God: But that he began then ſo to be accompted when that hee tooke vpon him our fleſh. Hee argueth that Chriſt was not the ſonne of God, before that he being clothed with fleſh, did appeare in the worlde, becauſe that the Angell ſayd: He ſhall be called: I except againſt this, and affirme that the wordes of the Angell doe ſignifie nothing elſe, but that ſuch a ſonne of God ſhould be made manifeſt in the fleſh, as was eternall: For to be called is referred to the apparaunt knowledge. But there is great difference here betweene theſe two enterpretations, whether he beganne now to be the ſonne of God, which was not before, or that he was made knowne vnto men, that they might know him to be the ſame which was promiſed in times paſt. And truely, ſith that God in all ages was called a Father of his people, it may thereby be gathered, that the Sonne was in heauen: from whom and through whom this fatherhood came to men. For men ſhould arrogate too much vnto themſelues, if they durſt be ſo bold as bragge, that they were the ſonnes of God: but as they are the members of the onely begotten ſonne. VVherefore it is certaine that the holy fathers had not the aſſuraunce of that ſo honourable a calling: But as they had their confidence in the Sonne, the mediatour. But what profit we haue by this more perfect knowledge, whereof we now ſpeake. Paule doth teach vs in an other place. For that nowe wee may freely not onely call, but cry out that God is our father. Rom. 8. 15. and Gal. 4. 5.

God ſhall gine vnto him the throane of Dauid. VVe haue ſayde that the Angel tooke out of the Prophetes theſe titles, which he giueth vnto Chriſt, that the holy virgin might thereby know the better, that he ſhould be the Redeemer, which was in times paſt promiſed vnto the fathers. VVhen as the Prophetes doe ſpeak of the reſtitution of the Church, they cal the whole hope of the faithfull to the kingdome of Dauid: So that it was a common rule amongſt the Iewes, that the ſauegard of the Church was repoſed in the proſperitie of Dauids kingdome. Neither did there any thing more aptly or fitly agree to the office of the Meſsias, then that hee ſhould againe reſtore the kingdome of Dauid. And therefore the Meſsias is ſometimes called by the name of Dauid: as in Ier. 30. 9. They ſhall ſerue the Lord their God, and Dauid their king: Alſo in Ezechel 34. 24. and 37. 24. My ſeruaunt Dauid ſhall be prince amongſt them: And in Oſe. 3. 5. They ſhall ſeeke the Lord their God, and Dauid their king. The places alſo wheras he is called the Sonne of Dauid, are ſufficiently knowne and vnderſtoode. In ſumme, the Angell declareth that the prophecie of Amos. 9. 11. of rayſing the tabernacle of Dauid, which was fallen downe and ouerthrowne, was fulfilled in the perſon of Chriſt.

33. He ſhall reigne ouer the houſe of Iacob. Seeing that ſaluation was peculiarly promiſed vnto the Iewes, euen as the couenaunt was made with Abraham their father, and Chriſt, as Paule witneſſeth, Rom. 15. 8. was a miniſter of circumciſion: the Angell doth not without cauſe appoynt his kingdome in that nation, as if it were the proper ſeate and abiding place of the ſame. But this differeth not from other prophecies, which do enlarge and ſtretche the kingdome of Chriſt to the vttermoſte partes of the earth. For God by a newe and wonderfull adoption did plante the Gentiles (which before were ſtraungers) into the houſe of Iacob, ſo yet that the Iewes as the firſt borne ſhoulde holde the principall degree, as it is ſet downe in the Pſal. 110. 2. The Lord ſhall ſende the rod of thy power out of Syon. Therefore the throne of Chriſt was placed amongeſt the children of Iſrael, from whēce he made the whole world ſubiect vnto him. But as many as are gathered by faith to the ſonnes of Abraham, are accompted as the true Iſrael. And although the Iewes through their defection ſeparated them ſelues from the church of God, yet the Lordes will was, that certaine remnants of them ſhoulde remaine euen vnto the end, becauſe that his calling is beyonde the power of man. The body of the people in ſhewe is vtterly cut off. But we muſt remember the myſterie whereof Paule ſpeaketh to the Rom. 11. 25. That at length it ſhould come to paſſe that God woulde gather ſome of the Iewes from the diſperſing and ſcattering abroade. In the meane ſeaſon the church which is ſcattered through the whole worlde, is the ſpirituall houſe of Iacob, becauſe ſhe fetched her beginning out of Sion. For euer. The angel declareth in what ſenſe the perpetuitie was ſo oft promiſed by the Prophets to the kingdom of Dauid. It floriſhed only in the times of Dauid and Salomon in power & riches. Roboam the third ſucceſſor, ſkarſe held a tribe and a halfe. From that time it ceaſed not to be ſhaken with diuers miſeries, vntil at length it was broken downe. Now the Angel declareth that when in the perſon of Chriſt it ſhall be eſtabliſhed, that ſhall not againe be deſtroied: and to proue the ſame, he vſeth the wordes of Daniel, which are ſet downe 7. 14. And of his kingdom ſhalbe no ende. Although the ſenſe of the words is, that God is the euerlaſting gouernor of the kingdom of Chriſt and of the Churche, ſo that it ſhall neuer periſh from off the earth, ſo long as the Sunne and Moone ſhall ſhine in the heauen, yet the true perpetuitie belongeth vnto the glory that is to come. Therefore the faithfull doe ſo by continual courſe ſome of them ſucceede others in this life, vntill at the lengthe they be gathered togethter into heauen, where they ſhall raigne without ende.

Luke. 1.

Matthew.	Marke.
		34. Then ſayde Marie to the Angell: howe ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not man?
		35. And the Angel anſweared, and ſaide vnto her: the holy Ghoſt ſhall come vpon thee, & the power of the moſte highe ſhall ouerſhadowe thee: therfore alſo that holy thing which ſhal be borne of thee, ſhall be called the ſonne of God.
		36. And beholde thy couſin Elizabeth, ſhee hath alſo conceiued a ſonne in her olde age, & this is her ſixte moneth, which was called barren.
		37. For with God nothinge ſhall bee impoſſible.
		38. Then Marie ſayd, Behold the ſeruaunt of the the Lorde, bee it done vnto mee accordinge to thy woorde: So the Angell departed from her.

34. Howe can this be. The holy virgin ſeemeth as hardly to reſtraine the power of God, as Zachatie did before: For that doeth ſhee accompte to be vnpoſsible, which is beyond the common order of nature, for thus ſhe reaſoneth. I knowe no man, how then ſhould I beleeue that this ſhoulde come to paſſe which thou telleſt me? It is not needefull that we ſhoulde greatly labor to cleare her of all fault, for by faith ſhee ought to haue riſen to the omnipotēt power of God, which is not tied to natural means, but ſurmounteth the whole world, & yet ſhee now ſtaieth in the common courſe of generation: yet it is to be knowen that ſhee doeth not ſo doubt or demand, as if ſhee would haue the power of God made ſubiect or equal to her ſenſes, but being ſtricken with a ſodaine admiration, ſhee is only moued to aske this queſtion. And that ſhe obediently and gladly receiueth this promiſe, may be gathered by this: That, wheras there were many doubts on the contrary part, ſhee yet did ſtay but at this one. Shee might eaſily haue obiected: where is that throne of Dauid become, ſeeing that al the dignity of that Empire had now a long time ben aboliſhed, & all the glorious beautye of the kingly ſtocke was extinguiſhed: So that if ſhe had weighed the matter with the iudgement of fleſh, ſhe ſhould haue take al that ſhe heard of the Angel but for a fable. VVherfore it is not to be doubted, but that ſhee eaſily gaue place, & was throughly perſwaded of the reſtitution of the church, a thing according to the fleſh incredible. And it is probable that the propheſie of Eſay 11. was cōmonly ſpoken of euery where, whereas God promiſeth to raiſe a graffe to grow out of the contempned ſtocke of Iſay. Faith therefore being through the grace of God conceiued in the virgins minde, cauſed her without doubt to beleue the meſſage that was brought her of erecting of the throne of Dauid. If any except and ſay that there was alſo an other Propheſie, that a virgin ſhould beare a ſonne, I anſwer that the knowledge of that myſterie was as then very darke. The fathers hoped that they ſhoulde haue a king borne, vnder whom the people of God ſhould be bleſſed & happy. But the meane lay hidden from them, as if a veile had bene put betwene them and it. Therfore it is no maruell that the holy virgin asketh a queſtion of that ſhee knoweth not. But that ſome do imagine of her words, that ſhee had made a vow of perpetuall virginitie, it is ouer weake & altogether abſurde: For then very vnfaithfully had ſhee done in that ſhee ſuffred her ſelfe to be beſtowed on a husband, and ſo making a mocke of God, had deſpiſed his holy ordinance of matrimonie. Although that in Poperie there had crept in a barbarous tyrannie in this matter of matrimony, yet they neuer durſt go ſo farre, as to permit the wife without the conſent of the husband to vowe continencie. Furthermore, it is a childiſh inuention to imagine a kinde of Monkerie amongſt the Iewes. Yet that obiection is to be anſwered, that the virgine had reſpect vnto the time to come, & therefore ſhould ſignifie that ſhe ſhould not dwel together with her husband. But this cōiecture is probable & plaine, that the greatnes, or rather the maieſtie of the matter did ſo ſtrike the virgin, that ſhee had all her ſenſes tied & bound with admiration. VVhē ſhe heareth that the Son of God ſhalbe borne, ſhe conſidereth a matter not common, & this is the reason why shee excludeth the knowledge of man. Thus being amased, shee crieth out, how can this be? Therefore doth God so gentlely pardon her, and so louingly and fauourablie answere her: because that hauing Gods workes in admiration, shee did reuerently and soberly demaunde how that could come to passe, which she was perswaded to be far aboue the common and accustomed course of nature. Furthermore, this question was not against faith. Because that it arose rather of an admiration, then of distrust. The holy Ghost shall come vpon thee. The Angell doth not so set the maner, as it had bene nedefull he should haue done, that woulde satisfie the curiositie of many: But he calleth the Virgin simplie to consider the power of the holy Ghost, that with silence and quietly, she might resigne her selfe wholely ouer vnto him. The worde To come vppon, doeth signifie that this is an extraordinarie worke, where the meanes of nature do want. And the next parte of the sentence is added to expounde the former, The power of the most highe shall ouershadowe thee. For the spirite is as it were the essentiall power of God, through whose worke he sheweth and exerciseth himselfe, as well in the gouernance of the worlde as in myracles. There is an apt Metaphore in the worde ouershadowe. For the Scripture doth oft compare the power of God (wherewith he preserueth and defendeth his) vnto a shadow. But there seemeth to be an other more peculier sense and vnderstanding of this place: namely that the worke of the spirite shoulde be secrete, euen as a cloude set before shoulde stay the eyes of men from seeing. And as in woorking myracles, God doth kepe secrete from vs the counsell of his workes: So it is our partes with modestie to reuerence that which hee woulde haue kepte hidden from vs. Therefore that holy thing that shall be borne. This is a confirmation of the former sentence, for the Angell teacheth vs, that it behooueth Christ to be borne without the companie of man and woman, that he might be holy and the sonne of God, that is, that he should not be in a commō estate amongst men, but that in holinesse and glory hee shoulde excell all creatures. The heretikes which faine, that when he was borne man, and was after made the Sonne of God, do wrest that causall coniunction, that he should therfore be called the Sonne of God, because that he was woonderfully conceiued by the power of the holy Ghost, but they reason very wickedly. For althoughe that hee was manifested the sonne of God in flesh, it followeth not but that the worde was begotten of the father before all worldes: Or rather, he the same that was the Sonne of God in his eternal Deitie, appeared also the Sonne of God in his humaine flesh. But this place doth not only teache vs the vnitie of the person in Christ, but also sheweth that Christ, euen in that he had put on the humane nature, was also the Sonne of God. Therefore as the name of the Sonne of God was from the beginning proper to the diuine essence of Christe, so now the Deitie and humanitie ioyned, it agreeth to both the natures together, because that the secrete and celestiall woorking of his generation exempteth him from the common order of men. Ofte also other where as he affirmeth himselfe to be very man, he calleth himselfe the sonne of man. But the veritie of the humane nature is no let but that his diuine generation mighte procure him a peculiar honoure aboue all others: namely in that he was conceiued by the holy Ghost beyōd the ordinarie maner of nature. Of this there groweth a good cause of the assurance of our faith, that wee mighte more boldly call God, Father. For his onely ſonne woulde needes become oure brother, that hee mighte in common make his father to be alſo ours. It is alſo to be noted, that Chriſte as hee was conceiued by a ſpirituall power, is called a holy ſeede. And euen as it was behouefull that he ſhould be very man, that he might waſh awaye our ſinnes, and in our fleſh that he might ouercome death and Sathan, and that he might ſo be a perfecte mediatour: ſo it was neceſſarie, that he that ſhould purge others from ſinne, ſhould be free from all vncleanneſſe and ſpottes. Although yet that Chriſt was borne of the ſeede of Abraham, yet broughte hee no infection out of that corrupte nature, becauſe that the holy Ghoſt kept him pure and cleane euen from the beginning. Neither that he himſelfe alone ſhould excell in holineſſe, but alſo that he ſhould ſanctifie his. Therefore the maner of conception doth teſtifie that we haue a mediator ſeparate from ſinners.

36. And beholde Elizabeth, with an example done at home by her, the Angell doth ſtrengthen the faith of Marie in hope of the myracle. For if neither the barenneſſe, nor the olde age of Elizabeth could hinder God, but that he would make her a mother, when ſhe ſhall ſee ſuch a ſpectacle of Gods power in her owne kinſwoman, there is no cauſe why Marie ſhoulde ſtill containe her ſelfe within the accuſtomed bondes of nature. He expreſly noteth the ſixth moneth. For ſeeing that the woman commonly perceiueth in the fifth moneth, that her childe hath life, in the ſixt month ſhe is put out of al doubt: It had bene the part of Marie ſo to haue creadited the ſimple worde of God, that there ſhould haue bene no nede by any other meanes to ſtrengthen her faith, but leaſt ſhe ſhould wauer any more, the Lorde vſeth this new ſupportation to ſtaye her in his promiſſe. With the ſame fauour doth he daily aide and hold vs vp, yea and as our faith is weaker, ſo with the more fauour doth he aide vs. Therefore leaſt that we ſhoulde doubt of his truthe, he gathereth diuers teſtimonies which may confirme the ſame vnto vs. It is demaunded howe the kinred came betwene Elizabeth, which was of the daughters of Aaron, and Marie which was of the ſtocke of Dauid. And alſo it ſeemeth to be againſt the lawe Num. 3. 6. which forbiddeth women to marry out of their owne tribes. As concerning the lawe, if the ende be conſidered, it did forbid onely thoſe mariages whereby enheritances may be mixed. But there was no ſuche daunger, if that a woman of the tribe of Iuda was maried to a Prieſt, to whom the enheritance coulde not be tranſlated. The ſame reaſon was alſo, if that a woman of the tribe of Leuie was beſtowed out of her kinred. And it may be that the mother of the holy Virgin was of the tribe of Aaron, and that the kinred ſo came betwene her daughter and Elizabeth.

37. For with God ſhall no woorde be impoſſible. If you will vſe this phraſe woorde in his proper & natiue ſignification, then the meaning is that God will performe what ſo euer he hath promiſed, becauſe that there is no let equal with his power. And the argument ſhal thus be framed: This hath God promiſed, therefore hee will perfourme it, becauſe that no impoſſibilitie may be obiected againſt his woorde. But becauſe that woorde according to the phraſe of the Hebrew tounge, is oft vſed for a thing or ſubſtãce, we may more plainly expound it thus, nothing is impoſſible with God. Yet that axiome muſt be alwaies holden that they doe peuiſhly wander oute of the the way, which dreame of the power of God beſides his word, if any be founde. For his omnipotencie is to be conſidered, ſo as it may be a foundation for the further building of our hope and faith. And now we ſhall not only doe very raſhly and vnprofitably, but alſo very perilouſly, if we diſpute what God can doe, vnleſſe withall we conſider what he wil doe. Furthermore, the Angell doth heere in this place, as God doth in diuers places of the ſcripture, for that vnder a generall doctrine, hee confirmeth one eſpeciall promiſe. And this is the true and righte vſe of a generall doctrine, if we apply the promiſes therein ſet downe, to the preſent matter, when ſoeuer we be vexed and troubled: for ſo long as they be general and indefinite, they are colde. Furthermore it is not to be marualled at, that the Angell doeth tell Marie of the power of God, for the diſtruſt of his power, doeth make vs not to beleeue his promiſes. All men with tounge confeſſe that God is omnipotent: but if he promiſe any thing beyonde the reache of our capacitie, we are at a ſtaie. And whereof commeth this? but for that we will attribute nothing more to his power, then our ſenſes can diſcerne. Therfore Paule to the Rom. 4. 20. commending the faith of Abraham, ſayeth that he gaue the glory to God, becauſe he was able to fulfil what ſoeuer he had promiſed. And in an other place when he ſpeaketh of the hope of eternall life, he propoſeth the power of God before him. In the 2. Tim. 1. 12. he ſayeth, I knowe whome I haue beleeued, and I am perſwaded that he is able to keepe that which I haue committed vnto him. This ſeemeth to be but a ſmall portion of faith, & that none, no not the wicked, wil derogate from God the title of omnipotent: But who ſoeuer hath the power of God ſurely and deepely fixed in his heart, he ſhall eaſily ouercome all other lets and hinderances of his faith. Yet it is to be noted that the effectuall power of God (if I may ſo ſpeake) is apprehended in a true faith: For God is mighty, and wil be acknowledged, that he may declare himſelfe to be true in deede.

38. Beholde the ſeruant of the Lord. The holy virgine will argue and diſpute the matter no further, and yet it is not to be doubted but that there were many things which might hinder her faith, yea, & altogether turne her minde from the ſpeach of the Angel. But ſhee taking the aduauntage from the contrary reaſons, enforced her ſelfe to obedience: and this is a right proofe of faith, when we reſtraine our mindes, & hold them as priſoners that they dare not oppoſe this or that againſt God: ſo on the other ſide libertie to contend, is the mother of infidelitie. And theſe words are not of ſmal waight. Beholde the ſeruant of the Lord, for ſhee offereth & dedicateth her ſelf wholely vnto God, that he may freely vſe her according to his owne wil. The vnbeleuers withdrawe themſelues from his hand, and as much as they canne, they hinder his worke: But faith dooth preſent vs before God, that we may be ready to obey. Then if the holy Virgin was the ſeruant of the Lord, becauſe that ſhe obediently ſubmitted her ſelfe to his gouernement, there is not a worſe contempt, then by fleeing to denie him that obedience which he deſerueth & doth require. To be ſhort, as faith only maketh obedient ſeruants to God, and deliuereth vs into his power: ſo infidelitie maketh vs rebels and runnagates. Be it done vnto me. This clauſe may be expounded two waies, either that the holy Virgin paſſeth into a prayer and requeſt: or els continuing in the ſame matter, ſhee proceedeth in reſigning and deliuering her ſelfe vnto God.

God. I ſimply interprete it, that ſhee being perſwaded of the power of God, and willingly following whether he calleth, ſhe doth alſo ſubſcribe vnto his promiſe, and ſo doeth not onely wait for the effecte, but alſo doeth earneſtly deſire the ſame. And it is to be noted that ſhee reſted vppon the woorde of the Angell, becauſe ſhee knewe that it came from God, weighing the dignitie of the ſame, not of the miniſter, but of the authour.

Luke. 1.

Matthew.	Marke.
		39. And Marie aroſe in theſe daies, & went into the hill countrey with haſt, to a citie of Iuda:
		40. And entred into the houſe of Zacharias, and ſaluted Elizabeth.
		41. And it came to paſſe, as Elizabeth heard the ſalutation of Marie, the babe ſprang in her belie, and Elizabeth was filled with the holy Ghoſt.
		42. And ſhee cried with a loude voice, and ſayde: Bleſſed art thou among women, becauſe the fruite of thy wombe is bleſſed.
		43. And whence cõmeth this to me, that the mother of my Lord ſhoulde come to me?
		44. For loe, aſſoone as the voyce of thy ſalutation ſounded in mine eares, the babe ſprang in my beilye for ioy,
		45. And bleſſed is ſhee that beleeued: for thoſe things ſhall be performed, which were tolde her from the Lorde.

39. And Marie aroſe. This iourney wherof Luke maketh mention, teſtifieth that Maries faith was not vnfruteful, becauſe that gods promiſſe was not ſo ſoone forgotte as the Angel was out of ſight, but that remained faſt in her minde. And her haſte witneſſed her earneſt & ardent affection. Hereof it may be gathered, that all other buſineſſe being ſet aſide, the Virgin as it was meete did accompt of, and preferre this fauour and grace of God. Yet it may be demaunded for what purpoſe ſhe toke this iourny. It is certain that ſhe went not thither only to make ſearch & enquiry, for ſhe nouriſhed the ſonne of God as well in her heart by faith, as conceiued in her wõbe: neither can I ſubſcribe to the iudgement of ſome, which thinke that ſhee went thether to ſalute her. For it ſeemeth more probable to me, that partly to encreaſe and to confirme her faith, partly that they one with an other might ſet foorth the glorye of God, was the cauſe that moued her. And there is no cauſe why we ſhoulde accompt it an abſurd thing, that ſhe by the ſight of a myracle did ſeke for confirmation of her faith, becauſe that it was not in vaine that the Angel did propoſe the ſame vnto her. For although that the faithful are cõtent with the bare & only word of the lord, yet in the meane time they deſpiſe not any of his works, which they think may any whit preuail for the ſupporting of their faith. And eſpecially it behoued Mary to accept this aid profered her, vnles ſhe wold haue forſaken that, which the Lord had willingly geuen her. Furthermore the ſeeing one another, might ſtir vp as wel her as Elizabeth, to a greater thankefulneſſe, as by the text it appeareth. For the power of God was more euident and notable, in that at once they ſee his grace powred vpon them both, becauſe that compariſon did adde no ſmall light. But Luke doeth not declare which was that Citie wherein Zacharie dwelt, but onely maketh mention that it pertained to the tribe of Iuda, and alſo that it was placed in a hill country: whereof is gathered that it was further from the towne of Nazareth, then was Hieruſalem.

41. As ſhee heard the ſalutation, It is a naturall thing, that the childe in the wombe of a woman great with child, ſhould moue at a ſodaine ioy. But Luke would note vnto vs ſome extraordinary thing. It appertaineth nothing to the matter to entangle our ſelues in ſubtile queſtions, whether the infante knewe that Chriſte was preſente, or whether this was a ſenſe or feeling of godlineſſe. Let this one thing rather ſuffice vs, that the infant leapt by the ſecrete motion of the ſpirite. Neither doth Luke attribute any proper ſenſe to the infant, but doeth rather ſignifie that thys was a portion of the worke of God in the mother, that the infant ſprang in her wombe. That he ſayeth that ſhe was filled with the holy Ghoſte, the meaning is, that ſhee beſides the accuſtomed maner was ſodenly endued with a ſpirite of prophelie. For ſhee was not without the giftes of the ſpirite before, but then the power appeared farre more plentifull and wonderfull.

42. Bleſſed art thou, Shee ſeemeth to place Marie and Chriſt in like degree, which were nothing meete nor conuenient, but I willingly admit their iudgement which thinke that the cauſe of her bleſſedneſſe is rendered in the ſecond parte of the ſentence For it is oft vſed to put a copulatiue in ſteade of a woorde cauſall, therefore Elizabeth affirmeth that her Couſen is bleſſed becauſe of the bleſſedneſſe of the Sonne. And although this was not the chiefe felicitie that Marie had, to beare Chriſte in her wombe: naye, this dignitie in order came behinde that, that ſhee was by the ſpirite of Chriſte borne againe into a newe life, yet was ſhee woorthely called bleſſed, whome God made woorthy this ſinguler honour, that ſhe ſhould beare vnto the world his ſonne, in whom ſhee was ſpiritually regenerate. And to this day we cannot make mention of the bleſsing brought vnto vs through Chriſte, but alſo that we muſt remember how honourably the Lord aduaunced Marie, in that he would that ſhe ſhould be the mother of his only begotten Sonne.

43. Whence commeth this to me? This modeſtie is to be noted, that Elizabeth conſidering the great graces of God in Marie, doeth geue vnto her that honor that is due, and yet lifteth her no higher (wherby God might be offended) then was conuenient. For there is ſuch wickedneſſe planted in the world, that there are but fewe that fall not into one of theſe 2. vices: for ſome pleaſing them ſelues too much aboue meaſure, doe maliciouſly deſpiſe the giftes of God in their brethren, that they alone might be aloft. And there are others which doe ſo ſuperſtitiouſly extoll men, as if they ſhould make idols of them for them to worſhip. Hereof it came, that they leauing Chriſte as it were in the lower rowme, did geue the chiefeſt ſeat vnto Marie. Contrariwiſe Elizabeth in praiſing her, doeth not ſo obſcure the glorye of God, but rather referreth all things to God himſelfe. And yet as ſhee acknowledgeth that God hath geuen his grace vnto her, and to others, ſhee enuieth not to geue him the higheſt degree, and modeſtly ſheweth that ſhee hath receiued more then was due to her.

In

In that ſhe calleth Marie the mother of her Lord, there is noted the vnitie of the perſon in two natures, as if ſhe ſhould haue ſayde: he which is begotten a mortall man in the wombe of Mary, is alſo eternall God: for it muſt be remembred that the ſimple womā doth not ſpeake of her owne witte, but ſhee onely vttereth thoſe things which the holy Ghoſt doeth teach her. And this name doth properly belong to the ſonne of God manifeſted in the fleſh, vnto whome all power is geuen of the father, and which was ordained the chiefe Prince of heauen and earthe, by whoſe hand God gouerneth al things. Yet he is eſpecially the Lord of the faithfull, who willingly and gladly ſubmit themſelues vnder his gouernemēt: for hee is not the heade but of his owne body. Therefore Paule ſayeth, 1. Cor. 8. 5. Although that many are called Lordes in the world, yet vnto vs, that is, to them that are of the houſholde of faith, there is but one Lord. Furthermore, when ſhe amplifieth this grace of God whereof ſhee ſpeaketh, by the ſodaine motion of the infante whiche ſhee bare in her wombe, it is not to be doubted but that ſhee would declare that ſhee felt ſomething ſupernaturall and diuine.

45. Bleſſed is ſhee that beleeued. Seeing that it appeareth by that whych Luke hath ſaide before, that Elizabeth ſpake by the ſecreate direction of the ſpirit: it is the ſame ſpirit that affirmeth that Mary is bleſſed becauſe that ſhe beleeued, and in praiſing the faith of Mary, he generally teacheth vs wherein the chiefe felicitie of men conſiſteth. Bleſſed Mary which beleeued in her heart the promiſe of God, conceiued and bare ſaluation to her ſelf and to all the world. This was ſpecial to her. But becauſe that we haue no drop of righteouſnes, life, or of any good thing, but as the Lord offereth the ſame vnto vs in his woorde; there is one faith which pulleth vs from out of extreeme pouertie and miſerie, and maketh vs partakers of the true felicitie: and there is great waight in this clauſe: For thoſe things ſhall be performed which were tolde her. This is the meaning, that faith geueth place to the promiſſes of God, that they may take effecte in vs. And it is certaine that the truthe of God doeth not depend vppon the will of menne, but rather that is true. Rom. 3. 4. That God remaineth alwayes true, althoughe all the worlde (whiche is geuen to vnbeliefe and lying) ſhoulde endeuour to weaken and hinder the ſame. But becauſe that vnbeleeuers are vnworthy to enioy the fruit of the promiſſes, therfore the ſcripture teacheth, that the ſame promiſſes are onely by faith made effectuall to our ſaluation, for God offereth his benefites generally to all, & faith openeth her boſome to receiue the ſame, but vnbeliefe ſuffereth the ſame to paſſe by, that they may not once come neare vs. If Mary had ben vnbeleeuing, yet that coulde not haue hindered the purpoſe of God, but that he woulde haue perfourmed his woorke, by ſome other meanes that he would haue liked. But ſhee is called bleſſed, becauſe that by faith ſhee receiuing the bleſsing offered her, made the way ready to God for the performance of his worke. So againe, vnbeliefe ſhutteth the gate againſt him, and ſtaieth his hand from woorking, leaſt that they ſhould taſte the comforte of ſaluation, which diſappoynt him of the glory of his power. Alſo, the relation betweene the woorde and faith is to be noted, & hereof we learne what it is to beleeue: namely, when we ſubſcribe and conſent to that which God doeth ſpeake, and doe certainly aſſure our ſelues, that hee will perfourme that which he hath promiſed.

The clauſe From the Lorde, ſignifieth as muche as the ſimple doe commonly ſay on the behalfe or parte of God, for the promiſſe was brought by the Aungell, but it came from G O D alone, whereby wee gather, that whether G O D vſeth the miniſterie of Aungelles or of menne, yet his will is, that there ſhall no leſſe reuerence be geuen to his woorde, then if he him ſelfe openly ſhould appeare from heauen.

Luke 1.

Matthew. Marke.

46. Then Marie ſayde, my ſoule magnifieth the Lorde.

47. And my ſpirite reioyceth in God my ſauioure.

48. For hee hathe looked on the poore degree of his ſeruaunte: For beholde, from hence forthe ſhall all ages call me bleſſed.

49. Becauſe hee that is mightye, hathe done for me great things, and holy is his name.

50. And his mercye is from generation to generation, on them that feare him.

Nowe doeth hee ſette downe and ſhewe the Songe of the holye Virgine, notable and woorthy to be reported, whereby it plainely appeareth howe ſhee excelled in the gifte of the ſpirite. And there are three partes of this Songe, for Marie with a ſolempne thankes geuing, doeth firſt declare the mercie of God which ſhee had founde in her ſelfe. Then in general woordes ſhe commendeth the power & iudgements of God: At the lengthe ſhee applieth the ſame to this preſent matter, where ſhee ſpeaketh of the redemption promiſed in times paſt to the Church, and nowe perfourmed. My ſoule magnifieth. Here Marie declareth her thankfulnes, as we ſayde euen now. And becauſe that the hypocrites for the moſt part doe ſet foorth the praiſes of God with full mouthes, and no affection of the heart, therefore Marie ſayth that ſhe doth praiſe God, euen from the innermoſt affection of her minde. And truely, they doe nothing els but prophane the holy name of God, which not from their heart, but with tounge onely doe declare his glory. Furthermore, when as theſe wordes Soule and Spirite are diuerſly taken in the ſcripture, yet when that they come together, they doe ſignifie two eſpeciall faculties of the ſoule: for the ſpirit is taken for the vnderſtanding, and the Soule for the ſeat of affections. That wee maye the better vnderſtande the minde of the holy Virgine, it is to be noted, that that is put heere in the ſecond place, which in order oughte to be firſt: for that the will of man might be ſtirred to praiſe God, it is neceſſary that the reioycinge of the ſpirit ſhould go before, as Iames teacheth, chap. 5. 13. Is any mery? lette him ſing, for ſorow & heauines do reſtraine the minde, & alſo they do hinder the tounge from vttering and declaring the goodneſſe of God: Therefore when as the minde of Marie was filled with ioy, her heart brake forth into the praiſe of God, and it is not without cauſe that ſhe attributeth the epithyte of Sauiour vnto God, when as ſhee ſpeakes of the ioy of her heart: for vntill that God be knowen as a ſauioure, the mindes of men are neuer freely nor truely merye, but doe alwayes remaine maine ambiguous and carefull. Therfore it is the only fatherly fauour of God, and the ſaluation which proceedeth from the ſame, which filleth vs with ioy. In ſumme, this is firſt to be learned, that the faithfull may glory and ioy, that their ſaluation is in God. Then they ought to folow the next, that they hauing found him a louing father, ſhuld geue him thanks. The word ſoteros doth ſignifie more in Greeke, then Seruator doth in the Latine, euen ſuch a one as doth not only once deliuer, but is alſo the authour of perpetuall ſaluation.

48. For he hath looked. She ſheweth the cauſe why ſhe had the ioy of her heart grounded vpon God, euen becauſe that he of his fauour and loue looked vpon her. for in that ſhe calleth her ſelfe poore, ſhe reſigneth all worthineſſe from her ſelfe, and aſcribeth the whole cauſe of her ioy, to the free grace and goodneſſe of God, for humilitie in this place (as ſome vnlearned and ignorant men haue fooliſhly thought) doeth not ſignifie ſubmiſsion or modeſtie, or a habite of the minde, but ſignifieth a vile eſtate and an abieɛte condition, therefore this is the ſenſe: That I was vile and deſpiſed, was no hinderance to God, but that he vouchſafed to tourne hie eyes vnto me. Then if the pouertie of Marie be oppoſed to excellencie, (as the matter it ſelfe declareth, and it plainely appeareth by the Greeke word) we ſee that Marie caſting downe her ſelfe, doeth only exalt God. And this was not a ſhew of fained humilitie, but a ſimple & plaine confeſsion of her thought, which ſhe had engraued in her mind: for as ſhe was of no accompt in the world, ſo ſhe did no whit the more eſteeme of her ſelfe. From hence foorth ſhall call me bleſſed. She ſayeth that thys benefite of God ſhalbe remembred in all ages: And if it were ſo notable that all men euery where ſhoulde declare the ſame, then it was not lawful for Mary, vpon whom the ſame was beſtowed, to bury the ſame in ſilence. But obſerue that Mary accompteth nothing of her owne felicitie, but that ſhe acknowledgeth that it were geuen her from aboue, & thankfully accepteth the grace ſhe hath receiued: I ſhall (ſayth ſhe) be accompted bleſſed throughout all ages. Doth ſhe ſay this, as if ſhe had obtained this praiſe by her owne power or induſtrie? No, but ſhee rather doth cõmend the only worke of God: wherby we perceiue how much the papiſts differ from her, for what good things ſoeuer ſhe had of God, they made ſmall accoompt of, and vnaduiſedly they ſet her foorth wyth their owne vaine inuentions: They aboundantly heape vp together for her magnifical & more then proud titles, as that ſhe ſhuld be the Quene of heauen, the ſtarre of ſaluation, the gate of life, the life, the ſwetenes, the hope and the health: yea ſathan alſo caried them ſo farre into impudencie and madneſſe, that they gaue her power ouer Chriſt, for this is their ſong: Aske the father, commaund thy ſonne. Seeing that it plainly appeareth that none of theſe proceede from the Lord, the holy virgin in one woorde abandoneth them all, while ſhee eſteemeth all her glorye to be in God his benefites, for if ſhee be for this one thing onelye to bee renowmed, becauſe that GOD hath dealt mightely with her, then there is no place lefte for thoſe fained titles which they elſe where haue borowed. Furthermore, there is nothing more reprochefull to her, then to haue her ſonne ſpoiled of that, which was due to him, and that ſhee her ſelfe ſhoulde bee clothed with thoſe ſacrilegious ſpoiles. Nowe let the papiſts go, & let them cry that we are iniurious to Chriſtes mother: becauſe that reiecting the lies of men, we onely ſet forth the benefits of God in her, and we graūt her that which is moſt honorable for her, but theſe prepoſterous worſhippers take it from her. For we doe willingly receiue her as a teacher, and we obey her doctrine and her preceptes, and it is not vnknowne what ſhe hath ſaid: which the Papiſtes not regarding, but treading the ſame, as it were vnder their feete, doe diſcredite her wordes as much as they can. But let vs remember that here is a common rule ſet downe, to be vſed of vs in prayſing either Angels or men: namely, that the grace of God may be ſet forth in them: ſo alſo there is nothing to be praiſed at al, that proceedeth not from thence. VVhen ſhe ſaith, that God, that is mighty, hath done great things, ſhee declareth that God was not holpe with any other ayde, that his onely power might the more appeare. Nowe we muſt repeate that, which ſhe ſayd before, that ſhee was looked vpon, although ſhee was an abiect and contemned. VVhereof it followeth, that thoſe prayſes of Mary are prepoſterous and adulterous, in which the power and free fauour of God is not altogether and wholy extolled.

49. And holy is his name. This is the ſecond part of the ſong, wherein the holy Virgin in general ſentences, commendeth the power, iudgments and mercie of God. And this clauſe ought not ioyntly in one ſentence to be read with the former, but aparte. Mary had extolled the grace of God, which ſhee had founde in her ſelfe, and taking occaſion of this, ſhee cryeth out that his name is holy, and that his mercie floriſheth in all ages.

Furthermore, the name of God is called holy, becauſe it deſerueth great reuerence, that ſo oft as there is mention made of God, there ſhould appeare withall a reuerend maieſtie of him. The next ſentence (wherein the perpetuity of the mercy of God is praiſed) is takē out of the accuſtomed forme of the couenaunt, Gene. 17.7. I will bee thy God, and the God of thy ſeede after thee for euer. And in Deut. 7.9. I am God, that ſhew mercie euen to a thouſand generations: In which wordes he doth not onely ſhewe, that he is alwayes like him ſelfe, but he declareth his continual fauour, which he beareth towardes his: ſo that euen after their death, hee loueth their children and their childrens children, and their whole ofſpring. So with a continuall courſe of loue hee did ſhewe him ſelfe to the poſteritie of Abraham, becauſe that he had receiued Abraham into his fauoure, hee made a league with him for euer. But becauſe that all that come of Abraham after the fleſh, are not in deede the ſonnes of Abraham, therefore Mary reſtraineth the effect of the promiſe to the true worſhippers of God, as Dauid alſo doth, Pſal. 103.17. The mercy of the Lord endureth for euer, vpon them that feare him, and his righteouſnes vpon childrens children, vnto them that keepe his couenaunt. God therefore ſo promiſeth, that he wil ſhew him ſelfe mercifull to the children of his ſaints throughout al ages: that ſo he may yet take away the occaſion of all vaine hope from hipocrites: for they that are degenerate children of his ſaints, and haue fallen from their godlines and faith, doe in vaine and raſhly glory that God is their father.

VVherefore by this exception their vanitie and pride is ouerthrowne, which are puffed vp with a falſe pretence of GOD his grace, without fayth.

God

God made an vniuerſall couenaunt of ſaluation with the ſtocke of Abraham: But as the ſtones watered with the raine,doe not become ſofte therewith,ſo the hardneſſe of heart is ſuch a hinderaunce to the vnfaithfull, that the promiſed righteouſneſſe and ſaluation can not enter into them. Yet God, that his promiſſe might be certaine and ſure,hath reſerued vnto himſelfe ſome ſeede.By the feare of God is vnderſtode all godlineſſe and religion,which can not be without faith.But heere a queſtion may be demaunded,for what cauſe is God called merciful,if no man do ſo finde him,but he that deſerueth his fauour? For if the mercy of God be vpon them that feare him,then godlineſſe and a good conſcience doe procure his fauour to men: and ſo by this meanes men ſhould by merits preuent his grace. I aunſwere that this alſo is a portion of his mercy,that God planteth a feare and a reuerence of him in the children of the godly. For he doth not meane here the beginning of grace, as if they ſhoulde imagine that God were idle, and ſhould loke downe from heauen to eſpie who they were that were worthy of the ſame,but he only driueth the hypocrites from their pieuiſh ſecuritie,leaſt that they ſhould thinke they had God bound to them,becauſe that they according to the fleſh,are the children of godly parents,when that the end of God his couenant is far otherwiſe,and the condition much contrary,namely this: He will haue a people alwaies in the world,of whom he wil be purely worſhipped.

Luke 1.

Mathew.	Marke.	51. He hath shewed ſtrength with his arme, he hath ſcattered the proude in the imagination of their hearts. 52. He hath put downe the mighty from their ſeates and exalted them of lowe degree. 53. He hath filled the hũgrie with good things and ſent away the riche emptie. 54. He hath vpholden Iſrael his ſeruaunt, being mindefull of his mercie. 55. As he hath ſpoken to our fathers,to wit, to Abraham and his ſeede for euer.

51. He hath shewed ſtrength. Is as much as if he ſhould haue ſaid,he hath wroughte mightely, and the arme of God is oppoſed againſt all other helpes,as in Eſ.59.16.God looked and there was none to helpe.Therefore his arme did ſaue it,& his righteouſneſſe it ſelfe did ſuſtaine it.This then is the meaning of Marie,that God was ſatisfied with his owne power,and had no felowes in his worke,& called none to helpe him.That which preſently is ſpoken of the proude, ſeemeth to be added for two cauſes,partly becauſe that the proude,which endeuour after the maner of Giants to ſtriue againſt God,do nothing preuaile: and alſo becauſe that God doth not ſtretch forth the power of his arme,but for the ſauegarde of the lowly,and that he might ouerthrow the proude,which arrogantly take too much to them ſelues. And to that purpoſe belõgeth that exhortation of Peter,1.Pet.5.6. Humble your ſelues vnder the mighty hande of God.The manner of ſpeach is alſo to be noted. Hee ſcattereth the proude in the imagination of their hearts. For (as their pride and ambition is great,ſo is their couetouſneſſe inſatiable)in their deuiſes,they heape together as it were a great mountaine, and that I may ſpeake one woorde, they builde the tower of Babel: for they being not ſatisfied in that they haue foliſhly attempted this or that aboue their ſtrength, they foorthwith heape newe conſultations of madde preſumption to their former deuices: when God for a while hath wyth ſilence frō heauen laughed at their notable purpoſes, then at a ſodaine he diſpearſeth & ouerthroweth their whole heap, as if a man ſhoulde pull downe a building, whiche before was ſtrongly and ſoundly built and compacte together, and ſhould diſpearſe the ſame farre off into diuers places.

Hee hath putte downe the mightie. If you tranſlate it Princes, the ſenſe will be the plainer: For althoughe that dynaſtai, are ſo called of the Greekes by reaſon of their power, yet they are interpreated gouernours & chiefe magiſtrates. But many haue thought this woorde mighty, to be a Participle. Marie ſayeth that they ſhall be pulled out of their thrones, that the vnknowen and ſimple may be lifted into their places. So that which prophane men doe call the plaie of Fortune, ſtee doth attribute to the iudgements & prouidence of God. Yet we muſt know that there is not geuen to God an abſolute power, as if he ſhould by a tyrannous authority, toſſe and turne men hether and thither as balles: but a moſt right and iuſt gouernement, and hath a notable reaſon for what ſoeuer he doeth, thoughe it be often hid from vs: for ſodaine chaunges doe not pleaſe God, as that hee ſhoulde in a mockerie lift them vp aloft, whome he had determined ſodainly to throw downe, but rather the wickednes of men doth tourne and alter the eſtate of things, becauſe that no man acknowledgeth that the eſtate of euery man is in the will and hand of God. But they that are placed aboue others, do not only contumelioufly & cruelly handle their neighbours, but alſo moſt ſharply doe they deale againſt the authour of their ſaluation. Therefore ſome are lifted vppe into high degree of honour, and ſome are ſlipte downe, or rather caſt downe headlong out of their thrones, that we in deede might learne, that what ſoeuer thing is aloft and exalted in the world, is ſubiecte to God, and that all the worlde is vnder his gouernement. Dauid declareth the cauſe and ende of theſe chaunges, Pſal. 107. 20. and alſo Dan. 2. 21.

VVe ſee howe the Princes of the worlde become arrogante wythout meaſure, howe they runne into luxurioufneſſe, howe they ſwel in pride, and howe the ſweeteneſſe of proſperitie hath made them dronken. It is not to be wondered at, if God cannot beare with ſuche vnthankefulneſſe, and this is the cauſe why for the moſt part their ſtate is not dureable, whome God hath lifted vppe on high. And againe, the glorye of Kings and Princes, doeth ſo amaze the common ſorte of menne, that few there be that thinke there is any God aboue them. But if that Princes brought their ſcepters with them from their mothers wombe, or that the continuaunce of their kingdomes were perpetuall, then all knowledge of God, and of his prouidence, would preſently vaniſh away. The Lorde therefore placing the low aloft, he leadeth the pride of the world as priſonner in his triumphe, and with all he teacheth his, ſimplicitie and modeſtie.

Nowe we knowe why Marye ſaide, that it is God that throweth the Princes from their thrones, and exalteth the lowly: namely, that he might teache vs that the world is not tourned and rowled by the blind force of Fortune, Fortune, but what chaunges ſo euer are ſeene, they all come to paſſe by the prouidence of God: and alſo that God him ſelfe with great equitie doth gouerne thoſe things which ſeme to trouble and peruert the whole order of the world. The which thing ſhee more fully confirmeth in the next verſe. He hath filled (ſayeth ſhee) the hungry with good things, and ſent away the rich emptie. Heereby we gather that alterations pleaſe not God of themſelues, but for an other cauſe: That is, becauſe that the great ones, and the rich, and the mighty, being puffed vp with their fulneſſe, do chalenge all thyngs to them ſelues, and leaue nothing to God hym ſelf. wherefore we muſt diligently take hecde that we be not carryed awaye with proſperitie, we muſt alſo beware of the vnconſtant fulneſſe of the fleſh, leaſt that God ſodenly make vs emptie. But this doctrine, that God filleth the hungrie with good things, bringeth great cõfort to the godly, whiche feele their owne pouertie: and as though they were hunger-ſtoruen, doe ſigh vnto God.

54. Hee hathe vpholden Iſrael. In this laſt parte, Marye doeth applye theſe generall ſentenſes to the preſent purpoſe. And the ſumme is, that God nowe perfourmeth the ſaluation, which in times paſt was promiſed to the holy Fathers.

But firſt there is an apte Metaphore in the woorde vpholden, for the eſtate of the people was ſo throwen downe, that amongſt the moſte there was no hope lefte that it might be againe reſtored, therefore it is ſayde that Iſrael is vpholden, becauſe that God with his outſtretched hande raiſed it vppe, it being throwen proſtrate, and lying vnder feete. Religion was defiled manye waies, in the publicke doctrine there was left almoſte nothing ſounde.

The gouernement of the Church being wholely confuſed, did breath out nothing elſe but cruell barbarouſneſſe: The polliticke order was vterly ouerthrowne, the Romaines and Herode as ſauage beaſtes, did rende in peeces the bodye of the people: So muche more notable was their reſtitution, for that it was then when all things being ouerthrown, not lawfull for them to hope after it.

Heere hee vſeth the name of childe, which may as well be vnderſtode a ſeruaunte, as a ſonne, but to take it for a ſeruaunte is moſt apte. And Iſrael in this place (as in manye others) is called the ſeruaunte of God, becauſe that hee was receiued into the houſholde of God.

Being mindefull. Marye ſheweth the cauſe whye this people readye to fall into ruine, was receiued of God: naye why God raiſed them vppe, being nowe all ready fallen downe, becauſe that in preſeruing the ſame, hee might ſhewe a token of his mercie, yea in woorde expreſſely he declareth that God was mindefull of his mercye, whereof he mighte haue ſeemed to haue beene ſomewhat forgetfull, ſeeing that hee ſuffered hys people to be ſo miſerablye vexed and afflicted: for it is commonly vſed to attribute affections to God, euen as in their cauſes menne thinke him either to be angrie or to be mercifull vnto them. And becauſe that mens mindes can not conceiue the mercie of God, but as the ſame is offered and teſtified to vs in his woorde: heere Marie calleth her ſelfe and others to the promiſſes, and teacheth that God is faithfull and conſtante in perfourming the ſame.

In this ſenſe God is often called louing and true: becauſe that we can neuer account of his fatherly goodneſſe towardes vs: but that we muſt alſo remember his word, by which band he bindeth him ſelfe vnto vs, and the ſame being put in the middle, he knitteth our ſaluation with the goodnes of God, with a knot that cannot be vnknit. But in the ſame wordes doth Mary ſhew, that the couenant which God made with the fathers in times paſt was of his free grace, for there ſhee fetcheth the promiſed ſaluation out of the meere mercie of GOD, as out of a fountaine: and hereof we gather that ſhee was well exerciſed in the doctrine of the ſcripture. The Meſsias was then commonly looked for: but there were but fewe which had their faith grounded vpon ſo ſincere a knowledg of the ſcripture.

55. To Abraham and to his ſeede. If thou readeſt it ioyntly, the chaunging of the caſe ſeemeth to be abſurd: for then thou ſhouldeſt rather haue vſed the accuſatiue caſe, then the ablatiue, but in my iudgement there is no ſimple appoſition: becauſe that Mary doth not onely declare who thoſe fathers were, to whom God ſpake, but ſhe ſheweth that the force and effect of the promiſes doth reach to al the poſteritie, if they be of the true ſeede of Abraham. VVhereof it alſo followeth to be vnderſtoode, that Mary ſpeaketh of the ſolemne couenaunt, which was ſpecially made with Abraham and his houſe. For there were other promiſes, which were made to Adam, to Noah, and to others, which generally did belong to all the Gentiles. But as vnbeliefe did cut of many fleſhly children of Abraham, and becauſe they were degenerate, they were altogether eſtrãged from the houſe of Abraham: ſo we, which were ſtraungers, beeing grafted in by faith, are to be accounted the true ſeede of Abraham. Let vs therefore hold, that God in times paſt ſo ſpake to the fathers, that his grace which he offered vnto them ſhoulde alſo appertaine to them that came after, and alſo he hath adopted al the Gentiles, that by fayth they might become the ſpirituall children of Abraham, which by nature were not.

Luke. 1.

Matthew. | Marke.

56. And Mary abode with her about three monethes: after ſhe returned to her owne houſe.

57. Now Elizabeths time was fulfilled, that ſhe ſhoulde bee deliuered, and ſhee brought foorth a ſonne.

58. And her neighbours and coſines heard tell, how the Lord ſhewed his great mercy vppon her, and they reioyced with her.

59. And it was ſo, that on the eight day they came to circumciſe the babe, and called his name Zacharyas, after the name of his father.

60. But his mother anſwered and ſaid, not ſo: but he ſhall be called Iohn.

61. And they ſayde vnto her, there is none of thy kyndred, that is named with this name.

62. Then they made ſignes to his father, how he would haue him called.

63. And

63. So hee asked for writing Tables, and wrote, saying: his name is Iohn, and they meruailled all.

64. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loſed, and he ſpake, and prayſed God.

65. Then feare came on all them that dwelt neere vnto them, and all theſe woordes were noyſed abroade throughout all the hyll countrey of Iudea.

66. And all they that hearde them, layde them vp in their heartes, ſaying, what manner childe ſhall this bee, and the hande of the Lorde was with him.

The ſumme of this hiſtorie is, that the natiuitie of Iohn became famous through diuers miracles of God, which promiſed ſome great and ſingular thing (in time to come) of that infant. For it was the will of God to ſet him forth with theſe rare tokens from his mothers wombe, leaſt that afterwardes, as an vnknowne perſon, or as one of the common ſorte, he ſhould goe forth to execute the office of a Prophet. Firſt, Luke declareth, that Mary was almoſt three monethes with her coſine, euen vnto the day of her deliuerance: for it is probable, that there was no other cauſe of her tarrying, but that ſhee might enioye the ſight of the heauenlye grace, whiche the Angell tolde her of, for the confirmation of her fayth.

58. And her neighbours and coſines. It may be doubted whether theſe men eſteemed the great grace of God of the onely bleſsing of bearing a child, or whether they had heard before that an Angell had appeared to Zachary, which had promiſed him a ſonne. Certainly this was no ſmall benefit of God, that a barren woman, whoſe courſe of age was now paſt, ſhould beare a childe beyonde the order of nature. Therefore it may be, that for this ſo great a cauſe, they extolled the greatneſſe of the goodneſſe of God. Furthermore, on the eight day (as the cuſtome was) for dutie & for humanitie ſake, they came togeather. But this occaſion doth God vſe, that he might make them witneſſes and beholders of his power, and of his glory. And it is not to be doubted, but that there came a greater concourſe of the people, becauſe of the extraordinarie birth: for they accounted it a wonder, to ſee an old and a barren woman ſodenly to become with childe. And now, when the child was borne, the wonder was renued and encreaſed. We gather by the words of Luke, that although they circumciſed their children at home: yet they did it not without a concourſe and an aſſembly of men: and that not without a cauſe: for ſeeing that it was a publike ſacrament of the Church, it ought not to be adminiſtred ſecretely or priuately.

59. They called him after the name of his father. We know that in the beginning names were giuen to men, either of the euent of thinges, or elſe by propheticall inſtinction, to declare & note ſome ſecrete work of God. But after in proceſſe of time, when there was more ſtore of names, ſo that conueniently they could not dayly inuent new, they being content with their old and accuſtomed names, called their children by the names of their auncesters: So there were many Zacharyes before Iohn his father, and it may be that he came of the ſonne of Barachias. And we know, that moſt commonly that is holden for a law, which is receiued into vſe and cuſtome. Therefore theſe men ſtriue, that their cuſtome might be obſerued in naming of the child. But as there is no religion to be put in names, ſo no wiſe men wil deny the faithful in this behalfe, to make a godly and fitte choyſe: that they may giue their children ſuch names, as may teach them and admoniſh them of their dueties. Furthermore, let them borowe the names of the holye Fathers (that ſo they may prouoke theyr children to follow their examples) rather then take them from prophane men.

60. His mother anſwered. It is vncertaine, whether that Elizabeth was alſo taught by an Oracle: But it is moſt like, that when Zacharyas ſawe him ſelfe puniſhed for his ſlacknes to beleeue, that he tolde his wife by writing that, which the Angell had giuen in commaundement as concerning his name: for that otherwiſe ſhee woulde not haue obeyed the commaundement of God. Why alſo this name was giuen to the Baptiſt from aboue, I haue before declared. The kinſfolkes although they knew not the cauſe, yet they are moued with the newnes of the thing, eſpecially becauſe that they ſuppoſe that this is not vnadniſedly done.

64. His mouth was opened. God renoumeth the birth day of his Prophet by reſtoring the tongue to the father. And it is not to be doubted, but that this benefit was differred to this day, for this end and purpoſe, that hee might turne mens eies vpon Iohn. It is ſayde that Zacharyas praiſed god, not onely that he might declare his thankfulnes, but that his kinſfolke and neighbours might know that this puniſhment was laid vppon him, becauſe that he was ſo ſlacke to beleeue. And hee was not aſhamed with his owne reproache, to declare and ſette forth the glorye of GOD. So it is euery where knowne to all men, that there is a childe borne not at aduenture, or after the common order, but promiſed by heauenlye Oracle.

65. Then feare came on them all. This feare whereof Luke maketh mention in this place, ſprang of the feeling of Gods power: For the workes of God are with ſuch reuerence to be conſidered, that they may earneſtly moue vs. For God playeth not with his miracles, but he ſtirreth vp the ſenſes of men, which otherwiſe he perceiueth to be ſlow and dull. And Luke ſaith that this fame was ſpread abroad throughout al the hill countrey of Iudea. Although that many tooke no profit by it (yet they were for a time touched with the power of God) for when that Iohn beganne to execute his office, few did remember how wonderful his natiuitie was. But God would that the fame of theſe thinges ſhould be ſpread abroad, not for their ſakes only that heard the ſame, but that the miracle might be of more credit in all ages after, which was then ſo famous in euery place: yet as in a looking glaſſe we may here ſet beefore our eies the common vnthankefulneſſe of man. For when as vaine and fooliſh thinges are faſt fixed in our mindes: the remembrance of the graces of God, which ought alwayes to be freſh in memorie is preſently let paſſe and forgotten. Luke ſpeaketh not of blockiſh men, or of bruitiſh cõtemners of God: For hee ſaith that they layd vp theſe thinges in their heart, that is, they were diligent to consider these thinges. And it is probable that some at the time remembred these matters, but the greater part had shortlye after cast off this reuerēt feare, which they had cōceiued: Yet it is to be noted, that they did not digresse from the purpose, which referred these miracles which they saw to the excellencie, which should in time to come be found in the childe: for such was the counsell of God, as we haue saide, that Iohn should not after come abroad without singular commendation. In that Luke saith that the hand of God was with him, this is the meaning: The grace of God was euident so many waies, which openly declared that he was not a common man. It is a figuratiue speech, which affirmeth that the power of God was as plainely shewed, as if the hand of God had beene openly seene, that euery man might readily discerne that God was present.

Luke. 1.

Mathew.	Marke.

67. Then his father Zacharyas was filled with the holy Ghost, and prophecied, saying,

68. Blessed be the Lorde God of Israel, because he hath visited and redeemed his people.

69. And hath raised vp the horne of saluation vnto vs in the house of his seruaunt Dauid:

70. As hee spake by the mouth of his holy prophetes, which were since the world began, saying:

71. That hee would send vs deliuerance from our enemies, and from the handes of all that hate vs:

72. That he would shew mercie towardes our fathers, and remember his holy couenaunt.

73. And the oath which he sware vnto our father Abraham: that he would graunt vs.

74. That we being deliuered out of the handes of our enemies, might serue him without feare

75. All the dayes of our life, in holinesse and righteousnesse before him.

67. Zacharyas was filled with the holy Ghost. But a litle before it is shewed what this manner of speach meaneth: that is, that the seruantes of God are indued with more aboundant grace of the spirit, the which they yet were not without before. We read that the spirit was giuen to the Prophetes, not that they were at other times without the same, but because that the power of the spirite did more plentifully and fully shew it selfe in them, as oft as they (as it were by the hand of God) were brought into the light, to execute their office. Therefore the knitting togeather of those two clauses, which Luke vseth, is to be obserued, that hee was filled with the holy Ghost, and prophecied. For it signifieth that hee was then inspired from aboue more then ordinarily, so that hee spake not after the fashion of men, as a priuate man, but that hee spake onelye heauenly doctrine. So Paule ioyneth Propheſie and the spirit together, 1. Thess. 5. 19. Quench not the spirite, despise not propheſie, that we might knowe that by the contempt of doctrine, the light of the spirite is extinguished. But this goodnes of God is worthy to be remembred, that Zacharyas had not onely the vſe of his ſpeach reſtored to him againe, which for niene monethes hee wanted, but alſo his tongue was made an inſtrument of the holy Ghoſt.

68. Bleſſed be the Lord. Zachary beginneth with thankes giuing, but with a propheticall ſpirite he ſetteth forth the accompliſhed redemption, promiſed before time in Chriſt, whereof the ſaluation and felicitie of the Church did depend: why he ſhould be called the God of Iſrael, vnder whoſe gouernment the whole world is ſubiect, it doth better appeare by the texte: namelye, for that the redeemer was ſpeciallye promiſed to the ſeede of Abraham: Becauſe that GOD had made his couenaunt onely with one people and nation, whereof Zachary was now about to ſpeak. For good cauſe therefore doth he expreſly name the name of that people, to whom the grace of ſaluation properly, or at leaſt principally was ſent and appoynted. There is vnder this viſiting a ſecrete oppoſition. becauſe that the countenaunce of God, for a time, was turned from the wretched children of Abraham: for they were fallen into that calamitie, and ouerwhelmed with ſo great a heape of miſchiefes, that no man would haue thought that God had any regard vnto them. Furthermore, this viſitation of God, whereof Zachary mentioneth, is put as the cauſe and the beginning of the redemption: Therefore reſolue it thus, God looked vppon his people, that he might redeeme them. And ſeeing that they were priſoners, which God redeemed, and that this kind of redẽption was ſpirituall: we thereof gather, that euen the holy fathers were not free from the yoake of ſinne and the tyrranny of death, but through the grace of Chriſt: For Chriſt is ſaid to be a redeemer ſent, euen to the holy and elect people of God. But if redemption was but then at length brought of Chriſt, when as he appeared in the fleſh: It followeth that the faithfull, which were dead before his comming, were all their life time ſeruauntes of ſinne and of death, which were a great abſurditie. I anſwer that the force and effect of this redemption, which was once giuen in Chriſt, was common in all ages.

69. He hath rayſed vp a horne of ſaluation. That is a power to ſaue. For the throane of Dauid being throwne downe, and the people being diſpearſed, the hope of ſaluatiõ in outward ſhew was alſo falle away. And ſurelye Zachary alludeth to the propheſies of the Prophets, in the which there is promiſed a ſodaine reſtitution, when that al thinges with them were in greateſt miſerie and deſtruction. And this ſentence is taken out of the Pſalm. 132. 17. where it is ſayde: There will I make the horne of Dauid to budde, for I haue ordayned a light for mine annoynted. If that God doth ſhew his power to ſaue vs in no other meanes, but in Chriſt, then it is a moſt hainous offence to bow from him any way, if that we hope to be ſaued from aboue. But obſerue, that that is a horne of ſaluation to the faythfull, which to the wicked is terrible: ſo that diſpearſeth them, or rather ouerthroweth them, and beateth them to the duſt. He calleth Dauid the ſeruaunt of god, not ſimply, becauſe he worſhipped God, as euery one of the godly doe: but in an other reſpect, namely that he was choſen his miniſter, to gouerne and to preſerue his people, that he and his ſucceſſours ſhould repreſent the perſon and offices of Chriſt. And although there was then no ſhew of a kingdome left amongſt the Iewes: yet becauſe that Zachary repoſeth himſelfe in the promiſes of God, he doubteth not to call Dauid the ſeruaunt of God, in whom God ſhewed a token of ſaluation that was to come : VVhereof it followeth that Chriſte is then indeede conſtituted as the auᵭhour of our ſaluation, when that there is a throane ſet vp for him amongſt vs, from the which he may gouerne vs.

70. As heeſpake. Leaſt for the newneſſe of it the ſaluation ſhould be doubted of, which he ſaieth was brought by Chriſt. he citeth all the prophetes, as witneſſes of the ſame : which being rayſed vp in diuers tymes, doe yet teach with one conſent, that we muſt hope for ſaluation from Chriſt alone. And this is not the onely purpoſe of Zachary, to prayſe the fayth and conſtancie of God, becauſe that hee perfourmeth and fulfilleth, that which he before in times paſt hath promiſed : But his minde is rather to call the faithfull to the old propheſies, that with the more certeintie and readines, they might imbrace the ſaluatiō offered them, wherof all the Prophetes from the beginning witneſſed. For truely our fayth in Chriſt is eſtabliſhed vppon a ſure ſtay, when as it commeth forth confirmed with the teſtimonies of al the Prophets. He calleth the Prophetes holy, that thereby their wordes might haue the greater auᵭhoritie and reuerence, as if he ſhould haue ſayde, they are not light or common, but approoued witneſſes: yea they are ſet forth by publike commaundement, as if that from heauen they were called for this purpoſe from the common ſorte of men. But in ſmall and ſeueral perticular poyntes, to diſcuſſe how that all the Prophetes did witneſſe of Chriſt, it would be too long. Let this ſuffice for this time (ſith it is knowne to all men, that the people could not be otherwiſe brought to beleeue that God would be mercifull to them any otherwiſe, but by bringing in that couenaunt, which was eſtabliſhed in Chriſt) that he plainely ſpeaketh of the redemption to come, as it was reuealed in Chriſt. Hether belong many notable places, which doe verie plainly propheſie of Chriſt, and ſhew him forth, as it were with a finger. But eſpecially that ſeale of the couenaunt of God is to bee remembred, the which if any man neglect, hee ſhall neuer vnderſtande any thing in the Prophetes, as the Iewes miſerably wandred in reading of the ſcripture: for that they being onely curious in wordes, they ſtrayed farre from the purpoſe.

71. Deliuerance from our enemies. Zachary doth more plainely ſet forth the power and office of Chriſt. And truely it would profit vs litle or nothing, to heare that Chriſt was giuen vs, except we alſo knew what good hee brought vs. For this cauſe therefore he doth more fully teach to what end the horne of ſaluation was erected, euen that the faithfull might bee preſerued from their enemies. It is not to be doubted but that Zacharias knew well ynough, that the greateſt warre that the Church of GOD hath, is not with fleſhe and bloud, but with Sathan and all his retinewe, wherewith he doth deceitfully deuiſe the deſtruction of vs all. And although that outward enemies doe alſo moleſt the Church, and that it is deliuered from them by Chriſt : yet ſeeing that the kingdome of Chriſt is ſpirituall, this ſentence is ſpoken eſpecially of Sathan, the prince of this world, and of his powers. Againe the miſerable condition of men without Chriſt is here noted, that is: that they lye proſtrate vnder the tyrannie of the deuill: for otherwiſe Chriſt could not deliuer his children out of his hand, that is, from his power, Yet this place doth declare, that the Church eſpecially liueth amongſt her enemies, while ſhee remaineth in this world, and is alwaies in daunger of their violence, if Chriſt were not preſent to helpe. But this is the ineſtimable grace of Chriſt, that our ſaluation remaineth certaine and ſafe, although our enemies doe compaſſe vs on euery ſide. And although it is a hard ſpeech, when he ſaith that hee wil ſend deliueraunce from our enemies, yet the ſenſe is not hard, becauſe that no deuiſes of our enemies, or ſtrengthes, no deceites, no forces can hinder God, but that he deliuering vs from them, will perpetuallye preſerue vs.

Church

72. That he would ſhew mercy. Zachary doth teach vs ageine from whence this redemption commeth, euen from the mercy of God, and from the couenaunt of his free grace. For hee declareth the cauſe why it pleaſed God to ſaue his people: euen becauſe he was mindefull of his couenant hath he ſhewed his mercie: And he is ſaid to be mindefull of his couenaunt, becauſe that his ſo long delaying might ſeeme to be a certaine forgetfulneſſe: for he ſuffered the people afflicted with moſt grieuous miſchiefes to languiſh. This order is diligently to be obſerued, that god was lead of his own meere mercie, to make the couenaunt with the fathers: Then he hauing made the couenant, he was bound by his word to perfourm the ſaluatiō of men. Thirdly, that what thing ſoeuer is good, he giueth it in Chriſt, that ſo he might ſanctifie al his promiſes, that ſo the faith of them ſhould be no otherwiſe eſtabliſhed, but when the fulneſſe ſhould appeare in Chriſt. There is promiſed in the couenaunt forgiuenes of ſinnes, but the ſame is to be had in the bloud of Chriſt: there is promiſed righteouſnes, but the ſame is giuen by the ſatiſfactiō of Chriſt: there is promiſed life, but it is not to be ſought, but in the death and reſurrection of Chriſt. And this is the cauſe why God cōmanded in times paſt, that the booke of the law alſo ſhuld be ſprinckled with the blood of the ſacrifice. It is alſo worthy to be obſerued, that Zachary extendeth to the fathers that are dead, the mercy which was ſhewd in his age, that they al in cōmon might receiue the fruite of the ſame. For hereof it foloweth that the grace & power of Chriſt cannot be cōtained within the ſtraits of this fraile life, but that it is eternal: And it cannot be ended by the death of the fleſh, ſeeing that both the ſoules are free from death, and alſo that a reſurrection doth follow the deſtruction of the fleſh. As therfore neither Abraham, nor any of the ſaintes could by their own power or merits obtaine ſaluation for them ſelues: ſo there is a common ſaluation ſhewed forth in Chriſt to all the faithfull, aſwell to them that are dead, as to them that are aliue.

73. According to the oath. The prepoſition is not expreſſed in the greek, but it is ſufficiently known, that it is the cōmon vſe of that tongue, whē the nowne is put in the accuſatiue caſe, without a word to gouerne it, that then a prepoſition is to be vnderſtood, wherof it may be gouerned. He maketh mention of his oath, that he might the better ſet forth how ſure and holy his truth is: for God doth ſo much ſubmit him ſelfe to our capacitie, that he vouchſafeth to vſe his name as a ſtay and helpe of our infirmitie: wherefore if the bare promiſes doe not ſuffice vs, let vs yet remember this confirmation, and if that take not all doubt from vs, wee are too vnthankful to God, and iniurious to his holy name.

That he would giue vs. Zachary doth not declare what the couenaunt of God

God doth conteine in al and euery of the particular pointes of the ſame: But he teacheth for what purpoſe GOD in his mercie dealt ſo louingly with his people, when he redeemed them, that is, that they being redeemed, ſhould addict and vow them ſelues wholy to worſhip the auéthour of their ſaluation. Therefore as the free goodnes of God is the efficient cauſe of mans ſaluation: ſo the finall cauſe is, that men by liuing a godlie and a holy life, might glorifie the name of God: the which is diligently to be noted, that we being mindefull of our calling, might learne to referre the grace of god to his true vſe. Theſe ſentences (I ſay) are to be conſidered, that we are not called to vncleannes, but to holines, that wee are redeemed with a great price, not that we ſhould be ſeruauntes to the deſires of the fleſh, or that we ſhould runne on in vnbrideled libertie, but that Chriſt might reigne in vs: that wee by adoption are placed into the houſhold of God, that we againe, as children, ſhould obey our father. For Tit. 2. 11. In this appeareth the goodnes of God, & Philanthropia, that denying worldly luſts, we ſhould liue ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly. Therfore Paule in the Ep. Rom. 12. 1. when that he would effectually exhort the faithful, that in newnes of life they ſhoulde offer vp them ſelues vnto God, and that by putting off the old man, & forſaking the former mind, they ſhould giue vnto him a reaſonable ſeruice, hee propoſeth vnto them the bowels of the mercie of god. The ſcripture is ful of ſuch teſtimonies, which declare that the grace of Chriſt is made of no effect, if we béd not to this purpoſe. But it is to be noted, that he ſaith, that we ſhuld ſerue him without feare: For it ſignifieth that god cânot be rightly ſerued, but with quiet ſetled mindes: for they which are not perſwaded, but are in doubt with themſelues, whether they ſhal finde him merciful or offended, whether he accepteth their obedience or refuſeth the ſame: to be ſhort, they which vncertainly wauer betweene hope and feare, it may be that ſomtimes they carefullye buſie thē ſelues in ſeruing him, but they neuer ſubmit themſelues ſincerely, & from the heart vnto him: for feare & doubtfulnes cauſe thē to abhor him: ſo that, if it were poſsible, they wold rather wiſh that his Godhead were extinguiſhed. But we know that no ſacrifice is acceptable to God, but that which commeth of a free wil, and which is offered with a glad heart. Vvherefore, that men may worſhip aright, it is neceſſarie that their cōſciences be firſt quieted: as Dauid ſaith, Pſa. 130. 4. Mercy is with thee, that thou maiſt be feared. For God hauing giuē peace to men, doth cal them louingly to him, and cauſeth them to come gladly, and with a free & bold affection to worſhip him. And hereof doth Paule gather that ſentence: whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne. Rom. 14. 23. For ſeeing that God hath reconciled men to himſelf in his ſonne Chriſt, ſeeing he defendeth them by the ayde of the ſame his ſonne, that they might be without al feare, and ſeeing hee hath layd vp their ſaluation in his hand and keeping, Zachary hath good cauſe to ſay, that by his grace we are deliuered from feare. Therefore the Prophetes aſcribe this as a propertie to his kingdome, that men ſhould haue a certaine peace, and ſhould enioy moſt quiet ioy.

75. In holynes and righteouſnes. As God hath comprehended in two tables the rule of liuing well: So Zachary doth ſhewe heere, that wee haue then ſerued god, according to his law, whē as our life is framed to holines & righteouſnes. For it is not to be doubted, but that holines doth cōtaine

thoſe dueties of godlines, which belong to the firſt table of the law: And of this thing Plato was not ignorant, and righteouſnes extendeth to all the dueties of charitie. For God requireth nothing elſe of vs in the ſecond table, but that we ſhould giue to euery man, that which is his due.

There is added, before him, that the faythfull may know, that it is not ſufficient for them to gouerne their life wel, or that they keepe their hands, their feete, and their whole body from all ſinne before the ſight of men: for it behooueth them to liue to the iudgement of God, who is not ſatiſfied with an outward holines, but he eſpecially beholdeth the heart. Laſt of all, leaſt any man thinke that he hath done his duetie, when as he hath ſerued God for a ſmall time, Zachary faieth that they were redeemed of this condition, that they ſhould ſpend their whole life in endeuouring to ſerue God. And ſeeing that our redemption is eternall, it is our duetie neuer to forget it. And ſeeing God adopteth vs vnto himſelfe for euer, our thankfulnes ought not to be trāſitorie, or for a ſmal time: to be ſhort, ſeeing that Chriſt died, and roſe againe for them, it is conuenient that hee ſhould be Lord both of their life and death. Therfore Paule in that place which I cited a litle before, commaundeth vs to lead a holy and a righteous life, vntill the comming of the mightie God, looking for (ſaith he) the bleſſed hope. &c.

Luke. 1.

Matthew. Marke.

76. And thou babe, ſhalt be called the Prophet of the moſt heigh: for thou ſhalt goe before the face of the Lord, to prepare his waies:

77. And to giue knowledge of ſaluation, vnto his people, by the remiſſion of their ſinnes.

78. Through the tender mercie of our God: whereby the daye ſpring from an high hath viſited vs.

79. To giue light to them that ſitte in darkeneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death, and to guide them into the way of peace.

80. And the childe grewe, and waxed ſtrong in ſprit, and was in the wilderneſſe til the day came, that he ſhould show himſelfe vnto Iſrael.

76. And thou childe. Zachary returneth againe to the commendation of the grace of Chriſt: but he doth this, as it were vnder the perſon of his owne ſonne, briefly ſetting forth the office of teaching, for the which he was prepared and apponted. And although that he could not yet diſcerne any prophetical giftes in the litle childe, being but eight dayes old, he yet turning his eies to behold the counſaile of God, doth ſpeake as of a thing perfectly knowne. To be called a prophet of God, is in this place taken for to be accompted, and to be openly knowne. The ſecrete calling of God was gone and paſſed before, it onely reſted that it ſhould be made knowne vnto men what he was: But becauſe that the name of a prophet is generall, therefore by the reuelation brought vnto him by the Angel, he is appoynted to be the forerunner of Chriſt.

Then

Thou ſhalt goe before the face of the Lord(ſaith he:)That is,this office thou muſt vndertake,that by thy preaching thou maiſt turn men to heare the Lord. But why Iohn,when he had almoſt ended his courſe,denied that he was the Prophet of God,it is declared in that place in Iohn. And we ſhal hereafter ſee what manner of preparing of a way this is , whereof Zachary here ſpeaketh.

77. To giue knowledge of ſaluation. Zachary nowe toucheth the chiefe poynt of the Goſpell,in that he teacheth that the knowledge of ſaluatiõ is put in the forgiuenes of ſinnes.For ſeeing that by nature we are born the children of wrath, it followeth that by nature wee are condemned and loſt:and this is the cauſe of our damnation,that we are guiltie of vnrighteouſnes: wherefore there is no other way, whereby we may eſcape death,except that God ſhould reconcile vs to him ſelfe,by not imputinge or laying our ſinnes to our charge . And it is eaſily gathered out of the words of Zachary,that this is the onely righteouſnes that remayneth for vs before God:For wherof commeth ſaluation,but of righteouſnes?And if that it be not lawful for the children of God to acknowledge any other ſaluatiõ,then through forgiueneſſe of ſinnes,it followeth that righteouſneſſe cannot any other where bee ſought: ſo the righteouſneſſe (which proude men haue forged and framed to them ſelues , of the merites of workes) is nothing elſe but imputation of righteouſnes, whilſt that God freely abſolueth vs from the guiltineſſe of ſinne. Moreouer it is to bee noted,that Zachary ſpeaketh not of ſtraungers,but of the people of god: whereof it followeth,that not onely the beginning of righteouſnes doth depend vppon forgiueneſſe of ſinnes : but that the faythfull alſo are by imputation or imputatiuely (that I may ſo ſpeake)righteous before god, euen vntil the end: becauſe that otherwiſe they cannot ſtand before his tribunal ſeate,except that dayly they haue recourſe to the free reconciliation in his grace.

78. Through the tender mercie. In this ſo great a benefit,Zachary,as it is requiſite,doth ſet forth the mercy of God:and he was not content to call it ſimply,the ſaluation which was brought vs through Chriſt,but he ſaith that it came out of the tenderneſſe or very bowelles of Gods mercy, the which is more forcible. Afterwardes hee metaphorically addeth, that through the great mercie of God it came to paſſe, that the daye gaue light to them that ſatte in darkenes. Orient.(i.the day ſpringing) in this place is not a participle:for in greeke it is anatole, that is the coaſt where the ſunne ariſeth, to the which the fall is oppoſed . Therefore Zachary extolleth the mercy of God in this,that the darkenes of death being ſhaken off,the light of life was reſtored to the people of God.In this maner it becommeth vs,as oft as we ſpeake of our ſaluation,to lift vp our minds to the mercy of God.It ſeemeth to be an alluſion to the 4.chap. 2.v.of Mal,where Chriſt is called the ſunne of righteouſnes,hauing health vnder his winges,that is,carrying it in his beames. For the wordes light and darkneſſe,there are the like in Eſa.9.2. The people that walked in darknes haue ſeene a great light, they that dwelled in the land of the ſhadow of death,vppon them hath the light ſhined: And in many other places are thoſe wordes vſed.But by theſe wordes wee are taught that there is no light of life in the world without Chriſt, but that al thinges are couered with the moſt horrible darkenes of death. Therefore in an other place

Eſay doth teſtifie that this is proper to the Church alone. Behold (ſaith he) darkneſſe ſhall couer the earth, and groſſe darkneſſe the people: but the Lorde ſhall ariſe vpon thee, and his glorye ſhall be ſeene vpon thee, Chap. 60. 2. Yet it is demaunded how the Iſraelites ſatte in the ſhadow of death, whoſe heartes the Lord alwayes lightned through faith. I aunſwere, that the godly, which liued vnder the law, being on euery ſide compaſſed with the darkneſſe of death, did beholde light a farre off in the comming of Chriſte, wherewith they were refreſhed, leaſt they ſhoulde haue ben ouerwhelmed with preſent death. It may be alſo that Zachary had reſpect to the miſerable eſtate of his time. But generally this is true: for by the comming of Chriſt there aroſe a light to all the godly, which were before, and alſo which were to come, which ſhould quicken them: becauſe he extended his life alſo euen to the dead. To ſitte, ſignifieth as much as to lye downe: therfore Eſay commaundeth the Church to ariſe when the day ſhone, 60. 1.

79. To guide our feete. By this clauſe Zacharyas teacheth, that the chefe perfection of all goodneſſe and felicitie doth conſiſt in Chriſt alone. The word peace might here haue beene vſed in his proper ſenſe, and ſhoulde not haue beene much amiſſe, becauſe that the light of Chriſt pacifieth the mindes of men. But becauſe that amongſt the Hebrewes peace doth ſignifie a good & bleſſed ſucceſſe of al things; I doubt not but that Zachary in this place would make Chriſt the aucthour of all perfect bleſſednes, leaſt that we ſhould ſeeke any thing that is good elſe where: but that we being perſwaded, that through Chriſt we ſhould be made perfectly and wholy bleſſed, might reſt in him alone. To the ſame purpoſe belong thoſe wordes of Iſaias, 60. 19. Thou ſhalt haue no more ſunne to ſhine by day, nor moone by night: for the Lord ſhall be thine euerlaſting light. If that Zachary by the onely beholding of his ſonne, that was yet a childe, was lead to ſpeak ſo notably of the grace and power of Chriſt, before he was borne; are not they thriſe & foure times vnthankfull, which after that he is dead, riſen againe, and aſcended into heauen, that hee might ſitte at the right hand of his father, doe eſteeme leſſe honourably & reuerently of Chriſt, and they extenuate his power, whoſe praiſe the holy Ghoſt ſet forth, while he was yet in his mothers wombe? For we muſt remember that which I touched before, that Zachary ſpake not of himſelf, but as the ſpirit of God gouerned his tongue.

80. And the childe grew. Luke addeth this to conclude the hiſtory with. Firſt he declareth that Iohn was ſtrong in the ſpirit: whereby hee ſignifieth that there was a rare and vnwoonted towardneſſe in the chylde, which was a ſigne that the heauenly ſpirite dwelt in him: yet withall he ſaieth that hee remained hidde as one vnknowne in the wilderneſſe, vntill the day came that hee ſhould ſhewe himſelfe: that is, vntill the Lorde appoynted to bring him forth: whereby we gather, that although Iohn knew well of his calling, yet hee would not attempt anye thing before the time, but taryed the calling of God.

Becauſe that both theſe genealogies, which are written of Matthewe and Luke doe not agree in all thinges: it muſt firſt be ſeene whether that both of them doe fetch the genealogie of Chriſt from Ioſeph, or whether Matthew doth ſo onely, and Luke dooth fetch it from Mary. They that are of the latter iudgement haue a good colour for the difference, that is in diuers names. And truely at the firſt ſight, ſeeing that Luke doth ſo much differ from Matthew, it ſeemeth nothing leſſe, then that they ſtould declare one and the ſame genealogie: For from Dauid vnto Salathiell, and againe from Zorobabell to Ioſeph, they name altogether diuerſe names. Furthermore, they pretende that it is abſurde to beſtow ſo much labour in a matter not needefull, as to accompt the petegree of Ioſeph twiſe, who yet was not the father of Chriſt. To what purpoſe (ſay they) is this repetition, whereby there is nothing prooued, that doth much appertaine to the edifying of faith? For if this thing be onely known, that Ioſeph was one of the poſteritie and houſe of Dauid, yet the line of Chriſt remaineth doubtfull: therfore, by their iudgments it was ſuperfluous that both the Euangeliſtes ſtould imploy themſelues vppon this matter. But that Matthew repeateth the progenie of Ioſeph they excuſe thus, that hee did it, becauſe that manye did yet thinke him to be the father of Chriſt. But it were to be ſcorned at, that with this cockering hee ſtould nouriſh this moſt peſtilent error, and the text doth openly confute the ſame. For Matthewe aſſoone as hee commeth to the ende of the genealogie, teacheth that Chriſt came not of the ſeede of Ioſeph, but that by the ſecrete power of the holy Ghoſt he was conceiued in the wombe of the Virgin: wherfore if their iudgements ſhould ſtand, Matthew might be reproued of fooliſhnes, and for want of conſideration, as one, who in vaine would recite the genealogie of Ioſeph. But their obiection is not yet aunſwered, that the genealogie of Ioſeph doth nothing appertaine to Chriſt. The anſwere is old and commonly known, that in the perſon of Ioſeph the petegree of Mary is alſo comprehended: becauſe that the law commaunded that euery man ſtoulde take him a wife in his owne tribe.

They take exceptions againſt this lawe, becauſe that it was neglected almoſte in all ages: but the argumentes which they vſe are friuolous. They cite that example, that the eleuen tribes promiſed with an oath, that they woulde not giue a wife to the men of Beniamin. If this were preſcribed by law (ſay they) then needed there not a new oath. But I anſwer that they doe yll and vnwiſelye, to drawe this extraordinarie facte of theirs into a common rule: For it was neceſſary, one tribe being cutte off, that the bodye of the people ſhoulde haue beene maimed, if that by this remedie there had not bin ſome help prouided for ſo great a neceſsitie. Therefore the common law is not in this to be conſidered. Againe they obiect, that Mary the mother of Chriſt, was coſine to Elizabeth, whō Luke before witneſſed to haue bin of the daughters of Aarō. The anſwer alſo to this is eaſie. It was lawful for the maides of the tribe of Iuda or of anye other tribe, to marrie into the tribe of the prieſthoode: becauſe that, that reaſon which is expreſſed in the law, was not thereby hindered, which was, leaſt that the woman ſhould carrye her inheritaunce to any other, but to them of her owne tribe. So the holy hiſtorie 2. Para. 22. 11. declareth that the wife of Ioiada the high prieſt came of the kingly ſtocke: Therefore it is neither merualie nor thing vnwonted, if that the mother of Elizabeth was married to a Prieſt. But if any denie that theſe thinges are not ſo fully prooued, that it is lawful to determine Mary to be of the ſame tribe that Ioſeph was, becauſe that ſhee was his wife: verily I graunt, that it cannot ſimply be prooued out of the bare hiſtorie, as it is here read, except that other circumſtances bee added to the ſame. But firſt it is to be noted, that the Euangeliſtes ſpake of thinges well knowne in their age: ſo that when the genealogie of Ioſeph was drawne vnto Dauid, it was eaſie for euery man to draw the genealogie of Mary from thence alſo. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Euangeliſtes beeing occupied in that which was commonlye knowne in their age, were therefore the leſſe curious about the ſame: For if any had doubted, they might eaſily & ſpeedily haue made inquiſition.

Furthermore, they take this as a thing graunted, that ſeeing Ioſeph was a good man and modeſt, hee would not take a wife, but out of his owne tribe, according to the appointment of the law. Although that generall law ſufficed not to proue that Mary was of the kingly ſtocke: for Mary might haue come of the tribe of Iuda, though ſhee came not of the ſtocke of Dauid. Therefore the matter being thus, the Euangeliſtes had a care of the godly which would not contentiouſly ſtriue, but might in the perſon of Ioſeph knowe the genealogie of Mary, eſpecially ſeeing the matter (as we ſaid before,) was in that age well knowne and not doubtfull.

But it may ſeeme to be incredible, that theſe poore deſpiſed marryed folkes ſhould be of the poſteritie of Dauid, and ſtould be that kinglye ſeede, whereof the redeemer ſhould come. Nowe, if any aske whether the genealogie, as it is ſet downe by Matthew and Luke, doth clearely and euidently ſhewe, that Mary is of the ſtocke of Dauid: I graunt that it cannot certeinely be gathered by it. But ſeeing that the kindred of Mary and Ioſeph was not then vnknowne, the Euangeliſtes were the leſſe carefull in this matter: but yet the purpoſe of them both was to take away the offence, which the baſenes, and the contempt, and the pouertie, aſwel of Ioſeph as of Mary might breed, leaſt that there might not be knowne in them any thing appertaining to the kingly race.

Furthermore, that they imagine or faine that Luke ſetteth downe the genealogie of Mary, and letteth paſſe that of Ioſeph, is eaſily confuted: For thus, word for word he writeth, Ieſus was ſuppoſed to bee the ſonne of Ioſeph, which was the ſonne of Eli, the ſonne of Matthat. Truely hee maketh mention neither of the father, nor of the grandfather of Chriſt, but expreſly declareth the progenie of Ioſeph him ſelfe . But I am not ignoraunt what aunſwere they vſe to knitte vppe this knotte withall : For they ſaye that Sonne in that place is vſed for a Sonne in lawe . And ſo that Ioſeph was the ſonne of Hely, they interprete thus : becauſe hee had his daughter to wife. But this is not agreeable with the order of nature, neither is there in any place of the ſcripture any ſuch example read.

Nowe, if Solomon bee excluded out of the genealogie of Mary, then ſhall Chriſt ceaſe to be Chriſt: for whatſoeuer is ſayde of that ſtocke, it is grounded vppon that ſolemne promiſe . Thy ſucceſſour , which ſhall ſitte vppon thy throane ſhall reigne for euer, 2. Samuel 7. 12. and Pſal. 132. 11. I will be his father, and hee ſhall be my ſonne . And it is without queſtion that Solomon was the figure of this euerlaſting king, which was promiſed to Dauid . And the promiſe cannot otherwiſe be applyed to Chriſte : but as the trueth of it was ſhadowed in Solomon, 1. Chron. 28. 5.

Now if the ſtocke of Chriſt be not referred to him, how, or by what meanes ſhall hee be accompted the ſonne of Dauid? Therefore whoſoeuer putteth Solomon out of the genealogie of Chriſte , hee doth withall blotte and wipe away the promiſes, by which he is knowne to be the ſonne of Dauid. And how Luke fetcheth the petegree from Nathan, and yet reiecteth not Solomon , it ſhall be ſeene hereafter in his place . And (leaſt I ſeeme too tedious) for that which is the ſumme of the matter , I ſay that theſe two genealogies doe agree together : yet there are to be noted foure differences in them . The firſte is , that Luke with a backewarde order (as they ſay) aſcendeth from the laſt to the firſt: when that Matthew beginneth at the very originall. The ſeconde is, that Matthew ſtretcheth not his hiſtorie beyonde the holy and electe ſtocke of Abraham: But Luke goeth on euen vnto Adam. The third, that Mattew entreateth of the genealogie , according to the lawe , and alſo permitteth himſelfe, to leaue ſome out of the courſe of his accompt: in that he prouiding for the memorie of the readers , dooth onelye recite the numbers of three fourteenes : but Luke doth more exactlye followe the naturall ſtocke.

The fourth and laſte is , that they both ſpeaking ſometimes of the ſame men , doe yet varie in their names . Of the firſt difference ſeeing there is no great difficultie in it, it is but in vaine to make may woordes about it. The ſeconde wanteth not verie good reaſon : for becauſe that God had choſen the ſtocke of Abraham to him ſelfe, whence the redeemer of the worlde ſhould be borne , and the promiſe of ſaluation was after a ſorte therein included vnto the comming of Chriſte , therefore Mattwew dooth not paſſe beyonde thoſe boundes appoynted of GOD. VVee muſt remember that Paule ſaieth, that Chriſte was a miniſter of circumciſion , for the trueth of GOD , to confirme the promiſed ſaluation made vnto the holy fathers, Rom. 15. 8. To the which that ſaying of Chriſt doth very well agree, that ſaluation is of the Iewes, Iohn. 4. 22 Therefore Matthew propoſeth him to be ſeene in that holy ſtocke, to the which he was properlye appoynted. And alſo in the catologue of Matthew the couenaunt of GOD is to be conſidered: whereby he choſe the ſeede of Abraham for a people vnto him ſelfe, that it might be ſeparate from all other nations, as with a wall made vppe betweene them. But Luke looketh higher: for although the redeemer was peculierly promiſed to the ſeede of Abraham, after that GOD had made his couenaunt with him: yet wee knowe that all had neede of him, preſently after the fall of the firſt man, as hee was then alſo promiſed to the whole world: But it was done by the wonderfull counſell of God, that Luke ſhould propoſe Chriſt vnto vs as the ſonne of Adam, and that Matthew ſhould include him in one ſtocke of Abraham: for it ſhoulde haue profited vs nothing, that Chriſt was giuen of his father, the auſthour of ſaluation, except hee had beene generally common for vs all. And alſo that had not beene true, which the Apoſtle ſaieth, Hebrewes 13.8. that hee was yeſterday, and to day, and is the ſame alſo for euer; if that his power and grace had not beene powred out vnto al ages from the creation of the worde. Therefore let vs know that ſaluation in Chriſt is reuealed and giuen to all mankinde: becauſe that hee was not without cauſe called the ſonne of Noah, and the ſonne of Adam: yet beecauſe, that hee is to be ſought in the worde of GOD, the ſpirite dooth not without aduiſe call vs by an other Euangeliſte to the holye ſtocke of Abraham, where the treaſure of eternall life together with Chriſt was layd vp for a time.

Let vs come to the thirde difference. It is not to be doubted, but that Matthewe obſerueth an other order then Luke dooth: for the one placeth Solomon next after Dauid, and the other placeth Nathan, whereby it euidently appeareth that they ſette downe diuerſe lines. Good and learned interpreters doe thus reconcile this ſhewe of diſcorde, that Matthew leauing the naturall genealogie (which Luke followeth) doth rehearſe the legall genealogie: and I call that the legall genealogie, wherby it came to paſſe, that the right of the kingdome was tranſlated to Salathiell. And in that Euſebius in the firſte booke of his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie, following the iudgemente of Aphricanus, dooth rather call that the legall genealogie, which Luke ſetteth downe; hee ſpeaketh it in the ſame ſenſe: for hee meaneth not any thing elſe, but that the kingdome, which was eſtablyſhed in the perſon of Solomon, by lawefull meanes did fall at length vnto Salathiell. But they ſaye better and more aptly, which ſaye that the legall order was ſet downe by Matthew: For he naming Solomon preſentlye after Dauid, doth not obſerue from whome Chriſte came by continual courſe after the fleſhe: But how he deſcended from Solomon and other kinges, that hee might bee theyr lawefull ſucceſſour, in whoſe hand the perpetuitie of the kingdom ſhould be eſtabliſhed, according to the couenaunt of God. Their iudgement is probable, which think that the ſtocke of Solomon ended by the death of Ochozias, as 2. Kings. 9. 27. and 11. 1

That whiche ſome reporte out of the commentaries of the Iewes, that Dauid was commaunded, if Solomon wanted offſpringe, that the kingly power ſhoulde come to the poſteritie of Nathan; I leaue as I find it: onely I take that which is certaine, that the ſucceſsion of the kindome was not cõfuſed, but had his diſtinct degrees. Now whē the holy hiſtory reth, that after the ſlaughter of Ochozia his mother Athalia did hold the kingdome, and the kingly ſtocke being wholy ouerthrowne, it is more then probable, that thoſe wicked and moſt cruell murthers were committed of that woman ſo ambitious of gouernment, leaſt that ſhee beeing driuen to liue a priuate life, ſhould ſee the kingdom tranſlated otherwhere. Therfore, if Ochozias had, had a ſon liuing after him, ſhe might haue reigned in the court, vnder the colour of protection, freely & ſafelie without enuy and daunger. Therefore that ſhe had made her ſelfe infamous and odious by her extreame offences, was a ſigne of deſperation, for that ſhee coulde not hold her kingdome at home in her owne houſe. But the reaſon why Ioas is called the ſonne of Ochozias is, becauſe he was next in degree vnto him, 2. Chr. 22.9. So that he might be rightly called the true & natural heire of the kingdom. For beſides that Athalia (if we graunt that ſhee was his grandmother) would gladly haue ſo abuſed the title of the infant, who is there endued with anye ſmall diſcretion, that can thinke it likely, that the naturall ſonne of the king could be ſo hidde of the prieſt Ioiada, and that his graundmother ſhould not more diligently haue ſought him out? But rather if a man conſider all thinges wiſely, it is eaſily gathered, that the next heire of the kingdom was of an other line. And that is the meaning of the wordes of Ioiada: the kinges ſonne ſhall reigne according to the couenaunt of the Lord with Dauid, 2. Chron. 23.3. as if he ſhoulde haue ſaide, that it hadde ben an hainous offence, if that a womã, being a ſtranger, ſhould with violence take vnto her ſelf the ſcepter, which God had appointed to remain in the houſe of Dauid. VVherefore there is no abſurditie, if Luke doth fetch the petigree of Chriſt from Nathan: becauſe it may be that the ſtock of Solomon, which appertained to the ſucceſsion of the kingdome was decayed.

Nowe if any obiect that Ieſus cannot be acknowledged for the Meſſias, which was promiſed, except he had come of the poſteritie of Solomõ, who was certainly knowne tohaue bin a figure of Chriſt: although that naturally he came not of Solomon, yet by the leagall order he is to be accounted as his Sonne, becauſe he had his originall from kinges. But ſuch diuerſitie in the names doth trouble many very much. For from Dauid euen vnto Ioſeph there appeareth no conſent betweene the two Euangeliſtes, but in Salathiell and Zorobabell. The excuſe which was woont to be made (that the difference roſe hereof, that the Iewes for the moſte parte had two names) is hardly admitted of manye. But at this day ſeeing the cauſe that mooued Matthew to drawe and ſette downe this genealogie is vnknowne to vs, it is no mervaile if we knowe not why in theſe perticular names, they both agree, or diſagree: but it is not to be doubted, but after the captiuitie of Babylon they rehearſe certaine, the ſame men by diuerſe names. But I thinke that the names of Zorobabell and Salathiell were aduiſedlye retained for the chaunge of the eſtate of the people: becauſe that then the kinglye maieſtie was extinguiſhed. The ſmall ſhadowe of gouernment which remayned, teſtified a great chaunge, which admoniſhed the faythfull to hope after a more notable kingdome then that viſible kingdome of Salomon, which floriſhed but a ſhort time.

Now

Nowe it is worthe the labour to note this alſo,that there is no abſurditie in that,that Luke doth recken and accompt moe in his Cataloge then Mathew doth, for it is ordinarily ſeene that there are moe in number in the naturall generation,then in the legall. To this alſo appertaineth,that Mathew (when he deuided the genealogie of Chriſt into three partes,and woulde apply to euery part 14.generations,)thought that he might freely leaue oute certaine names, which Luke might not omitte, ſeeing that he bound not himſelfe to that lawe. Thus farre haue I diſcourſed of the genealogie of Chriſt,as muche as ſeemeth profitable and conuenient for the ſumme.If any man be tickeled with a further curioſitie,I remembring Paule his admonition, doe preferre ſobrietie and modeſtie before the friuolous arguings about things of no waight:the place to Tit.3.9.is well knowen,where hee forbiddeth vs to diſpute ouer curiouſly of genealogies. Now laſtly it remaineth to ſhewe why Mathew comprehendeth the whole genealogie of Chriſte into 3.portions, and placeth 14.menne in euery one. They that ſay that hee did this,that hee might prouide for the memorie of the readers, they neither ſay all, nor nothing, for this is true, the cataloge propoſed in 3.equal numbers,may the eaſelier be remembred,yet withall it is plaine that heere are expreſly noted, the 3.ſortes and ſtates of people, which were after the time that Chriſt was promiſed to Abraham vntill the fulneſſe of time wherein he was ſhewed in the fleſh,for although that the tribe of Iuda did excell all the reſt of the tribes in honour,yet before Dauid it had no principalitie. In Dauid the kingly maieſtie ſhone foorth beyond the hope of all men, which continued to Iechonias,from that time there remained ſome dignitie and gouernement in the tribe of Iuda, which ſtaied the mindes of the godly vnto the comming of the Meſsias.

1 The booke of the generation. Many interpreters haue laboured in vaine about this title,that they mighte excuſe Mathewe for naming the whole hyſtorie of the one halfe part of his firſt chapter,for this epigraphe (or inſcription) doth not extende to the whole booke.But the worde booke is put heere and vſed for a cataloge,as if it ſhould haue bene ſayde,the cataloge of the generation of Chriſt:Furthermore he calleth Chriſt in reſpecte of the promiſſes, the ſonne of Abraham, the ſonne of Dauid,becauſe that God had promiſed that a ſeede ſhall riſe from Abraham, in whome all the nations in the world ſhall be bleſſed.Gen.12.3. But vnto Dauid there was a more euident promiſſe made,that it ſhoulde come to paſſe that the kingdome ſhoulde remaine ſtedfaſt in his houſe vnto the ende of the worlde,Pſal.72.5.7.and a king out of his ſtocke ſhall ſit vpon the throne, ſo long as the ſunne and the moone doe ſhine in the heauen,Pſal.89.29 whereuppon it became a common ſpeach amongſte the Ieewes,that Chriſt was called the ſonne of Dauid.

2. Iacob begate Iudas. Seeing that Mathew couered with ſilence Iſmael the firſt begotte ſon of Abrahã, and Eſau who by order of nature was ſuperiour to his brother Iacob,he doeth not without aduiſe geue a place to the 12.Patriarkes in this genealogie, ſeeing that God beſtowed grace of adoption vpon them all.Therfore he declareth that the bleſsing promiſed in Chriſt,did not belong to the only tribe of Iuda,but that it was common to all the children of Iacob whome G O D gathered into hys Church,when Iſmael and Eſau were made ſtraungers.

3. Iudas begate Phares and Zara of Thamar. This was the beginning of that humbling, whereof Paule ſpeaketh, Phil. 2. 7. The ſonne of God might haue kept his genealogie free and pure from all offence & note of infamie, but he comming into the world that he might humble himſelfe, and taking vpon him the forme of a ſeruant, became a worme & not a man, the ſcorne of men & the outcaſt of the people, and at the length endured the moſt curſſed death of the croſſe. Alſo this infamie in his genealogie hath not he refuſed, that he ſhould ſpring from an inceſtuous bed, which was made amongſt his anceſters: for although that Thamar was not enforced through luſt, to deſire the company of her father in lawe, yet by an vnlawfull meane ſhee attempted to reuenge her iniurie. And Iudas when he deſired to lie with a whore, fell vpon his daughter in law. But the incomparable goodnes of God ſtriue with the ſinne of them both, ſo that this adoulterous ſeede ſhould neuertheleſſe enioy the ſcepter.

6. Begat Dauid the king. Dauid only is adorned with this title, becauſe that God propoſed in his perſon the figure of the Meſsias of the gouernour and captaine that was to come. The kingdome firſt began at Saule, but becauſe that this came to paſſe through a tumult, and by the wicked deſires of the people, therefore the change at length from him to Dauid was eſtemed lawfull, eſpecially in as much as pertained to the couenant of God, wherin he had promiſed, that he ſhuld be a gouernor for euer ouer his people: when as the people 1. Sam. 8. 4. had vnhappely ſhaken off the yoke of God, and with condemned voices demaunded a king for themſelues; Saul was graunted them for a ſmal time: but God preſently eſtabliſhed his kingdom, which ſhuld be a pledge of true bleſſednes in the hād of Dauid. Therfore let vs know that here is noted the ſecond eſtate of the people, as it was ordained of the Lord: yet withal, the ſhame & diſhoneſty of man is added by the Euangeliſt, how that the ſame can after a ſort defile the glory of God his bleſsing, in that Dauid begat Salomon of Berſabe, whom he had wickedly taken from her huſband: & that he might enioy her, he moſt vnfaithfully betraied the innocent man to be ſlaine with the ſwordes of his enemies. This deformitie falling out about the beginnings of their kingdome, ought to make the Iewes not to glory in fleſh; God alſo would it ſhuld be declared, that in the eſtabliſhing of that kingdom he would not be bound to the merites of men: but in that ſucceſsion which Mat. deſcribed, it appeareth by the ſacred hyſtory, that 3. kings wer omitted. They which ſay that this was done through forgetfulneſſe, are not to be heard, neither is their reaſon to be allowed of, which ſay that they are vnworthy to haue any place geuen them in the genealogie of Chriſt: for that ſhuld haue ſalne alſo to the lot of many other, whom yet Mathew mixeth indifferētly with the godly & holy ones. Therfore it ſemeth rather to be true, whē he wold make a catalogue of 14. kings, he was not very curious in making his choiſe, becauſe it was ſufficient for him to compoſe a genealogie to ſet before the eyes of the readers vnto the ende of the kingdome, but that there are red onely 13. it is moſt likely to be the fault and careleſnes of Printers or wryters of bookes. Epiphanius in his 1. booke contra hereſes, ſheweth the cauſe: that when the name of Iechonias was put in twiſe, the vnlearned preſumed to ſcrape it out of the ſecond place, as a worde more then needed, but he admoniſheth that it ſhoulde not haue beene done ſo, becauſe that Ioacim the ſonne of king Ioachin, had the name Iechonias common with his ſonne. 1. Chron. 3. 17. 2. Chron. 36. 1. Ier. 27. 20. and 28. 4. And Robert Stephanus citeth a Greeke copie, where this name Ioacim is put in.

12. After they were caried into Babylon. That is after the Iewes were caried into captiuitie, for the Euangeliſt declareth that the poſteritye of Dauid, of kings were then become ſlaues and baniſhed men. Furthermore, when that captiuitie was a kinde of deſtruction, it was wrought by the wonderfull prouidence of God, that the Iewes were not onely gathered together into one body, but alſo that there remained certaine remnants of gouernment in the houſe of Dauid, for they which returned home, did of their owne free wil obey the gouernment of Zorobabel, therfore the fragments of the kingly ſcepter endured and laſted in this worlde, vntill the comming of Chriſt was at hand, according to the Prophecie of Iacob. The ſcepter ſhal not depart from Iudah nor a lawgeuer from betweene his feete, vntil the Shiloh come. Gen. 49. 10. and in that eſtate, although there was a miſerable and a ſorowfull diſſipatiō of the people, yet they neuer were without ſome ſparks of the grace and fauor of God ſhining amongſt them. The Greeke woorde (for the which the old interpreter vſed tranſmigrationem, Eraſmus hath put Exilium) it properly ſignifieth a changed dwelling place, wherby vnderſtād that the Iewes were enforced to go out of their countrey, that in other places they might dwell as ſtrangers that were neuer there.

16 Ieſus that is called Chriſt. In the ſurname Mathew doeth declare his office, that the readers may vnderſtand him to be no priuate mā, but annoynted from aboue to fulfil the worke of redemption. But what maner of annoynting his was, & to what purpoſe it appertained, I will not in many words at this preſente declare. Of the voice it ſelfe this is to be vnderſtode: After the kingdom was aboliſhed, they began to refer it to that one from whom the full reſtitutiō of their decaied eſtate was to be hoped for: for ſo long as there did any maieſtie flouriſh in the houſe of Dauid, the kings were woont to be called Chriſti. But leaſt the deformed waſteneſſe which after folowed, ſhould throwe the mindes of the godly into deſperation, it was the will of God that this name ſhould be applied to the only redemer, as it appeareth out of Daniel, and the Euangelical hyſtorie doth declare that after the ſonne of God was geuen in the fleſh, that this was the common maner of ſpeach in euery place.

Mathewe 1.

	Marke.	Luke.
18. Nowe the birth of Ieſus Chriſte was thus, when as his mother Marie was betrothed to Ioſeph before they came together, thee was founde with childe by the holy Ghoſte.
19. Then Ioſeph her husband being a iuſt man, and not willing to make her a publike example, was mineded to put her away ſecretely.
20. But whiles hee thoughte, theſe thinges, beholde, the Aungell of the Lorde appeared vnto hym in a dreame, ſayinge, Ioſephe the Sonne of of Dauid, feare not to take Marie for thy wife, for that which is conceiued in her, is of the holye Ghoſt.

21. And thee ſhall bring foorth a ſonne, and thou ſhalt call his name Ieſus, for he ſhall deliuer his people from their ſinnes.

22. And all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the Lorde by the prophet, ſaying:

23. Beholde a virgine ſhall beare a ſonne, and they ſhall call his name Emmanuel, which is by interpretation, God with vs.

24. Then Ioſeph being raiſed from ſleepe, did as the Angel of the Lorde had inioyned him, and tooke his wife.

25. But he knew her not, till ſhe had brought foorth her firſt ſonne, and he called his name Ieſus.

18. The birth of Ieſus Chriſt. Mathewe doth not as yet declare, where, or after what maner Chriſt was borne, but how the heauenly generation was reuealed vnto Ioſeph. Firſt he ſayth that Mary was founde with childe of the holy Ghoſt, not that, that ſecrete worke of God was commonly knowen, but as it became knowen vnto men, ſo doeth he reueile the power of the ſpirite, which as yet lay hid. He ſheweth the time, when ſhee was betrothed to Ioſeph, and yet before that they came together: for in reſpecte of the aſſuraunce of the mariage, aſſoone as the mayde was promiſed to a man, the Iewes eſteemed her as a lawfull wife, and therefore the lawe condemned them of adulterie, which defiled them ſelues with them that were contracte. The woorde which the Euangeliſt doth vſe, doth either modeſtly ſignifie a ſecrete accompanying together, or it is ſimply taken for to dwell together, as husband and wife, ſhoulde make one houſe and one familie. So the ſenſe is, that the virgin was not yet deliuered by her parents into the hand of her husband, but as yet liued vnder the cuſtodie of her parents.

19. Being a iuſt man. Some interpreters vnderſtande, that Ioſeph becauſe that he was iuſt, would haue ſpared his wife, ſo iuſtice with them ſhould ſignifie humanitie, or a moderation of the minde bent vnto gentleneſſe. But they are of better iudgement which reade theſe two clauſes contrarily, that Ioſeph was iuſt, but yet hee was carefull for the fame of his wife, ſo that the iuſtice which is heere commended, was in reſpect of the hatred and deteſtation of the ſinne. Becauſe that he ſuſpected her of adultery, nay becauſe that he was perſwaded that ſhe was an adultereſſe, he would not nouriſh ſuch an offence with his gentleneſſe: and certainly he is his wifes bawde, who ſoeuer hee is that winketh at her vnchaſtitie, good and honeſt minds doe not onely abhorre ſuch an offence, but alſo the lawes doe ſpot with infamie ſuch negligent ſlouthfulneſſe, as that is whereof I ſpake. Therefore Ioſeph with a zeale of iuſtice, condemned the fault which he ſuppoſed to be in his wife, yet his minde bent to humanitie, ſtaied him from executing the extremitie of the lawe. This was a meane more qualified, if he, priuely departing, ſhoulde go toe an other place, whereby wee gather that hee was not of ſo ſofte and ſo effeminate a minde, that vnder the pretence of mercye he woulde nouriſh the ſinne by couering it. Onely he remitted ſome what of the extremitie of the lawe, and would not caſt her foorth to the infamous reproche: and it is not to be doubted but that his minde was ſtayed by the ſecrete inſtincte of the ſpirite: for we know how outragious gelouſie is, and howe violently it carieth a man away, wherfore although Ioſeph had endured an ouer daungerous inuaſion, yet was he wonderfully croſſed with diuers perilles which were at hand, when he firſt beganne to deliberate of the matter. I iudge the ſame of Maries ſilence, though we graunt that for ſhame ſhee durſt not tell her husband that ſhee was with childe by the holy Ghoſt, yet ſhee was rather ſtayed by the prouidence of God, then by her owne counſell or witte: for if ſhee had tolde him, as it was a matter incredible, ſo Ioſeph ſhould haue thought that ſhee had mocked him, and that all men would haue laughed at, and haue taken as a meere fable, neither ſhould the Oracle of God haue bene ſo muche eſtemed of, if it had followed after. Therefore the Lorde ſuffered his ſeruaunt Ioſephe to be caried awaye into a wrong opinion, that with his owne voyce hee might reduce him into the way, but it is to be knowen, that it was rather done for our ſakes, then for his owne priuate cauſe, for the Lorde by all meanes preuented, leaſt there ſhould be any ſiniſter ſuſpition in the Oracle. For ſeeing the Aungell commeth to Ioſeph, as yet ignoraunt of the whole matter, the wicked haue no occaſion to cauell: for he came without parcialitie to heare the voice of God, he was not entiſed by the flatteries of his wife, the opinion which he had conceiued was not drawne from him by entreaties, he was not bent to the contrary part by humane reaſons, but when the falſe offence of his wife ſtacke faſt in his minde, then did God ſhewe him ſelfe, as lette downe from heauen to vs, that he might be the more conuenient witneſſe, and haue the greater credit with vs. VVe ſee that it was God his will to teache his ſeruaunt Ioſeph by an Angell, to that ende that hee himſelfe might be a heauenly meſſenger to others, and might declare and tell that whiche hee hearde neyther of his wife, nor of any other mortall creature. That this myſterie was not at the firſt reuealed to moe, this ſeemeth to be the reaſon, becauſe that it was meete, that this incomparable treaſure ſhoulde be kept ſecreate, and only reuealed to the children of God. Furthermore there is no abſurditie in it, if the Lord (as he often vſeth) would by this meanes prooue and trie the faith and obedience of his children, Certainly except a man maliciouſly refuſe to credite God, and to yelde himſelf in obedience to him, hee will be ſufficiently ſatisfied with theſe teſtimonies, wherewyth this principle of our faith is prooued, for the ſame cauſe alſo did the Lorde permit Marie to marrie, that the celeſtiall conception of the virgin might be hidde vnder the veile of marriage, vntil the appoynted time of reueaſing the ſame. In the meane while, the vnfaithfull (as their vnthankfulneſſe and malice deſerued) are blinded and ſee none of theſe mercies.

20. VVhiles he thought theſe things. Heere we ſee how the Lord vſeth to be preſent with his children in conuenient time, and (as they ſay) euen in the very poynt or time of neede, whereby we alſo gather, that while hee ſeemeth to diſſemble at our cares and ſorowes, he yet hath a regard vnto vs: but he ſo ſtaieth and ſecretely reſteth, while hee examineth our patiences ence: and then in his time appoynted hee helpeth vs. And althoughe his helpe seemeth to be slow and late, yet it is profitable that it shoulde be so deferred. The Aungel appeared in a dreame: this is one of the ordinarie maners of reuelations, wherof mention is made, Num. 12. 7. where God speaketh thus. To the Prophets which are among you, I will shewe my selfe either by a vision or by a dreame, but I will not do so with my seruaunt Moses, to whom I will shewe my selfe face to face: but it is to be obserued that these sortes of dreames doe much differ from them which come of natural causes, for they haue a marke of assurance engraued in them, and they are sealed from aboue, that we shoulde not doubt of the truthe of them. The dreames which men commonly haue, are woont to rise either of the constitution of nature, or throughe euill disposition of the bodies, or of such like causes. But sometimes the spirit geueth witnesse to those dreames which are of God, to assure vs certainly that it is god which speaketh. Sonne of Dauid be not afraid. This exhortatiō of the angel, declareth that Ioseph was careful in his mind, least he should be defiled with any infection, by bearing with his wifes adulterie. He therfore taketh away that opinion of the offence which he had conceiued in his minde, to that ende that with a quiet conscience he might remaine and dwell with his wife: hee applieth the epithite of the Sonne of Dauid to the preset cause, that he might stir vp his mind to that high mystery, because that he was of that familie (and that remaining aliue but with a few other) from whence saluation was promised to the worlde. Ioseph therefore hearing Dauid named, out of whose stocke he came, ought to remēber that notable couenant of God, of the restitution of the kingdom, & so should know that he speakes not of any new or straunge thing: for it is as much as if the Aungel by setting foorth the prophesies of the Prophets shoulde prepare Ioseph his minde to accept this present fauoure. Thou shalt call his name Iesus. Of the word it selfe I haue before spokē briefly but sufficiently. I will nowe onely adde one thing. Their dreame is confuted by the woordes of the Angell, which deriue this name from Iehoua the essentiall name of God: for the Aungell sheweth why the sonne of God is to be so called, that is, because he shal saue his people: whereof we gather an etymologye, meere contrary to that which they imagine. But in vaine doe they seeke by this cauill to slippe away: Christ is to bee compted the author of saluation most properly and most aptly, because that he is God eternall. For we must not heere seeke onely, what GOD hath performed and bestowed vppon vs: but this name was geuen vnto the sonne, for an especiall cause, becausse of the commaundement whiche was enioyned him from the father, and by reason of the office which he had when he descended to vs. Nowe it were meere madnesse to knitte these two woordes, Iesu & Iehoua together, as if they were but one name, seeing that they agree but in two letters and differre in all the rest, and which haue no likenesse in them at all. I leaue this kinde of forging to the Alchumystes, from whom the Cabalistes do not much differre, who haue inuented for vs these filthie and vaine toyes. But the sonne of God when hee came to vs in the flesh, had also his name geuen him of his father, that by the same it might be openly shewed, to what ende he came, what his power was, and what properly was to be looked for of hym: for the roote of this name Iesu, is from the Hebrewe verbe m hiphil. which signifieth ſignifieth to ſaue, and in the Hebrew is after an other maner pronounced, namely Iehoſua. But the Euangeliſtes wryting in Greeke, folowed the accuſtomed maner of ſpeache: for the Greeke interpreters as well in Moſes as in other bookes of the olde Teſtament, haue tranſlated it Ieſoun, whereby their ignorance is again reproued, which wreſt & wrythe, rather then deriue this name Ieſu from Iehoua: for they accompt it for a great abſurditie, if that any mortall man ſhould haue this name common with the ſonne of God, and they crie out tragically, that Chriſt will neuer ſuffer his name thus to bee prophaned: As thoughe that it were not well knowne of the contrary, that the name of Ieſu is as common to thoſe menne, as that of Iehoſua. Nowe ſeeing that it ſufficiently appeareth that the Sonne of God, vnder the name of Ieſu is commended vnto vs as the authour of ſaluation, we will liſte more neerely the Aungelles woordes. Hee ſhall ſaue (ſayeth hee) his people from their ſinnes: firſt this is to be obſerued, that they of themſelues were loſt, whome Chriſt was ſent to ſaue: and namely hee is called the Sauiour of the Churche. If they whome G O D hathe ioyned ſo neare vnto hymſelfe, are drowned in death and deſtruction, vntill Chriſt reſtore them life: then what ſhall wee ſaye of ſtraungers, to whome there was neuer anye hope of life appearinge. VVherefore it is to bee concluded, while ſaluation in Chriſte is reiected, that all mankinde is ſubiecte to deſtruction. But the cauſe of deſtruction is with all to bee noted: for the celeſtiall iudge doeth not pronounce the curſſe againſt vs raſhly and wythout a cauſe. Therefore the Aungell witneſſeth that wee periſhed and were holden oppreſſed vnder the miſerable yoke of damnation, for that by our ſinnes wee were eſtraunged from life, whereby the corruption and wickednesſe of our nature is reuealed vnto vs, for if any manne were perfecte and able to liue a righteous life, hee might be without Chriſt the deliuerer: but all, without the exception of any one, haue neede of hys grace. Therefore it foloweth that they are all the ſeruauntes of ſinne, and are deſtitute of the true righteouſneſſe. Heere againe wee gather, what maner and way it is that Chriſt vſeth in ſauing, that is, that hee deliuereth vs from ſinnes.

Furthermore there are two partes of this deliuerance: firſt, in that he by ſacrifice hauing made a full ſatisfaction, geueth vs free pardone and forgeueneſſe, whereby wee are exempted from the guiltineſſe of death, and are reconciled to God. The next, that he ſanctifying vs wyth his ſpirite, chalengeth vs from the tyrannie of Sathan, that wee ſhoulde liue to righteouſneſſe: therefore Chriſt is not acknowledged truely as a Sauiour, vntill that by faith wee learne to embrace the free forgeueneſſe of our ſinnnes, and that we knowe that we are accompted righteous before God, becauſe that we are freed from guiltineſſe: then that we being without all truſt either of our workes or of oure power, aske of him the ſpirite of righteouſneſſe and truthe. The Aungell wythout doubte nameth the Iewes the people of Chriſte, whoſe heade and king he was ordained. But becauſe the Gentiles were ſhortly after to be grafted into the ſtocke of Abraham, this promiſſe of ſaluation is generally ſtretched to all, whiche by faith are vnited to that one bodye of the Churche.

22 All this was done. They verye fondly and childiſhly triſle, whiche affirme affirme that this name of Ieſu was geuen him becauſe he ſhoulde be ealled Immanuel. For Mathew doth not only ſnatch at one onely clauſe, but hee comprehendeth what thing ſo euer was heauenly and diuine in the conception of Chriſte: to that purpoſe alſo appertaineth that note of vniuerſalitie. Now lette vs ſee howe aptly this propheſie of Iſaias is cited, the place is ſufficiently knowen and muche ſpoken of, chap. 7. 14. But the Iewes according to their woonted malice depraue the ſame, althoughe that they therein ſhew no leſſe blinde and fooliſh then a wicked hatred of Chriſt and of the truthe. And many of their Rabbines were growen to that impudencie, that they expounded the ſame of king Ezechias, who was at that time borne, and was about 15. yeare olde. I pray you what maner of libertie of lying is this, that they will rather ouerthrowe the order of nature, and hide a yong manne againe in his mothers wombe, that he mighte be borne at 16. yeares of age, then they will admitte the truthe to come to light? But theſe ennemies of Chriſt are woorthy to be ſtricken of God with the ſpirite of giddineſſe and aſtoniſhment, that they might ſo be beſotted. Others fain vnto themſelues ſome vnknowen ſonne of king Achaz, whome the Prophete foretolde that ſhoulde bee borne. But I demaunde by what right he was called Immanuel, and howe the earth was ſubiecte to his gouernement, who as a priuate man ended his life without honour: for ſhortly after, the ſame Prophet appoynteth (that ſame childe who ſo euer he was) Lorde of the earthe: and they as fooliſhly doe bable, which will that this ſhoulde be ſpoken of the Prophet his ſonne: and truely, the Chriſtian wryters were in this matter very groſſely deceiued, in drawing that propheſie whiche foloweth in the next chapter to Chriſt. The Prophet there ſayeth, that by a viſion he was commaunded to keepe companie with his wife, and the Sonne which he had begotten, had this name geuen him by God, Make haſte and ſpoyle: for in that place is onely noted the vehemencie of the warre, which was at hande with horrible deſtruction, wherby it may eaſily be gathered that theſe matters were altogether diuers. Therefore let vs ſeeke the righte ſenſe of this place, when that at the beſieging of the citie of Ieruſalem, kinge Achaz was afraide, naye hee was almoſte diſmayde with feare: a Prophet was ſente vnto hym, who ſhoulde promiſſe that GOD woulde bee the keeper of the Citie: But ſeeinge a ſimple promiſſe did not comforte hys confuſed minde, the Prophette was commaunded to geue him what ſigne ſo euer hee ſhoulde aske, either in heauen or in earthe. VVhen as that wicked hypocrite coueringe his infidelitie refuſed a ſigne, the Prophette vrged him more hardlye, and at the lengthe ſayd: Yet God ſhall geue vnto you a ſigne, for beholde the Virgine ſhall conceiue and bear a ſonne. &c. we interprete this to be ſpoken of Chriſt in this maner: All you the poſteritie of Dauid, you endeuour as much as in you lieth to blotte out and aboliſh the fauour promiſed vnto you, (for the Prophet expreſly nameth the houſe of Dauid in reproche) yet your vnfaithfulneſſe ſhall neuer bring to paſſe, but that the truth of God ſhall haue the vpper hand: God promiſeth that this citie ſhall be ſafe and free from the ennemies. But if his worde be not ſufficient, he is ready to geue you a token of aſſurance at your pleaſure: you exclude bothe the graces, & you driue them frō you, yet God wil ſtand faſt in the aſſurance of his couenaunt, for the promiſed redeemer ſhall come, in whome God will will perfectly preſent himſelfe vnto his people. The Iewes obiect that Iſaias ſhoulde haue done fooliſhly and abſurdly, if he ſhoulde haue geuen to thoſe men in that age, ſuch a ſigne as ſhould be ſhewed eight hundred yeres after or there about. And heere they very proudly lift vp theſelues, becauſe that this obiection was let ſlippe and buried, either through the vnskilfulneſſe or the careleſneſſe of the Chriſtians. But the anſwere ſeemeth not hard to me, if we obſerue, that the couenaunt of adoption was geuen vnto the Iewes, whereof all the reſt of God his benefites ſhoulde depend. Therfore there was a general promiſe, wherby God had choſen the children of Abraham as a people for himſelfe, vpon the which couenant all the ſpecial promiſſes had their ground. Againe, the Meſsias was the foundation of this couenant: Now we perceiue that the cauſe of the deliueraunce of this citie was, for that it was the ſanctuarie of God, and that the redemer was to come out from thence. This reſpect being taken away Ieruſalem ſhould haue periſhed a 100. times. Now let the godly readers conſider, ſeeing that the king had openly reiected the ſigne offered him from God, was it not conuenient for the Prophet to goe to the Meſsias? as if he ſhuld haue ſayd: Although this age is vnworthy of that deliuerance which I promiſed from the Lord, yet God being mindefull of his couenant, ſhal deliuer this citie from the enemies. That he might therefore ſhewe them no particular ſigne to teſtifie his fauour, this one ought to be enough & more then enough, that the Meſsias ſhould come of the ſtock of Dauid. And it is to be noted, that the Prophet calleth the vnbeleuers to the general couenant, to be a maner of reproofe, becauſe that they did admit no particular ſigne. Now it is ſufficiently proued as I thinke, that when as the gate was ſhut againſt al myracles, it was high time for the Prophet to repaire to Chriſte, that the vnbeleeuers might know that there was no other cauſe of their deliuerance, then the couenant which was made with the fathers. And by this wonderfull maner of teaching, it was the wil of God to teſtifie to all ages, that he therfore continually was ſo merciful to the childrē of Abraham, becauſe he had made a free couenant with them in Chriſt, and not for any of their deſerts. But the Iewes with an other cauil endeuour to ſhift away this our iudgemēt, becauſe that preſently it foloweth in the text of the Prophet: Afore the childe ſhall haue knowledge to eſchew the euil, and to chuſe the good, the land ſhalbe forſaken of 2. kings. &c. Heereof they gather that the birth of the childe is promiſed, which ſhoulde not be long delaied, otherwiſe that ſhould not agree which is ſpoken of the change of the kingdoms ſo hard at hand, which the Prophet declared ſhuld be before the infant had paſſed the one halfe of his age, I anſwer, when as Iſaias had brought him as a ſigne which ſhould be the author of ſaluation, and ſaide that an infant ſhould be borne which ſhoulde be the true Immanuel, or (that I may vſe Paules worde) God manifeſted in the fleſh, 1. Tim. 3. 16. He then generally ſpeaketh of all the infants of that age, for the which matter, there is a ſtrong reaſon at hand. For hauing firſt ſpoken of the generall couenant of God, he retourneth to the eſpeciall promiſſe, for the which cauſe he was ſent: ſo the firſt place which appertaineth to the laſt and full redemption, noteth one certaine childe to whom the title of God ſhoulde only belong: but the latter place which is referred to that ſpeciall benefit which was then at hand, appoynteth the time by the infancie of thē which then were new borne, or ſhortly after were to be borne. Hetherto (except I be deceiued) I haue with ſtrong & ſound reaſons refuted the cauils of the Iewes, wherwith they endeuor to ouerwhelme the glory of Chriſte, leaſt by this propheſie it ſhoulde ſhine forth. Now it reſteth for vs to take away that cauil in the worde gimh. They very frowardly ſhake vp Mathew, who proue that Chriſt ſhould be borne of a virgin, when that the Hebrewe worde doth ſimplie note a yong woman, and they ſcorne vs, as men deceiued with a word wrongfully tranſlated, that we ſhuld beleue that he was conceiued by the holy Ghoſt, whē that the Prophet only ſayth that he was the ſonne of a yōg woman. But firſt therein they ſhewe ouer much pleaſure in contending, while they vrge that worde to be vnderſtode of a yong woman known vnto a man, which the ſcripture attributeth euery where to virgins. The etymologie alſo agreeth with the ſame which ſignifieth a hiding, wherin is noted a maidenly ſhamefaſtneſſe, they bring one place oute of the Prouerbes, chap. 30. 19. which yet helpeth them nothing at all, for there Salomon ſpeaketh of a maid, whom a yong man loueth, but it doeth not preſently follow, that ſhe ſhould be defiled whom a yong man loueth, nay the cōiecture on the other part is more probable. Furthermore, if I ſhuld graunt that which they require of the word, yet the matter it ſelfe conuinceth them and enforceth them to confeſſe that the Prophet ſpeaketh of a wonderful and an vnwonted birth. He crieth that he bringeth them a ſigne from the Lord, and that no commō ſigne but ſuch a one as ſhuld excel al others: if he had only ſaid that a woman ſhoulde beare a childe, then howe ridiculous a thing had it beene for him to make ſo ſolemne a preface? VVe ſee how the Iewes through their owne frowardneſſe, doe not only ſet forth themſelues to be ſcorned at: but alſo the moſt reuerēd myſteries of God. And it is not a vaine argument which is gathered out of the whole text: a damſel ſhal conceiue: why is there no mention made of the man? The prophet commendeth & ſpeaketh of ſome vnaccuſtomed & vnuſuall thing. Furthermore, the commandement of geuing the name to the child, was geuē to the damſel, in the which matter the Prophet alſo ſpeaketh of a thing extraordinarie. for although that the ſcripture declareth that the mothers oft times gaue the names to the childrē: yet they did it by the authoritie of the fathers: therfore the Prophet directing his ſpeach to the damſel, doth in this childe take from the mē what right ſoeuer the order of nature had geuen them. Then let this remaine ſtedfaſt, that the Prophet cōmēdeth this great myracle of God, that al the godly might attētiuely & reuerently conſider the ſame, which the Iewes do vnworthely prophane, applying that to a cōmon maner of cōceiuing which is ſpoken of the ſecrete working and power of the ſpirite.

23. His name Emmanuel. The ſcripture vſeth to ſpeake thus, that God is with vs, when that he is preſent with vs, with his help & with his grace, & exerciſeth the power of his hand to defend vs. But here is the meane expreſſed, wherby God communicateth with men: for without Chriſte we are alienated from God, and by Chriſt we are not only receiued into his fauour, but we are alſo made one with him. And that which Paule teacheth to the Epheſ. 2. 17. that the Iewes vnder the law were nere vnto God, and that there was a deadly hatred betwene him & the Gētiles, meaneth nothing els, but that God in ſhadowes & figures gaue ſignes of his his preſece vnto this people which he had adopted,for that promiſe was in force,God in the middeſt of thee.Deu.6.15.& 7.11. Alſo this is my reſt,Pſal.132.14.But ſeing that familiar coniunction of the people with God,did depend of the mediatour, becauſe that in ſubſtance he was not yet fully reuealed,by ſignes he was ſhadowed.His ſeat and his dwelling place was placed betwene the Cherubims,becauſe that the arke was the figure and the viſible pledge of his glory.But in Chriſte no more a ſhadowed but a perfecte preſence of God was geuen and ſhewed vnto the people:for the which cauſe Paul ſayth to the Col.2.9 that al fulneſſe of the Godhead doth dwel in him bodely. And truely,he could not otherwiſe haue ben a lawfull mediator,except that vnſeparable conioyning of both the natures in him had ioyned men to God: neither is there anye cauſe why the Iewes ſhuld iangle,that the name of God is often trãſferred to thoſe monuments,wherin he witneſſeth his preſence to the faithful: for it cannot be denied but that this name containeth in it a ſecreate contrariety,which cõpareth the preſence of God reueled in Chriſt,with the whole maner of his preſence,as he was ſhewed to the old people before the cõming of Chriſt. If the cauſe of this name begã then in dede to be manifeſt,wnẽ that Chriſt appeared in the fleſh:then it foloweth that in times paſt God was ioyned to the fathers not fully,but only in parte: wherof againe it is concluded,that Chriſt is God manifeſted in the fleſh. And he hath exerciſed the office of a mediator euen frõ the beginning of the world.But becauſe al this did depend of the later reuelation,then as though he were cloathed with a newe perſon, he was woorthely at the length called Immanuel,when as he came foorth as a prieſt,who with the ſacrifice of his owne body ſhuld waſh away the ſins of men,& with the price of his owne bloud ſhuld reconcile them to his father,& to be ſhort, ſhould fulfil al the partes of mans ſaluation.So firſt in this name the diuine maieſtie of Chriſt is to be cõſidered of vs,that it may haue that reuerence of vs which is due to the only & the eternall God.But yet neuertheles that fruit is not to be neglected, which God would therof gather & receiue from vs: for as oft as we behold God & man in the perſon of one Chriſt, we may certainly determine that God poſſeſſeth vs,if by faith we be ioyned vnto Chriſt. That the number is changed in that verbe, they ſhall call, it differeth nothing from thoſe things which I ſpake before,the Prophet ſpeaketh to one virgine, and therefore hee vſeth the ſecond perſone, thou ſhalt call.But for what cauſe this name was firſte vttered,this is the common confeſsion of all the godly,that God gaue him ſelfe in Chriſt to be enioyed of vs.

24. Ioſeph being raiſed. The readineſſe of the obedience which is heere deſcribed, doeth make no whit leſſe to teſtifie the certaintye of the faith of Ioſeph, then it doeth for the praiſe of his obedience, for excepte that euery doubte hadde beene taken away,and his conſcience very well ſetled, he neuer ſo willingly and ſo ſodainly had changed his counſell and taken his wife, through whoſe companie hee lately iudged himſelfe to haue bene defiled, therefore there was ſome note of the power of God imprinted in his dreame,which ſuffered not his minde to wauer. Then folowed the effecte of faith,that the will of God being knowen,he preſently prepared himſelfe to obey it.

25. He knew her not til thee. Vnder the coulour of this place, Heluidius in times paſt moued great troubles in the church, for that he would gather therof, that Mary was a virgin but vnto her firſt birth, & that after ſhe had other children by her husband. The perpetual virginitie of Mary was very ſharply and copiouſly defended by Hierome, let this one thing ſuffice vs, that it can be very fondly and il gathered out of the wordes of the Euangeliſt what became of her after that Chriſt was borne. Hee is called the firſt borne, but not in anye other reſpecte, but that we mighte know that he was borne of a virgine. It is denied that Ioſeph had to do with her, vntill ſhee had brought foorth: this alſo is reſtrained vnto the ſame time, but what folowed after he doeth not declare. It is ſufficiently knowen that ſuch is the vſe of the ſcriptures: and certainly, no man wil at any time mooue queſtion of this matter, except he be curious: and no man wil obſtinately ſtād in the ſame, except he be a contentious brabler.

Luke 2.

Mathew.	Marke.
		1. And it came to paſſe in thoſe dayes, that there came a commaundement from Auguſtus Ceſar, that all the world ſhould be taxed.
		2. This firſt taxing was made, when Cyrenius was gouernour of Syria.
		3. Therefore went all to be taxed, euery man to his owne Citie.
		4. And Ioſeph alſo went vp from Galile out of a citie called Nazareth, into Iudea, vnto the city of Dauid, which it called Bethlehem, (becauſe hee was of the houſe and linage of Dauid)
		5. To be taxed with Marie, that was geuen him to wife, which was with childe.
		6. And ſo it was that while they were there, the daies were accomplished that ſhee ſhoulde bee deliuered.
		7. And ſhee brought foorth her firſte begotten ſonne, and wrapped him in ſwadling cloathes, and laide him in a cratche, becauſe there was no rowme for them in the Inne.

Luke declareth howe it came to paſſe that Chriſt ſhould be borne in the citie of Bethlehem, when that Marye his mother dwelte in an other place, and was now nere vnto her trauel. And firſt he excludeth all humane counſel, when he ſayth that Ioſeph and Mary left their houſe and came thither, that they mighte bee taxed accordinge to their familie and ſtocke. If throughe their owne deuiſe and counſell, they hadde chaunged their place that Mary might be deliuered in Bethlehem, then ſhould we only haue conſidered the perſons themſelues: but now, when that they haue no other purpoſe, but that they might obey the commandement of Auguſtus, we plainely ſee that they as blinde folkes were led by the hande of God thither, where it behoued Chriſt to be borne. And this ſemeth to fal out by fortune, as propliane mē aſcribe vnto fortune al other things which are not gouerned by the determined coūſel of men.

But

But it is not ſufficient ſimplie to beholde what is done, but we muſte alſo remember what was foreſpoken by the Prophet many ages before. And this compariſon ſtall euidently ſhewe, that this taxe was not commaunded by Auguſtus Cæſar, and Ioſeph and Marie remoued not from their houſe, that they might at that time come to Bethlehem, without the wōderful prouidēce of God: ſo we ſee that ſomtime the holy children of God, although they wander in minde, not knowing whether they goe, yet they holde the right way, becauſe the Lord directeth their ſteps: and the wonderful prouidence of God doth no leſſe ſhew it ſelfe in this, that the tyrannical gouernmēt draweth Marie from her houſe that the propheſie might be fulfilled. God by his Prophet had apoynted the place (as we ſhall after ſee) where he would his ſonne ſhould be borne: but if Mary had not by force ben compelled, ſhe had determined to haue bene laid at home. Auguſtus commanded that a taxe ſhould be ſeaſed in Iuda, & that euery man ſhuld geue his name, that thence forth they might pay a yerely tribute, which before they were woont to pay to God. So that which God vſed to require of his people, a prophane manne doeth violently ſnatche vnto himſelfe: and that were as much, as if hee ſhoulde binde the Iewes wholely to himſelfe, and ſhould forbid that after that they ſhould be accompted for the people of God. So when the matter was come to vtter deſpaire, and the Iewes ſeemed for euer to be cut off and alienated from the gouernmēnt of God: God doth not only ſpeedily and beyond the hope of all men, geue a remedy, but he vſeth that wicked tiranny for the redemption: for the gouernor (or whoſoeuer he was that was Cæſar his deputie) while he executed that which was geuen him in commaundement, was the ſecrete meſſenger of God, to fetch Mary to the place apoynted of God. And certainly to this purpoſe tendeth the whole hyſtorie of Luke, that the faithfull might knowe that Chriſt was brought forth from his birth by the hand of God. For this auaileth not a litle for the aſſuraunce of faith, that Marie was ſodenly and againſte her owne minde drawen to Bethlehem, that the redeemer might come frō thence, as he was promiſed.

1. All the world. This Synecdoche ought not to ſeeme hard, ſeeing that it was vſed in diuers places by the Romane wryters: and I doubt not but that this taxe was generall throughout all the prouinces, that it might be the more tollerable and not ſo odious, yet the manner of the tribute might be diuers. That this was the firſt taxing I interpreat, becauſe that the Iewes then as it were throughlye tamed, hadde this newe and vnaccuſtomed yoake laide vppon them. For that whiche ſome ſaye that it was the firſt after that Cyrenius was gouernour of Syria, hath no colour in it: for there was a yearelye tribute, but the deſcription or taxing was not made euery yeare. Therefore this is the meaning, that the Iewes were then more grieuouſly oppreſſed. There is no abſurditie in the diuerſitie of the Gouernours name, while ſome call him Cyrenius, ſome Quirinus or Quirinius: for wee knowe that the Greekes in tranſlating the Latine names, often chaunge ſomewhat in the pronounciation. But there riſeth a farre greater difficultie then this from other where: for Ioſephus in his eighteenth booke of Antiquities the firſt chapter, declareth that when Archelaus was baniſhed to Vienna, Quirinus came as Proconſull, who ſhoulde vnite Iudea to the prouince of Syria.

Alſo it is agreed vppon amongeſt the wryters, that Archelaus raigned nine yeares after the deathe of his father Herode, whereof it is gathered, that there were aboue thirteene yeare betweene the birthe of Chriſte, and this taxing. For almoſte all ſubſcribe to Epiphanius, who affirmeth that Chriſte was borne the xxxiij. yeare of the raigne of Herode, that is foure yeares before his death. This alſo is not a lide doubtfull, that the ſame Ioſephus in the thirde chapter of the 18. booke, ſayeth that this taxing fell in the 37. yeare after the victorie wonne at Actium. If that be true, Auguſtus liued almoſte ſeuen yeares longer at the moſte, ſo eight or nine yeares ſhall be detracted from his age. For it appeareth out of the third after Luke, that he had then raigned but fifteene yeare. But ſeeing it is certaine that the age of Chriſte is better knowen, then that the ſame ought to be called into queſtion, ſo it is not vnlike but that Ioſephus had forgotten himſelfe in this matter, as alſo in manye others. And truely the Chronicles declare that Quirinus was Conſull aboute nineteene yeares before that Antonius was ouercome, and that Auguſtus enioyed the Empire alone, ſo hee was a very olde manne when hee was ſent into the prouince. Obſerue that the ſame Ioſephus numbreth foure gouernours of Iudea in the ſpace of eight yeares, yet he graunteth that the fifte gouerned eleuen yeares: that was Valerius Gratus whome Pontius Pilate ſucceeded. Yet there may be geuen an aunſweare, that they coulde not goe through with the taxe, preſently as it was commaunded, for Ioſephus declareth that Coponius was ſente thether with an hoſte, that he might keepe the Iewes vnder, whereof it is eaſily gathered that through the tumult of the people, this taxe was for a time hindered. And the woordes of Luke doe beare this interpretation, that there came out a commaundement about the time of Chriſtes natiuitie for taxing the people: but the deſcription could not be made, except the eſtate of the kingdom had ben chãged, becauſe that Iudea was brought into a part of the prouince. ſo this latter part was added in ſteade of correction. This firſt deſcription was vnder the gouernour Cyrenius: that is, it was then firſt brought to effecte. Thoughe the queſtion is not yet wholely anſwered. For to what purpoſe ſhuld the people be taxed, whē that Herode gouerned Iudea, who paide no tribute to the Romane Empire. I anſwere there is no abſurditie in the matter, if Auguſtus (that hee might accuſtome the Iewes to the yoke, whoſe ſtubbernes was ſufficiently knowen) would alſo haue them taxed vnder Herode: and the peculiar kingdome of Herode was no hinderaunce but that the Iewes in the name of a tribute might pay ſomewhat for euery of their heades to the Romane Empire: for Herode only raigned by entreatie, and almoſte ſeruilely. I knowe not from whence Euſebius tooke that which hee ſayeth, that this taxing was decreed by the conſent of the Senate.

7. There was no roume for them in the Inne. Heere we ſee not only howe poore Ioſeph was, but alſo how ſharpe that tyrannie was, that no excuſe is receiued, but that Ioſephe is compelled in that troubleſome time to bring his wife neare vnto her trauel, with him. And it is to be ſuppoſed that they which came of the kingly ſtocke were more ſharply and more reprochefully handeled then the reſt. Ioſeph was not ſo blockiſhe, but that hee was carefull to prouide for the trauell of his wife, and ſo hee woulde willingly haue eſchewyed this neceſsitie.

But

But becauſe he coulde not,enforced,he geueth place,and commendeth himſelfe to God. Yet wee ſee what a beginning of life the Sonne of God hadde, and in what place and ſwadling clowtes he was entertained. And the maner of his birthe was ſuche, becauſe that to this ende hee tooke our fleſh,that for our ſakes he might humble himſelfe:therefore he was caſt out into a ſtable,and laide in a maunger,and hadde the roumthe of a gueſt denied him amongſte menne, that hee mighte open heauen for vs, not onely as gueſtwiſe, but as an eternall kingdom and an enheritaunce, and that the Aungelles ſhoulde admitte vs into their felowſhippe.

Luke 2.

Matthew.	Marke.
		8. And there were in the ſame coūtry ſhepheardes, abidīg in the fielde, and keeping watche by night becauſe of their flocke.
		9. And loe, the Aungell of the Lorde came vppon them, and the glory of the Lord ſhone aboute them, and they were ſore afraide.
		10. Then the Aungell ſayde vnto them, Bee not afraide: for beholde,I bring you tidings of great ioy that ſhall be to all the people:
		11. That is, that vnto you is borne this daye, in the Citie of Dauid a Sauiour, whiche is Chriſte the Lorde.
		12. And this ſhall be a ſigne to you, yee ſhall finde the childe ſwadled,and laide in a cratche.
		13. And ſtraight way therewas with the Angel a multitude of heauenlye ſouldiours praiſinge God, and ſaying :
		14. Glorye bee to God on highe,and peace in earth, towardes men good will.

8. And there were ſhepheardes. It ſhoud haue bene in vaine to haue Chriſt borne in Bethlehem,except it were knowne to the world. Yet the maner which Luke deſcribeth ſemeth vnlikely in the iudgment of men. Firſt; Chriſt is reuealed but to a few witneſſes, and that in the darke night. Then,when God had at hand many both honourable and excellent witneſſes, which being put by, he chuſe only ſheapherds, that is, menne contemned and of no eſtimation. The reaſon and wiſedome of fleſh muſt of neceſsitie heere become fooliſh, and lette vs confeſſe,that the fooliſhneſſe of God excelleth what ſoeuer is,or ſeemeth to be wiſe in this world. 1. Cor. 1. 25. But this alſo was a part of the humbling of him,not that any thing of the glory of Chriſte was by this taken away,but onely that he ſhoulde lie hidde for a time. Furthermore, as Paule, 1. Cor. 2. 4. admoniſheth, that the Goſpell is contemptible according to the fleſh, that our faith mighte be grounded in the power of the ſpirite,and not in high woordes of mannes wiſedome,or in any glory of the worlde: So God from the beginning laide vp this incomparable treaſure in fraile veſſelles,that the obedience of our faith mighte the better be prooued.

VVherfore if we deſire to come to Chriſt, let it not grieue vs, to followe them whome the Lord to the ouerthrowing of the pride of the world, hath taken as maſters euen out of the filth of the beaſtes.

9. The Angell of the Lorde came. He ſayeth, that the glory of the Lorde ſhone about the ſhepheards, wherby they might know the Angell. For it ſhould haue little auailed to haue that tolde them of the Angel, which is reported by Luke, except God by ſome vilible ſigne had witneſſed that that came from him which they heard. Therefore the Angell appeared vnto them not in any common ſhape, or without dignitie, but adorned with a brightneſſe of heauenly glory, which ſhoulde mooue the mindes of the ſhepheards, that they might receiue the word which was brought them no otherwiſe, then as oute of the mouthe of God himſelfe. From thence came that feare, whereof Luke preſently ſpeaketh, whereby God vſeth to humble the hearts of men, that he might gette reuerence to hys woorde, as I haue before declared.

10. Be not afraide. This exhortation tendeth to the taking away and lightening of the feare: for although it be profitable that the mindes of menne ſhoulde be ſtricken with feare, that they mighte learne to geue God his honour, yet together with it they haue neede of comforte, leaſt they ſhould be vtterly ouerwhelmed. For it can not be, but that the maieſtie of God ſhould ſwalowe vppe the whole world, if the terrour that it hath in it, were not mixed with ſome ſweeteneſſe. Therefore the reprobate fall downe halfe deade, becauſe hee appeareth to them but as a iudge: but the Angel that he might refreſh the mindes of the ſhepheards, teſtifieth that he was ſent for an other ende: namely, that he might declare the mercy of God. For this voyce doeth not onely raiſe vppe thoſe menne that are fallen, but reſtoreth thoſe that are loſt, and calleth backe from death to life, where they heare that God is mercifull to them. But the Angell ſayeth that he bringeth tidings of great ioy, then hee addeth the cauſe or matter of this ioy, that there is a Sauiour borne. By which woordes we are firſt taughte, that vntill menne haue peace with God, and that they be reconciſed by the grace of Chriſt, what ioy ſoeuer they conceiue, is but vaine and deceitfull. The wicked ones do often triumph with a drunken and a madde mirth: but except there be a meane and a pacifier betweene God and them, of neceſsitie they muſt be miſerablye tormented with blinde ſtinges of their conſcience. Furthermore, although that flatteringly and daintily they nouriſh vppe themſelues in delightes, yet their pleaſures are ſo many torments to them. This then is the beginning of a perfecte ioy, to feele the fatherly loue of God towardes vs, who onely geueth peace to our mindes: and this is the ioy in the holy Ghoſt, wherein Paule ſayeth that the kingdome of God doeth conſiſt, Rom. 14. 17. And that Epithyte of Great is therefore added, that we might not onely knowe that we ſhould eſpecially ioy in our ſaluation offered vs in Chriſt: but that the greatneſſe of this good is ſuch and ſo vnmeaſurable, that it woorthily recompenceth all the ſorowes, griefs and troubles of this preſent life. VVherefore let vs learne ſo to be ſatiſfied with this one Chriſt, that the feeling of his grace might exceede all the troubles of the fleſh, yea and at the length aboliſh the ſame. That ſhall be to all the people. Although the Angell ſpeaketh to the ſhepheards onely, yet he declareth that this meſſage of ſaluation which he bringeth them, reacheth further,ſo that not they onely ſhould heare it priuately, but others alſo ſhoulde heare the ſame. Furthermore obſerue that this ioye is ſayd to be common to al people,becauſe it was generally offered to all. For God promiſed Chriſt,not to one,or to other,but to all the ſeede of Abraham.

And that the Iewes,for the moſte parte, were depriued of that ioye, which belonged vnto them,was becauſe of their vnbeliefe:as at this day God calleth generally all to ſaluation by the Goſpell,but the vnthankfulneſſe of the world bringeth to paſſe,that few inioy this grace equallye profered to all. Therefore this ioy being included amongſt a few, is yet called common in reſpect of God. But although the Angel ſpeaketh onely of the elect people,yet now that the wall is broken downe, the ſame meſſage belongeth to al mankinde:for Chriſt preacheth peace not only to them which are nere:but alſo to them that are farre off;and no leſſe vnto ſtraungers,then to them that are of the houſhold. Eph. 2. 17. But becauſe that vntil the comming of Chriſt this couenaunt was peculier with the Iewes, therefore the Angell ſeperateth them from all other nations.

11. Vnto you is borne this day. Here is expreſſed the cauſe of the ioy, as euen now wee declared,that is, becauſe the redeemer, which in tymes paſt was promiſed,is borne:who ſhould reſtore the Church of God into his eſtate. And the Angell doth not ſpeake, as of a thing vtterly vnknown,but he taketh the beginning of his meſſage out of the law & the Prophets:becauſe that it had beene in vaine for him to haue vſed this manner of ſpeech to the Gentiles and prophane men. Chriſt the Lord to you is borne a Sauiour:that ſame is alſo the cauſe why hee maketh mention that hee was borne in the citie of Dauid, which had beene in vaine,but for the renuing of the remembrance of thoſe promiſſes,which were euery where known and famous amongſt the Iewes. To be ſhort, the Angell applyeth his ſpeech to his hearers, which were not altogether ignoraunt of the promiſed redemption. And hee ioyneth the Goſpell with the doctrine of the law and the Prophets,as that which ſpringeth out of that fountaine. But ſeeing that Soter expreſſeth more amongſt the Greekes,as Cicero witneſſeth, Verrina 4. 109. then Seruator dooth amongſt the Lattins: and that there is not extant a latine word, which anſwereth vnto the ſame: I haue thoght it better to ſpeake barbarouſly, then to diminiſh any thing from the power of Chriſt: And I doubt not but that the common interpreter, and the olde doctours of the Church, had the ſame purpoſe: therfore is Chriſt called Saluator, as he which bringeth full ſaluation. And alſo this pronowne to yor, hath a great Emphaſis: for it ſhould but ſmally auayle to heare that a Sauiour was borne,except that euery man might apply it,as that he was borne to him. In this manner ſpeaketh Iſaias, chap. 9. 6. A childe is borne to vs, a ſonne is giuen to vs. So alſo ſaieth Zacharyas 9. 9. Behold thy king commeth vnto thee,poore.

12. And this shalbe a ſigne vnto you,you shal finde the childe ſwadled. The Angel anſwereth to that, whereat the Shepheardes might haue taken offence, and whereby their faith might haue bene hindered: for what a mockery is it,to ſee him layd in a ſtall,which was ſent from God,as the king and onely Sauiour. Therefore,leaſt this vile & abiect eſtat of Chriſt,ſhould feare the Shepheardes from faith in Chriſt, the Angell foretelleth them what they ſhall ſee. And this order (which to the iudgement of manne may ſeeme abſurde, and almoſt ridiculous) doth the Lord dayly vſe towardes vs. For by the voice of the Ghoſpell ſent downe from heauen hee doth commaund vs to imbrace Chriſt crucified, and he ſetteth ſignes in earthly and tranſitorie elements, which might lift vs into the glory of bleſſed immortalitie: ſo hee promiſing vs a ſpiritual righteouſnes, ſetteth a litle water before our eies, and he ſealeth eternall righteouſnes to our ſoule by a ſmall taſte of bread and wine. If that the ſtable offend not the ſhepheards, and that they neuertheleſſe ſeeke their ſaluatiō from Chriſt, and that they ſubmit themſelues vnder the gouernment of him, being yet but an infant, there ought no ſigne, be it neuer ſo contemptible darken his glory with vs: but at the leaſt that wee might humbly worſhip him, ſith that he is aſcended into heauen, & ſitteth at the right hand of the father.

13. And ſtreight way there was a multitude. Although that in one Angel there was giuen a ſhew of Gods glory: yet GOD would that his ſonne ſhould be more royally adorned, and that aſwell for the confirming of vs, as of the ſhepheardes. The credit of two or three witneſſes is ſufficient amongſt men to take away a doubt: but the heauenly hoſt with one conſent and with one voyce giue teſtimonie to the ſonne of God. Then what a peruerſneſſe were it, not to credit the generall teſtimonie of the Angelles, whereby our ſaluation in Chriſt is witneſſed? whereby we gather how deteſtable this incredulitie is vnto God, which diſturbeth this ſweete harmonie both of heauen and earth? Againe, we are to be condemned of more then beaſtly blockiſſnes, if this ſong (which the Angels with one conſent haue ſong that they in wordes might beginne to vs) doe not kindle in vs a fayth and an endeuour to praiſe God. Adde this alſo, that the Lord would by this example of heauenly melody, cōmend vnto vs the vnitie of faith, and exhorte vs with one conſent to ſing his praiſes vpon the earth.

14. Glory in the hygheſt. The Angels begin with thanks giuing, or with the praiſes of God, becauſe that the ſcripture euery wher teachethvs that we are redeemed frō death, to this end, that aſwell in tongueas in works we might teſtifie our thankfulnes to God. Let vs therefore remēber that this is the finall cauſe wherfore God reconciled vs to himſelfe by his only begottē ſonne, that the riches of his grace & great mercie being made knowne, his name might be glorified. And at this day how much euery one of vs is ſtrengthened through the knowledge of grace to ſet forth the glory of God, ſo much hath he profited in the faith of Chriſt: yea as oft as mention is made of our ſaluation, we muſt know that there is as it were a ſigne giuen vs, to ſtirre vs vp to giuing of thankes and prayſes vnto God. In earth peace. This is the more vſuall reading, that then the third clauſe may follow, towardes men goodwill. And although for the ſum of the matter there is no great difference, which of the two thou readeſt: Yet the other interpretatiō ſeemeth to agree better, becauſe it is not to be douted, but that theſe two clauſes agree together, Glory to God on high, and in earth peace: but except thou oppoſeſt men vnto god, it cannot be a ful Antitheſis. Peraduenture this prepoſition En deceaued the interpreters: becauſe that the ſenſe of the words was darke, to ſay peace to be in men. But ſeeing that in many places of the ſcripture this prepoſitiō is ſuperfluous,

there is no cause why it should hinder vs. Yet if any had rather place it in the latter clause, the same sense shall still remaine, as I will presently declare. Now it is to be seene what the Angels meane by this word peace: certenly they speak not of the outward peace, which men maintaine betweene thēselues, but he saieth that the earth is appeased, when men are reconciled to God, & are quiet within in their minds. We know that we are borne the children of wrath, and by nature that wee are enemies to God; so that it is then necessary that we should be vexed with horrible disquietnes, so long as we finde God offended with vs: therefore a short and an euident definition of peace is to bee gathered of the contraries, that is of the wrath of GOD, and the terrour of death, and so there is a dubble relation to be had: the one to God, the other to men, because that we haue then peace with God, and he blotting out our guiltines: & not imputing our sinnes, beginneth to be mercifull vnto vs: and we resting in his fatherly loue; do call vpon him with a sure faith, & without feare we reioyce in that saluation promised vs. And although that in Iob 7.1. the life of man vpon earth is called a continual warfare, and the thing it self declareth that there is nothing more troublesome then our estate, while we remaine here in the world, yet the Aungelles expressly place peace on the earth, that wee might know that no troubles can hinder vs, but that we enioying the grace of Christ, might haue setled & quiet minds. therfore let vs remēber that there is a seat of peace placed euē in the midst of the stormes of tēptations, amongst diuers dangers, amongst violēt tēpests, in the middest of battels & feares, least our faith being driuen back with any of these engines, should wauer or waxe faint. Good will. I know not how it came to passe, that it was put in the genetiue case: certeinlye the cōmon translation, which hath vnto men of goodwil, ought not onely to be forsaken as adulterous, but because it corrupteth the whole sense. Yet many are deceaued also, which reading it in the nominatiue case, good will doe referre the same to men, as if it were an exhortation to them to embrace the grace of Christ. I graunt that it is no otherwise confirmed, then as God offereth his peace vnto vs, except that we receiue the same. But seeing that Eudokia is taken in euery place in the scriptures, for that which the Hebrewes call disun, the old interpreter translated it Beneplacitum. This place is very yl expounded of the accepting of grace. But that which the Angels speak of, doth rather shew the fountaine of peace, that we might know that it is a free gift, & to flow out of the meere mercy of god. If you please to read it Good will in men, it shal not be amisse in respect of the sense: for in this maner of speach the cause of the peace shal also be noted: that is, that God freely accepteth men into his fauour, with whō he before had warlik or deadly discord. If thou wilt read peace of goodwil, for willing, I wil not be against this exposition: yet that is the plainest to haue Eudokian put appositiuely, that we might know from whēce peace commeth to vs.

Luke. 2.

Matthew. | Marke.

15. And it came to passe, when the Angelles were gone awaye from them into heauen, that the Shepheardes said one to another, let vs go then vnto Bethlehem, and see this thing that is come to passe, which the Lord hath shewed vnto vs.

16. So they came with hast, and founde both

Mary

Mary and Ioſeph, and the babe layd in the eratch.

17. And when they had ſeene it, they publiſhed abroad the thing, which was tolde them of that childe.

18. And all that hearde it wondred at the thinges, which were tolde them of the Shepheards.

19. But mary kept all theſe ſayinges, and pondred them in her heart.

20. And the Shepheardes returned, glorifiing and praiſing God, for all that they had heard and ſeene, as it was ſpoken vnto them.

21. And when the eight dayes were accompliſhed, that they ſhould circumcife the child, his name was then called Ieſus, which was ſo named of the Angel, before he was conceaued in the wombe.

15. After the Angelles were gone away. Here is the obedience of the Shepheardes deſcribed vnto vs: for when the Lord had appoynted them as witneſſes of his ſonne to all the world, hee effectually ſpake to them by the Angelles, leaſt that ſhould be forgotten, which was tolde them. It was not plainely and by worde commaunded them, that they ſhoulde come to Bethlehem: but becauſe that they ſufficiently vnderſtoode that the counſell of God was ſo, they make haſte to Chriſte, as at this daye, when we know that Chriſte is ſhewed vnto vs, to this ende, that our heartes by faith might come vnto him, our loytering cannot bee excuſed.

And Luke doth not in vaine declare that the Shepheards tooke counſell of their iourney aſſoone as the Angels were departed, leaſt we ſuffer (as many vſe) the word of God to vaniſh away with the ſound, but that it may take liuely rootes in vs, and thereby that it may bring foorth his fruite, when it hath ceaſed to ſound in our eares. Furthermore, it is to be noted, that the Shepheardes doe mutually exhort one an other: for it is not ſufficient for euery one of them to looke to themſelues, excepte that alſo there be vſed mutuall exhortations. Luke amplifieth the praiſe of their obedience, when he ſaith that they made haſte, euen as a propteneſſe of fayth is alſo required of vs. VVhich the Lord hath shewed vnto vs. Very skilfully and rightly doe they aſcribe that to God, which they heard not but from the Angel, for, whome they acknowledge as the miniſter of God; they alſo thinke worthy of that auctoritie, as if he had put on the perſon of the Lord. Therefore for this cauſe doth the Lord call vs back often vnto himſelfe, leaſt the maieſtie of his word ſhould become of no eſtimation in the ſight of men. Againe wee ſee here, that they accompt it to bee an offence in them to neglecte that treaſure ſhewed them of the Lorde: for of that knowledge reuealed to them, they argue that they muſt go to Bathlehem, that they may ſee. And ſo it behooueth euery one of vs, according to the meaſure of his faith and vnderſtanding to be prepared to follow whether as God calleth.

16. They found Mary. That truely was an vnſeemely ſight, and by that onely they might haue beene driuen from Chriſte: for what is there more vnlikely, then to beleeue that hee ſhould be king of all the people, who who was not accompted worthy of a meane place among the common people? and to hope for the reſtitution and ſaluation of the kingdome from him, who for his want & pouertie was throwen out into a ſtable? Yet Luke writeth that none of theſe thinges hindred the Shepheardes, but that with great admiration they prayſed God: namely becauſe that the glory of God was throughly fixed in their eies, and the reuerence of his word printed in their mindes, that whatſoeuer they motte with either infamous or contemptible in Chriſt, they with the height of their fayth doe eaſily paſſe ouer the ſame. Neither is there any other cauſe why euery of thoſe ſmall offences doe either hinder or turne our faith from the right courſe: but becauſe that we taking ſmall hold vpon God, are eaſily drawne hether and thither. For if this one cogitation poſſeſſed all our ſenſes, that wee haue a certaine and a faythfull witneſſe from heauen, it were a defence ſtrong and ſtable enough againſt all kinde of temptations, and it ſhoulde well enough fortifie vs againſt all offences.

17. They published abroad the thing which was telde them. Luke commendeth the fayth of the Shepheardes, in that they deliuered ſincerely through their handes, that which they receiued from the Lord: and it is profitable that the ſame ſhould be witneſſed for all our ſakes, that they might be, as ſecond Angelles for the confirming of our fayth. Againe, Luke teacheth that they reported that which they had heard not without profit. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Lord gaue effect to their word, leaſt it ſhould be mocked or deſpiſed. For the eſtat of the men diſcredited the matter, and the matter it ſelfe might ſeeme to be but fabulous. But the Lorde ſuffereth not thoſe thinges to bee in vaine, which hee enioyneth them. And although this manner of working ſmally pleaſeth the iudgement of men, that the Lordes will is that his word ſhould bee heard of poore and meane men: yet it is approoued of God himſelfe, and vſed partly to humble the pride of fleſh, and partely to prooue the obedience of the fayth: but that al men meruaile, and no manne mooueth his foote, that hee might come to Chriſte: hereof it may be gathered, that they hearing of the power of God were amaſed, not being ſtriken with any earneſt affection of the heart: wherefore this word was not ſo much ſpread abroad for their ſaluation, as that the ignoraunce of all the people might be inexcuſable.

19. Mary kept all thoſe. The diligence of Marye in conſidering the workes of God is propoſed to vs for two cauſes. Firſt, that wee might know that the keeping of this treaſure was layde vp in her heart, that, that which ſhee had layd vp with her, ſhee might publiſh the ſame to others in time conuenient. Next, that all the godly might haue an example which they might followe. For if wee be wiſe, this ought to bee the eſpeciall trauell, and the chiefe ſtudie of our life, that wee might be diligent to conſider the workes of God, which ſhould buylde vp our faith. Furthermore, the word conſerue is referred to the memorie: and Symballein doth elſe ſignifie to conferre, as to make vp one perfect body, by gathering all thinges together, which agreed amongſt themſelues to prooue the glory of Chriſte. And Mary could not wiſely conſider the value of all thinges together, but by conferring ſome thinges with others.

20. Glorifying and praiſing of God. This alſo appertaineth to the common

vſe of our faith, that the Shepheardes might certeinely know it to be the work of god. And the earneſt glorifying of God which is praiſed in thē, is a certeine ſecrete reproofe of our ſluggiſhneſſe, or rather of vnthankfulneſſe: for if the ſwathing cloutes of Chriſt ſo much preuailed amōgſt them, that they could riſe out of the ſtable and cratch euen vnto heauen: howe much more effectuall ought the death and reſurrection of Chriſt be with vs, that we might be lifted vp to God. For Chriſt was not onely lift vp from the earth, that he might draw al things after him: but he ſitteth at the right hand of the father, that we which are pilgrims in this world, might with our whole hearte meditate of the heauenlye life. But Luk declareth the true nature of godlines, whē he ſaith that the witneſſe of the Angell was in ſteede of a rule to the Shepheardes, to the which they directed all thinges. For then is faith rightly holpe by the workes of God, if it directeth al thinges to that purpoſe, that the trueth of God, which is reuealed in his word may more clearely ſhine forth.

21. That the childe ſhould be circumciſed. That which generally is to be cōſidered of circumciſion, let the readers fetch out of Ge. 17. 10. It ſhal be ſufficient at this time briefly to touch thoſe things, which beelong to the perſon of Chriſt. God would that his ſonne ſhould be circumciſed, that he might be ſubiect to the lawe: for circumciſion was a ſolempne ſigne, wherewith the Iewes were initiated into the obſeruation of the lawe. Paule declareth the end, Gal. 4. 4. when he ſaith that he was made vnder the law, that he might redeeme them which were vnder the law. Therfore Chriſt taking circumciſion profeſſed himſelf a ſeruaunt of the law, that he might obtaine libertie for vs. And ſo by this meane not onelye the ſeruitude of the lawe was abolyſhed by him: but the ſhadow of the ceremonie was applyed to his ſound and perfect bodye, that it might ſoone take an end. For although the abrogating of it depended of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, yet this was a certaine beginning of the ſame, that the ſonne of god ſuffered himſelfe to be circūciſed. His name was then called Ieſus. This place alſo witneſſeth, that it was a manner receiued amongſt the Iewes, that on the day of circumciſion, they gaue names to their children, as we at this day vſe to doe at baptiſme. But the Euangeliſte noteth two thinges, that the name of Ieſu was not giuen vnto the ſonne of God, raſhely or for the pleaſure of men, but that the Angel brought it from heauen: Thē that Ioſeph & Mary obeyed the cōmandement of God: & this is the conſent of our faith with the word of God, that that word going before, wee ſhould ſpeake to the ſame, and our faith ſhoulde anſwere to his promiſes. Eſpeciallye Luke commendeth vnto vs the order of publiſhing of the word, when hee ſaieth that ſaluation was teſtified by the mouth of men, which was promiſed by the Angell from aboue through the grace of Chriſt.

1. VVhen Ieſus then was borne at Bethlehem in Iudea, in the dayes of Herode the king: beholde there came wiſe men from the Eaſt to Ieruſalem,

and

and are come to worship him.

3. VVhen king Herod heard this, hee was troubled, and all Ieruſalem with him:

4. And gathering togeather all the chiefe Prieſtes and Scribes of the people, he asked of them where Chriſt should be borne.

5. And they sayde vnto him, at Bethlehem in Iudea: for ſo it is written by the Prophet:

6. And thou Bethlehem in the lande of Iuda art not the leaſt among the princes of Iuda: for out of thee shall come the gouernour, that shal feede my people Iſrael.

1. VVhen Ieſus was then borne. Matthew conceaſeth the cauſe whye Chriſt was borne at Bethlehem: but the ſpirit of God, who had appointed the Euangeliſtes as his Scribes, ſeemeth aduiſedly ſo to moderate their ſtile, that with moſt notable conſent, they al write one and the ſame hiſtorie, though it be in diuers manners: that thereby the trueth of God might be the more certeine and euident, when as it was openly manifeſt, that his witneſſes did not purpoſely before conſent to ſpeake, but euery one ſeparate from other, nor hauing one reſpecte of an other, did ſimply and frecly write that, which the ſpirite taught them.

Furthermore, here is a hiſtorie declared worthy to be remembred, that God fetched wiſemen out of Chaldea or Perſia, which ſhould come into Iudea to worſhip Chriſt, where hee lay without honour, and contemned. Truely a wonderfull counſell of God, that God would his Sonne ſhould come forth into the world vnder this obſcure humilitie: yet hee excellently adorned him, as with phraſes; ſo with other tokens, leaſt any thing for the triall of our faith had beene wanting from his diuine maieſtie: yet here is to be noted a notable harmonie of thinges ſeeming to be repugnant. The ſtarre from heauen declareth him to be a king, whoſe throane is the beaſtes ſtall, becauſe that hee is denied a place euen amõgſt the common ſorte of men. His maieſtie ſhineth in the Eaſt, which not onely appeareth not in Iudea, but is alſo diſiled with many reproches. To what purpoſe is this: namely, the heauenly fathers will was to appoynt that the ſtarre and the wiſemen ſhould lead vs the right way to his ſonne: but yet hee ſtripped him naked of all earthly honour, that we might know his kingdome to be ſpirituall. VVherefore this ſtorie is not onely profitable, becauſe that God brought theſe wiſemen to his ſonne, as the firſt fruites of the Gentiles: but alſo becauſe hee woulde ſet forth the kingdome of his ſonne, as with the praiſe of them, ſo of the ſtarre for the helpe of our fayth, leaſt the wicked and malitious diſpite of his own nation, ſhould cauſe him to be deſpiſed of vs.

It is ſufficiently knowne, that the Aſtrologers and Philoſophers with the Perſeans & the Chaldeans were called Mag. (i. wiſemen:) Therfore is is eaſily to be coniectured that theſe came out of Perſia. Furthermore how many they were in number, it is better not to know, becauſe the Euangeliſte doth not expreſſe it, then raſhly to affiirme for certaine, that which is doubtfull.

A childiſh errour lead the Papiſtes, that they imagined them to be three, becauſe Matthew ſaith that they offered gold, franckencenſe and mirrh: as if hee ſhould diſtinctly aſsigne a proper office to euery of them, and that rather hee ſhould not declare that theſe three thinges were generally offered by them. VVhoſoeuer that old writer was, whoſe vnperfecte commentarie vppon Matthew beareth the name of Chriſoſtome, and is accompted amongſt Chriſoſtomes workes, ſaith that they were fourteene: which hath no more colour, except that peraduenture it came by tradition of the fathers, yet that ſame alſo hath no aſſuraunce. But the Papiſtes are more then ridiculous, which imagined to themſelues that they were kinges, becauſe they did read that beefore ſayde Pſal. 72. 10. That the kinges of Tharſis, of the Iles and of Saba ſhould come, which ſhould offer giftes to the Lord: Verily they are wiſe workemen, who that they might giue a newe ſhape to men, they haue begun at the turning of the worlde: for of the South and VVeſt they haue made the Eaſt.

And it is not to be doubted, but that by the iuſt reuenge of God, they were ſo amaſed, that their groſſe ignoraunce might be laid open to the reproofe of al men, who made no religion to corrupt the trueth of God, and to turne the ſame into a lye. But here is firſt demaunded, whether this ſtarre was one of the number of them, which the Lord in the beeginning created, for the garniſhing of heauen: then whether the knowledge of Aſtrologie brought theſe wiſe men hether, that thereby in mind they conceaued the birth of Chriſt. Although we may not contentiouſly ſtriue of theſe matters, yet it is to be gathered out of the words of Matthew, that it was not a naturall ſtarre, but extraordinary: for it was not by the courſe of nature, that at certeine times it vaniſhed away, and after ſodenly ſhone againe: then that it went a ſtreight courſe towardes Bethlehem, and at the length that it ſtoode fixed ouer the houſe wherein Chriſt was, none of which thinges agreeth to naturall ſtars. It is more probable that it was like to a Comet, and that it was ſeene in the ayre, rather then in heauen. And it is no abſurditie, that Matthew ſpeaking according to the manner of the people improperly called it a ſtarre: hereof is almoſt gathered an anſwere of the ſecond queſtion. For ſeeing it is certaine, that Aſtrologie is contained within the boundes of nature, the wiſe men could not by the onely direction of the ſame haue come to Chriſt: therefore it behoued them to be holpen by a ſecrete reuelation of the ſpirite: yet I deny not but that they had ſome beginning or ſeede out of the arte: but I ſay it was neceſſary that the ſame ſhoulde be holp with ſome new and extraordinary reuelation, leaſt it ſhould be in vaine or vaniſh away.

2. VVhere is hee that is borne king? That ſome interpreters thinke a king borne, to be ſecretely oppoſed againſt a king made or created, ſeemeth to me to be too ſubtill: therefore I take it more ſimplye that the wiſe men meane that this king was lately borne, and remaineth yet an infant, that they might make a difference betweene him and a king growen in age, and holding the gouernment of the people: for preſently they ſay, that they were mooued neither with the fame of his actes, or with his preſent greatneſſe openlye knowne, but by a diuination from heauen, of a thing that was to come. But ſeeing that the ſight of the ſtarre was ſo effectuall feſtuall with the wiſemen, woe be to our ſluggiſhnes, which ſo coldely ſeeke Chriſt the king reuealed vnto vs.

VVe come to worship him. The ſtarre was ſhewed to this end, that it might draw the wiſemen into Iudea, that they might be witneſſes and proclaimers of the new king. But for that which appertaineth to them, they came not to giue any godly worſhip to Chriſt, as is due to the ſonne of God, but after the Perſian manner, they would ſalute him as a moſte excellent king. For it is not probable that they thought more of him, then that hee ſhould be endued with ſingular power and dignitie, that hee might worthilye turne all men into admiration and reuerence of him. For it may be, that they would before hand gette his fauour, that they might haue him friendlye and fauourable to them: If peraduenture it came to paſſe, that hee obtained the gouernment of the Eaſt.

3. Herod the king was troubled. Herod was not ignoraunt of the propheſies, wherein the Iewes had a king promiſed them, who ſhould reſtore their afflicted and ouerthrowne conditions into a happy eſtate. For hee had from a childe liued in that kingdome, and had perfectly learned all their matters. Adde alſo that this rumour was ſo ſpread, that it could not be vnknowne to the people which dwelt neere about them: yet hee is troubled as it were with a newe matter, vnheard of beefore: that is, becauſe hee diſtruſting God and his promiſſes, thought it but vaine to hope for a redeemer, eſpecially ſeeing he imagined (as proud men vſe to doe) with a fooliſh confidence, that he had eſtabliſhed the kingdome to him and to his. But ſeeing he being dronken in his own felicitie, had before in his ſecuritie contemned the propheſies, now is he ſodenly feared with the remembraunce of them. For he ſhould not ſo much haue beene mooued with the ſimple ſpeach of the wiſemen, if the oracles or propheſies had not come into his minde, which before ſeemed to be as toies, & of no importaunce: ſo the Lord, after he hath ſuffered the vnbeleeuers to ſleepe, ſodenly he ſhaketh them out of their reſt. That which Matthewe ſaieth, that Ieruſalem alſo was troubled, may be expounded two waies: either that with the ſodein noueltie of the matter, the citizens were tumultuouſly rayſed vp, as if that they very deſirouſly receiued the ioyfull meſſage of the king that was borne then: or that they being accuſtomed to miſchiefes, and through long pacience being couered with vnſenſibleneſſe, feared a chaunge, leaſt that greater calamitie ſhould riſe therof. For they were ſo worne and almoſt conſumed with continuall wars, that a miſerable and cruell ſeruitude ioyned with peace, was not onely tollerable, but was alſo to be wiſhed for of them: whereby it is to be perceiued how yll they had profited vnder the whippes of God. For they were ſo benummed with amaſednes, that the promiſed redemption and ſaluation after a ſort ſtanck before them. And I doubt not but that Matthewe would haue their vnthankfulnes noted: for that they beeing tired with a wearines of euils, had throwne away the hope and deſire of grace promiſed them.

4. Gathering together the chiefe Prieſtes. Although there was no ſpeake at all of Chriſt in Herodes court, yet aſſoone as the wiſe men had made mention of a king, the propheſies came into their minde, which beefore were forgotten: ſo Herod preſently conie ctureth, this king, for whom the wiſemen ſeek, to be that Meſsias in times paſt promiſed frō the lord.

And here againe it appeareth, that Herod was woonderfully affeard, while that he ſo carefully enquireth; and no meruaile: for ſeeing that al tyrantes are fearefull, and that their owne crueltie ſtriks more feare into themſelues, then it doth vnto others: It behoueth Herod to be affraid aboue all other, as one that perceiued him ſelfe to reigne againſt the lord. Furthermore, this new inquiſitiō declareth how groſſe the contēpt of Chriſt was before the comming of the wiſemen. That the Scribes and high Prieſtes doe ſincerely aunſweare out of the ſcripture (who yet afterwardes furiouſly endeuoured to corrupt the whole ſcripture, leaſt they ſhould giue any teſtimonie or credit to Chriſte) is therefore done, becauſe that as yet Chriſt had not troubled them with his Goſpell; ſo all the wicked ones doe eaſily ſubſcribe to God in all generall principles: but when the trueth of God dooth vrge them neerer, then they vomit forth the poyſon of their contumacie: of the which thing at this daye wee haue a notable example in the Papiſtes: for without controuerſie they confeſſe that Chriſt is the onely begotten ſonne of God, cloathed with our fleſh, and they acknowlege in the two natures one perſon of God and man. But when we come to the power & office of Chriſt, ther preſently riſeth a conflict: becauſe they wil not ſuffer themſelues to bee brought into order, much leſſe to be brought to nothing. In ſumme, as far as the wicked thinke that nothing is taken from themſelues, ſo much reuerence they will graunt to God and to the ſcripture. But when that Chriſt hand to hand ſtriueth with ambition, couetouſnes, pride, vaine hope, hypocriſie, and deceites, then forgetful of all modeſtie, they are caried into madneſſe. Therfore let vs know that wicked affections are the chiefe cauſe of blinding the enemies of the trueth, which turne light into darkneſſe.

6. And thou Bethlehem. It is not to be doubted, but that the Scribes did faithfully cite the wordes of the text in their own tongue, as it is in the Prophet: but it was enough for Matthew to note the place: and becauſe that he writ in Greecke, he followed the allowed tranſlation. For by this place and ſuch others it is eaſily gathered, that the Goſpel was not written by him in the Hebrew tongue. Furthermore, this is alwaies to be obſerued, as oft as the apoſtles do cite any teſtimonie of ſcripture, although they render it not word for word; nay, ſometime they are far from the ſame: yet they are very aptly and fitly applyed of them to the matter. VVherefore let the readers alwayes marke to what purpoſe the Euangeliſtes bring the places of ſcripture, let them not ſtand ſcrupulouſly vpō euery word, but let them be content with this one thing, that the ſcripture is neuer wreſted by them into a diuers ſenſe: but that it is properly applyed to the peculiar and proper vſe. And certeinly ſeeing it was their purpoſe to giue milke to drink to infants and nouices in the faith, which were not yet able to take ſound meat: no religion ſtaid them that leſſe diligently and exactly they ſhould enquire what the ſcripture teacheth of the ſonne of god, and ſo that taſte which the Apoſtles giue them, ſhould lead them to the fountaine. Now let vs returne to the propheſie of Miheah. Theſe are the words that are read in the Prophet, and thou Bethlehem Ephrathah art litle to be among the thouſands of Iudah: yet out of thee ſhal he come forth vnto me, that ſhalbe the ruler in Iſrael. Matthew for Ephrathah putteth Iuda, but in the ſame ſenſe: for the mind of Micheah was onely by this note, to put a difference betweene this Bethlehem, whereof he ſpeaketh, & that other in the tribe of Zabulon. There is more difficultie in the reſt of the text: for the Prophet ſaith that Bethlehem is litle, that it ſhould be accounted amongſt the gouernours in Iuda. Matthew on the other ſide extolleth the dignitie, as that it ſhould be one of the chiefe. This cauſe mooued many interpreters that they reade this place of the Prophet interrogatiuely: yet ſome of a better iudgment thought that Matthew would in this chaunge ſet forth the praiſe of the grace of God: becauſe that this poore and obſcure towne was made a place of the birth of this great king. But although that Bethlehem excelled in this honour, yet it profited nothing the dwellers there; ſo that it rather fell into a grieuouſer deſtruction, becauſe that the redeemer was worſe then vnworthily receiued thither. Mathew alſo for a rular putteth this word ſhepheard: yet he expreſſeth both two, for that he declareth that Chriſt ſhould be the captaine of the people, and that the office of feeding was committed vnto him.

Matthew. 2.

Marke.	Luke.
7. Then Herod priuilye called the wiſemen, and diligently enquired of them, the time of the ſtarre that appeared;
8. And ſent them to Bethlehem: ſaying, goe, and ſearch diligently for the babe, and when ye haue found him bring me word againe, that I may come alſo and worſhip him:
9. So when they had hearde the king, they departed, and loe, the ſtarre which they had ſeene in the Eaſt, went before them, till it came, and ſtoode ouer the place where the babe was.
10. And when they ſawe the ſtarre, they reioyced with an exceeding great ioy.
11. And went into the houſe, and founde the babe with Mary his mother, and fell downe and worſhipped him, and opened their treaſures, and preſented vnto him gifts, euen gold, and incenſe, & mirrh.
12. And after they were warned of God in a dream, that they ſhould not go againe to Herod, they returned into their countrey another way

7. Herod priuily called the wiſemen. The tirant durſt not ſhew his feare & carefulnes, leaſt he ſhuld ſo arme the people with audacitie, with whō he knew himſelf hated: therfore opēly he diſſebleth the cauſe as thogh it pertained not to him. But priuily he enquireth, that he may preuent the preſent peril. But although an euil cōſcience made him feareful, yet it is not to be doubted but that ſtroke his mind with an vnuſual feare, that being deſtitute of counſell, & diſtraught in mind, he was for the time amaſed. For there is no eaſier a matter, then vnder the cloak of humanitie to ſuborne a cōpanion from amongſt the courtiers, which eſpying out ṗ whole matter, might preſētly return. Certenly Herod was wonderful ſubtil, & ther was in him a rare magnanimity; ſo that it is the more to be wōdred at, that now in ſo extreame daunger, when as he had a remedie at hand, that he ſhould lie aſtoniſhed & half dead: wherfore we may know that it was wonderfull, that the ſonne of God did then eſcape the iawes of the Lyon. And the Lorde at this day doth no leſſe bewitch his enemies, leaſt they ſhould deuiſe a thouſande ſleightes to hurte & to deſtroy his Church: nay, that they often take not the occaſions which are in a readineſſe. And the Lord by an other meanes, as wee ſhall ſee, laughed to ſcorne and mocked the ſubtiltie, wherewith hee had deceaued the wiſemen, faigning that he himſelfe would come to worſhippe him. But as Herod fearing the tumult of the people, was bereft of his minde; ſo againe he was ſo madde, that he did neither doubt nor feare, to ſtirre vp God againſt himſelfe: for he knew that if a king was borne, that he was ordained of God, that hee might raiſe vp the decayed throane of Dauid. Therefore he ſets not vpon men, but fooliſhly he preſumes to war with God: Both therefore is to be noted, that hee was taken with a ſpirite of giddines, that he might ſtrik God; yet he dealt very childiſhly, becauſe his counſell was brought to naught; ſo that he was euen as a blind manne, which gropeth in the darke.

9. When they had heard the king, they departed. Truely this was a vile ſluggiſhnes of the Iewes, that none of them kept companie with theſe ſtrãgers, that they might goe ſee the king promiſed to their nation. The Scribes ſhew them the way, and aſsigne the place where he is borne, yet they ſuffer them to goe alone, and no man ſtirres foote. Peraduenture they feared the crueltie of Herod: but this was alſo a wicked vnthankfulneſſe, that they woulde incurre no daunger, for the obtaining of the ſaluation offered them, and that they ſet leſſe by the grace of God, then by offending the tyrant. But I ſhewed a litle before, that the whole people were too much degenerate, which had rather be oppreſſed with a yoake of tyrannie, then that by the chaung they would feele any diſcõmoditie. And if God had not confirmed with his ſpirite the mindes of theſe wiſemẽ, they might haue fallen at this offence: yet the zeale of their endeuour is not diminiſhed, but forward they goe without a companion. But they want not matter to confirme their faith, while they nowe heare him renoumed as king by diuineoracles, who was ſhewed vnto thẽ by the ſtar. That the ſtar directeth thẽ as they wẽt on their way, euẽ vnto the place, it may be eaſily gathered, that it vaniſhed away before: for no other cauſe, but that they might enquire at Ieruſalẽ for the new king: & that to take away excuſe from the Iewes, which after they were taught of the redeemer ſent vnto them, yet wittingly & willingly deſpiſed him.

11. They found the babe. So vncomly a ſight might haue bred a new offence to the wiſemen, whẽ as they ſaw nothing in Chriſt that appertained to a king; ſo that he was vilier vſed & more contemned, then any cõmon infant. But becauſe they are perſwaded that he is appointed of god to be a king, this only thought fixed in their mindes, cauſeth thẽ to reuerence Chriſt: for in the counſel of god they do behold his dignitie, as yet hid & kept ſecret. And becauſe they certeinly appoint that he ſhal proue otherwiſe then he yet appeared, they are no whit aſhamed to giue him kingly honour. Alſo by their gifts they declared whence they cãe: for it is not to be douted, but þ they brought theſe as tokens & fruits of their coũtrey. And vnderſtãd that euery one of thẽ did not offer his gift: but theſe 3. things were in cõmõ offred by thẽ al, that which almoſt al the interpreters diſput of the kingdõ, prieſtod & burial of chriſt, & make gold a tokẽ of his king.

kingdom incenſe of his prieſthood, and mirrh of his buriall, in my iudgment hath no likelihood in it. VVe know that it was a ſolemne cuſtome amongſt the Perſians to haue ſome gift in their hand ſo oft as they ſaluted their kinges. And theſe wiſe men choſe theſe three thinges, the fruites and commodities whereof doe make the Eaſt parte renoumed and famous. Euen as Iocob ſent into Aegypt the beſt and choſen fruites of the land, Gene. 43. 11. 12. But ſeeing they after the manner of the Perſians, worſhipping him, whom they as yet thought to be an earthly king, offered fruits of the earth: It is our parte ſpiritually to worſhip him. For this is that lawfull and reaſonable worſhipping, which hee deſireth: firſt, that we ſhould offer vp our ſelues vnto him, and then all that wee haue.

Luke. 2.

Mathew. Marke.

22. And when the dayes of their purification after the law of Moſes were accomplished. they brought him to Ieruſalē, to preſent him to the lord:

23. (As it is written in the law of the Lorde. euery man childe that firſt openeth the womb, ſhall be holy vnto the Lord,)

24. And to giue an oblation, as it is commanded in the law of the Lord, a paire of Turtle doues, or two young Pigeons.

25. And beholde, there was a man in Ieruſalem, whoſe name was Simeon: this man was iuſt, and feared God, and waited for the conſolation of Iſrael, and the holy Ghoſt was vpon him.

26. And a reuelation was giuen him of the holy Ghoſt, that he ſhould not ſee death, before hee had ſeene the Lord Chriſt.

27. And he came by the motion of the ſpirite into the temple, and when the parents brought in the childe Ieſus, to doe for him after the cuſtome of the law:

28. Then he tooke him in his armes, and praiſed God, and ſaid,

29. Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſeruaunt depart in peace, according to thy word:

30. For mine eies haue ſeene thy ſaluation.

31. VVhich thou haſt prepared before the face of all people.

32. A light to be reuealed to the Gentiles, and the glory of the people Iſrael.

22. And when the dayes were accomplished. The fourtie day after her deliuerance, the rite of purification ought to be ſolemniſed: yet Mary and Ioſeph came alſo to Ieruſalem for an other cauſe, that they might preſēt Chriſt to the Lord, becauſe hee was the firſt borne. Nowe, firſt we muſt ſpeake of purification. Luke maketh the ſame common to Mary and to Chriſte: for the pronowne Their can by no meanes be applyed vnto Ioſeph. And it is not abſurde, that Chriſt, who for vs beecame accurſed vpon the croſſe, for our ſake tooke our vncleanneſſe vppon him, though he

he was free from fault and ſinne, as concerning the guiltineſſe: that is, if the fountaine of puritie would be accounted vncleane, that hee might waſh away our vncleanneſſe. They are deceaued, which thinke that this law was but for policy; as if the woman ſhould be vncleane before her husband, and not before the Lord: when rather there was ſet before the eies of the Iewes, aſwell the corruption of their nature, as the remedie of God his grace. And this one law aboundantly ſuffiſeth to proue original ſinne, as it containeth a notable teſtimonie of the grace of GOD. And the curſe of mankinde cannot be more plainely ſhewed, then when the Lorde teſtifieth, that the infant commeth vnpure and polluted out of his mothers wombe, inſomuch as the mother her ſelfe is defiled by the byrth. Certeinely except man were borne a ſinner, and were by nature the childe of wrath, and that there reſted in him ſome ſpotte of ſinne, he ſhould not neede a purgation: wherefore it followeth that all were corrupt in Adam, ſeeing that they are by the mouth of the Lorde condemned of vncleanneſſe. And that is not againſt it, Rom. 11. 16. That the Iewes are called holye branches of a holy roote, becauſe this good came vnto them not of themſelues, but as by other meanes. For although that by prieuledge of adoption they were ſeuered for a choſen people, yet corruption from Adam was their firſt enheritaunce by order. Therfore it is conuenient to diſtinguiſh betweene the firſt nature and the peculiar benefit of the couenaunt, wherein God freeth his from the curſe. And to this purpoſe belonged the purification in the law, that the Iewes might know, that by the grace of God they are cleaſed from thoſe filths, which by their birth they brought with them into the world. Hereby is alſo to be learned howe horrible the infection of ſinne is, which in ſome parte defileth the lawful order of nature. Verily I graunte, that neither matrimonie in it ſelf, nor bearing of children are vncleane: nay, I graunt that the fault of luſt is couered with ỹ holines of matrimony: but yet the ouerflowing of ſin is ſo deep & plentiful, that alwaies ſome ſins flow out from thence, which ſprinckle with blottes, whatſoeuer is otherwiſe pure.

13. As it is written in the Lawe. This was an other parte of godlineſſe which Ioſeph and Mary perfourmed: The Lord commaunded, Num. 3 13. that all the males ſhoulde bee offered to him in remembraunce of their deliueraunce, becauſe when the Angell ſlewe all the firſt borne of Aegypt, hee had ſpared the firſt borne of Iſraell: after it was lawfull for euery man to redeeme his firſt borne for a certaine price. That was an old ceremonie.

Now ſith the lord is a cõmon redeemer of al, by right he challengeth vs to him from the leaſt to the greateſt. Surely it is not in vaine that Luke doth oft repeat, that Ioſeph & Mary did that which was preſcribed in the law of the Lord. For by theſe words we are taught, that nothing is to be attempted after our own witte in the worſhip of God, but that muſt be obediently followed, which he hath by his word commaunded.

24. And to giue an oblation. This ſacrifice belonged to the rite of purifying, leaſt any ſhoulde thinke that it was offered for the redeeming of the firſt born. VVhen the Euangliſt nameth a paire of turtle doues, or two pigeons, he taketh it for graũted, that the pouertie of Ioſeph & Mary was ſuch, that their abilitie reached not to the offering of a lambe. For this exception is plainely ſet down, Leuit. 12. 6. If any obiecte that there was gold offered a litle before by the wiſemen, wherewith they might haue bought it: I anſwere, we cannot imagine that there was ſuch plentie of gold, as could ſodenly make a poore man rich. For we read not that they had camels laden with gold: but it is more credible, that it was ſome ſmall portion, which they brought only for honours ſake. Neither did the law preciſely commaund that the poore ſhoulde conſume theyr ſubſtaunce vpon a ſacrifice: but making a difference betweene them and the rich, it eaſed them of charge. VVherefore it ſhall be nothing hurtful, if we ſay that Ioſeph and Mary gaue as much as their abilitie did beare, although that they had laid vp ſome money, to beare the charges of the iourney and of their life.

25. Behold, there was a man in Ieruſalem. This hiſtory is ſet down, that we might know, that when almoſt al the people had prophaned themſelues with a wicked contempt of God, yet there remained a few worſhippers of God, & Chriſt was known of thē from his firſt infancy. Theſe were thoſe remnants, which (as Paul to the Ro. 11.5. teacheth) were reſerued, according to the free election of God. And in this ſmal handful was the Church of God included, although the prieſtes and ſcribes did no leſſe proudly then falſly boaſt of the title of the church. The Euangeliſt only maketh mention of two, which knew Chriſt at Ieruſalem, when he was brought into the temple, Simeon and Anna. And firſt I muſt ſpeake of Simeon. VVe read not of what eſtate he was, and it may be, that he was ſome meane man, and vnknowne: but Luke commendeth him for godlyneſſe and righteouſneſſe, to the which he addeth the gift of propheſie. Godlyneſſe and righteouſneſſe are referred to the two Tables of the law, and ſo in theſe two poyntes conſiſteth the integritie of life. It was a teſtimonie of godlyneſſe that hee looked for the comfort of Iſrael: for without the hope of ſaluation GOD is not rightlye worſhipped, which dependeth partly in beleeuing his promiſes, then eſpecially by the reſtauration promiſed by chriſt. But now ſeeing this waiting or looking for is praiſed in Simeon, as a rare vertue, hereof gather, that there were then but few, which truly nouriſhed the hope of redēption in their harts. Al men had in their mouthes the Meſsias, & the bleſſed ſtate vnder the kingdom of Dauid. but in the meane while almoſt no man did patiētly beare the preſent miſeries, ſtaying vpon this cōfort, that the redemptiō of the church was at hand. And as the godlines of Simeon in this did ſhew it ſelf, that he lift vp his mind in waiting for the promiſed ſaluation; ſo at this day, as many as wil proue thēſelues the ſons of god, wil ſigh with cōtinuall deſires for the promiſed redēption. For ſufferance is very needful euen to the laſt cōming of Chriſt. The holy ghoſt was vpon him. He ſpeaketh not of the ſpirit of adoption, which is cōmon to al the children of God, though not in equal manner: but he ſpeaketh of a more peculiar gifte of propheſie, which doth more plainly appeare in the next verſe, & by that which followeth, where it is ſayd, that he receiued anſwere by the holye Ghoſt, and that the ſame ſpirit guiding him, hee came into the temple. Therefore although that Simeon exceeded not in any publik honor, yet he was adorned with many notable gifts: as godlynes, innocency of life, faith & propheſie. And it is not to be doubted, but that he alone did priuatly receiue this oracle, that it might paſſe from him as a common confirmation to all the godly. Ieſus is called the Chriſte of God: becauſe that hee was annoynted of the Father, and together with the holy ghoſt hee tooke the honour of the kingdome and of the prieſthood. Simeon is ſaid to haue come into the temple by the ſpirit: that is, by ſecret inſtinct and certaine reuelation that he ſhould meete Chriſt.

29. Now letteſt thou thy ſeruaunt departe. By this ſonge it appeareth that Simeon beheld the ſonne of God with other eies, then with the eies of the fleſh: for the outward beholding of Chriſt could bring nothing but a contempt, at the leaſt it could not ſo haue ſatisfied the minde of the holy man, that ſo glad as enioying the ſumme of all his deſires, hee ſhoulde make haſte to die. Therefore the ſpirit of God lightened his eies with faith, that he might diſcern the glory of the ſonne of God in that vile & contēned habite. When he ſaith that he would depart in peace, he vnderſtandeth that hee woulde die with a quiet mind, as hee that was filled, and had obtained his deſires. But it is demaunded if he ſhould haue died before, ſhould Simeon haue bene drawen to it with trouble and tumult, as they vſe that are vnwilling? I aunſwere, the circumſtance which is added, is to be noted, according to thy woorde. For ſeeing God hath promiſed him the ſight of his Sonne, it was fitte he ſhoulde ſtay in ſuſpence: nay, it behooued him to liue carefully, vntill that hee was made partaker of his hope. This is therefore to be obſerued, becauſe that many falſly and naughtely doe pretend the example of Simeon, boaſting that they would willingly die, if it were graunted them to enioy this or that matter, when as yet they take libertie to thēſelues to conceaue vowes according to their owne luſtes, or to forge vaine hopes without the word of God. If Simeon had ſaid preciſely now with a ſtaied & a quiet mind I will die, becauſe I haue ſeene the ſonne of God: in this ſpeach he had bewrayed the weakenes of his faith: but becauſe he had the word for it, it was lawfull for him, according to the rule of faith, to flee death vntil the comming of Chriſt.

30. Becauſe mine eies haue ſeene. Although this maner of ſpeaking, is oftē ſeene in the ſcriptures, yet the corporal beholding of Chriſt ſeemeth expreſſly to be noted in theſe words: as if Simeō ſhuld ſay, that he now had the ſonne of god preſent in the fleſh, vpon whom he had bent the eies of his mind before. I take ſaluation for the matter of ſaluation. becauſe that al the partes of ſaluation and of a bleſſed life are laid vp in Chriſt. Now if the only ſight of Chriſt, being as yet but an infant, did ſo much preuail with Simeon, that ioyfully & quietly he would go to death: how much more aboundāt matter of ſaluation is there giuē to vs this day, who may ſee al the points of our ſaluation fulfilled in Chriſt. Chriſt is not conuerſant vpon the earth, neither do we beare him in our armes, but his diuine maieſtie doth clearly & openly ſhine in the Goſpel, & therin he ſheweth himſelf to be ſeene of vs, as it were face to face, as Paule ſaieth, 2. Cor. 3. 18. neither ſheweth he himſelf any more in weaknes of fleſh, but in the wonderful power of the ſpirit, the which he declareth in miracles, in the ſacrifice of his death, and in the reſurrection In ſumme, he is ſo abſent from vs in body, that yet wee may beeholde him ſitting at the right hand of his father. If ſuch a beholding of him bring vs not peace, that we may goe ioyfully to death, we are more then vnthankfull to God, and we carelesly account of the glory, which he hath beſtowed on vs.

31. VVhich thou haſt prepared. By theſe wordes Simeon ſignifieth that Chriſt was ordained of god, that al people might enioy his grace, & that shortly after he shoulde be placed vp on high, that he might tourne the eyes of all men vnto him. And in this worde he comprehendeth what propheſies soeuer there be of the encreaſe of the kingdome of Chriſte. But if Simeon embracing the tender infant in his armes, coulde yet extend his minde to the vtter borders of the world, that he acknowledged his preſent power euery where: howe much more doeth it become vs at this day to thinke more royally of him, ſith that he is lift as a banner to the Gentiles, and hath made himſelfe knowen to the whole worlde.

32. A light to lighten. Now Simeon ſheweth to what ende Chriſt was brought foorth from the father before all people, that is, that hee might lighten the Gentiles, which before were in darkneſſe, and that he might be the glory of the people Iſrael, for betwene this and them he maketh a difference, and that not without a cauſe, becauſe that the children of Abraham by right of adoption were neare vnto God, but the Gentiles with whom God had made no couenant, were accompted as ſtrangers from the church. By the which reaſon, Iſrael, Ier. 31.9. is not only called the childe of God, but alſo the firſt borne, and Paul teacheth to the Ro. 15.8. that Chriſt came that he mighte be a miniſter of circumciſion, according to the promiſſes geuen vnto the fathers. But Iſrael is ſo preferred to the Gentiles, that al they in common might obtaine ſaluation in Chriſte. A light to lighten, ſignifieth as much as if it had bene ſayde, to geue light to the Gentiles, whereby we gather that menne are naturally without light, vntill that Chriſt the Sonne of righteouſneſſe ſhine vnto them. As concerning Iſrael, although they were endewed with greate honour from God, yet Simeon ſheweth that all this glory dependeth of this one head, that the redeemer was promiſed them.

Luke. 2.

Matthew. | Marke.

33. And Ioſeph and his mother marualled at theſe things, which were ſpoken touching him.

34. And Simeon bleſſed them, and ſayde vnto Mary his mother: Beholde, this childe is appoynted for the fall and riſing againe of many in Iſrael, and for a ſigne which ſhalbe ſpoken againſt.

35. Yea, and a ſword ſhal pearce through thy ſoule, that the thoughtes of many hearts may be opened.

36. And there was a Propheteſſe, one Anna the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aſer, which was of a great age, and had lined with an husbande 7. yeares from her virginitie.

37. And she was widowe foure ſcore & foure yeares, and went not oute of the temple, but ſerued God with faſtings and praiers, night and day.

38. Shee then commynge at the ſame inſtante vppon them, confeſſed likewiſe the Lorde, and ſpake of him to al that loked for redeption in Ieruſalem.

39. And when they had performed al things according to the law of the Lorde, they returned into Galile, to their owne citie Nazareth.

33. And Ioſeph and his mother. Luke doth not ſay that they were amaſed as at a new or a ſtraunge matter, but that they reuerently conſidered, & with due eſtimation embraced this propheſie of the holy Ghoſte oute of the mouth of Symeon, that they might the more and more profite in the knowledge of Chriſte. And we are taught by this example, after we are once enſtructed in a right faith, to gather what ſmall helpes ſoeuer may ſeeme to auaile for the confirmation of the ſame: for he hath then rightly profited in the word of God, who ceaſeth not to eſteme whatſoeuer he daily readeth or heareth, for the continuall furtherance of faith.

34. And Simeon bleſſed them. If thou referreſt this to Ioſeph and Mary, there is no difficultie in the matter, but becauſe Luke ſemeth to comprehend with them Chriſte; it maye be demaunded by what righte Simeon tooke vpon him this office of bleſsing, for the leſſe is bleſſed of the greater, as the Apoſtle teacheth Heb. 7. 7. Furthermore, it ſeemeth to be abſurde, that any mortall manne ſhoulde conceiue praiers for the ſonne of God, I aunſweare that the Apoſtle doeth not ſpeake of euery bleſſinge, but of the prieſtes onely, for men otherwiſe do bleſſe one an other. And it is more probable that Simeon as a priuate manne, and as one of the common ſorte of the people bleſſed them, rather then as a publike perſon: for as it is ſayd before, he was neuer called a prieſt. But there is no abſurditie if we ſay that hee prayed for the happie ſucceſſe of the kingdome of Chriſte, becauſe the ſpirite in the Pſalme, commaundeth this maner of bleſsing to all the godlye. Beholde this childe is appoynted. Simeon properly directeth this ſpeache to Marye, yet it generally belongeth to all the godly. The holy Virgine hadde neede of this admonition, leaſt that ſhee triumphing at theſe pleaſant beginnings, as it commonly commeth to paſſe, ſhould be the leſſe able to beare the ſorowes that were to come. And alſo, leaſt ſhee ſhoulde hope that Chriſte ſhoulde be receiued with the generall fauour of all the people, but rather that ſhee might be armed with inuincible ſtrengthe of the minde againſt all contrary blaſtes. But yet the ſpirite of God woulde deliuer a generall doctrine to all the godly, that they beholdinge the worlde with wicked contumacie reſiſting Chriſte, ſhould not be ſhaken nor broken with ſuch hard dealing. VVe knowe howe grieuous and ſore a hinderance the vnbeliefe of ghe worlde is vnto vs, but it behooueth vs to ouercome it, if we will beleeue in Chriſte Ieſu: for the eſtate of menne was neuer broughte to ſo good paſſe, that the greater parte ſhould followe Chriſt. VVherefore it is neceſſarie that whoſoeuer ſhoulde geue their names to Chriſt ſhould be inſtructed in theſe principles, and armed with theſe defenſes, that they may continue in his faith. But this was a moſt greuous temptation, that Chriſt was not knowen of his owne. Naye he was contumelioufly reiected from that people, which boaſted themſelues to be the Church of God. And eſpecially for that the Prieſtes and the Scribes which had the gouernement of the Churche, were his moſt deadly ennemies: for who woulde thinke that he was their king, that ſhoulde ſee him ſo vnworthely and reprochefully reiected from them? Therefore Symeon doeth not withoute cauſe foretell that Chriſte was appoynted for the fall of many, and thoſe of the people of Iſrael. And the meaning is, that he was ordained of God, that hee ſhoulde ouerthrowe and caſt manye downe headlonge. But it is to be noted that the fall roſe heereof, that the vnbe-leeuers stumbled at him, the whiche is shortly after declared, where Simeon calleth hym a signe to be spoken againste. Therefore because the vnbeleeuers are rebelles vnto CHRISTE, they strike themselues againste him, whereof foloweth their fall. And it is a Metaphore fetched from a marke or butte, at the whiche archers dee shoote, as if that Simeon shoulde haue sayde: Heereby is the malice of men perceiued, nay the wickednesse of all mannes witte, that all menne had made a conspiracie, and should stirre and crie out against the Sonne of God. For there coulde not bee suche a consent of the worlde to speake against the Gospell, excepte it were as a naturall discorde betweene the Sonne of God and those menne. And thoughe the ennemies of the Gospell disagree amongest themselues, so as their ambition and furie carieth them into diuers factions; and factiously are deuided into diuers fantasies, as the varietie of their superstitions which separateth the Idolaters is manifolde, Yet in this they all agree, that they maye withstande the Sonne of God. VVherefore it is truelye sayde, that it is too euidente a token of the wickednesse of manne, for that euer it withstandeth Christe. And thoughe it bee an incredible woonder, that the worlde so riseth againste his creator: yet because the Scripture foretolde that it shoulde so bee, and reason openly sheweth, that when menne were once estranged from God throughe sinne, they alwaies flee from him, there is no cause why suche examples shoulde disturbe vs, but rather that our faith being furnished with suche armes, shoulde buckle it selfe forwardes to fight with the resisting of the worlde. Furthermore, because that God hadde then gathered Israel to himselfe out of the whole worlde, and nowe that there is no more difference betweene the Iewe and the Grecian: It was conuenient that that shoulde nowe come to passe, whiche we reade shoulde then be done.

Isaias hadde sayde in his time, chapter 8 14. Beholde, the Lord shall bee as a stumblinge stone, and as a rocke to fall vppon, to the two houses of Israel: from that tyme the Iewes neuer almost ceased to strike againste God, but their moste violente conflicte was againste Christe. Nowe, they whyche call themselues Christians, doe imitate the same furie. Naye, they whyche proudly arrogate to themselues the supremacie of the Church, do often bend that power they haue, to oppresse Christ. But lette vs remember that they shall nothinge preuaile, but that at the lengthe they shall be broken and torne in peeces. For vnder the woorde of Falling downe, the spirite doeth so pronounce a punishment vppon the vnbeleeuers, that we might learne to goe farre from them, least companye shoulde wrappe vs in the same destruction. And Christ is not therfore anye lesse to be beloued, for that he rising, many fall downe: for the fauour of the Gospell ceaseth not to be pleasant and acceptable to God, although it be deadly to the wicked worlde.

If anye manne demaunde howe Christe canne be an occasion of falling to the vnbeleeuers, which nowe are destroyed withoute hym: The aunsweare is easie: they perish twice that wilfully depriue themselues of that saluation offered them from God.

Therefore the fall signifieth a double punishment whyche remaineth for all vnbeleeuers, after that wittingly and willingly they haue striuen with God.

And riſing againe. To the former clauſe this comfort is oppoſed, that it might mitigate the matter odious to our ſenſe: for this is ſorowfull to be heard, if nothing elſe were added, but that Chriſte ſhoulde bee a ſtone of offence, which through his hardneſſe ſhould breake and rend in peeces a great number of men. Therefore the Scripture calleth vs backe to his other office, that the ſaluation of men hath the foundation in him, as Iſaias 8.13. alſo ſpeaketh: Sanctifie the Lord of hoaſtes, let him be your feare, and he ſhall be vnto you as a Sanctuary, or a defenſed tower. And Peter ſpeaketh more plainly: to whome yee come as vnto a liuing ſtone diſalowed of menne, but choſen of God and precious: and yee as liuely ſtones are built, 1. Pet. 2.4. for ſo it is contained in the ſcripture: Beholde I putte in Sion a chiefe corner ſtone, prooued, electe and precious, and he that beleeueth therein ſhal not be aſhamed, vnto you: therfore which beleeue it is precious, but to them whiche beleeue not, the ſtone whiche the builders diſalowed. &c. Therefore leaſt this title wherein Chriſt is called the ſtone of offence, ſhould make vs afraid of Chriſt, he preſently on the contrary ſide affirmeth, that hee is alſo called the corner ſtone, whereby the faith of all the godly is ſuſtained: nay, he woulde put vs in minde; that that is but accidentall, and that this is naturall and proper. Furthermore, it is woorthy to be noted, that Chriſt is not called the ſtay or proppe of the godly, but the riſing, for the eſtate of men is not ſuche, as it were expedient for them to remaine in the ſame, therefore it behoueth them firſt to riſe from death, before they can begin to liue.

35. Through thy ſoule. This admonition auailed to the confirming of the minde of the holy virgin, leaſt ſhee ſhould be throwne downe wyth ſorow, when the time for thoſe bitter conflictes were come whiche ſhee ſhoulde paſſe through. But although her faith was ſhaken and troubled with diuers temptations, yet the moſt bitter ſtrife ſhe had, was with the croſſe, wherby Chriſt ſeemed as one vtterly extinguiſhed. And although ſhee was neuer ſwalowed vppe of ſorowe, yet her breſt was not ſo ſtonie, but that it was greuouſly wounded, for the conſtancie of the Saints doeth muche differre from vnſenſibleneſſe. That the thoughts of many hearts may be opened. Some ioyne this ſentence with that clauſe whiche goeth ſomewhat before, that Chriſt was appoynted for the fall. &c. and they include in a parentheſis, that which we laſt expounded of the ſword, but in my iudgement it were better to referre it to the whole ſentence. And that woorde That, is not heere properlye a cauſall, but onelye noteth a clauſe folowing: for when the lighte of the Goſpell ſhineth, and then perſecutions ariſe, withall are the affections of the heart opened whiche before were hid: for ſuche are the cloakes of mannes diſſimulation, that without Chriſt they are eaſily hidde. But Chriſt throughe his light wipeth awaye all their fained excuſes, and laieth their hypocriſie naked. Therefore this office of righte is attributed vnto him, that he layeth open the ſecreats of the heart: but where the croſſe foloweth the doctrine, he ſearcheth the hearts more to the quicke. For they which in outward profeſsion doe embrace Chriſte, they abhorre from ſuffering the croſſe: and becauſe they ſee the Churche ſubiecte to diuers troubles, they eaſily forſake their ſtanding.

36. There was a Prophetеſſe one Anna. Luke only maketh mētion of two, by whom Chriſt was receiued, and that for this purpoſe, that we might learne learne to preferre that which is of God, before all the worlde, though it be but ſmall. The Scribes and the prieſtes had then great renowne. But ſeeing that the ſpirite of God remained vpon Simeon and Anna, whether of the Prieſtes were vtterly deſtitute, theſe two only deſerue more reuerence, then the whole company of them, which are onely lift vp in pride with vaine titles: for this cauſe is the age of Anna expreſſed, and ſhee adorned with the title of a Propheteſſe. Thirdly, there is noted a notable teſtimonie of her godly holineſſe of life. For theſe are the things whiche by right gette authoritie and eſtimation. And truely the diſguiſed renowne and vaine pompe deceiueth none other, but them which for the vanitie of their witte, are addicted to fantaſticall deceits. It is ſayde that ſhee liued 7. yeares with her husband from her virginitie, that we might know that ſhee was a widow euen in the flower of her age: for being a yong maide ſhe was maried, and ſhortly after ſhe loſt her husband. And by this circumſtance, that ſhee abſtained from a ſeconde mariage, hauing as yet a luſtie body, encreaſeth the praiſe of her chaſtitie: yet that whych foloweth may be expounded two waies, that ſhe was a widowe almoſte of foure ſcore and foure yeares: that is, that there was ſo much time paſſed in her widowhoode, or that ſhee had liued ſo long. If thou accompteſt foure ſcore and foure from her widowhoode, it muſt folow that ſhe was aboue a hundred yeare old, but I leaue this indifferent. And that the ſpirite of prophecie did as yet ſhine in ſome fewe, the doctrine of lawe and the Iewiſh religion was as it were by theſe ſignes approoued, vntill Chriſt ſhould come: for that it was neceſſary in ſuche a vaſte waſteneſſe of religion, that the electe of God, ſhould be ſtaid with theſe helpes, leaſt they ſhould fall away.

37. Shee went not out of the Temple. It is an hyperbolical kinde of ſpeach, yet the ſence of it is plaine, that Anna was almoſte continuallye in the Temple. Luke addeth that ſhee worſhipped God with faſtings & continuall prayers, whereof we gather that ſhe frequented not the temple, as if with this bare going thither ſhee woulde diſcharge her duetie, but alſo that ſhee vſed other exerciſes of godlineſſe. But it is woorthy to be noted, that one and the ſame rule is not heere preſcibed to all: neyther ought theſe things be drawen into a generall example, whiche are heere praiſed in this widowe woman, for it behooueth vs wiſely to diſcerne what appertaineth to euery mannes calling: for fooliſh emulation hathe filled the worlde with Apes, while ſuperſtitious menne doe more greedily then wiſely ſnatche vnto themſelues, whatſoeuer they heare praiſed in the Saintes, as thoughe that as there are diſtincte degrees of orders, ſo there were not alſo a choiſe to be had of woorkes, that euery one mighte anſwere to his ſeuerall calling. That whiche is heere ſpoken of Anna, Paule doth eſpecially reſtraine to widowes, therefore maryed folkes ſhal doe very prepoſterouſly, if they ſhoulde frame their life after an vnlike example: yet there remaineth a doubte, that Luke ſeemeth to eſtabliſh part of the worſhip of God in faſtings. But it is to be noted, that of thoſe workes which belong to the worſhippe of God, ſome are required ſimply, and (as they ſaye) are neceſſarye of themſelues, and there are others which are to be referred to this end, that they might ſerue thoſe former. Praiers doe properly appertaine to the worſhippe of God: and faſting is an inferiour aide, which is no otherwiſe approued of God, but as it helpeth peth the endeuor and zeale of praying: for the rule is to be holden, that the offices of men are to be eſteemed by the right and lawfull end. The diſtinction alſo is to be holde, that god is directly worſhipped with praiers and not with faſtings, but in conſideration of that which foloweth. And it is not to be doubted but this holy woman vſed her faſtinges, to lament for the calamitie of the Church that then was.

38. Confeſſed likewiſe. Luke commendeth the holy melodie, which reſounded in the tounges of Simeon and Anna, that the faithfull mighte mutually exhort themſelues with one mouth to ſing the praiſes of God, and that ſome ſhould likewiſe aunſweare others. When he ſayeth that Anna ſpake vnto all that looked for the redemption, hee againe noteth the ſmall number of the godly: for the chiefe head or foundation of faith was put in this expectation, and it appeareth that there were but fewe which nouriſhed the ſame in their mindes.

39. They returned into Galile. I doe eaſily graunte that the iourney into Egypte was betweene theſe. And that which Luke ſayeth that they dwelt in their owne citie Nazareth, was in order of time after the flight into Egypt, which Mathew reporteth. Furthermore, if it be not abſurde to haue that omitted by one Euangeliſt, whiche is declared by an other, there is alſo no let, but that we may ſay that Luke cutting off that time, whereof he had appoynted to make no mention, paſſed ouer to the hyſtorie following: but yet I aſſent not to their comment which faine that Ioſeph & Mary after they had performed the ſacrifice of purgation, retourned to Bethlehem, that they might dwell there. For they fooliſhly imagine that Ioſeph had a dwelling place there, where hee was ſo vnknowen, that he coulde not finde a place to remaine in as a gueſt. Neyther doeth Luke vnaduiſedly call Nazareth as well his citie as Maryes, whereby we gather that hee neuer dwelt in Bethlehem, althoughe hee ſprange or riſe from thence. But of the order of times I will preſently ſpeake more fully.

Mathewe 2. | Marke. | Luke.

13. After their departure, beholde the Angel of the Lorde appeareth to Ioſeph in a dreame, ſaying: Ariſe, and take the babe and his mother, & flee into Egypt, and be there till I bring thee worde, for Herode will ſeeke the babe to deſtroye him.

14. So hee aroſe and tooke the babe and his mother by night, and departed into Egypte.

15. And was there vnto the death of Herode, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet, ſaying: oute of Egypt haue I called my ſonne.

16. Then Herode, ſeeing that he was mocked of the wiſe men, was exceeding wroth, & ſent forth and ſlewe all the male children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſtes thereof, from two yere olde and vnder, according to the time, which he had diligently ſearched out of the wiſe men.

17. Then was that fulfilled which was ſpoken by

by the Prophet Ieremias, ſaying:
18. In Rama was a voyce hearde, mourninge and weeping, and great lamentation, Rachel weeping for her children and woulde not be comforted, becauſe they were not.

13. After their departure. Howe many daies there were betweene the departure of the wiſe men, and vntil the time that Ioſeph was commanded to flee into Egypte it is vnknowen, neither is it anye great matter: but that it is probable that the Lord ſpared Marie vntil ſhe were ſtrong out of her childebedde, that ſhee might be able to take her iourney. And this was the woonderfull counſell of God, that he woulde preſerue his Sonne by flight: and it is not to be doubted but that the minde of Ioſeph was ſhaken with daungerous temptations, when as there was no hope ſhewed him but onely by flighte: for in flight there was no token of the helpe of God, then it was very vnlikely that he which ſhould be the ſauiour of all men could not be preſerued but by the aid of a mortal man. But the Lord held this moderatiō in preſeruing his ſonne, that he might ſhewe ſome ſignes of his heauenly power, & yet he ſhewed not the ſame ſo euidently, but that it ſhoulde lie hidde vnder a forme of infirmitie: for as yet the time was not come that Chriſt ſhoulde be openly glorified. It is an euident ſhewe of the Deitie, in that the Aungell foretelleth a matter hid and vnknowen to men: and it appertaineth to the infirmitie of the fleſh, whereunto Chriſte was become ſubiecte, in that he commaundeth to defend the life of the childe by flight and baniſſment: but heereby we are taught that God doth not alwaies preſerue his children by one meane, but nowe he ſheweth his power glorioufly, and nowe againe he ſheweth ſome litle ſparkes of the ſame from vnder obſcure couerings or ſhadowes. Nowe this wonderfull maner of preſeruing the ſonne of God vnder the croſſe, doeth teach that we do wickedly, which do preſcribe a certaine way to God. Therefore let vs ſuffer our ſaluation to be furthered of him by diuers meanes, neither let vs refuſe to be humbled, that thereby he may the better ſhewe foorth his glorie. But eſpecially we muſt not flee the croſſe, wherewith hee exerciſed his ſonne euen from his firſt infancie. Furthermore, this flight is a parte of the fooliſhneſſe of the croſſe, but whyche excelleth all the wiſedome of the worlde. That the ſauiour of Iudea might come forth in his time, he is enforced to flee out of the ſame, and Egypt nouriſheth him, from whence neuer anye thynge came before, but that whiche was deadlye to the Churche of God.

VVho is not amazed at this ſo ſodaine a woorke of God? Againe, hereof gather the certaintie of the dreame, in that Ioſeph preſently obeieth the commaundement of the Aungell, for his readineſſe to obey, doth plainely ſhewe that he doubted not, but that he hadde God for the authour of his flight which hee was about to take. Yet this maye ſeeme to riſe vpon diſtruſt, becauſe that he haſteth ſo ſpeedily, for this fleeing alſo in the night cannot be without feare: but the excuſe is eaſie. He ſawe that the meanes whiche God had ordained for their preſeruation, was very meane and baſe, therefore hee gathereth that it is lawfull for hym fearefullye to flye in the nyghte, as vſe is in extreeme daungers, ſo it behoueth vs alwaies to moderate oure feare at the warninges of God, to the which if the Lord conſent, it ſhall not be againſt our faithe. Be there till I bring thee woorde. By theſe wordes the Aungell declareth that God hath a care of the life of the childe, yea euen for the time that is to come, and Ioſeph had neede of this confirmation, that he mighte be certainly perſwaded that God woulde not onely be a guide to him in thys iourney, but alſo that he woulde be a continual keeper of him in baniſhment. And by this meanes the Lorde woulde ſtay many cares whyche might trouble the minde of the godly man, that he might remaine quiet in Egypt: for otherwiſe no moment of time ſhould haue paſſed without diuers torments, when as he ſhoulde diſcerne and ſee himſelfe depriued, not only of the enheritaunce promiſed of God to all the Saincts, but of the temple, the ſacrifice, the publike profeſsion of the faith, and ſhoulde remaine amõgſt the moſt wicked enemies of God, and in a depe whirlpoole of ſuperſtitions. He caried with him in the perſon of the infante, what good things ſoeuer the fathers hoped for, or that the Lorde had promiſed them: but becauſe hee had not as yet profited ſo muche in the faith and knowledge of Chriſt, hee had neede to be vpholden with this commaundement: Be there vntill I bring thee worde, leaſt that it ſhould be troubleſome to him to languiſh amongſt the Egyptians, baniſhed out of his countrey.

15. Out of Egypt haue I called my ſonne. Becauſe that Mathew ſayeth that the propheſie was fulfilled, many haue thought that the Prophet meant nothing but that which is expreſſed, and they imagined this ſence to thẽ ſelues, that the Iewes doe fooliſhly, while they reſiſt and endeuoure to oppreſſe the Sonne of God, becauſe the Father will call him oute of Egypte. And in this maner doe they wickedly wreſt the woordes of the prophet, whoſe purpoſe is to make the Iewes guiltie of vnthankefulnes, which from their firſt infancy and beginning, haue found God a louing and a bountifull father, yet they foorthwith prouoke him wyth newe ſinnes. Therefore lette this be out of controuerſie, that this place ought not to be reſtrained to Chriſte: neither yet is it wreſted by Mathewe, but aptly applied to the preſent purpoſe. Thus ought the woordes of the Prophet be vnderſtoode, when Iſrael was but a childe I broughte hym out of that miſerable captiuitie wherein he was drowned. Firſte he was like to one dead, and Egypt was to him in ſtead of a graue, & I brought him from thence, as one brought out of the graue, and did bring him into the light of life. And the Lord ſayeth ſo for good cauſe, for that deliuerance was a certaine birth of the people, for then were the tables of adoption made openly, when as by the lawe proclaimed, hee was receyued into the charge of God, a prieſtly kingdom, and a holy nation, when as he was ſeparate from all other people: to be ſhort, when as the Lorde erected a tabernacle to himſelfe, that he might dwel in the midſt of him. So that then the woordes of the Prophet are of this force, as if he ſhould haue ſayde, the people were pulled out of Egypte no otherwiſe, then as out of the deepe ſwalowe of death. Nowe the redemption broughte by Chriſte, what was it elſe then a reſurrection from death, and the beginning of a new life: for then was the light of ſaluation almoſte extinguiſhed, when as God in the perſon of Chriſt, begate againe the Church vnto himſelfe. Then in her head came the Churche out of Egypte, euen as the whole body was broughte from thence before. And this Analogie causeth, that it seemeth not absurd, that Christ shoulde passe some time of his childehode in Egypt. But rather so muche more glorious was the grace and power of God, and his wonderful counsel did so much more shine foorth, because that light came out of darknesse, and life from out of the helles: for otherwise the reason of flesh might be amazed, namely that the redemer should come out of Egypt. Mathewe therefore declareth that it is no newe or straunge thinge, that God shoulde call hys sonne from thence. And this rather auaileth for the confirmation of our faith, that as in times past, so nowe againe the Church of God shoulde come out of Egypt. In this was the diuersity, that in times past the whole people were shut vp in the prison of Egypt: but in the seconde redemption, only the heade of the Church lay hid there, but caried included in him the saluation and life of all men.

16. Then Herode seeing. Mathew speaketh of the iudgement and opinion of Herode, who thoughte himselfe deceiued by the wisemen, because they would not be the ministers of his crueltie. He rather was taken in his owne subtilety, who vnfaithfully had fained, that he also was mineded to worship the newe king. But there is no mention made of this hystorie in Iosephus. Only Macrobius in his second booke Saturnaliorum, reporting the iestes and mery sporting sayings of Augustus, sayth when he heard that at the commandement of Herode, the children in Syria vnder two yeare olde were slaine, and in that sturre his owne sonne was also slaine: I had rather (said he) be Herodes hogge then his sonne. But lette the authoritie of one Mathew aboundantly satisfie vs. This offence so famous ought not to haue bene omitted of Iosephus. Yet it is no maruel that he sayeth nothing of the infants, who very lightly & obscurely toucheth as detestable an example of crueltie, that almoste at the same time he slew all the iudges, which they called Sanhedrim, least there might remaine any remnant at all of the stock of Dauid. And I doubt not, but that by the same feare he was driuen to bothe these murthers. Yet there is a question mooued of the time: for when Mathewe sayeth that they were slaine which were two yere old and yonger, according to the time he had searched out of the wise men: whereof it maye be gathered that Christ was about that age, or at the least that he was not farre from the poynt of 2. yeare olde. Some drawe this further then so, affirming that Christ was almost at that age at that time that the wisemen came: but I denie that the one of these may be gathered by the other. Howe fearfull Herode then was, when the rumour was spred among the common people of the new born king we haue sene a litle before, and seeing that feare thē staied him that he durst not send some priuie traitour to search out the cause, there is no cause why we should maruell that he was for a time restrained from so odious and so cruell a slaughter: especially sith the late report of the comming of the wise mē was as yet fresh & new. And certainly the coniecture is probable, that he deferred the execution of that villanous offece which he had in his mind, vntil he saw occasion, and it may be that the iudges were first slaine of him, that the people being without their captaines, he might without cōtrolment compel them to beare any thing. Wherby it may be gathered that they vse a friuolous argument, which say that Christ was two yere olde when he was wor-ſhipped of the wiſe men, becauſe that according to the time wherein the ſtarre appeared, Herode ſlewe the children of two yeare olde and ſomewhat vnder, and fooliſhly they take it as graunted, that the ſtarre appeared not vntill the virgine was deliuered. But it is much more likely to be true, that they were warned before, and that they tooke their iourney about the natiuitie of Chriſt, that they might finde & ſee the infant new borne in his ſwathling bandes, or in his mothers lappe. And that aboue the reſt is a childiſh deuice, that they came out of ſome vnknown countrey, and as it were oute of an other worlde, ſo that they hadde almoſte ſpent two yeres in their iourney. Furthermore, thoſe things which Oſiander bringeth, are rather to be laughed at, then neede any confutation. But in this text of the hyſtorie whiche I propoſe, there is no inconuenience, that the wife mē came before the time of her childbed was paſſed ouer, and they ſoughte a kinge whiche was borne, and not one whiche was nowe two yeare olde, and that Ioſeph (they being retourned into their countrey) fled away by night, but yet in paſſage of his iourney hee executed at Ieruſalem that duetye of religion whiche by the lawe of the Lord was preſcribed: (And coulde hee in ſo populous a citie, whereunto there was a continuall concourſe of people out of al places, be ſafe from daunger)? that when he was gone into Egypte, Herode carefully conſidered of his daunger, and at the lengthe the boyle of his crueltie brake, which he had nouriſhed within him aboue a yeare and a halfe: for that aduerbe Then, doeth not alwaies ſignifie a continuaunce of time in the ſcripture, but is often vſed where there is a long diſtance of things.

18. In Rama was a voyce. It is certaine that the Prophet deſcribeth the deſtruction of the tribe of Beniamin, whiche came to paſſe in his tyme, for he had fortold the cutting off of the tribe of Iuda, wherunto the half tribe of Beniamin was annexed. Hee aſcribeth the mourning to Rachel which was dead, by the figure proſopopeia, which auaileth much to the moouing of affections. But Ieremias bringeth not in theſe Rethoricall coulers, only for the ſetting forth of his oration, but becauſe the hardnes & ſluggiſhneſſe of the liuing could not otherwiſe be corrected, then by calling the dead after a ſort out of their graues to lament for the vengeāce of God, which they that liue, vſe for the moſte parte to haue in deriſion. And ſith that propheſie of the prophet was fulfilled at that time; Mathew doth not vnderſtande it, as if it were there foretolde what Herode ſhould do: But that at the comming of Chriſt that lamentation ſhoulde be renewed, which the Beniamites had vſed many yeares before, and ſo he wold mete with an offence, which might trouble & ſhake the minds of the godly: namely, that no ſaluation was to be hoped for from hym, for whoſe ſake theſe infants were ſlaine aſſoone as he was borne. Naye, this ſeemed to be an vntowarde and vnhappie propheſie, that the birth of Chriſte ſhoulde kindle a greater flame of cruelty, then was woont to burne in moſte ſeuere warres with enemies. And as the prophet promiſeth a reſtoring, where a nation was cut vp euen from the very infantes: ſo Mathewe declareth, that that deſtruction ſhall not hinder, but that Chriſt ſhall ſhortly after appeare as a redemer of all the people: for wee know that all that chapter is filled with moſt ſweete conſolations. And after that funeral complaint, there preſently foloweth, refraine thy voice from weping, & thine eyes from teares, for thy worke ſhalbe rewarded, and there is hope in thine ende. Therefore this similitude is there of that former destruction executed vpon the tribe of Beniamin with this second, that both of them was a signe of saluation that should be restored.

Luke.

19. And when Herode was dead: beholde, an Angell of the Lorde appeareth in a dreame to Ioseph in Egypte.

20. Saying, arise, and take the babe & his mother, and goe into the lande of Israel: for they are dead which sought the babes life.

21. Then he arose vp, and tooke the babe and his mother, and came into the land of Israel.

22. But when hee hearde that Archelaus did raigne in Iudea, in steade of his father Herode, hee was afraid to go thether: yet after he was warned of God in a dreame, hee tourned aside into the partes of Galile.

23. And went and dwelte in a citie called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophets, which was, that he should be called a Nazarite.

19. VVhen Herode was dead. In these words is the cõstancy of the faith of Ioseph shewed, in that he remained in Egypt, vntill he was againe by the cõmandement of God called backe into his coũtrey: wherby we see that the Lord neuer forsaketh his, but that he helpeth them in time cõueniẽt. But it is probable that Ioseph presently after the death of Herod returned out of Egypt, before that Aug. Cæsar by his decre had apoynted Archelaus ruler of Iudea: for by his fathers wil he was apoynted to succede in the kingdõ, yet he abstained frõ the name of a king, being admonished that this depended vpõ the wil & apoyntment of Cæsar, yet he gouerned al things, then he went to Rome & got the same cõfirmed: only the name of a king was denied him, vntil by dedes he should deserue the same. But Philip was gouernour of Galile, a man of a soft wit, & almost like to a priuate man. Therfore Ioseph by the aduise of the Angel, went into his Countrey, becausse that there was lesse daunger vnder a Prince not geuẽ to bloud, which louingly nourished his subiects. Also the purpose of God is alwayes to be had in memorie, in that he kept his sonne alwayes from the beginninge vnder the exercises of the crosse, becausse that this was the way whereby he should redeme the Church: and for that cause tooke he vpon him our infirmities, and was subiecte to daungers, and endaungered with feares, that by his deuine power he deliuering the Church from them, he might geue it euerlasting peace: VVherfore his daunger was our safetie, and his feare our assuraunce, not that he then coulde be afraide by reason of his age, but becausse that through the feare of Ioseph and Marye hee was caried hither and thither, it might be worthely sayde, that our feares were layed vppon him, that he might obtaine a peaceable assurance for vs.

23. That hee shoulde bee called a Nazarite. Mathewe doeth not deriue a Nazarite of Nazareth, as if that this were the proper and certaine Etimologie, but it is onely an alluſion. But nzir signifieth one holye and conſecrate to God, of Nezar, which is to ſeparate, and the Hebrewes call Nezer a flower. But it is not to be doubted but that Mathewe conſidered the former ſence: For we neuer read that the Nazarites were called flouriſhing: but ſuch as were conſecrat to the Lord, according to the preſcription of the law, which is in the booke of Numbers, chap 6.4. Therfore this is the meaning. Although that Ioſeph was driuen by feare into a corner of Galile: yet God had a farther purpoſe in his counſell, and thereby was the citie of Nazareth ordayned for him to dwell in, that he might worthily beare the name of a Nazarite. But it is demaunded by whiche of the Prophets this name was giuen to Chriſte, ſith in no place there remaineth any ſuch teſtimonie. To ſome it ſeemeth ſufficient, that the ſcripture doth oft call him holy, but this is too cold an anſwear. For Mathew, as we ſee, doth ſtand vpon the word, and hath reſpect vnto the olde Nazarites, who had a peculyer kinde of holyneſſe: as if hee ſhoulde ſay, that it was meete that that ſhould be fulfilled in the perſon of chriſt, that was then ſhadowed in the Nazarites, who were as the firſte fruites choſen vnto G O D. Yet it remayneth to ſearche where the Prophetes ſay, that this name was giuen to Chriſt. Chryſoſtome becauſe he cannot vndo the knotte, cutteth it thus: ſaying, that manye of the bookes of the Prophetes are loſt. But that aunſwere hath no colour in it: for although the Lord, that he might puniſh the ſluggiſhnes of the olde people tooke from them ſome part of the ſcripture, or cutte away ſome part that was not ſo neceſſary: yet ſince the comming of Chriſt nothing was loſt. And very vnlearnedly is that place of Ioſephus brought for this purpoſe, wher he faith, that there were two bookes left by Ezechiell. For that which Ezechiel prophecieth of a new Temple and of a kingdom, is euidently diſtinguiſhed from the former propheſies, & maketh, as it were a new volunie If that at this day we haue al thoſe bookes of Scripture remayning and ſafe, which were extant in Matthewes time, it is neceſſary that this teſtimonie of the Prophet, which hee citeth ſhoulde be founde in ſome place.

But amongſt them all, in my iudgement, Bucers opinion is moſt right, who thinketh that the place out of the booke of Iudges, chap. 13.5. is heere noted. And there is mention made of Sampſon, but becauſe that Samſon is not called a redeemer of the people, but as he was a figure of Chriſt, and the deliueraunce brought by his hand and miniſterie, was a certaine token ſhadowing that full ſaluation, which at the length ſhould be brought vnto the world by the ſonne of God. VVhatſoeuer the ſcripture ſpeaketh of Sampſon in good parte, is rightlye referred to Chriſte. If any deſire to haue it plainer, Chriſte was the principall example, but Sampſon was an inferiour ſhadowe or figure of him: therefore when he was cloathed with the perſone of the redeemer, we muſt know that none of thoſe praiſes wherewith that excellent and diuine office was adorned, doeth ſo properlye belonge to him as to Chriſte: for the fathers taſted that grace of redemption, which throughe Chriſte is geuen vs to comprehend at the full. That Mathewe placeth this woorde Prophets in the plurall number, the anſweare is eaſie, becauſe that booke of the Iudges was compoſed by diuers Prophetes. Yet I thinke, that that whiche is heere ſette downe of the Prophets doeth reache farther. For Ioſeph (who was a temporall preſeruer of the Church, & many wayes bare a figure of Christe, or was rather a liuely image of him) was called the Nazarite of his brethren, Gen. 49. 26. and Deuter. 33. 16. Therefore God woulde that the excellent dignitie, whereof hee had made a shewe in Ioseph, shoulde shine in Sampson, and he gaue him the name of a Nazarite, that the faithfull beinge instructed with these small beginninges, mighte more diligently looke for their redeemer whiche was to come, who was to be separate from al, that he might be the first born amongst many brethren.

Luke 2.

Matthew.	Marke.
		40. And the childe grewe, & waxed stronge in spirite, and was filled with wisedome, and the grace of God was with him.
		41. Nowe his parents went to Ierusalem euery yeare, at the feast of the Passeouer.
		42. And when hee was twelue yeare olde, & they were come vppe to Ierusalem after the custome of the feast,
		43 And had finished the daies therof, as they retourned, the childe Iesus remained in Ierusalem, and Ioseph knew not, nor his mother,
		44. But they supposing that he had ben in the companie, went a daies iourney, and soughte him among their kinsfolke and acquaintance.
		45. And when they found him not, they turned backe to Ierusalem, and sought him.
		46. And it came to passe three dayes after, that they founde him in the Temple, sittinge in the middest of the Doctours, bothe heeringe them, and asking them questions.
		47. And all that heard him, were astonied at his vnderstanding and answeres.

40. And the childe grewe. Mathew goeth presently from the infancie of Christ to his manifestation. Luke heere reporteth one thing at the least worthy to be remembred: that is, that Christ in the midst of his youthe gaue a shew of his office to come, or at the least by this one exercise in his childehoode, he would shewe what he should be hereafter. And first hee sayeth that he grew and waxed strong in spirite: by which woordes he declareth that the giftes of his minde did encrease also together with his age. Vvherby we gather that these profitings or encreasings are referred to his humane nature, for nothing can be added more to his Godhead. Yet it is demaunded whether he did not excell in all fulnesse of spiritual gifts, presently after that he was conceiued in the wombe of his mother, for it seemeth to be absurd that any thing should be wanting to perfection in the sonne of God. Yet the answere is easie, if it derogateth nothing from his glory, that he was altogether humbled & laid lowe: then there can be no incoueniēce to him in this, that as his wil was to grow in body, so also to profite in mind for our sake. And certainly, when the apostle teacheth the He. 4. 15. that he was like vnto vs in all things except-cepting ſin, without doubt he alſo comprehendeth this, that his ſoul was ſubiect to ignorance. This is the only difference betwene vs & him, that thoſe infirmities which of neceſsitie are tied to vs, he toke vpon him freely and of his owne will. Therfore Chriſt for the reaſon and eſtate of his age according to his humane nature, encreaſed in the free giftes of the ſpirite, that out of his fulneſſe he might imparte to vs, becauſe we receiue grace out of his grace. Some which are too fearful, reſtrain that which is ſayd heere to an outward ſhewe, and expounde it, that Chriſt ſeemed to profite as though in deede he encreaſed not in any new vnderſtanding. But the words ſound otherwiſe, and this error is yet more plainly confuted, when as ſhortlye after Luke addeth. The childe profited in age and wiſedome with God and men. For it is not lawfull to imagine that there lay hid in Chriſt any vnderſtandinge, whiche in ſucceſſe of time appeared vnto God. And it is not to be doubted but that the counſel of God was plainly to expreſſe howe truely and perfectly Chriſt embraced al partes of a brotherly vniting with men, when he toke vpon him our fleſh. Neither doe wee by this meanes imagine him to be two: for although there was one perſon of God and man, yet it foloweth not that what ſoeuer was proper to the Deitie, ſhould be attributed to the humane nature: But for aſmuch as it was neceſſary for our ſaluation, the ſonne of God kept his diuine power hidde. And that which Ireneus ſayth, his Deitie reſting, he ſuffered his paſsion, I do not only interpreat it of his corporal death: but alſo of that incredible ſorow and vexation of the ſoule, who vttered this complaint vnto him: my God why haſt thou forſaken me? In ſumme, except a man ſhould deny Chriſt to be made very man, let him not be aſhamed alſo to confeſſe that he willingly tooke vppon him all thoſe things which cannot be ſeparate from our humane nature. And it is fooliſhly obiected that ignorance coulde not light vpon Chriſt, becauſe it was the puniſhment of ſinne, for the ſame may be ſaide alſo of death: but rather the ſcripture affirmeth that hee fulfilled the office of a mediator, becauſe that what puniſhments ſoeuer we had deſerued, he toke from vs & laid vpon himſelfe. Furthermore they do very groſely and ignorantly, in that they make ignorance a puniſhment of ſinne: for it cannot be thoughte, that Adam when he was yet ſound, knew al things. Neither do the Angels beare the puniſhment of ſinne, whē they are ignorant of any thing. Some conclude more ſubtilly, that there was no ignorance in Chriſt, becauſe that ignorance is a fault. But theſe alſo doe take very euil a falſe & a vaine principle: for otherwiſe it were neceſſarye for the Angelles to be like to God, that they might be without fault. Blindneſſe or ignorance of a mans minde is a fault, and is worthely accompted as a parte of originall ſinne: but here is no other ignoraunce attributed to Chriſte, then ſuche as may be in a manne pure from all ſpot of ſinne. But when Luke ſayeth that he waxed ſtrong in ſpirite, and was filled with wiſedom, he meaneth whatſoeuer wiſedome is in men, and dailye groweth in them, that it floweth out of this only fountaine, that is from the ſpirit of God. That ſpeache which foloweth (the grace of God was with him) is more generall, for it comprehendeth what excellencie ſoeuer was in him.

41. Nowe his parentes went euery yeare. Heere is the godlineſſe of Marye and Ioſeph prayſed, becauſe that they diligently exerciſed themſelues in the outwarde worſhippe of God. And they tooke not this yerely iourney ney vppon them rashly, but by the commaundement of God: for in that the lawe onely commaundeth the males, that they should present themselues in the sight of God, it doeth not wholely exclude women, but by permission spareth them. And by this note is pure religion discerned from vaine and wicked superstitions, for that shee keepeth herselfe in obedience to God, and the commaundement of his lawe: but the other wander after their owne fansie beside the woorde of God, wythout any certain rule. And although the worship of the temple was infected with many corruptions, and the priesthoode saleable, and the doctrine filled with many errours: yet because that the ceremonies of the lawe did as yet flourish there, and they keepe the outward rite of sacrificing, as was appoynted in the lawe, it behooued the faithfull to testifie their faith by such exercises. But the name of father is after the common opinion of men, improperly geuen vnto Ioseph.

44. That hee hadde beene in the companie. It appeareth by diuers places of the Scripture, that they which came on the feaste daies to the Temple to woorshippe, did vse to make their iourney in greate companyes. Wherefore it is no maruaile if that Ioseph and Marye were not so carefull for the childe the first daye. But after they shewe that they were not careleste, neyther throughe slouth nor negligence.

46. Sittinge in the middest of the Doctours. There must needes shine some beames of Gods glorye openlye in the childe, that hee was allowed to sitte by those proude menne. And although it be probable that hee sate in some lower seate, rather then in the place of the Doctours: yet these proude disdainfull menne woulde neuer haue geuen him the hearinge in the publike assemblye, excepte that some diuine power hadde compelled them, therefore this was but as a signe of his callinge, whose full time was not yet come. And therefore hee gaue them this onely taste, which presently menne had forgotten, but that Marye kepte it laid vppe in her heart, that afterwardes shee myghte bringe the same from thence with other treasures for the common vse of the godlye. And these two thinges are to be noted, that all menne merualled, because that they accompted it as a woonder, that a childe shoulde frame his questions so aptly and fittely. Againe in hearing and demaunding, Christe hymselfe rather played the parte of a scholler then of a maister. Because that as yet hee was not called of hys Father, that hee mighte professe hymselfe a publike Doctour of the Churche, hee doeth onely moue questions modestly to the Doctours. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that by this exercise he nowe began to reproue their corrupt maner of teaching: for that whiche Luke addeth after of answeares, I interpreat to be vsed after the Hebrew maner, for any woorde or speache.

Luke 2.

Mathewe. | Marke.

48. So when they saw him, they were amayed, and his mother sayd vnto him: Sonne, why hast thou thus dealt with vs? Beholde, thy father and I haue sought thee with heauie hearts.

49. Then said he vnto them: How is it that ye sought me? knew yee not that I must goe about my fathers businesse.

50. But they vnderſtoode not the worde that he ſpake vnto them.

51. Then hee went downe with them, & came to Nazareth, and was ſubiect to them, & his mother kept all theſe ſayings in her heart.

52. And Ieſus encreaſed in wiſedome & ſtature and in fauour with God and men.

48. His mother ſayd. In my iudgement they are deceiued which thinke that the holy virgine ſayde ſo as boaſting of her authoritie. But it may be that ſhee hauing him aſide, and no witneſſes being by, ſhe beganne at the lengthe to expoſtulate with her ſonne, after that he was come from the aſſemblie. Howe ſoeuer the matter was, ſhee was not caried awaye wyth ambition, but becauſe of her three daies ſorowe, ſhee vttered this complaint vnto him: yet that ſhe expoſtulateth as if ſhe was vniuſtly iniuried, doth plainly declare how ready we are by nature, hauing no regard of God, to defend our owne righte. This holy virgine had rather haue died a hundred times then of ſette purpoſe of minde ſhee woulde prefer her ſelfe before G O D: but while ſhee cockereth her motherly ſorowe, through inconſideration, ſhee ſlideth into that fault. And truely by this example we are admoniſhed to ſuſpect all the affections of the fleſh, and howe needefull it is for vs to take heede, leaſt that wee holde oure righte further then is conuenient, and being addicted to our ſelues, we ſhoulde defraude God of his honour.

49. Knewe ye not. Chriſte reprehendeth his mother woorthely, yet hee doeth the ſame ſparingly & gently. The ſumme is, that the duetie which he oweth to God his father, is farre to be preferred before all obedience to menne. Therefore thoſe earthly parentes doe ill, which ſorowe that they are neglected in reſpecte of God. And hereof is a generall doctrine to be gathered. V V hat ſoeuer is due vnto menne, ought to be ſubiecte to the firſt table of the lawe, that the power of God may remaine vntouched. So obedience is to be geuen to Kings, to Parents, and to maiſters: but no otherwiſe then vnder the power of God: that is, that nothing be taken or pulled from God for mannes cauſe: neither is oure obedience then broken towardes menne, when as there is an eſpeciall regarde had of God. About my fathers buſineſſe. By this woorde hee declareth that hee hathe ſomewhat greater then manne. Hee alſo declareth the principall ende whye hee was ſent into the worlde: namely, that he mighte fulfill that office enioyned him of his heauenly father. But it is maruell that Ioſeph and Marie vnderſtoode not this aunſweare, who had ben taught by manye teſtimonies that Ieſus was the ſonne of God, I aunſweare: Thoughe they were not altogether ignoraunte of the heauenlye ſtocke of Chriſte, yet they vnderſtoode not in euery poynte that he was occupied in fulfilling the commaundements of the father, becauſe that as yet his calling was not euidently made knowen vnto them. But in that Marye keepeth in her heart thoſe thinges, whiche as yet ſhee conceiueth not in the vnderſtanding of her minde, lette vs learne reuerently to take, and (as ſeede conceiued in the earth is nouriſhed) to laye vppe in our mindes thoſe myſteries of God, which as yet excell the capacitie of our minde.

51. He was ſubiect to them. This humblenes in that the Lord & head of Angels Angelles willingly made himſelfe ſubiect to mortal creatures, did Chriſt take vpon him for our ſaluatiō. For ſo had the counſel of god determined, that for a time he ſhould be hidde vnder the name of Ioſeph, as vnder a ſhadow. And though no neceſsitie enforced Chriſt to this ſubiection, but that he might haue exempted himſelfe from the ſame: yet becauſe that vppon this condition he had taken the nature of man vppon him, that he might be ſubiect to his parentes, and withal, he tooke vpon him the perſon of a man and of a ſeruaunt, as concerning the office of a redeemer, this was his lawfull condition; ſo that it becommeth euery one of vs more willingly to beare that yoake, that ſhall be laid vppon vs of the Lord.

Mathew. 3.	Marke. 1.	Luke. 3.
1. And in thoſe dayes, Iohn the Baptiſt came and preached in the wildernes of Iudea.	1. The beginning of the Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſte, the ſonne of God.	1. Now in the fifteenth yeere of the reigne of Tiberius Cæſar, Pontius Pilat being gouernour of Iudea, & Herod being tetrarch of Galile, & his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea, & of the cowntrey of Trachonitis, & Lyſanias the tetrarch of Abylene.
2. And ſaid, repent, for the kingdome of heauen is at hand.	2. As it is written in the Prophets: Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face which ſhall prepare thy way before thee.	2. VVhen Annas and Caiphas wer the high prieſts, the word of God came vnto Iohn, the ſon of Zacharias in the wildernes.
3. For this is he, of whō it is ſpoken by the Prophet Eſaias, ſaying, the voyce of him that crieth in the wildernes, is, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his pathes ſtreight.	3. The voyce of him that cryeth in the wildernes is, prepare ye the way of the Lorde, and make his pathes ſtreight.	3. And he came vnto al the coſts of Iordan, preaching the baptiſme of repentance, for the remiſsion of ſinnes.
4. And this Iohn had his garment of camels haire, & a girdle of a skin about his laynes: his meat was alſo locuſtes and wild honney.	4. Iohn did baptiſe in the wildernes, & preach the baptiſme of amendment of life, for remiſsion of ſinnes.	4. As it is writtē in the booke of the ſayings of Eſaias the prophet, which ſaith, the voice of him that crieth in the wildernes is, prepare yee the way of the Lorde, make his pathes ſtreight.
5. Then wente out to him Ieruſalem and al Iudea, and al the region rounde about Iordan.	5. And al the countrey of Iudea, and they of Ieruſalem went out vnto him, and were all baptiſed of him in the riuer of Iordan, confeſſing their ſinnes.	5. Euery valey ſhalbe filled, and euery mountaine & hill ſhalbe brought low, and crooked thinges ſhalbe made ſtreight, and the rough waies ſhalbe made ſmooth.
6. And they were baptiſed of him in Iordan, confeſsing their ſinnes.	6. Now Iohn was cloathed with camels haire, and with a girdle of a skin about his loins, & he did eat locuſts and wild honney.	6. And al flesh ſhal ſee the ſaluation of God.

Although that is parte of the Goſpell which we haue ſet downe beefore out of Matthew and Luke, yet it is not without a cauſe that Marke accompteth the beginning of the Goſpell at the preaching of Iohn Baptiſt. For as it is recorded in the firſt of Iohn, that then the lawe and the Prophetes were ended. The law and the Prophets to Iohn, and ſince the kingdome of God, Luke. 16. 16. And to this very aptly agreeth the teſtimonie of Malachy, which hee alleageth. The Lorde that hee might the more incēſe the mindes of men to the deſire of the promiſed ſaluation, had ordayned for a time, that the people ſhoulde bee without new propheſies, and wee know that Malachy was the laſt of the lawefull and certaine Prophetes. Alſo leaſt the hungrye Iewes ſhould in the meane while faynt, he exhorteth them that they ſhoulde keepe themſelues vnder the lawe of Moſes, vntill the promiſed redemption ſhould appeare. And he maketh mention of the lawe onely, becauſe that the doctrine of the Prophets doth differ nothing from the ſame: but it was only an Appendix & more ful expoſition, that the whole manner of gouerninge the Church might depend vppon the lawe. And it is no new or vnaccuſtomed matter in the ſcripture, to comprehende the propheſies vnder the name of the law: becauſe that al of thē were referred to them, as to their fountaine and principall poynt. And the Goſpell was not an inferiour addition to the lawe, but a new manner of teaching, which abrogateth that firſt. Malachy alſo diſcerning a double eſtate of the Churche, appoynteth the one vnder the law, and beginneth the other vnder the goſpell. For it is not to be doubted but that he meaneth Iohn Baptiſt, whē he ſaith: Behold, I wil ſend my meſſēger: becauſe (as it is now ſaid) here is an expreſſe diſtinction made betweene the law, and the new order & eſtate of the Church, which was to be in the ſame roome. In the ſame ſence he had ſayde a litle before (that which is cited by Marke: for the places are very like) Behold I ſend Elyas the Prophet to you, before that great day of the Lord ſhal come. Alſo, behold I ſend my meſſenger, who ſhall make cleane the way before me, then ſhall the Gouernour, whom ye ſeeke, come to his temple. Becauſe that he promiſeth in both theſe places a better eſtate of the Church, then was vnder the Goſpell, without doubt the beginning of the Goſpell is thereby noted. And before the Lord ſhould come forth to reſtore the Church, it is ſayd that a forewarner and cryer ſhould come before him, who ſhould declare that hee was at hande: whereby wee gather the abrogation of the law and the beeginning of the Goſpell, properly to be ſet in the preaching of Iohn. But ſith Iolin declareth that Chriſt was cloathed with fleſh, both his natiuitie, and the whole hiſtorie of his appearance is contained vnder the goſpell.

But here Marke declareth when the Goſpell beganne to be publiſhed, wherefore hee dooth not without cauſe beginne at Iohn, who was the firſt miniſter of the ſame. And for this cauſe was it the will of the heauenly father to bury, as it were in ſilence, the life of his ſonne, vntill the tyme of his full reuelation ſhoulde come. Neyther was it doone without the determinate prouidence of God, that the Euangeliſts ſhould paſſe by that whole time, that Chriſt lyued priuately at home: & ſhould by and by paſſe from his firſte infancye to the thyrtie yeere of his age, wherein he endued with the eſtate of a publike perſon, is openlye ſhewed as redeemer to the worlde: but that Luke brieflye toucheth about the twelfe yeere one ſigne and token what his calling ſhould be. And this eſpecially appertaineth for this cauſe: firſt, to know that Chriſt was very man, and then the ſonne of Abraham and of Dauid, which the lord would teſtifie vnto vs.

The reſt which we haue ſet downe of the ſhepheardes, the wiſemen and Simeon, doe appertaine to the prouuing of his deitie. And that which Luke declareth of Iohn and his father Zacharyas, was as a preface to the Goſpell. There is no abſurditie in chaunging the perſon in the wordes of Malachy. Thus God ſpeaketh by the Prophet: I ſend my meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the way before me. But by Marke the father is brought in ſpeaking to the ſonne. But wee ſee that Marke had no other purpoſe, then that he might more fully declare the minde of the Prophet.

Marke giueth Chriſte the title of the ſonne of God, whom the other Euangeliſts witneſſed to be borne of the ſeede of Abraham and of Dauid, that he might alſo be the ſonne of man. But Marke thereby declareth that no redemption can be hoped for, but from the ſonne of God.

MAT. 3. 1. In thoſe dayes. LVKE 3. 1. In the fifteenth yeere. It cannot be gathered oute of Mathewe and Marke what age Iohn was of, when hee beganne to come abroade. But Luke declareth euidently that he was then thirtie yeare olde or there about. The olde wryters of the Church declare almoſt with one conſent, that he was borne fifteene yeare before the death of Auguſtus. His ſucceſſour Tyberius hadde nowe enioyed the Empire fifteene yeares when the ſame Iohn began to preach: therefore that time of thirtie yeares which I ſpake is gathered; whereby it alſo foloweth, that hee did not long execute the office of a teacher, but that in ſhorte time hee gaue place vnto Chriſte: for Chriſte as a little after we ſhall ſee was alſo baptized when hee was thirtie yeare olde, and then he was entred to the performance of his office. But when Chriſt the ſonne of righteouſneſſe, preſently folowed Iohn his morning ſtarre, or rather the morning, it is no maruaile if that Iohn vaniſhed away, that Chriſtes onely glory might be the more manifeſt. LV. Pontius Pilate. It is probable that this was the ſeconde yeare of Pilate. For after that Tiberius hadde obtained the Empire, Ioſephus declareth in the eighteenth booke of Antiquities, that hee created Valerius Gratus gouernour of Iudea, placing hym in the roume of Annius Rufus. And this putting one in an others roume, might fall out in the ſecond yere of hys gouernment. The ſame Ioſephus declareth that Valerius was Gouernour of Iudea for the ſpace of eleuen yeares, therefore Pilate hadde holden that prouince aboue two yeare, when Iohn beganne to preache the Goſpell. This Herode whome Luke maketh Tetrarche of Galile, was the ſeconde heire of Herode the Great, who ſucceeded his father by will: for the gouernment of Iudea was geuen to Archelaus, but when hee was baniſhed by Auguſtus into Vienna, that portion fell into the handes of the Romanes for a praie.

So Luke heere rehearſeth two of Herodes ſonnes: namely, Herode Antipas, who was made Tetrarche of Galile, and hadde in poſſeſsion, Samaria and Perꝛa, and Philip who was Tetrarch of Trachonitis and Iturea, raigned from the ſea of Tiberias or Geneſara, to the foote of Libanus, from whence the floude Iordane ariſeth.

They

They vntruely imagine that Lyſanias was the ſonne of Ptolomeus Mennæus, who was king of Chalcis, who had bene ſlain before by Cleopatra, about thirtie yeers before the birth of Chriſt, as Ioſephus declareth in his fifteenth booke of antiquities. Alſo he could ſcarſly haue bin his nephew, whom the ſame Ioſephus in the firſt booke of the warre of the Ievves reporteth to haue beene the kindler of the parthean war: for then he ſhould haue beene aboue three ſcore yeere old. Furthermore, ſeeing that he ſtirred the Parthians to warre vnder Antigonus, he was of neceſsitie then growen to the eſtate of a man. But Ptolomeus Mennæus died not long after the ſlaughter of Iulius Cæſar, beeing entred into the office of the Triumuir betweene Lepidus, Antonius, and Octauius: as Ioſephus witneſſeth in the 14. booke, chap. 23. But this nephew of Ptolomeus, was called Lyſanias, as his father was, and hee might alſo leaue a ſonne of his owne name. Yet their errour is without queſtion to be reiected, which imagin that Lyſanias, who was ſlaine by Cleopatra ſhuld liue threeſcore yere after his death.

The name of Tetrarch is here vſed improperly, as though the whole region ſhould bee deuided into foure partes. But ſeeing that in the beeginning the countries were deuided into foure partes, and then that other chaunges followed: yet for honors ſake the name was ſtil cõtinued: in the which ſenſe Pliny numbreth ſeuenteene Tetrarches of one region.

2. VVere the high prieſtes. It is certaine that two high Prieſtes togeather at one time neuer occupied the prieſthod. Ioſephus witneſſeth that Caiphas was made high prieſt by Valerius Gratus, a litle before he went out of the prouince. VVee read nothing In Ioſephus, that ſhould be altered by Pilate. in that time that he gouerned Iudea: but when hee was reſtrained of his auᵭhoritie, and was commaunded to goe to Rome to aunſwere his cauſe, then at that time Vitellius, the gouernour of Syria dryuing Caiphas out, tranſpoſed the prieſthood to Ionathas, the ſonne of Anani, Antiq. 18. But that Luk nameth two high prieſts muſt not ſo be taken, as if ỽ tytle was giuen to them both: but beecauſe that the one halfe of the honour of the prieſthood was in Annas, the high prieſtes father in law. VVherefore Luke declareth that matters were then ſo troubled and confounded, that there was then no one true and certaine high prieſt, but that through ambition and tyrannicall power, that ſacred office was torne in ſunder.

The word of God came. Before that Luke reporteth, as others doe, that Iohn entred the office of teaching, he ſaith, that he was called thereunto of God, that his miniſterie might beare auᵭhoritie with it. I ſee not why the interpreters had rather to tranſlate it vppon Iohn, rather then To Iohn: yet becauſe the ſenſe is not doubtfull, namelye, that this ambaſſage was layde vp with him, and that the commandement of preaching was giuen vnto him, I follow the receiued tranſlation. Heereby gather that there are no true teachers, but to whom that office is enioyned of GOD. Neither doth it ſuffice to haue the word of God, except there be alſo an eſpeciall calling.

That Matthew and Marke make not mention but of a deſert, reconcile it with the wordes of Luke thus, Iohn beganne his office of teaching amongſt his neighbours with whom hee dwelt, then he ſpread his

Goſpell

Goſpell farther,that it might be knowne in mo places: whereby it came to paſſe,that in ſhort time his fame ſpread vnto Ieruſalem. Yet that coaſt of Iordan might be called deſertum,a deſert: for it doth not ſignifie a place not inhabited,but a ſharpe and hilly countrey,which is occupyed with a leſſe reſorte of men.

2. Math: Repent. Matthew differeth from the other two Euangeliſtes in this,that in the perſon of Iohn he ſetteth downe the ſumme of his doctrine,and they ſet it downe in his owne words. Yet Marke hath more by one word then Luke: for he ſaith,he came, baptiſing and preaching the baptiſme of repentaunce,but in the matter it ſelfe the conſent is very good. beecauſe that all ioyne repentaunce with forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. For the kingdome of GOD amongſt men is nothing els then a reſtoring to a happy life,and ſo a true and eternall felycitie. Therefore when Iohn ſaith,that the kingdome of God is at hand,he meaneth that men,which were eſtraunged from the righteouſneſſe of God,and baniſhed the kingdome of heauen,are againe gathered vnto God, that they might lyue vnder his hand. And this doth free adoption and forgiuenes of ſinnes worke,whereby hee reconcileth the vnworthy to himſelfe. In ſumme,the kingdome of heauen is nothing elſe then newneſſe of lyfe, wherein God reſtoreth vs into the hope of eternall immortalytie. For we being taken out of the bondage of ſinne and death,he chalengeth vs vnto himſelfe,that wee wandring here vpon earth,might now by fayth poſſeſſe that heauenly life: to the Epheſians 1.4. For although we be like to dead men,yet we know that our lyfe is in ſafetie,while that it is hidde in Chriſte. Colloſſ. 3. Frō hence,as out of a fountaine is the exhortation to repentaunce gathered. And Iohn ſaieth not repent,and then by this meanes the kingdome of heauen ſhall appeare: but in the firſt place he propoſeth the grace of GOD,and then hee exhorteth menne that they ſhoulde repent. VVhereby it is euident,that the mercy of God, whereby he reſtoreth thoſe that are loſt to be the foundation of repentaunce. Neither doe Matthew and Luke in any other ſenſe reporte that he preached repentaunce for the remiſsion of ſinnes: for repentaunce, (as ſome vnwiſely imagine) is not placed firſt,as if it ſhould be the cauſe of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes,or that it might preuent God, that hee might beginne to be mercifull vnto vs: but men are cōmaunded to repent, that they might receiue the reconcilyation offered them. But as the free loue of GOD, whereby hee imbraceth miſerable men, not imputing their ſinnes vnto them,orderly goeth before; ſo it is to be noted,that we haue forgiuenes of ſinnes in Chriſt: not that God would nouriſh them through his loue: but that hee might heale vs from them. Neyther can any man taſte the grace of GOD,except he hate ſinne,and be diſpleaſed with offēces: but by the definition of repentaunce and fayth it may be fullyer knowne,how vnſeperably they are ioyned togeather: therefore in entreating of this doctrine I am the ſparer.

But for the better vnderſtanding of this preſent place, it is meete to obſerue that the whole Goſpell conſiſteth of two partes: forgiueneſſe of ſinnes,and repentaunce. And in that Matthew noteth the firſt parte by the kingdome of heauen,it may thereby be gathered,that there was hoſtile diſſention betweene men and God,and that they were wholy baniſhed out of the kingdome of heauen, vntill that God ſhoulde againe receiue them into his fauour. And though Iohn propoſing the grace of God, exhorteth menne to repentaunce, yet it is to be noted, that this alſo is the gift of God, aſwell as the enheritaunce of the kingdom of heauen. For as hee freely forgiueth vs our ſinnes, and by his mercy delyuereth vs from the guiltineſſe of eternall death; ſo alſo hee repayreth vs after his owne image, that we might liue to righteouſneſſe. As he freely adopteth vs to be his ſonnes; ſo hee regenerateth vs by his ſpirite, that our life might teſtifie, that we doe not falſly cal him father. And Chriſt doth no leſſe quicken vs vnto righteouſneſſe, by crucifying our old man, and by extinguiſhing the faults of our fleſhe, then he doth waſh away our ſinnes by his bloud, and appeaſe his heauenlye father towardes vs, with the ſacrifice of his owne death. Yet this is the ſumme of the Goſpell, that GOD embraceth vs in his Sonne, our ſinnes being waſhed awaye: that wee denying our ſelues, and our owne nature, might liue holylye and godlyly; and ſo ſhoulde meditate a heauenly lyfe vpon the earth.

3. LV. Preaching the baptiſme of repentaunce. This maner of ſpeaking dooth firſt generally ſhewe, what is the right vſe of the Sacramentes: Then for what purpoſe Baptiſme was inſtituted, and what it doth containe.

A Sacrament therefore is not a dumbe ceremonie, which ſheweth I wotte not what pompe, without doctrine, but hath the worde of God annexed to it, which giueth lyfe to the outwarde ceremonie. I meane not that worde, which ſome Exorciſt muttereth with magycall whiſperings: but that which pronounced with clear & open voyce doth auaile to the edifying of fayth. For it is not ſimplye ſayde that Iohn baptiſed to repentaunce, as if the grace of GOD hadde beene included in the viſible ſigne: but that hee preached what the profit of baptiſme was, that the ſigne might be made effectuall by the woorde preached. And this is peculyar to baptiſme, that it is called the ſeale of repentance for forgiueneſſe of ſinne.

Nowe ſeeing that his Baptiſme hadde the ſame ſignification, power and manner, which ours haue: If a figure bee eſteemed by the trueth thereof, it is falſe, that the baptiſmes of Iohn and Chriſte are diuerſe.

MATH. 3. The voyce of a cryer in the wilderneſſe. Although that place of Iſaias 40. 1. ought not to be reſtrained onely to Iohn: yet hee is one of them, of whom that is there ſpoken: for after the Prophet hath ſpoken of the ouerthrowe of the Citie, and the extreame calamitie of the people, he promiſeth a new reſtitution of the people. The words were, the Lord ſhal ſay againe, comfort ye, comfort ye my people. For after the temple was ouerthrowne, and the Sacrifices abolyſhed, the people were lead into captiuitie, and their eſtate was almoſt deſperat: and becauſe their eares were deaffe at the continuall calling of the Prophets, the Lorde did as it were holde his peace for a time. Leaſt the godlye myndes ſhoulde fall downe in that ſorrowfull ſilence the Prophet declareth that there ſhoulde agayne aryſe newe Preachers of grace, which ſhoulde comforte the people in the hope of ſaluation. Suche were Za-charyah, Haggai, Malachy, Eſdras, and ſuch lyke . But beecauſe that there is promiſed a reſtitution , which ſhoulde bee perpetuall , and not for a ſhorte tyme: and Iſaias eſpecially reſpecteth the redemption which was hoped for: by the comming of Chriſte, Iohn was rightlye accounted the chiefe amongſt the miniſters of comforte . Then it followeth in the texte of the Prophet : The voyce of a cryer , and that voyce is oppoſed to the ſilence for a time, whereof I ſpake euen nowe : for the Iewes,were for a tyme depriued of that doctrine , which they had vngodlyly contemned.

The name of a deſerte is metaphorically put for a deſolation or a deformed ruine of the people, as was in the time of the baniſhment . For there was ſo horryble a diſsipation , that it might bee compared to a deſerte ; ſo the prophet amplifieth the grace of GOD, as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde,although the people was thrown farre from their countrey, and was banyſhed out of the company of menne, yet the voyce of God ſhall alſo reſounde in the deſerte , which ſhall ioyfullye comforte them that are halfe dead. In this ſenſe Ieruſalem was the deſerte, when Iohn beganne firſte to preach : for in euery place all thinges were brought into a waſte and horyble confuſion . But it behooued thoſe groſſe and fooliſhe men the more to be ſtyrred vppe by beeholding this viſible deſerte, that thereby they might the more greedilye haue receiued the promiſe of ſaluation offered vnto them in death.

Now wee ſee how truely this propheſie agreeth vnto Iohn,and how properly it is applyed vnto him. Prepare ye the way of the Lord. It is not to be doubted, but that the Prophet ſpeaketh to Cyrus,& the Perſians whoſe ayde GOD vſed : and the meaning is,that the Lorde would by a wonderfull power bring to paſſe, that a waye ſhoulde be opened to his people by wayes vntrauailed , by ſteepe rockes , and by the drye deſerte , beecauſe that hee had at hande miniſters of his grace,which ſhould take all lettes and hinderaunces out of the waye. But that was a beeginning, ſhadowing the redemption.

And when the ſpirituall trueth commeth into the light , Iohn is ſent, that hee might remoue thoſe lettes . And daylye the ſame voyce ſoundeth in our eares , that wee ſhoulde prepare a way to the Lorde: that is: that vices beeing taken awaye , which ſhutte vppe the kingdome of Chriſte, wee ſhoulde giue acceſſe to his grace . To the ſame purpoſe alſo beelongeth that which followeth in the Prophet: The crooked ſhall bee made ſtreight: for hee meaneth that there are onely rough and troubleſome courſes in the worlde: But that through ſo hard paſſages the Lorde will make himſelfe a waye , that by a woonderfull meanes hee might pearſe through to the accompliſhing of our ſaluation.

6. All fleſhe ſhall ſee. The meaning is , that this ſaluation ſhall not bee kepte ſecrete, or taſted onely by a fewe menne : but that it ſhall be knowen and common to all . VVhereof it followeth , that this propheſie was not fulfilled in the returne of the people . For although GOD then ſhewed a token of his fauour woorthye to bee remembred, yet hee did not then reueale his ſaluation to all the woorlde.

Nay,

Naye, it is the purpoſe of the Prophet to oppoſe the wonderfull excellẽcie of ſaluation, which was to be reuealed, againſt the former benefites of god, that the faithful might know that he neuer dealt ſo notably with the Church, and that the power of God was neuer ſo excellently ſhewed in the deliueraunce of his. Fleſh in this place doth ſignifie men, without the note of ſinne.

4. Matth. Iohn had his garment. The Euangeliſt dooth not accompt this amongſt his eſpeciall vertues, that hee was addict to a rude and auſtere manner of lyuing, he alſo fled a meane and an accuſtomed cleannesſe: But becauſe he had ſaid before that he was a manne dwelling among the mountaines.

Now he addeth that his meate and his apparell was according to his dwelling place. And this hee reheaſeth not onely, that wee might know that hee tooke no delycates, being content with countrey meate and apparell: But that in his filthy and contemptible habite he was much eſteemed amongſt men very delicate and renoumed. Furthermore, as ſuperſtition appoynted almoſte a perfect righteouſneſſe in theſe outwarde ſhewes, they commonly thought that ſuch decency was a heap of holyneſſe. There was an other fault neere vnto this, that they woulde imagine that this man in this ſolitarie lyfe, abhorred the common maner of lyuinge, as Eremites and Moonkes excell in this one thing, if they could differ from the reſt. At the length there grew ouer groſſe ignoraunce, that they made of his garmente of hayres, a whole skinne. And it is not to be doubted but that the Euangeliſte diſcrybeth heere a mountaine man, farre from all vrbanitie, fineneſſe, and daintineſſe, not onely content with meate that might be gotten, but onely eating naturall meates; as wilde honney, whereof there was good plentie enough in that place, and Locuſtes, whereof the countrey was alſo very fruitful. Or, becauſe it was profitable, that a man contemned, and not fauoured for any excellency, ſhould come forth into the world, that the onely maieſtie of GOD might ſhine in him, which yet ſhoulde draw all men to wonder at him. For that is to be noted, which is added, that great concourſe of people came vnto him from euery place: whereby wee gather how renoumed his fame was. Or becauſe it was the purpoſe of God to propoſe in him a rare example of frugalytie, that by this meanes hee might allure the Iewes to reuerence his doctrine, or at the leaſte, that he might conuince the Iewes of vnthankfulneſſe, according to that ſayinge of Chriſte, Iohn came neyther eating nor drinkeing, &c. Luke 7.33.

6. Matth. 3. Mar. They were baptiſed, confeſſing their ſinnes. This confeſſion was a teſtimonie of their repentaunce. For as the Lord in his ſacramentes doth binde himſelf vnto vs, as it were by giuing vs his hand writing; ſo it is alſo meete that we ſhould aunſwere him againe. In baptiſm he witneſſeth that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs, and he calleth vs to repentaunce. Therefore that men may rightly offer themſelues vnto baptiſm, they are required to confeſſe their ſinnes: otherwiſe the whole action ſhould be nothing elſe but a vaine ſporte. It is alſo to be noted, that hee heere ſpeaketh of them that are growen to ſome age: who we know are not to be admitted without conſideration into the Church, nor by baptiſme to be receiued into the body of Chriſt, except there be firſt an examination mination had. VVhereby it is manifeſt, how ridiculous the Papiſts were, which wreſt this to auricular confeſsion. For the ſacrificers were not preſent, into whoſe eares priuilye all of them ſhoulde whiſper their own ſinnes: neither is there mention made of all the ſinnes, neyther is it ſaid that Iohn commaunded, or gaue his Diſciples an ordinary manner of confeſsing: And that wee maye graunte the Papiſtes that, which they require: Confeſsion ſhall beelonge to them onely, that ſhall bee catechyzed, and after Baptiſme it ſhall haue no place. Truely they agaynſt the example of Iohn doe preſcrybe a lawe of Confeſsion after Baptiſme.

Matth. 3.	Marke.	Luke. 3.

		14. The ſoldiours likewiſe demaunded of him, ſaying: And what ſhall we doe? And he ſaid vnto thē doe violence to no man, neyther accuſe any falſly, and be content with your wages.

MAT. 7. VVhen he ſaw many of the Phariſes. Here Math. and Luke doe declare that Iohn did not onlygeneraly preach repentãce, but alſo that he applyed his ſpeach to the perſõs. And truly it wil be a cold maner of teaching, except the teachers doe wiſely conſider what the time requireth, and what is fitte for the perſons: and there is not in this behalf any thing more vnequall then a perpetuall equalytie. And for this cauſe it is ſayde that Iohn did more ſeuerely hãdle the Phariſes and the Saduces: becauſe that through the hypocriſie & prid, wherein they ſwelled, it ſeemed meet that they ſhould be more ſharply puniſhed then the cõmon ſort of men. But that we may well vnderſtand his purpoſe, it is to be known that ther is no people more without ſenſe and feeling then the hypocrites, which with an outward ſhew of holines deceiue themſelues and others. For as God thundereth euery where againſt the whole world; ſo they in a falſe imagination frame vnto themſelues a ſanctuarie: beecauſe they are perſwaded that they haue nothing to doe with the iudgement of God. If any think that Iohn dealt prepoſterouſly, that at the firſt ſalutatiõ he entertained them ſo hardly: I anſwer that they were not vnknown vnto him, and the knowledge which he had was not by cuſtome or experience, but rather by the ſecrete reuelation of the ſpirit: wherfore they were no whit the leſſe to be ſpared, leaſt with the greater prid they ſhuld return home. If any againe ſhall obiect, that they were not to be feared with ſo ſharpe a rebuking, which by baptiſme profeſſed that they would become other men: an anſwere is alſo readie, they which are accuſtomed to lie to God, and to pleaſe themſelues, and ſhew deceite & diſſimulation for the truth, are more hardly to be vrged to true repentaunce. For there is, as I ſayde, a wonderfull obſtinacie in hypocrites: therefore vntill they be skoured with violence, they hold very faſt their ſhew.

Now that Iohn reproueth and rebuketh them openly before al men, is for an example, in which ſenſe Luke reporteth that he ſpak this to the people. For though Iohn pinched but fewe menne, yet he had regard of all, that he might ſtrike a feare into them: as Paule, 1. Tim. 5. 20. commaundeth, that in open reprouinges this profit ſhould be looked for. Therefore he peculyarly ſpeaking to the Phariſes and Saduces, dooth in their perſon admoniſh all the reſte, that they ſhoulde not ſhewe forth a faigned ſhewe of repentaunce, for a true affection.

Furthermore it was greatly for the profitte of al the people to know what manner of menne the Saduces and the Phariſes were, by whome the worſhippe of GOD was miſerablye corrupted, the Churche waſted, and the whole relygion ouerthrowne, and to be ſhorte, who hadde with their corruptions extinguiſhed the light of GOD, and with theyr ſinnes had infected all thinges. Therefore it is probable that Iohn did openly ſette vppon the Phariſes, that hee might prouide for the whole Church of GOD: that, they ſhould no more with a vaine ſhewe holde the eyes of the ſimple, nor oppreſſe the people with their wicked tirannie. And therein was alſo ſhewed his wonderful conſtancie, that though they excelled all others: yet he ſpared not their dignitie, but ſharplye, as they were worthy, he brought them into courſe. So it becommeth al godlye teachers to be bolde, that they ſhoulde not feare anye power of men, but that without feare they ſhould ſtriue to throwe downe euerye hygh thing, which lifteth vp it ſelfe againſt Chriſt. If that they which willingly came to Baptiſme, that they might giue theyr name to the Goſpell, were ſo ſharpely ſaluted by the inſtrument of the holy Ghoſt: how muſt we then doe at this day with the profeſſed enemies of Chriſt, which not onely ſtubbornly refuſe all taſte of ſound doctrine, but more violentlye goe on with ſword and fire to blotte out the name of Chriſte? Certeinlye if thou ſhouldeſt compare the Pope and his filthy cleargy, they ſhalbe very gently dealt with, if they be caſt into one bundle togeather. Wherfore let them quarell not with vs, but with the ſpirit of God, whoſe cares are ſo delicate, that they can abide nothing to be ſpoken ſharply agaynſt the Pope. Yet let godly teachers take heede to themſelues, while they are caryed with a goaly zeale againſt the tyrantes of the Church, leaſt they myxe the affections of the fleſhe. And becauſe that no vehemencie canne be approoued of GOD, but that which is moderated by the wiſedome of the ſpirite, let them not onely reſtraine theyr affections, but let them delyuer and commit themſelues to the holy Ghoſt to be gouerned, leaſt any thing paſſe from them without conſideration.

Hee calleth them generation of Vypers, rather then Vipers, that hee myght lay that venymous poyſon to all the ſorte of them: for he would not condemne only theſe fewe, which were there preſent, but the whole bodye: as if he ſhould ſay, that both the ſortes did but engender ſerpents. There were great diſſentions betweene them, but the contempt of God, a wicked deſire of rule, a hatred of ſound doctrine, and a heape of many ſinnes. VVho hath forewarned you? Becauſe he ſuſpected theyr repentaunce, he doubting it, enquireth with admiration, whether it be poſsible that they ſhould repent from the heart. By this meanes he ſtirreth them to a more neare examination of their conſcience, that they ſhould ſifte themſelues more deeply, & that al flatteries being remoued farre from them, they might exerciſe a more ſeuere cenſure in calling their ſinnes into queſtion.

VVrath is here taken for the iudgment of God, as in diuerſe other places it is vſed: as when Paule ſaith, Rom. 4. 15. & 12. 19. The lawe worketh wrath, and giue ye place to wrath. And he calleth it to come, which hangeth ouer their heads, leaſt according to their wont, they nouriſh vp theſelues in ſecuritie. Yet hee therefore maketh mention of the tyme to come: becauſe the hypocrites as long as GOD ſpareth them, doe carelelly deſpyſe his threates: for they are not wakened, except they be ſtriken hard. For though the wrath of GOD flowe forth, and that his roddes doe ſtryke the whole earth, yet the hypocrites doe alwayes hope that they are free.

To flee the wrath of God is here taken in good parte: for it is as much as to ſeeke the meanes to appeaſe GOD, that he might ceaſe to be angry with vs. For a great number of men, that they might eſcape the wrath of God do withdraw themſelues from his hand and iudgement, but ſo the ſinner profiteth nothing by fleeing from God, but dooth rather more and more encreaſe his wrath vppon him.

MAT. LV. 8 Bring forth therefore fruits He confirmeth that which I ſayd before, that the repentaunce which is teſtified in wordes is of no value, except they proue the ſame in deede: for it is a thing more precious, then that there ſhould be a lyght and vaine opinion of the ſame. Therefore Iohn denyeth, that the open teſtimonye which they gaue was ſufficient:

but he ſaith that in proceſſe of time it ſhalbe reuealed by their workes, whether they doe earneſtly repent. It is to be noted that good works are called the fruits of repentaunce: for repentance is inward, which is placed in the heart and the minde: but then in the chaung of the life it bringeth forth the fruites of the ſame. And becauſe that in popery all this poynt of doctrine was filthyly corrupted, this difference is to be holden, that repentance is an inward renewing of a man, which ſpringeth forth in outward life, as the tree bringeth forth fruit out of it.

MAT. 9. Think not to ſay with your ſelues. LV. 8. Begin not to ſay. Sith it is certain that there is but one meaning of both theſe ſpeaches, we do eaſily gather what Iohn would. The hypocrits do either ſleepe in their ſins, or licentiouſly & proudly vaunt thēſelues vntil they be oppreſſed: but when they are cited to the tribunal ſeat of god, then they carefully ſeeke means to eſcape, & lurking corners, or pretend ſome colour: Therfore Iohn thus ſpeaketh vnto the Phariſes & Saduces. Now that you are ſharply reproued of me, do not as ſuch as you are, vſe to doe: that is, ſeek not a remedie by a vaine & falſe pretence. And he wreſteth from thē that wicked hope, wherwith they were bewitched: the couenant which GOD made with Abrahā was vnto thē in ſteede of a ſhielde to couer an euil conſcience, not that they ſetled their hope in the perſō of one man: but becauſe that God had adopted the whole ſtock of Abraham. In the meane while they thought not, that none are to be accounted of the ſeede of Abrahā, but they which folow his faith; and the couenaunt of God is not ratified, that it may profit to ſaluation but by faith. And that clauſe in your ſelues is not ſuperfluous: for although in ſpeach they did not boaſt themſelues to be the ſonnes of Abraham; yet inwardly they pleaſed themſelues with this title: ſo that the hypocrites are nothing more aſhamed to mock God then men.

God able. The Iewes flattered themſelues almoſt with the ſame pretence, which the Papiſts at this day do inſolently chaleng to themſelues. It is neceſſary that there ſhoulde be a Church in the worlde: for GOD will be knowne, and haue his name called vppon in the worlde, and the Church cannot bee other where but with vs, with whom the Lord hath made his couenaunt. The Prieſtes and other, which had the gouerment and authoritie, were eſpecially puffed vp with this arrogancie: for they accounted the common people prophane and accurſed, as wee reade in Iohn 7.49. And they thought themſelues to be the holy firſt fruites: as at this day the horned biſhops, Abbots, Canons, Monks, Sorboniſts, & al the ſacrificers being lift vp with the proud title of the Cleargie, do in cōpariſon of themſelues deſpiſe the laitie. This errour doth Iohn reproue & refel, in that they do to ſtraightly reſtraine the promiſe of God, ſhewing that though God had none of them, that yet he would not be without a Church. Therefore the meaning of the words is, God made a couenant with Abraham & his ſeede. One thing deceiueth you, that whē you are more thē degenerate, you think your ſelues to be the only ſons of Abraham: but god wil frō an other place raiſe vp a new ſeed to Abrahā, which doth not now appear: & he ſpeaketh in the datiue caſe: He will raiſe vp children vnto Abraham, that they might know the promiſe of God was not to no effecte, and that Abraham, who obeyed hym, ſhoulde not bee deceyued, although there wanted ſeede in them; ſo from the beeginning ning of the worlde, the Lorde was true to his ſeruauntes, neither did he euer fayle in perfourming his promiſe of ſhewing fauour to their children, although hee reiected the hypocrites. That many thinke that Iohn ſpeaketh this of the calling of the gentiles, ſeemeth not to me to be of force: but becauſe that it ſeemed incredible to theſe proude men, that the Church might be tranſferred to any other place, he admoniſheth thē that God hath meanes to preſerue his Church, which they did not think of: as if he ſhould make him children of ſtones.

MAT. 10. LV. 9. Now alſo u the axe. After that Iohn had taken that couer of vaine hope from the hypocrits, he pronounceth that the iudgement of God is nigh. He had ſaid before, that they being caſt off, that god ſhuld not want a people: now he addeth that God himſelf is now in the ſame, that he might driue the vnworthy out of the Church, as barré trees vſe to be cut vp. The ſumme is that the hand of GOD is now ſtretched forth to purge the Church: for the grace of God doth neuer ſhewe it ſelf for the ſaluation of the godly: but withal his iudgement commeth forth for the deſtruction of the worlde, and that for two cauſes; becauſe that then the Lord ſeperateth his from the reprobate, and the vnthankfulnes of the world prouoketh his wrath a new. VVherefore it is no meruaile, if the preaching of the Goſpell, and the comming of Chriſt doe put the axe to cutte away the corrupt trees, and ſhould dayly haſten the vengeaunce of God againſt the wicked.

LV. 11 The people asked him. A true affection of repentaunce engendreth this carefulneſſe, that the ſinner deſirouſlye enquireth what God willed and commaunded, and the aunſwere of Iohn doth briefly define the fruites worthy of repentaunce. For the worlde alwayes deſireth to be diſcharged of the ceremonies towardes God, and dooth nothing more readily then ſette faigned and deuiſed worſhippinges before God, ſo ofte as hee calleth to repentaunce. But what fruites dooth the Baptiſt commende in this place? The dueties of charitie, and of the ſecond table, not that God neglecteth the outward profeſsion of godlines, & of his worſhip: but becauſe this note of difference is more certaine, & dooth often leſſe deceiue. For the hypocrites doe painefullye endeuour, that they might ſhewe themſelues worſhippers of GOD in ceremonies, and yet lette paſſe the care of true righteouſneſſe, when they are eyther vnkinde to their neighbours, or giuen to deceites and ſpoyles. VVherefore neceſſarilye they are to be called to a ſtraighter examination, whether they lyue honeſtly amongſt menne, whether they helpe the poore, whether they ſpare them in miſery, whether they louingly communicate thoſe thinges, which the Lorde hath giuen them. For this cauſe Chriſte in Matthew 23. 23. calleth iuſtice, mercie, and trueth, the chiefe poyntes of the lawe, and the ſcripture in diuerſe places commendeth iuſtice and iudgement.

This is to be noted, that the dueties of charitie are firſt named, not that they excell the worſhippe of GOD; but as the witneſſe of the godlynes of menne, that their diſſimulation may be layd open, which bragge that with their mouth, which is farre from their heart. But it is demaunded whether Iohn laid this law preciſely vpon al thē, which Chriſt had prepared to be his diſciples, that they ſhould not haue two coates. Fyrſt it is to be noted, that this is a figuratiue ſpeech, from the parte to the whole:

becauſe that vnder one kinde there is comprehended a general doctrine. Hereof it followeth that ſuch a meaning is to be gathered, as agreeth to the rule of charitie, which is preſcribed of God: namely, that euery man of his aboundaunce ſhould helpe the neede of the poore. For the Lorde doth not wreſt a tribute from them, that they ſhould giue ſorowfullye and vnwillingly, which by compulſion ſhould be conſtrained to doe that they would not: but he loueth cheereful and willing giuers, as Paul ſaith 2. Cor. 9. 7. This I ſpeake for this purpoſe: becauſe it auayleth much that men ſhould be perſwaded, that that which they offer of their goodes is an acceptable ſacrifice of a ſweete ſauour vnto God. And they doe not onely caſt a feare vppon the conſciences, but they drowne them in dyſpayre, whoſoeuer make a lawe that no man ſhould poſſeſſe any thing of his owne. But there nead no long confutation to bee vſed againſt theſe fanatical men, which ſo bytingly ſnatch at the letter. If it be not laweful to haue two coates, the ſame is to be ſaid of diſhes, of ſaltſellers, of ſhirts, and of all houſholdſtuffe. But by the text it appeareth, that Iohn meant nothing leſſe, then to ouerthrow the politike eſtate: whereby we gather that he commaunded nothing els, then that the rich menne, according to their abilities, ſhould beſtow vpon the poore, that, which their neceſsitie required: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, looke what thinges your neighbours doe want, for the ſuſtentation of their life, and you haue aboundance of, that your aboundaunce may helpe their neede. Furthermore, how much more God nouriſheth vs; ſo much more muſt euery man beware, that we cocker not our ſelues. Let rather the neceſsitie of brethren vrge vs, and what benefites of God ſoeuer we haue by vs, let them enforce vs to charitable well doing.

12. And the Publicans came. Hee doth not onely generally exhort the Publycans, that they ſhuld repent, but he requireth thoſe things, which belōg to their calling. For we know that beſids the general rule of the law, euery one muſt looke what the eſtate of lyfe, whereunto he is called requireth. Loue is generally commaunded to al chriſtians: but there folow particuler dueties, wherein the doctour to the Church, the magiſtrate or prince to the people; and againe, the people to the magiſtrate, the huſband to the wife, and againe, the wife to him: and laſt, the children and the parēts are bound the one to the other. Furthermore, becauſe that they vexed (as it is a couetous, rauenous, and cruel kind of men) the common people with vniuſt exactions: the Baptiſt reproueth thoſe faultes, wherewith that people was moſt infected, forbidding that they ſhould not exceade meaſure in exacting tributes: yet hereby we gather, that it is no leſſe lawfull for a Chriſtian to gather tribute,, then it is graunted to the magiſtrat, to lay it vpon them. The ſame is to be thought of warfare, Iohn commaundeth not the ſoldiours to throw away their weapons, and to forſake their calling: but he forbiddeth vnder the pretence of warfare to ſpoyle the poore people, to oppreſſe the innocent with iniuries, to go abroade after the manner of theeues, as manye were woont; ſo in theſe words there is a priuat approbation of a polliticke eſtate. It is a friuolous cauill, that here are onely delyuered inſtructions for the rude, which are farre vnderneath a Chriſtian perfection. It was the office of Iohn to make the people perfect to the Lord: and it is not to be doubted, but that wholly he applyed himſelfe faythfully in this matter. And truely they diffame the gospel with a sacrylegious accusatiō, which make it contrary to the gouernementes of men; as if Christ should destroy that, which his heauenly father hath ordayned. For without the sword the lawes are dead, and there is no power nor auctoritie in iudgements. Neither hath the magistrate onely neede of an executioner, but also of other officers, of which number are soldiours, where peace cannot otherwise bee preserued, but by their ayde and hand: only the end is to be considered, that Princes make not a iesting sporte at mans bloud, that soldiours placed to bestow their helpes to kill, be not caryed with the desire of gaine to crueltie, but that they both be drawne with the necessitie & respect of publike profit.

Matth. 3.	Mar. 1.	Luke. 3.
11. Indeede I baptise you with water, to amendment of lyfe: but hee that commeth after me, is mightier then I, whose shoes I am not worthy to beare, he will baptise you with the holye Ghost, and with fire.	7. And preached, saying, A stronger then I commeth after me, whose shooes latchet I am not worthye to stoupe down, and vnlose.	15. As the people waited, and all menne mused in their heartes, of Iohn, if hee were not the Christ:
12. VVhiche hath his fanne in his hande, and will make cleane his floore, & gather his wheat into his garner, but wil burn vp the chaf with vnquenchable fire.	8. Trueth it is, I haue baptised you with water: but hee will baptise you with the holy Ghost.	16. Iohn answered, and sayde to them all: In deede I baptise you with water: but one stronger then I commeth, whose shooes latchet I am not worthy to vnlose: he wil baptise you with the holy Ghost and with fire.
		17. VVhose fanne is in his hand, and hee will make cleane his floore, and will gather the wheate into his garner: but the chaf wil he burn vp with fire that neuer shalbe quenshed.
		18. Thus then exhorting with many others thinges, he preached vnto the people.

The Euangelistes reporte the same wordes of the Baptist. In this one thing Luke is more plentifull, in that he first declareth vpon what occasion this sermon was made: namely, because it was in daunger least the people through a false opinion shoulde giue the honour due to Christe, to him. Therefore that he might speedily take away the occasion of the errour, he openly testifieth that he is not Christe, and so putteth a difference betweene himselfe and Christe, that he might giue him his right. And this he doth willingly, that he might delyuer his disciples to Christ from hand (as they say) to hand: but hee preuenteth it the speedilyer, least by holding his peace the longer, hee might confirme the errour of the people.

VVhen hee saieth that a stronger shall come, hee meaneth one endued with a farre other power and dignitie, in respecte of whom hee himselfe is to be brought into order. And he vseth common phrases, wherwith he ſo extolleth the glory of Chriſt, that in compariſon of him, hee declareth that he himſelf is nothing. This yet is the chief, that he accounteth Chriſt the aucthour of the ſpirituall baptiſme, and that he is the miniſter onely of the outward. And it ſeemeth to be an anſwere to a ſecrete obiection, if peraduenture any ſhould obiect to what ende belonged that Baptiſme, which he tooke to himſelfe: for it were not a matter of light weight, to bring any thing into the Church of God, but eſpecially to profeſſe a newe kinde of inſtruction which ſhould be more perfecte then the law of God: therfore he anſwereth that he taketh nothing in hand raſhly, that yet he was the miniſter of the outward ſeale, whiche diminiſhed nothing from the power and glory of Chriſt: whereby we gather that his purpoſe was not to diſtinguiſh his baptiſme from that, which Chriſt commaunded to his diſciples, and whoſe perpetuall vſe he willed to flouriſh in his church. Neither doth he oppoſe the viſible ſigne, to the other ſigne, but comparing the perſons of the Lord and of the ſeruaunt together, he teacheth what is proper to the Lorde, and what is to be attributed to the ſeruant. Neither let that opinion hinder vs, which now long ago was ſpread euery where, that the baptiſme of Iohn doth differ from ours: but we muſt learne to iudge by the matter it ſelf rather then by the errour of men. And truly the cõpariſon which they imagine ſhould bee too abſurd: for therby it foloweth that the holy ghoſt ſhould bee giuen at this daye by the miniſters: agayne it ſhoulde followe that the baptiſme of Iohn was a dead ſigne, and voide of all power. Thirdly it ſhould folow, that we had not a baptiſm common to Chriſt & to vs, ſeeing it ſufficiently appeareth, that by this ſeale he ſanctifieth that felowſhip, which he vouchſafeth to haue with vs, while that in his owne body he conſecrated baptiſme. Therefore here is to bee holden that, which I ſayde before, that Iohn here ſimply diſcerneth the perſon of Chriſt, from himſelfe and all other miniſters of Baptiſme, that the Lorde might be aboue the ſeruauntes. And here is gathered a generall doctrine, what are the dueties of men in baptiſme, and what is proper to the ſonne of God: for the onely adminiſtration of the outwarde and viſible ſigne is committed to men: but the trueth it ſelfe reſteth in the power of Chriſt alone. The ſcripture doth ſomtime improperly aſſigne that to mẽ, which Iohn here chalengeth to Chriſt alone, & affirmeth that belongeth not to men: but thẽ the ſcripture waieth not what ſpecialy man hath of himſelf, but ſimply teacheth the power & the profit of the ſignes, and how God worketh with his ſpirit through the ſame. But here is a diſtinction made betweene Chriſt and his miniſters, leaſt that which is worthily due to the one, the world ſhould wickedly giue to the other: as it is not more bent to any thing, then to adorne the creatures with thoſe thinges that belõg to God. And this obſeruation ſhal helpe vs out of many difficulties. We know how great iars there are in our age about the vſe & effecacy of the ſignes, all which may be anſwered, that the whole inſtitution of the lord comprehendeth the aucthour himſelf, and the power of the ſpirit, togeather with the figure and the miniſter: but whereas the miniſter is compared with the Lord, that the Lord may haue al, & the miniſters brought to nothing.

11. With the holy Ghoſt, and with fire. It is demaunded why Iohn alſo ſayd not, that it is only chriſt, which waſheth our ſoules with his bloud:

Namely,

Namely, becauſe that the waſhing alſo it ſelfe is wrought by the power of the ſpirite,it was ſufficient by the only name of the ſpirite to expreſſe the whole effect of Baptiſme. And the meaning is plaine,that Chriſt alone doeth geue what grace ſo euer the outward Baptiſme doth figure, becauſe that he ſprinkleth the conſciences with his bloude, and he himſelfe mortifieth the olde man,and geueth the ſpirit of regeneration. The worde Fire is added in ſtead of an Epithyte,and is applied to the ſpirite, becauſe that it ſo purgeth our filthineſſe, as golde is tried in the fire: As Iohn 3.5. metaphorically calleth it water.

MAT. 12. VVhich hath his fanne. In the former ſentence Iohn preached of the grace of Chriſte, that the Iewes mighte geue themſelues to him to be renewed: nowe alſo he ſpeaketh of iudgement,that he mighte ſtrike a feare into the contemners. For ſith many hypocrites do proudly refuſe the grace of Chriſt offered them, it is alſo neceſſary to pronounce vnto them that vengeãce which remaineth for them: for this cauſe Iohn doeth here deſcribe Chriſt as a ſeuere iudge againſt the vnbeleuers. And this order of teaching muſt be obſerued of vs, that the hypocrites maye know,that they ſhall not go vnpuniſhed which reiect Chriſte, that they being raiſed out of their ſluggiſhneſſe maye begin to feare him as a reuenger,whom they haue deſpiſed as the authour of ſaluation. Alſo it is not to be douted but that Iohn would teach what Chriſt would worke through his goſpell. Therfore the preaching of the goſpel is a fanne: becauſe that before the Lord ſift vs,the whole worlde is full of confuſion, euery man ſeeketh to pleaſe himſelfe, and the good are mixed with the euill, and laſt of all it pleaſeth them to wallowe in chaffe. But where Chriſt commeth foorth with his Goſpel,while he reproueth the conſciences,and citeth to the tribunall ſeate of God,the chaffe is fanned away,which before couered the moſt part of the floore And thoughe the Goſpell purgeth euery man from chaffe, yet Iohn heere compareth the reprobate to chaffe,and the faithfull to wheat. Furthermore,the floore is not taken for the world(as ſome imagine)but for the Church: for it is to be noted to whome Iohn ſpeaketh. VVhen the Iewes were lift vppe with the bare title, Iohn warneth thẽ that they do foliſhly to be proud, becauſe that they poſſeſſe a place for a time in the church of God,out of the which they were ſhortly to be throwen as chaffe oute of the floore. In this maner he reprehendeth the corrupt ſtate of the Church: becauſe that it was full of huskes, weedes,and other filthie things, but was preſently to be purged with the liuely voyce of the Goſpell. But howe is Chriſt ſayd to purge the chaffe from the wheate,who can finde nothing in men but meere chaffe? The anſweare is eaſie,the Elect are made into wheat,that they being taken from the chaffe, maye be gathered into the barne. But Chriſt began this cleanſing,and daily goeth forwarde wyth the ſame, yet he ſhall not fully performe the ſame before the latter day: therefore Iohn calleth vs thither. But we muſt remember that the faithful now at this day through hope do enter into the garner of the Lord, that there at the length in deede they may haue an eternall ſeate. And the reprobate now through their guiltineſſe doe conceiue a heat of that fire,the perfecte burning whereof,they at the laſt day ſhall feele. I know that many haue ſubtilly diſputed of the eternal fire,wherein the wicked ſhallbe tormented after the iudgement: but it maye be gathered out of many places of the ſcripture, that it is a metaphoricall kind of ſpeaking. For if there bee appoynted a reall or materiall fire (as they call it), then muſt there alſo be added brimſtone, & a fanne to kindle it: becauſe that there is mention made of them both in Iſaias, chap. 30. 33. Certainely there is no other maner of fire, then worme: for if by the conſent of al, it is receiued that there is a metaphore in the name of wormie, then is the ſame to be thoughte of fire. Wherefore lettinge paſſe the ſpeculations wherein vaine men weary themſelues without profit, let it ſuffice vs to vnderſtand, that with theſe maner of ſpeaches; for the rudeneſſe of oure capacitie, is that horrible torment noted, which at this day can neither be conceiued in mans vnderſtanding, nor expreſſed in wordes.

13. Then came Ieſus from Galile to Iordan, vnto Iohn, to be baptized of him.	9. And it came to paſſe in thoſe dayes, that Ieſus came from Nazareth a citie of Galile, and was baptized of Iohn in Iordan.	21. Now it came to paſſe as al the people were baptized, & that Ieſus was baptized, and did praye, that the heauen opened.
14. But Iohn put him backe, ſaying: I haue nede to be baptized of thee, and commeſt thou to me?	10. And aſſone as hee was come out of the water, Iohn ſawe the heauens clouen in twaine, & the holy Ghoſt deſcending vppon him like a Doue.	22. And the holy Ghoſt came downe in a bodily ſhape like a Doue vpon him, and there was a voice frō heauen, ſaying: Thou art my beloued ſonne in thee I am well pleaſed.
15. Then Ieſus anſwearing, ſaid to him: let be nowe: for thus it becommeth to fulfil al righteouſneſſe. So he ſuffered him.	11. Then there was a voice from heauen, ſaying: thou arte my beloued ſonne in whom I am well pleaſed.
16. And Ieſus when he was baptized, came ſtraight out of the water. And lo, the heauens were opened vnto him, and Iohn ſawe the ſpirit of God deſcending like a doue, and lighting vpon him.		23. And Ieſus himſelfe began to be about thirtie yere of age.
17. And lo a voice came frō heauen, ſaying: This is my beloued ſonne, in whome I am well pleaſed.

13. To be baptized of him. To what end the ſonne of God would be baptized, we do partly gather by his anſweare. Firſt there is a ſpeciall reaſon brought why he was baptized as we are, that the faithful might more certainly be perſwaded that they are grafted into his bodye, and buried with him through baptiſme. But the end which he propoſeth here, is larger: for ſo it becommeth to fulfil al righteouſneſſe. The word righteouſnes doth often ſignifie as muche in the ſcripture as the obſeruing of the law. And ſo this place may be expounded, that it became Chriſt, in that he willingly ſubmitted himſelf to the law to performe the ſame in euery poynt. Yet I had rather take the ſame more ſimplie in this manner; as if Chriſt ſhuld haue ſayd, omit now to ſpeake of my dignitie: for the queſtion is not, which of vs two excelleth other, but wee muſt rather looke what our calling requireth, & what is enioyned vs of god the father: for this was the general cauſe why Chriſt was baptized, that he might perform obedience to his father; & the ſpecial cauſe was, that he in his own body might cōſecrate baptiſme, that it might be cōmon to vs with him.

14. I haue nede to be baptiſed of thee. It is certain that Iohn knew Chriſt to be not only a notable prophet as many doe fooliſhly dreame, but for the ſonne ſonne of God as he was. Otherwiſe he ſhuld haue ben iniurious to God, ſubmitting his holy calling to a mortal man. But how he knew this, let the readers learne out of the 1. cha. 15. of Iohn. And this was a probable cauſe of refuſall, that Chriſt had no neede of baptiſme: but in this doeth Iohn fail, that he conſidereth not that he demãdeth baptiſme for others ſakes. Therfore Chriſt commandeth him to conſider what belongeth to him that occupieth the place of a ſeruant: becauſe that a volũtary ſubiection doeth derogate nothing from his glorye. And although in that ſo great a man ſome part of his office was hid for a time: yet that perticuler errour ſhoulde not hinder the Baptiſt, but that rightlye and lawfully he ſhuld haue executed his office. By which exãple we are taught, that they which haue an office enioyned thẽ of the lord, may not do any thing raſhly for any reuelatiõ, though at the firſt they do not vnderſtãd euery thing annexed to their office, or depẽding vpõ the ſame. His modeſty is alſo to be noted, that he ceaſing frõ his own opinion, doth preſẽtly obey chriſt.

16. Lo the heauens were opened. The opening of the heauẽs is ſomtime taken for the manifeſtation of the heauenly glory, and here alſo it ſignifieth a diuiſion of the viſible heauen, ſo that Iohn might ſee ſomwhat aboue the planets & the ſtars; for the meaning of Markes words cannot be other, who ſaith that he ſaw the heauẽs clouen in twaine. But more narowly to inquire what maner of diuiſion this was, it doth neither apertain muche to the matter, neither doth it profit: for it is ſufficient to know, that this was a token of the preſence of God. Further, when the Euangeliſts ſay that Iohn ſawe the holy Ghoſt, it is probable that the heauens were eſpecially opened for his cauſe, though I repugne it not, but that Chriſte alſo as he was man, was made more certaine of his calling. And to this purpoſe the wcordes of Luke ſeeme to tende, when he ſayth: that while Chriſt praied, the heauens opened: for although he poured out his praiers alwaies for the profit of others: yet he had nede as he was man, ſeeing he was to fight ſo hard a battel, to be armed with a ſinguler power of the ſpirite. But here ariſe 2. queſtions. The firſt is, why the ſpirite then deſcended vpon Chriſt, which was in him before. This queſtion is aunſwered by the place of Iſai 61. 1. which is entreted of in an other place. The ſpirit of the Lord vpon me, therefore hath the Lord anoynted me, to preach glad tidings to the pore he hath ſent me. Although chriſt wõderfully excelled with a ſingular grace of the ſpirit, yet he kept himſelf at home as a priuate manne, vntil he was brought foorth by his father. Therfore now whẽ the appoynted time is come wherein he ſhould prepare himſelfe to fulfil the office of a redemer, he is endued with a newe power of the ſpirite, and that not ſo much for his ſake as for others. For this was done of purpoſe, that the faithful might honour and reuerently embrace his diuine power, & that the infirmity of fleſh ſhuld not be cõtemned in him. That ſame alſo was the cauſe why he deferred his baptiſme to the 30. yere of his age. Baptiſme was a beginning of the goſpel, & therfore together with the preching of the goſpel it begã. And chriſt preparing himſelfe to preache the goſpel, was by Baptiſme as wel entred into his office, as inſtructed by the holy ſpirit. The holy ſpirite therefore appeared vnto Iohn deſcending vpon Chriſt, to admoniſh that nothing carnall or earthly, ſhould be ſought for in Chriſt, but that he came from heauen as a diuine man in whom the power of the holy ſpirit raigneth.

VVee certainly knowe him to be God manifeſted in the fleſh, but in the perſon of a ſeruaunt, and in his humane nature there is alſo a celeſtial power to be conſidered. The ſecõd queſtion is, why the ſpirite appeared in the likeneſſe of a Doue, rather then of fire: whoſe aunſweare dependeth of an analogie or ſimilitude of a thing ſignified with the figure. VVe know what the Prophet Iſay attributeth to Chriſt, chap. 42. 3. A bruſed reede ſhall he not breake, ſmoking flaxe ſhal hee not quenche, hee ſhall not crie, nor his voyce ſhalbe heard. For this gentleneſſe of Chriſte, wherin he louingly and gently calleth, and daily biddeth ſinners to the hope of ſaluation, the holy ſpirite deſcended vppon him in likeneſſe of a Doue. And in this ſigne there is a notable pledge of moſte ſweete comfort geuen vnto vs, that we ſhould not feare to come vnto Chriſte, who commeth foorth vnto vs not with a fearfull power of the ſpirite, but endued with a louing and pleaſant grace. He ſawe the holy ſpirite; Namely Iohn: for it preſently foloweth that the ſpirite deſcended vppon Chriſt. Nowe heere ariſeth the thirde queſtion, how Iohn could ſee the ſpirite: I anſweare, ſeeing the ſpirite of God is ſpreade in euery place, and filleth the heauen and the earthe, a deſcendinge is vnproperly attributed to it. The ſame is to be accompted of the ſight, for although in it ſelfe it is inuiſible, yet it is ſayde to be ſeene, where as there is ſhewed ſome ſigne of his preſence. Iohn ſeeth not the eſſence of the ſpirite, which falleth not vnder the ſenſe of the eye, neither did he ſee the power it ſelfe, which is not cõpreheded by humane ſenſe, but only by the vnderſtãding of faith: but hee ſeeth the likeneſſe of a Doue, vnder the which God ſhewed the preſence of his ſpirite. Therefore it is a Metonymicall kinde of ſpeache, wherein the name of a ſpirituall thing is geuen to a viſible ſigne. For as they doe foliſhly and prepoſterouſly vrge the letter, that they mighte include the ſignified thing in the ſigne, ſo it is to be noted that in theſe kindes of ſpeaking is noted a coniunction of the thing with the ſigne. According to this meaning the bread of the holy ſupper is called the bodye of Chriſt: becauſe it teſtifieth that it is truely geuen to vs for foode. Yet that withall is to be remembred which I now touched, there muſt not be imagined a deſcention of the thing ſignified, that it ſhould be ſoughte in the ſigne, as thoughe it were there locally included; but this one thinge ought enough, and more then enough to ſuffice vs; that the Lorde by his ſecrete power wil performe whatſoeuer he hath promiſed vs by figures. Many alſo rather curiouſly, then profitably, doe demaund whether this Doue were a perfecte body or but a goaſt. Though that the wordes of Luke ſeeme to affirme that it was not the ſubſtance of a body, but only a likeneſſe, yet leaſt any man ſhould therby take occaſion of quarelling, I leaue it as I finde it.

17. A voice from heauen. That voyce did ſounde out of that diuiſion of the heauens, whereof mention is made before: that thereby his maieſtie might the more certainly be manifeſt vnto him. Alſo when Chriſte came openly to execute the office of a mediatour, hee was ſent from the father with this teſtimonie to vs, that wee hauing this pledge of oure adoption, might without feare call God himſelfe our father. The title of a ſonne doeth truely and naturally belong to Chriſte alone: but yet the ſonne of God was ſhewed in oure fleſh, that that one which the father hath by his owne right, might alſo obtaine the ſame for vs. VVherefore God

God bringing foorth Christ a mediator for vs, with this title of sonne, he declareth that he will be a father to vs all. To the same purpose appertaineth the Epithyte of beloued, for that wee of our selues being hated of God, it is necessary that his fatherly loue should flowe vnto vs by Christ. And the best interpreter of this place, is Paule to the Ephesians, chap. 1.6. when hee sayeth that we haue obtained fauour in his beloued sonne, that we might be beloued of God. The which is also more fully expressed in this clause. In whome I am wel pleased. For he doeth declare that the loue of God doeth so rest in Christ, that he will powre forth himself from him vnto vs all? and not to vs onely, but also to the Angels themselues: not that they needed a reconciliation, which neuer were at discorde with God: but because that they doe not perfectly adioyne vnto God, but by the benefite of the head. For the which cause he is also called the first borne of euery creature, Col. 1.15. And againe Paule in an other place teacheth that he came, that hee might gathet what things soeuer, are in heauen and in earth, Col. 1.20.

Mathew. 4.

1. Then was Iesus led aside of the spirite into the wildernes, to be tempted of the deuill.

2. And when he had fasted forty daies and forty nightes, hee was afterward hungrie.

3. Then came to hym the tempter, and sayd: if thou be the sonne of God, cōmaund that these stones be made bread.

4. But he answering, sayd: It is wrytten, man shall not liue by breade only, but by euery worde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Marke 1.

12. And immediatly the spirite driueth him into the wildernesse.

13. And he was there in the wildernesse fourtye dayes, and was tempted of Satan: he was also with the wilde beastes, and the Angels ministred vnto him.

Luke 4.

1. And Iesus ful of the holy Ghost returned from Iordan, and was led by the spirit into the wildernesse.

2. And wat there fourtye dayes tempted of the deuil, and in those dayes hee did eate nothing: but when they were ended, hee was hungrie.

5. Then the deuil sayd vnto him: If thou be the Sonne of God, commaunde this stone that it be made bread.

4. But Iesus answered him, saying: It is wrytten, That manne shall not liue by breade onely, but by euery woorde of God.

1. Then Iesus was led aside. Christe went aside into the deserte for two causes: First that after the fast of fortie dayes as a newe man, or rather a heauenly, hee mighte come foorth to execute his office: Then that hee should not enter into so hard and notable an office, except he were tried with tēptations, as if he should so lay the foundation of his first exercise. Therfore let vs know that Christ by the direction of the spirite was led from the companie of menne, that the great doctour of the churche, and embassadour of God should come abroade as one rather sent from heauen, then taken out of some little towne and common sort of men. So God vsed Moses, when by his hand he would deliuer his law, he tooke him into the mount Sinai, and being led aside from the sight of the people, he kept him as it were in a holy sanctuarie. Exod. 24.12. It behooued Christ to be adorned with no fewer or lesse tokens of diuine grace and signes of power then Moses, least the maiestie of the gospell shoulde be les then of the law: for if the Lord thought that doctrine which was the miniſter of death woorthy of rare honour; how much more honour doeth the doctrine of life deſerue? And if the ſhadowed figure of God hadde ſo great light, then with howe perfecte brightneſſe is it meete to haue his countenaunce beautified, whiche appeareth in the Goſpell? This ſame was the ende of his faſt: for Chriſt abſtained not from meat and drinke, that hee mighte geue an inſtruction of temperance: but that he might thereby haue the more authoritie, whyle he being exempt frō the common ſorte of men, doeth come foorth as an Angel from heauen, and not as a man from the earth. For I beſeeche you what maner of vertue was there in that abſtinence, not to eate meate, whome no hunger mooued to deſire the ſame? For it is certaine, and the Euangeliſtes doe plainly pronounce, that he no otherwiſe bare the hunger, then if hee had not bene clothed with fleſh. VVherefore it were a mere folye to eſtabliſh a Lenten faſt, as they call it, as an imitation of Chriſt. For there is no greater reaſon why we at this daye ſhoulde followe this example of Chriſte, then had in times paſt the holy Prophets, and other fathers vnder the lawe to imitate the faſt of Moſes? And we knowe that this neuer came in their minde. God almoſt for the ſame cauſe continued Eliah faſting in the mount, becauſe he was the miniſter that ſhoulde reſtore the lawe. They faine thēſelues to be followers of Chriſt, which through the Lent do daily faſt: that is, they ſo ſtuffe their belly at dinner, that vnto ſupper time they eaſily paſſe the time without meat. VVhat likeneſſe haue they with the ſonne of God? Greater was the ſparinge of the elders: but they alſo had no affinitie with the faſt of Chriſt, no more then the abſtinence of men commeth neere to the hunger of Angels. Adde alſo that neither Chriſte nor Moſes did yearely keepe a ſolemne faſte, but both of them did it only once in their whole life. And I woulde to God that they had onely plaide like apes with theſe follies. But it was a wicked and a deteſtable ſcorning of Chriſt, in that they attempted in theyr fained faſting to frame them ſelues after his doing. It is moſte vile ſuperſtition that they perſwade themſelues that it is a worke meritorious, and to be ſome part of godlineſſe and diuine worſhip. But this contumely is not to be borne: firſt againſt God, that they obſcure his notable myracle. Then againſt Chriſt: becauſe they taking his glorye from him, decke themſelues with his ſpoiles. Thirdly againſt the Goſpell, from the which no ſmall credite is taken, if this faſt of Chriſt be not acknowledged to be a ſeale of the ſame. God ſhewed a ſingular myracle when hee kept his ſonne from the neceſsitie of eating, and do they not in a madde boldneſſe ſpite at God, when they affecte to do the ſame by their owne power? Chriſt was noted with deuine glory by this faſting. And ſhall he be ſpoiled of his glory and brought in order, when as all mortall menne ſhall make themſelues his felowes? This was the ende which God appoynted to Chriſtes faſt, that it ſhoulde be a ſeale to the Goſpell: They that apply it to any other vſe: do they not take ſo much from the dignitie of the Goſpell? Therefore let this counterfetting ceaſe, which peruerteth the counſell of God, and the whole order of his workes. But of faſtes in their kinde I ſpeake not, (which I wiſh were more common amongſt vs, ſo that the ſame were pure) for it was mete to ſhew for what purpurpoſe Chriſt faſted.

Alſo Sathan tooke occaſion of hys hunger to tempte Chriſt, as a little after ſhall bee ſhewed more at large, nowe it muſte bee generally ſeene whye God woulde haue him tempted. For the woordes of Mathewe and Marke doe ſounde that hee was broughte into thys combate by the determinate counſell of God, which ſaye that hee was ledde by the ſpirite for thys cauſe into the deſerte. I doubte not but that God in the perſonne of hys Sonne, woulde ſhewe as in a moſte cleare glaſſe howe deadlye and importune an ennemie of mannes ſaluation Sathan is. For whereof commeth it to paſſe that hee ſhoulde aſſaile Chriſte ſo ſharpelye, and ſhoulde powre oute all his forces and violence againſt hym at thys time whiche the Euangeliſtes note, but becauſe he ſawe hym at the commaundemente of his father, prepared for the redemprion of mankinde? therefore hee then reſiſted in the perſoune of Chriſte, our ſaluation, as hee deadly perſecuteth daily the miniſters of the ſame redemption, whereof Chriſte was the authour.

But it is to bee noted wythall, that the ſonne of God did willinglye endure thoſe temptations, whereof it is nowe entreated, and that hee ſtriue wyth the Deuill as it were hande to hande, that by his victorie he might gette vs the triumphe. Therfore as ofte as Sathan aſſaileth vs, let vs remember that his violence canne no other way be ſuſtained and driuen backe, then by oppoſinge thys ſhielde againſte him, as for that cauſe the ſonne of God ſuffered himſelfe to bee tempted, that hee myghte ſtande betweene vs ſo ofte as Sathan ſtirreth anye exerciſe of temptations againſte vs. Therefore when hee ledde a priuate life at home, wee doe not reade that hee was tempted: but when hee vndertooke the office of a Redeemer, then hee in the common name of hys Churche came into the combate.

Then if Chriſte was tempted as in the publike perſonne of all the faithfull, lette vs knowe that theſe temptations whyche befall vnto vs, are not by fortune, or ſtirred at the pleaſure of Sathan without the permiſsion of God: But that the ſpirite of God, gouerneth theſe conflicts, whereby oure faithe is exerciſed, whereby is gathered a certaine hope, that G O D who is the chiefe and great captaine and gouernour, is not vnmindefull of vs, but that hee will helpe vs in oure ſtreightes wherein hee ſeeth vs ouermatched.

The woordes of Luke ſounde ſomewhat otherwiſe, That Ieſus ful of the holye Ghoſte, retourned from Iordan, in whyche woordes hee ſignifieth, that hee was then armed with a more plentifull grace and power of the ſpirite, that hee myghte bee the more ſtronge to endure ſuche bruntes, for the ſpirite did not in vaine deſcende vppon hym in a viſible ſhape.

And it is ſayde before, that the grace of G O D did the more ſhyne oute, becauſe that the cauſe of oure ſaluation ſo required. The ſame Euangeliſt and Marke, do teach that the beginning of his temptations was ſooner, for Sathan aſſaulted him forty dayes alſo before hys hunger: but the eſpeciall and moſte notable conflictes are here declared: that we may knowe that ſathan being ouercome in many conflictes, did more ſharply inuade, and laide on more ſtrongly with his whole force,

if it might be, that at length he might oppreſſe him that yet was inuinſible. For as euery man is more exerciſed in ſpirituall battelles, ſo muche more vehemently doth God ſuffer him to be ſtricken. VVherefore lette vs learne neuer to bee wearied, vntill wee haue perfourmed the whole courſe of our warfare, and come to the marke. But at the firſt ſight it ſeemeth to be abſurde that Chriſt ſhould be ſubiect to temptations: for that men may be tempted, there muſt be ſinne and infirmitie: I anſwere, firſt that Chriſt had taken our infirmities, but without ſinne. Then it did no more derogate from his glory that he was tempted, then that he tooke vppon him our fleſh. For on this condition was he made manne, that he might take vpon him our affectiõs together with the fleſh. But al the difficultie doth conſiſt in the former clauſe, how Chriſt coulde be compaſſed about with our infirmitie, that he mighte be tempted of Sathan, and yet be pure and free from all ſinne. But the anſwere ſhall not be hard, if we remember the whole nature of Adam, when as yet the pure image of God ſhined there, and yet was ſubiect to temptations. Howe manye corporall affections there are in manne, ſo manye occaſions of tempting them doth Sathan take. And this is woorthely accompted the infirmity of humane fleſh, to haue the ſences mooued with the things obiecte: but ſuch as was not faulty of it ſelfe, except that corruption had bene added, whereby it commeth to paſſe, that Sathan doeth neuer aſſault vs, but that he geueth ſome wound, or at the leaſt doeth hurt vs with ſome prick. In this poynt the integrity of nature hath ſeparate Chriſt from vs, yet there is no meane condition to be imagined to be in him, as was in Adam, to whome it was onely geuen a poſsibilitie not to ſinne. And wee knowe that Chriſt was armed with that power of the ſpirite, that hee could not be pearced with the weapons of Sathan. Then came the tempter. The ſpirite of purpoſe doth geue this name to Sathan, that the faithfull might therby the more diligently take heede of him. VVherby we alſo gather that temptations which prouoke vs to euil, come not but from him. For that in Gen. 22. 1. Deut. 13. 3. God is ſayd to tempt, it belongeth to an other ende, that is, that he might trie their faith, or mighte take vengeaunce of the vnbeleeuers, or that he might laye their hypocriſie open, which obey not the truth from the heart.

MAT. 3. That theſe ſtones. Heere alſo the olde wryters played wyth weake deuices: for they ſay the firſt temptation was of gluttonie, the ſeconde of ambition, the third of couetouſneſſe. But it is ridiculous, if any man that is hungrie deſireth meat, that hee might ſatiſfie nature, to refer that to the intemperancie of the throte. Further, what dainties doe they imagine to be in bread, that he ſhould be accompted too delicate, that is content (as they ſay) with drie breade? But that we loſe no woordes in vaine, the only anſweare of Chriſt doth ſufficiently declare that Sathans purpoſe was otherwiſe. Truely the Sonne of God was not a rude and vnskilfull champion, that he knewe not howe to auoide the blowes of his enemie; that being ſtricken on the right ſide, hee ſhoulde raſhly holde his ſhield to the left. Therefore if Sathan had endeuoured to driue him to the delightes of gluttonie, he had the teſtimonies of ſcripture readye, wherewith he might driue him away. But he vttereth none ſuche, but taketh this ſentence, men liue not by breade, but by the ſecreate bleſſing of God, whereby we gather that Sathan ſtreightway aſſaulted the faith of Christ, that the same being extinguished, he might driue Christe to vnlawfull and wicked wayes to seeke his breade. And then doeth Sathan wounde to death, when he attempteth to bring this to passe, that we distrusting God, should otherwise prouide for our selues, then by his word is lawfull. Therefore the meaning of the woordes is: sith thou seest thy selfe forsaken of God, necessitie compelleth thee that thou shuldest prouide for thy self. Therfore get thee meat, which God prouideth not for thee. And althoughe he pretende the diuine power of Christe, whereby those stones should be tourned into bread; yet this one thing he seeketh, that Christe departing from the woorde of God, infidelitie shoulde folowe what soeuer he shoulde say. Therefore Christ aunswereth aptly, manne shall not liue by bread only, as if he shoulde say: thou commandest me to seeke some remedy, whereby I mighte helpe my selfe otherwise then God doeth permitte: But this were a poynte of distrust, without all reason, so long as God promiseth that he will nourish me. Thou Sathan tiest his grace to bread. But he contrarily witnesseth, if all meats were wanting, his onely blessing sufficeth to feede vs. Nowe we vnderstande what kinde of temptation this was: namely that, wherewith Sathan doeth assault vs daily. For the sonne of God woulde not subiecte himselfe to any vnaccustomed assault, but he had fightes common wyth vs, that we being defended with the same armours, shuld not doubt but that the victorie is in our hande.

Chriſt,

4. It is wrytten, manne shall not liue by bread onely. This is first woorthy to be noted, that Christe vseth the scripture for his shielde. For thys is the right maner of fighting, if wee desire to obtaine the victorie. For Paule doeth not in vaine call the woorde of God the spiritual sworde, and armeth vs with the shield of faith. Ephe. 6. 16. 17. wherby we also gather, that the Papistes, as if they hadde made a couenaunt wyth Sathan, gaue ouer soules to be destroyed at his pleasure, when they maliciously suppresinge the scripture, spoyled the people of God of their weapons, by the whiche they coulde onely defende their saluation. They that willingly caste from them this armoure, and doe not dailye exercise themselues in the schoole of God, are woorthy euery moment to be slaine of Sathan, to whome they betray themselues vnarmed. And truely there is no other cause whye Sathan is so weakely withstoode, and that euerye where hee taketh awaye so many, but because that God reuengeth their slouthfulnesse and contempte of his woorde. Nowe the testimonie of Moses is to be sifted, whiche Christe citeth. Some wrongfully wrest the same to a spiritual life, as if he had sayd, that the soules are not nourysshed wyth visible bread, but with the word of God. And that is true in it selfe: but Moses hadde a further respecte: Deut. 8. 3. For when they wanted breade, hee declareth that the people had Manna, an extraordinarie maner of meate: that by this instruction it mighte be witnessed for euer, that the life of menne is not included in bread, but to depend vpon the pleasure and good will of God. Therefore woorde is not heere taken for doctrine, but for a decree which God hath publisshed for the preseruation of the order of nature, and nourishing his creatures: for hee casteth not menne from him when he hathe made them, but on that condition he geueth them life, that he might daily sustaine that whyche hee hath once geuen.

Heb. 1. 3. So sayeth the Apostle, all things are sustained by his mighty woorde: that is, the whole world is preserued, and euery parte of the same doeth remaine in his estate by his will and decree, whose power is spreade in euery place both aboue and belowe. Therefore though we eate breade, yet the maintenance of life is not to be attributed to the power of bread, but to the secreat grace which God geueth to bread to feede vs. Where of also foloweth an other lesson, that God which nowe vseth bread for our nourishment, cā by other meanes as oft as he shal thinke good, pro-uide that we may liue. Also in this sentence of Moses their beastlinesse is condemned, which accompt of fulnesse and aboundance as their lyfe. Furthermore, distrust and vngodly carefulnesse is reproued, which drī-eth vs to seeke vnlawfull meanes. And to this purpose is the answeare of Christe properly directed; for foode and other maintenances of thys present life, we must so trust God, that none of vs passe the bounds pre-scribed by him. If that Christ accompted it vnlawfull, to make bread of stones besides the commaundement of God: it is muche lesse lawfull to get thy liuing by deceits, thefts, violence and murthers.

Mathewe 4.	Marke 1.	Luke 4.
5. Then the Deuill tooke him vp into the holye citie, and set hym on a pinacle of the temple.		5. Then the deuill toke him vp into an high mountaine, & shewed him al the kingdoms of the world, in the twinkling of an eie.

9 And sayde vnto hym: all these will I geue thee, if thou wilte fall downe and worship me.		9. Then he brought him to Ierusalem, and set him on a pinacle of the Temple, and sayde to him. If thou bee the sonne of God, caste thy self down frō hēce.
10. Then sayd Iesus vnto him. Auoide Sathan: for it is wrytten. Thou shalt woorship the Lorde thy God, and him only shalt thou serue.		10. For it is wrytten, that hee will geue his angels charge ouer thee to keepe thee.
11. Then the deuill lefte hym, and beholde the aungelles came and woorshipped him.	13. And the aungels ministred to him.	11. And with their hands they shal lift thee vppe, least at anye time thou shouldst dashe thy foot against a stone.
		12 And Iesus answered & said vnto him: It is saide thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.
		13 And whē the deuil had ended all his temptation, he departed from him for a season.

5. Then

5. Then the deuil tooke him. It is no great matter that Luke doth rehearse that temptation in the seconde place, which Mathewe placeth in the last place. For it was not the purpose of the Euangelists, so to set downe the order of the hystorie, as they would alwaies exactly obserue the poynte of time: but to gather the sum of the things, so as they might propose in a glasse or a table, those things which are most profitable to be knowen of Christ. Therefore let it suffice vs to knowe, that Christ was tempted 3. maner of wayes. But whiche was either the seconde or the thirde conflict, there is no cause why we should curiously seeke. In the exposition I wil folow the text set downe by Mathew. It is sayd that Christ was set vpon a pinacle of the temple. But it is demanded whether he was caried vp on high in dede, or whether it was done by a vision. Many do boldly affirme that it was a true and a reall cariage of his bodye (as they say) for they thinke it a thing vnworthy that Christe shoulde yeelde himselfe in daunger to sathans sleights. But this obiection is easily wiped away, that there is no absurditie in the permission of God, and voluntarie subiection of Christe, so that we thinke not that hee suffered any thing wythin, that is, in minde and soule. And that which foloweth after, that all the kingdomes of the worlde were sette in the sight of Christ, and that also which Luke wryteth, that hee was caried far in the twinkling of an eye, doth rather belong to a vision, yet in a doubtfull matter, & which without danger a man may be ignorant of. I had rather suspende my iudgement, then geue the contentious occasion of quarelling. Also it maye be that the 2. temptation did not presently without distance of time folow the first, nor the third the seconde, but it is more probable, that there was some distance, though by the woordes of Luke it is gathered that there was no long space betwene: for he sayth that Christ had rest geuen him for a seaſon. But this appertaineth much to the matter, to know what sathan went about in this kind of temptation, which is to be learned by the answer of Christ, as I said a litle before. Christ, that he might mete with the subtletye of the enemie, and beate backe his force, holdeth oute for a buckler, God is not to be tempted. VVhereby it appeareth that the deceites of the ennemies tended to this purpose, that hee liftinge himselfe vppe aboue measure, shoulde rashly rise vppe againste God. First sathan tried to drawe Christ to desperation, because he wanted meat and ordinarie meanes: nowe he procureth him to a vaine and proud confidence, that neglecting the meanes which were at hande, he should throw himselfe without necessitie into manifest daunger, and as though he should leape beyonde his boundes. But as it becommeth vs not to despair, when we are presſed with the want of all things, but that we shoulde depend vpō the assurance of God: so it is not lawfull for vs to set vp the combs, that we should lift vp our selues higher then God permitteth Now we vnderstand what the purpose of sathan was: namely, that Christ making a triall of his diuinitie, shoulde with a foolish and a wicked rashnesse rise vp against God.

6. Hee will geue his aungels charge ouer thee. This malice of sathan is to be noted, that hee abuseth the testimonie of the scripture, that might make the life of Christ deadly, and tourne his bread to poyson. For he ceaseth not to vse the same craft daily. And the sonne of God (who is a common exāple of al the godly) wold in his own person suffer this cōflict, that they al might learne diligently to take hede to themſelues, leaſt vnder a falſe pretence of the ſcripture, they fall into the ſnares of ſathan. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Lord graunteth ſo much libertye to our enemy, that we ſhoulde not reſt in ſecuritie, but be rather bent to keepe our watches. But let vs not be like to ouerthwart men which reiect the ſcripture, as if it might be tourned euery way, becauſe that the deuill abuſeth the ſame: ſo for the ſame cauſe we muſt abſtain from meates, leaſt we be poyſoned. Sathan prophaneth the woorde of God, and endeuoureth to wreſt the ſame to our deſtructiō, but ſeeing it was ordained of God for our ſaluation, ſhal the counſel of God be to no effect, except that through our ſlouthfulneſſe, the healthful vſe of the ſame ſhould pearish vnto vs? But this matter needeth no long diſputation: only let vs ſee what Chriſt doeth teache vs by his example, which we muſt folow as a certaine rule. Doth he geue place to ſathan, wickedly wreſting the ſcripture? Doth he ſuffer the ſcripture wherwith he armed himſelf before, to be ſtakē away, or to be taken from him? Nay by obiecting the ſcripture again, he mightily ouerthroweth the wicked cauil of ſathan. Therfore ſo oft as ſathan by his ſubtleties pretendeth the ſcripture, & that vngodly mē vnder this ſame pretence ſhal ſet vppon vs, that they might circumuent our faith, let vs borow weapons for the defence of our faith, frō no other place then out of the ſcripture. But though this promiſſe; (He wil geue his Angels charge ouer thee, &c.) doth appertain to al the faithful, yet it eſpecially belongeth to Chriſt, who as he is the head of the whole church, ſo in his own right he gouerneth the angels & geueth them charge of vs. Wherfore in that, ſathan doth not yet deceiue, that by this teſtimonie he prooueth that the angels were geuen as miniſters vnto Chriſt, that ſhuld kepe him & bear him in their hands: but the deceit is this, that he draweth the keeping of Angels to a vaine and a raſh courſe, which is then promiſed to the children of God, while they kepe themſelues within their bounds, & walke in his waies. If this clauſe haue any force it in (in al thy wayes) then doeth ſathan malicioully corrupt & maim the ſaying of the Prophet, generally & confuſedly wreſting the ſame to wandring & erronious courſes. God commandeth vs to walke in our waies, & he ſayth that his angels ſhall be our keepers. Sathan pretending the cuſtodie of angels, doeth exhort Chriſt that he ſhoulde raſhly procure him danger: As if he ſhoulde haue ſayde: If in ſpite of God thou wilte caſt thy ſelfe to death, the Angelles ſhall defende thy life.

7. It is wrytten thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord. Chriſt anſweareth moſt aptly, it is not otherwiſe to be hoped that God doeth there promiſſe his helpe, then if the faithful do modeſtly commit theſelues to him to be gouerned: for we cānot otherwiſe truſt his promiſes, except we obey his commaundements. Further, when God is tempted many wayes, yet in thys place he is ſaid to be tempted, when as we neglecte his meanes which he putteth into our hād. For they which neglect the means which God appoynteth, do as if they tried his power and his ſtrength: As if any ſhould cutte away the armes and handes from a man, and after bid him worke. In ſumme, whoſoeuer deſireth to take a trial of the diuine power, where as it is not neceſſary, he tempteth God, by bringing his promiſſes to vnuſt examination.

8. The deuil toke him into an hie mountaine. That is to be had in memorie, which whych I ſayde before, that it came not to paſſe throughe the imbecillitie of the nature of Chriſte, that Sathan helde his eyes; but by his free appoyntment and permiſsiō. Further, his ſenſes were touched and enticed wyth the glory of the kingdomes whiche were ſette before him, that no inwarde couetouſneſſe mooued his minde: when as the pleaſures of the fleſhe are caried and doe carie vs as wilde beaſtes to thoſe thinges that pleaſe vs: for Chriſt had the like ſenſe that wee haue, but no diſordered appetites. But it was a kinde of temptation, that Chriſt ſhould aske the enheritaunce which God promiſeth to his children, of anye other then of God himſelf. And heere the ſacrilegious boldneſſe of the Deuil doth bewraye it ſelfe, in that hee takinge the gouernment of the earthe from God, doeth vſurpe it to himſelfe. All theſe things (ſayeth hee) are mine, neither can they be obtained otherwiſe then at my hand. And wee muſt daily ſtriue with this aſſault, which both all the faithful do feele in them ſelues, and is more euidently ſeene in the whole life of the vngodlye. For thoughe wee ſette all our defences, richeſſe and commodities in the bleſsing of God: yet oure ſences prouoke vs therefroe, and driue vs to ſeeke the aſsiſtances of Sathan, as if one God were not ſufficiente. And a great parte of the worlde chalenging the righte and gouernmente of the earth from God, doeth imagine to themſelues that Sathan is the geuer of all good things. For whereof commeth it, that almoſte al doe addicte them ſelues to euill Artes, and theftes, and deceits, but that they aſcribe that to Sathan whiche was the propertie of God, to enriche wyth his bleſsinge whome hee pleaſeth? They pray wyth mouthe that God woulde geue them daily breade, but wyth the mouthe onely. For they make Sathan the chiefe, in diſtributing the richeſſe of all the worlde.

10. Auoyde Sathan. Luke hathe for it. Goe after mee Sathan. VVherefore ſome doe ſtande in vaine vppon that Aduerbe, when it was ſayde to Peter: Goe behinde, Mathewe 16.23. as if Sathan himſelfe heard not the ſame. But Chriſte commaundeth him ſimplie to depart. And nowe hee goeth forwardes in the ſame kinde of defence, holdinge foorth the ſcripture not as a ſhielde of bulle ruſhes, but as of right braſſe. And hee citeth a teſtimonie out of the law, that one God is to be worſhipped & ſerued. Alſo it is eaſily gathered by the applying and the circumſtāce of the place, to what ende the purpoſe of God belongeth, and what it profiteth. VVhen as the Papiſtes doe denie that only God is to be worſhipped, they ſhift off this place and ſuch like with a ſophiſticall Comment. That woorſhippe whiche they call Latria, they graunte as due onelye to God: but dulia they geue to the deade, and to their bones and their images. But this friuolous diſtinction of wordes being reiected, Chriſt doth chalenge a falling downe to woorſhip to God alone. VVhereby we are warned to haue conſideration rather of the matter, then of the word, ſo ofte as wee haue to doe wyth the woorſhip of God. The Scripture commaundeth to woorſhippe one God. It is to bee ſeene to what ende. If manne ſhall take awaye any thinge from his glorye, and geue the ſame to creatures, it is a ſacrilegious violating of the woorſhippe of GOD. And it is moſte euident that wee doe ſo, when as wee geue to creatures thoſe good things which we haue receiued, wherof God himſelf would be acknowledged to be the only author. But now as religion is properly ſpirituall, and the outwarde confeſsion of the ſame appertaineth to the body: So not only the inward woorſhippe is due to God alone, but alſo the outward teſtimonie of the ſame.

11. Then the deuil left him, and beholde. Luke expreſſeth more, namely, when he had ended all the temptation. As if he ſhould haue ſaid that Chriſte had no reſt nor truce geuen him, vntill hee was exactlye tried with all kinde of temptations. He alſo addeth that he was onely left for a ſeaſon, that we might know that the reſt of his life was not altogether free from temptations, but that the violence of ſathan was reſtrained by God, that hee ſhould not importunately moleſt Chriſt, euen as God vſeth to doe with all his. For if ſometime he permitteth them to be more ſharply vexed, after he releaſeth them ſomewhat of that great conflicte, that they ſhould breathe a while, and gather vp their mindes, yet hee ſpareth them not, that they ſhould nouriſh ſlouthfulneſſe, but only that they ſhoulde prepare themſelues to new conflicts. That it foloweth after that the angels miniſtred vnto him; I accompt it as a comfort, that Chriſt ſhoulde feele that God the father had a care of him, and by his mighty aid ſhould be defended againſt ſathan. For the deſart it ſelf might haue encreaſed his griefe, when as he being depriued of all comfortes of menne, he liued amongſt wilde beaſtes, which Marke alſo expreſly noteth. Yet it is not to be thought that Chriſt was at any time forſaken of the Angels: but that place might be geuen to temptation. Somtime the grace of God, though it be preſent, yet is hid to the ſence and vnderſtanding of the fleſh.

Mathew. 4.

12 And when Ieſus had heard that Iohn was deliuered vp, he retourned into Galile.

17. Frō that time Ieſus begaime to preache and saye: Amende youre liues, for the kingdome of heauen is at hand.

Marke. 1.

14. Nowe after that Iohn was committed to priſon, Ieſus came into Galile, preaching the Goſpell of the kingdome of God,

15. And saying: The time is fulfilled, and the kingdome of God is at hand: repent & beleeue the Goſpell.

Luke 3.

19. But when Herode the Tetrarch was rebuked of Iohn, for Herodias his brother Phillips wife, and for all the euils which Herode hadde done:

20. He added yet this aboue all, that he shut vp Iohn in priſon.

Luke 4.

14. And Ieſus returned by the power of the ſpirite into Galile: and there went a fame of him throughout all the region rounde about.

15. For he taughte in theyr Synagogues, and was honoured of all men.

LVKE. 19. But Herode the Tetrarche. Only Luke in this place doeth ſhew the cauſe why Herode did caſt Iohn into priſon. Yet Mathew and Marke doe make mention of it in an other place. Ioſephus in the 18. booke of Antiquities ſayeth, becauſe Herode feared a tumulte of the people and new ſtirres, he ſhutte vp Iohn in the tower of Macherontis, becauſe he feared the credite of the man. Hee ſayeth that Herodias was not geuen to Phillip (whome hee affirmeth maried Salome) but that ſhe was geuen in mariage to an other Herode. But becauſe that in this matter he is taken forgetting himſelfe, and alſo he doth not ſette downe the death of Phillip in his right place, therfore a more certaine troath of the hyſtorie is to be ſought oute of the Euangeliſtes, and we muſt ſtande to their teſtimonie.

This is ſufficiently knowen, when Herode had the daughter of Areta king of the Arabians in mariage, he was enamored with the beautie of Herodias Herodias his Neece,and by fraude tooke her away. And this iniurie he did to his brother Phillippe without puniſhment: for the ſame Ioſephus witneſſeth that he was a manne of a gentle and quiet diſpoſition. Alſo in this hyſtorie wee euidently ſee what rewarde remaineth in the worlde for faithfull and bolde miniſters of the truthe,eſpecially where they reprooue ſinnes. For ſcarce the hundred man doth admit correction: therfore if they be ſeuerely touched,they runne foorth into madneſſe. If this pride be founde in the moſte of the common people: no maruell if tyrantes doe more ſharply rage againſt them that reproue them,to whom nothing is more bitter then to be brought into order. Againe, in Iohn there ſhineth a notable example of conſtancie,wherewith it becommeth all godly teachers to be endued: that they ſhould not doubt to prouoke againſt them great and mighty men,as ofte as neceſsity ſhall ſo require. For hee ſeeketh not God ſincerely,that maketh acception of perſonnes. Further,when Luke ſayeth that this euill was added aboue all the reſt: Hee meaneth that his malice was then paſt hope, and that the ſinner is then come to the higheſt ſteppe,when as he is angry with the remedies: and doth not only refuſe correction, but alſo taketh vengeaunce vppon him that admoniſheth him,as vpon his enemie.

MAT. 12. When Ieſus had heard. The hyſtorie of Iohn ſeemeth not to agree with theſe, who witneſſeth that Iohn and Chriſt began the office of teaching both together at one time. But it is to be noted that our thre Euangeliſtes doe therefore in ſilence paſſe ouer that ſhorte time, becauſe the courſe of Iohn was not yet finiſhed, that is the preparation to receiue the Goſpell of Chriſte. And certainly,though Chriſte within that time executed the office of a teacher,yet he properly began not the preaching of the Goſpell,vntil he ſucceeded Iohn. Wherfore it is no abſurditie that the three Euangeliſts doe graunte and aſsigne that time to the miniſterie of Iohn, wherein Chriſte gathered his diſciples, as if they ſhould ſay: the morning paſsing,the ſunne aroſe. But that ſpeach is to be noted which Luke hathe,that Ieſus in the power,or by the power of the ſpirit, came into Galile,for it is to great purpoſe that we do not imagin any earthly or humane thing in Chriſt,but that the celeſtial and diuine power in him may come into our minde,and occupie our ſenſes.

MARKE. 14. Preaching the Goſpell of the kingdome of God. Mathew ſeemeth to haue ſomewhat differing from the other two. For he ſayth that after Chriſt went into Capernaum,and had left his country Nazareth, then at length he began his preaching: But Luke and Marke doe ſay that he taught openly in the countrey. But the anſweare is eaſie: For the Aduerbe of time in Mathewe ought not onelye to be referred to the nexte clauſe,but to the whole courſe of the hyſtorie. Therfore at his comming into Galile, Chriſt entred his courſe. Alſo the ſumme of the doctrine as it is deliuered by Mathew, differeth nothing from that which a litle before we read,that Iohn vſed. For it conſiſteth of two partes,repentance and the preaching of grace and ſaluation. Hee exhorteth the Iewes to conuerſion,becauſe the kingdom of God is at hand,that is,becauſe God will take his people into his hande to gouerne them,which is the ful and perfecte felicitie.

Marke ſpeaketh a little otherwiſe. The kingdome of God is at hande: Repent and beleeue the Goſpell: yet in the ſame ſence: for hauing ſpoken before of reſtoring the kingdome of God amongſt the Iewes, hee exhorteth to repentaunce and faith. Yet it may be demaunded, ſith repentance doeth depende on the Goſpell, whye Marke ſeparateth the ſame from the doctrine of the Goſpell. It may be anſweared two wayes. For God ſometime ſo calleth vs to repentaunce, ſo that hee onely commaundeth that the life be chaunged to better. Afterwardes he ſheweth the conuerſion and newneſſe of life, is the gifte of his ſpirite, that we might knowe that we are not onely commaunded that which is our duetie, but that there is together offered the grace and power of obedience. If after this maner we take this whiche Iohn preached of repentance, the meaning ſhall be: the Lorde commaundeth you to tourne to him: but becauſe yee can not doe it by your owne induſtrie, he promiſeth the ſpirite of regeneration. VVherfore it behooueth you to embrace this grace by faith: though the faith which he requireth to be hadde in the Goſpell, ought not to be reſtrained to the gift of renouation. But it belongeth eſpecially to forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. For Iohn ioyneth repentaunce with faith: becauſe God doeth therefore reconcile himſelfe to vs, that as a father he may be worſhipped of vs in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe. Furthermore, there is no abſurditie if we ſaye that to beleeue the Goſpell, doeth ſignifie as muche as to embrace fre righteouſneſſe. For this ſpeciall relation betwene faith and remiſsion of ſinnes, is often found in the ſcripture: as when he teacheth that we are iuſtified by faith. This place may be expounded both wayes, yet let that principle remaine vnſtaken, that free ſaluation is offered vs of God, that being conuerted to him, we ſhould liue to righteouſneſſe. Therefore he promiſing vs mercy, doeth call vs to the denial of the fleſh. The Epytheton is to be noted wherewith Marke adorneth the Goſpell: For heereby we learne, that by the preaching of the ſame, the kingdome of God is erected and eſtabliſhed vppon the earthe, neyther doeth God raigne by any other meanes amongſt men. VVherby it alſo appeareth howe miſerable the condition of menne is wythout the Goſpell.

LVKE. 15. Hee was honoured of all menne. Thys is namely ſet downe by Luke, that we mighte knowe that the diuiine power did preſentlye from the beginning ſhine in Chriſte, which driue men not as yet infected with a malitious deſire of gainſaying, into admiration of him.

Luke 4.

Matthew. Marke.

16. And he came to Nazareth where he had been brought vppe, (and as his cuſtome was) went into the Synagogue on the Sabeth daye, and ſtoode vppe to reade.

17. And there was deliuered vnto him the booke of the Prophet Eſaias, and when hee had opened the boke, he found the place where it was wrytte,

18. The ſpirite of the Lord is vpon me, becauſe he hath anoynted me, that I ſhould preach the Goſpel to the poore: hee hath ſent me, that I ſhoulde heale the broken hearted, that I ſhould preach deliuerāce to the captiues, & recouering of ſight to the blynd, that I ſhuld ſet at libertie thē that are bruſed.

19. And

19. And that I should preach the acceptable yeere of the Lord.

20. And hee closed vppe the booke, and gaue it again to the minister, and sate downe: and the eyes of al that were in the Synagogue were fastened on him.

21. Then hee beganne to saye vnto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your eares.

22. And all bare witnesse, and wondred at the gracious words, which proceeded out of his mouth: and sayd, Is not this Iosephes sonne?

16. Hee came to Nazareth. The Euangelistes doe stand vpon this one thing, that they might shewe by what meanes Christ was made known, for which purpose Luke here reporteth a thing worthy to be remebred: that is, that he expounding the place of Isaiah, and applying it to the present vse, he turned the eyes of all menne vppon himselfe. VVhen he saith that he came into the Synagogue, according to the custom: we hereby gather that he did not onely speake to the people in the streetes and hygh wayes, but as much as hee might, he obserued the vsuall order of the Church. Also we see withall, though the Iewes were degenerate; yet in such confusion of thinges, and in the estate of the Churche miserablye corrupted, this good thing remayned, that they read the scripture before the people, that thereby they might take occasion of teaching and exhorting. VVhereby it also appeareth what was the right and lawfull maner of keeping the Saboth. For GOD did not therefore commaund his people to keepe holy dayes, as though that he was simply pleased with their reste: but rather that hee might exercise them in meditating his workes. Also because the mindes of men are dimme in considering the workes of God, it is necessary that they should be directed by the rule of the scripture: but though Paule numbreth the Saboth amongst the shadowes of the lawe, Colloss. 2. 17. yet in this poynt wee haue like cause to obserue it, as the Iewes hadde, that the people maye come togeather, to heare the word, to publike prayers, and to other exercises of godlynesse: for the which cause the lords day came in place of the Iewish saboth. Now, if the times be compared, it shall easily appeare out of this present place, that the corruptions of the popishe hierarchy are at this day more filthy & more deformed, then they were amongst the Iewes vnder Annas and Cayphas. For the reading of the scripture, which then was vsed, was not onely vnder the Pope growne out of vse, but with swoorde and fire was driuen out of the Churches: But that which they songe in an vnknown tongue, as it seemed, in mockerie. Christ rose vp to read, not onely that his voyce might be the better heard, but in signe of reuerence. For this doth the maiestie of the scripture deserue, that the interpreters of it should professe them selues to come modestlye and reuerentlye to handle the same.

17. Hee found the place. It is not to be doubted but that Christ of purpose chose this place. Some thinke that it was euen offered to him by God: but sith he had graunted him a free election, I doe rather referre it to his iudgment, that he chose this place before others. Also Isaiah pro-miſeth in that place, that after the captiuitie of Babylon there ſhould yet be ſome witneſſes of the fauour of God, which ſhould gather the people from deſtruction, and out of the darknes of death, and ſhould with a ſpirituall power reſtore the Church afflicted with ſo manye calamities. But becauſe that redēption was to be proclaymed in the name & auctoritie of Chriſt alone: therefore he ſpeaketh in the ſingular number, & after a ſorte taketh vppon him the perſon of Chriſte, that he might the more effectually ſtirre vp the mindes of the godly to an aſſured truſt. It is certaine that the wordes which are here ſet downe cannot properlye be applyed to any, but to Chriſt alone, and that for two cauſes. Firſt, becauſe that he alone was endued with the fulnes of the ſpirite, that hee might be a witneſſe and a meſſenger of our reconciliation with God (by which reaſon Paul aſsigneth that peculiarly to him, which is commō to all the miniſters of the Goſpel, Ephe. 2. 17. that is, that they ſhuld preach peace to as many as are nigh and farre off:) then becauſe he only worketh and perfourmeth by the power of his ſpirit, whatſoeuer good things are promiſed.

18. The ſpirit of the Lord vpon me. This is therfore ſaid, that we might know that Chriſt aſwel in himſelf, as in his miniſters doth not the work of mā, or any priuate buſines, but that he was ſent of God to reſtore the ſaluation of the Church. For he teſtifieth that he doth nothing by the motion and counſell of man, but al things by the gouernment of the ſpirit, that the faith of the godly might be grounded vpon the auctoritie and power of God. That clauſe that next followeth, Becauſe he hath annoynted mee, is added to expound the former. For many do falſly boaſt that they haue the ſpirit of God, whē they are without the gifts of the ſpirit. But Chriſt by the annoynting, as by the effect proueth that hee is endued with the ſpirit of God. Then hee ſheweth to what end hee was endued with the grace of the ſpirit: namely, that he might preach to the poore: whereby we gather, that whoſoeuer are ſent of God to preach the Goſpell, ought firſt to be endued with neceſſary giftes, that they maye be able to diſcharge ſo great an office. VVherefore they are indeede to be laughed at, which vnder the pretence of the calling of God, doe vſurpe the place of Paſtors, when they are moſt vnapt to execute the office: as the horned biſhops in poperie, when they are more ignorant then any Aſſes, yet they proudlye cry out, that they are the Vicars of Chriſte, and that they only are the lawful gouernours of the Church. It is alſo expreſly ſaid, that the Lord doth annoynt his ſeruauntes: becauſe that the true and effectuall preaching of the Goſpell dooth not conſiſt in windy eloquence, but in the celeſtiall power of the ſpyrite: as Paule ſayeth. 1. Cor. 2, 1. & 4.

To the poore. The Prophet declareth what the eſtate of the church was before the beginning of the goſpel, and what al our condition is without Chriſt. Therefore he calleth them poore, broken, captiues, and blind, and bruſed, to whom God promiſeth reſtitution. But though the body of the people was oppreſſed with ſo many miſeries, that theſe titles might agree to euery member of the ſame: yet becauſe that manye in their pouertie blindneſſe, bondage, and to bee ſhorte, in death, doe flatter themſelues, or at leaſt ſenſeleſſe: therfore few are fit for the receiuing of this grace. And firſt we are taught here, to what ende the preaching of the Goſpell belonbelongeth, and what it bringeth vs: that is, when we were wholly ouerwhelmed with all kind of euils, there God shineth vnto vs with his light of life, that he leading vs out of the great depth of death, might restore vs into a full felicitie. Truely this is no vsuall commendation of the gospell, that we gather such incomparable fruit of it. Secondly we see whō Christ calleth to him, and whom he maketh partakers of the grace committed to him: that is, they that are wretches in al poyntes, and are without all hope of saluation. But againe we are admonished, that we cannot any otherwise enioy these benefits of Christ, except we be humbled with a deepe feeling of our miseries; and as people hungarstarued, doe desire and seeke for him to be our deliuerer: for whosoeuer swell in pride, and sigh not vnder their captiuitie, and are not displeased with theyr owne blindenesse, they doe with deaffe eares dispyse this prophesie.

19. That I should preach the acceptable yeere. It seemeth to many to be an allusion to the yeere of Iubile, whose iudgement I doe not refuse. Yet it is worth the labour to note, how the Prophet taketh paines to aunswear a doubt, which might trouble and shake the weake mindes, seeing that the Lord had so long differred the promised saluation, and had holden them in suspence. Therefore he appoynteth the time of redemption in the counsell or goodwill of God, as he saith: chap. 49. 8. In an acceptable time I haue heard thee, in a day of saluation haue I helped thee. Paule to the Galla. 4. 4. calleth it the fulnes of time; that the faithfull may learne not curiously to enquire further then is expedient: but to reste in the will of God: and this one thing was sufficient for them, that the saluation in Christ was giuen, when God saw it good.

20. And the eyes of all that were in the Synagogue. I doubte not but that God had touched their heartes, that the straungnes of the matter might make them more attentiue, and so should giue eare to Christ speaking: for it was necessary that they should be stayd, least they presently should haue made a noyse, or at the leaste that they shoulde not breake off the course of the word, seeing that otherwise they were more bent and readye to contemne Christ, as we shall see.

21. This day is fulfilled. Christe doth not onely vse these three words: but prooueth in deede that the tyme is nowe come, wherein GOD would restore the decayed Church, that the exposition of the prophesie might be euident and plaine to the hearers, as the interpreters do rightly and in order handle the scripture, when they applye the same to the present vse: and he saieth, that it was fulfilled rather in their eares then in their eies: beecause the bare sight doth litle profit; except that doctrine had the chiefe place.

22. They bare witnesse. Here Luke first commendeth vnto vs the diuine grace which was in the mouth of Christe: then heeliuely paynteth out the vnthankfulnes of men. He calleth them the words of grace, or gratious wordes in the Hebrew phrase, wherein the power and grace of the holy Ghost was seene. Therefore the Nazarites are compelled to acknowledge with admiration, God speaking in Christ: yet they willingly hinder themselues from giuing the right and due honour to the heauenly doctrine. For when they obiect that he is the sonne of Ioseph, they do not amplyfie with this circumstaunce the glory of God, as it became the:

but malitiouſly they take this as an offence, that they might with the fairer colour refuſe whatſoeuer ſhalbe ſayde by the ſonne of Ioſeph. So at this day we ſee very many, who though they are enforced to graunt that to be the word of God, which they heare: yet they get them friuolous excuſes, wherewith they may exempt themſelues from the neceſsitie of obedience.

And truelye the cauſe why we are not ſo touched with the power of the Goſpell, as it were meete, commeth not by any other meanes, but that wee are a lette vnto our ſelues, and with our malice we choake the light, by beholding whereof, wee are moued whether we will or no.

Luke. 4.

Matth.	Marke.

23. Then he ſayd vnto them, you will ſurely ſay to me this prouerbe, Phyſition heale thy ſelfe: what ſoeuer we haue heard done in Capernaum, doe it here likewiſe in thine own countrey.

24. And he ſaid, verily I ſay vnto you, no prophet is accepted in his countrey.

25. But I tell you of a troath, manye widowes were in Iſrael in the dayes of Elyas, when heauen was ſhut three yeeres and ſixe monethes, when great famine was throughout all the land:

26. But vnto none of them was Elyas ſent, ſaue vnto Sarepta, a citie of Sydon, vnto a certain wydowe.

27. Alſo there were many lepers in Iſraell, in the time of Eliſeus the Prophet: yet none of them was made cleane, ſauing Naaman the Syrian.

28. Then all that were in the Synagogue, when they heard it, were filled with wrath,

29. And roſe vp, and thruſt him out of the citie, and lead him vnto the edge of the hill, whereon their citie was builte, to caſte him downe headlonge.

30. But he paſſed through the middes of them, and went his way.

23. Phiſition heale thy ſelfe. By the wordes of Chriſt it is eaſily gathered, that he was contemptuouſly receiued by the Nazarites: for he vttereth that, which he knew they thought in their mindes. Then he layeth the falt vppon them, why he ſtayeth from working miracles amongſte them: and he reproueth their malice, becauſe they gaue no reuerence to the Prophet of God. The obiection which he preuenteth is this: It is no maruell, if his countrey men haue him in no eſtimation, ſeeing that hee doth not ennoble his owne countrey, with miracles, as he doth ſtraunge places: therefore this is a iuſt reuenge, if he be reiected of his, which he leſſe eſteemeth then any other. To this purpoſe belongeth the common prouerbe, that a Phyſition ſhoulde beginne firſt with himſelfe and his owne people, before he ſhew his skill of curing to ſtrangers. The ſumme of the obiection is, Chriſt did prepoſterouſly, for that with his myracle hee renoumed other cities of Galile, & had no reſpect to his own countrey. And this ſeemed to the Nazarites to be an honeſt excuſe, why they againe might refuſe him.

24. Verily, I ſay vnto you. Hee layeth to their charge that it is through their own fault, that he ſheweth not his power in miracles amongſt thē, as in other places. For the incredulitie of men, ſtayeth God that he work not for their ſaluation, as were to be wiſhed. Matth. 13.58, and Mar. 6.5. Therfore could not Chriſt doe miracles amongſt them, becauſe they beleeued not in him: not that it is in the will of men to tie the handes of God: but becauſe he depriueth them of the fruit of his workes, which through infidelitie make themſelues vnworthy. Therefore the aunſwere is aſmuch, as if Chriſte ſhould haue ſayde: If you wil be partakers of miracles, why doe you not giue place to God? Naye, why doe you proudlye reiect the miniſter of his power? Therefore you haue a iuſt reward of your contempt, that you being paſſed by, I ſhould rather ſhew my miracles in other places, that I am the Meſsias of God, to whom the reſtoring of the Church is committed. And truely that vnthankefulneſſe might not be borne, that when God would haue his ſonne brought vp in their citie, that they ſhould eſpyſe ſuch a nourſe. Vherefore of ryght he withdrew his hande from thence, that it ſhould not be ſcorned by ſo wicked contemners. But here we learne how much the Lord eſteemeth his word: for that he may puniſh the contempt of the ſame, hee taketh from amongſt them the graces, which are teſtimonies of his preſēce. For the vnderſtanding of this ſentence, That a prophet is not eſteemed in his owne countrey, let the readers looke what we haue ſaid in the fourth Chapter of Iohn about the end.

25. There were many widowes. After that Chriſt had layd the fault vpon them, that they were without miracles, he now proueth by two examples, that it ſhould not ſeeme abſurde, if God ſhould preferre ſtraungers before his owne houſholde people: and they ought not to laye the faulte vppon him, if that he obeyed the calling of God, as Elyas and Eliſæus did in times paſt. And ſharply he reſtraineth their vaine confidence, that they would haue him bound to them; becauſe he was brought vppe amongſt them. At what time (ſaith hee) the famyne continued for two yeares and a halfe, there were manye widowes in the lande of Iſrael: whoſe neede the Prophet was not commaunded to helpe, but he was ſent to a ſtraunger of the citie of Sydon. Likewiſe Eliſæus cured none of the Lepers of his owne countrey, but Naaman, that manne of Syria. And though he peculyarly nyppeth the Nazarits: yet hee alſo reproueth the vnthankefulneſſe of al the nation, for that almoſt al were wont ſo much the more vnworthily to deſpiſe the Lord, by how much he came neere to them. For how came it to paſſe, that God preferred the ſtraung woman before all the Iſraelites: but becauſe that the Prophet being thrown forth of them, was enforced to ſeeke entertainment in a prophane land? And wherefore would God that Naaman the Syrian ſhould be healed by Eliſæus, but for the reproofe of the people of Iſraell? Therefore the meaning is, that it now falleth out, as it did in times paſt, that God will ſend his power a farre off vnto ſtraungers, becauſe he is driuen backe by thē, that dwell at home with him. Yet Chriſte declareth that nothing of his glory is diminiſhed, in that he is nought ſet by of his countreymen: becauſe that God, to their ignominie and ſhame, can other where honour and exalt his ſonne, as in tymes paſt hee honoured his Prophets in the middeſt of the Gentiles. In this manner the fooliſh glorying of fleſh is beaten downe, when wee ſee the Lorde reigne not onelye where and when hee will: but euen in the vttermoſte corners, not regarding the lande which hee had choſen for a dwelling place for himſelfe. Alſo heere is a generall doctrine to be gathered, that it becommeth not vs to preſcribe God a lawe for the beſtowing of his benefites, but that at his pleaſure hee may rayſe the lowe and the moſt contemned menne, to honour, the chiefe being reiected. Neyther is it lawefull for vs to ſtyrre, if he altogether ouerthrow that order þ pleaſeth our iudgement. And the Antitheſis betweene Iſraell and the prophan nations muſt be noted. But it behooueth vs alwayes to conſider this, thas he chooſeth none beefore other for their own worthineſſe: but that rather commeth by the wonderfull counſell of God. Yet though the reaſon be hidden, it is neceſſary to honour and to worſhip the depth.

28. They were filled with wrath. They vnderſtoode to what purpoſe thoſe two examples tended, which Chriſt alleaged: that is, that the grace of God ſhould be traſterred to a place. Therefore they took it for theyr reproach. But wheras their conſciences ought to be touched to the quick, that their faults being corrected, they might ſeeke remedie, they are onely driuen into a madneſſe. So the wicked do not onely ſtubbornly reſiſt the iudgementes of God, but they cruelly riſe againſt his ſeruants. Hereby it appeareth what force theſe reproues haue, which come from the ſpirite of God: for they enflame their mindes with madneſſe, that willingly do ſcorne the ſame.

Further, when we ſee the mindes of menne to be ſo full of poyſon, that they waxe madde againſt God, ſo ſoone as they are ſharpely handled, we muſt aske the ſpirite of meekeneſſe, that the ſame fury cary not vs into this deadly battayle. When Luke ſaieth that Chriſt went thorow the middes of them, and ſo eſcaped their handes, hee declareth that he was delyuered by God not without a great myracle from the preſent death. By which example we are taught, although our aduerſaries prenaile, that our life ſeeme to be at their pleaſure: yet the power of GOD ſhall alwayes be the conquerer, to preſerue vs ſo long as he will keepe vs in this world, eyther he will binde their handes, or ſtrike their eyes with blindnes, or amaſe their heartes and mindes.

Matth. 4.

	Marke.	Luke.
13. And leauing Nazareth, went and dwelt in Capernaum, which is neere the ſea, in the borders of Zabulon, and Nepthalim.
14. That it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by Iſaias, the Prophet ſaying:
15. The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nepthalim by the way of the ſea, beyond Iordan, Galile of the Gentiles:
16. The people which ſate in darkneſſe, ſawe great great light, and to them that sate in the region and shadow of death, light is risen vp.

13. And leauing Nazareth. I haue thought good therefore to adde this place of Matthew to the hystorie of Luke, becauſe it may be gathered, that Chriſt to this time was accuſtomed to frequent the citie of Nazareth: he bidding that citie farewell, that hee might auoyde daunger, hee went to Capernaum, and the cities thereaboutes. This hiſtory hath no difficultie, but that Matthew ſeemeth to abuſe the teſtimonie of the prophet into an other ſenſe. But if we weigh the naturall ſenſe of the Prophet, the applying of it to this preſent cauſe, ſhal be apt and eaſie. For Iſaias, after he had ſpoken of the moſt grieuous calamitie of the people, that he might comfort them in ſorow, promiſeth, when the people ſhall be brought to the loweſt ebbe, preſentlye delyueraunce ſhall followe, which, darkeneſſe being ſhaken off, ſhall reſtore the light of lyfe. The wordes are, the darkneſſe ſhall not be according to the affliction, that it had, when at the firſt he touched lightly the land of Zebulō, & the land of Nepthali, nor afterwarde when he was more grieuous by the way of the ſea, beyonde Iordan in Galile of the Gentiles. The people that walked in darkeneſſe, haue ſeene a great light. The Iſraelites were now oppreſſed with a double calamitie: for, firſt foure trybues or thereaboutes were lead into captiuitie by Theglath Peleſer. Then whē Salmanaſar ſtroke all the kingdome of Iſraell, there remayned a thirde plague: whiche the Prophet about the end of the eight chapter ſaieth, ſhalbe the ſharpeſt of all. But nowe in the wordes, which we haue rehearſed, there followeth a mittigation: becauſe God reacheth his hande to his people, death ſhall be eaſier to be borne then ſickneſſes were before. Although (ſaieth hee) the whole people ſhall be blotted out, yet the ſhining light of grace ſhall bring to paſſe, that there ſhalbe leſſe darkeneſſe in this latter deſtruction, then was in the double deſtruction of the tenne trybes. Alſo I doubte not but that the promiſe ought to be extended to the whole body of the people, which in ſhewe ſeemed to be in like miſerable and lamentable eſtate. For the Ievves do prepoſterouſly apply the ſame to the deliuerance of the citie of Ieruſalem: as if the lyght of lyfe had bene reſtored, when by the flight of king Sennacherib the ſiege was rayſed. Certeinly, it doth plainely appeare by the text, that the Prophet had a further regard. Therefore, when he ſhall promiſe a general reſtitution of al the church, it followeth that the lande of Zabulon, and the lande of Nepthalim, and Galile of the Gentiles, were comprehended in the number of thē, whoſe darkeneſſe of death were chaunged into the light of life. The returne of the people from Babylon was the beginning of this light, and as the morning. At the length the ſonne of righteouſnes Chriſt, came forth in his full brightnes, and by his comming hee vtterly abolyſhed the darknes of death. Therfore P. to the Ep. 5. 14. admoniſheth that in him was fulfilled, that which euery wher is foūd in the prophets: Awak thou that ſleepeſt, & ſtand vp from the dead. Now when wee knowe that the kingdom of Chriſt is ſpirituall, it is neceſſary that the light of ſaluation, which he bringeth, and what help ſoeuer we receiue from him, ſhould be agreeable to the nature of the ſame. Wherof it followeth that our ſoules are drowned in the darknes of eternal death, vntil he lighten thē with his grace.

The

The Prophet ſpeaketh of the ouerthrowing of a countrey: but the condition of mankinde is deſcribed as in a glaſſe, vntill it be ſette at lybertie by the grace of Chriſt. That they that ſate in darkeneſſe are ſayd to ſee a great light: ſo ſodeine and ſo notable a chaunge dooth amplyfie the greatneſſe of the diuine ſaluation. The lower Galile was called, Galile of the Gentiles, not onely becauſe it was ſo neere to Tyre and Sydon, but becauſe the Gentiles were there myngled amongſt the Iewes: eſpecially for that Dauid had graunted certaine cities to king Hiram.

Matth. 4.

18. And Ieſus walking by the ſea of Galile, ſawe two brethrē, Simon, which was called Peter, and Andrew his brother, caſting a net into the ſea: for they were fiſhers.

19. And he ſayd vnto them, follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men.

20. And they ſtraight way leauing the nets, followed him.

21. And when he was gone forth from thence, hee ſawe other two brethren, Iames the ſonne of Zebedeus, and Iohn his brother in a ſhippe with Zebedeus their father, mending their nets, and he called them.

22. And they without tarying, leauing the ſhip and their father, followed him.

23. So Ieſus went about all Galile, teaching in their Synagogue, and preachinge the Goſpell of the kingdome, and healing euery ſickneſs and euery diſeaſe among the people.

24. And his fame ſpread abroade through all Syria, and they brought vnto him all ſicke people, that were taken with diuers diſeaſes and grypinges, and them that were poſſeſſed

Mar. 1.

16. And as hee walked by the ſea of Galile, he ſaw Simon, and Andrewe his brother, caſting a nette into the ſea: for they were fiſhers.

17. Then Ieſus ſaide vnto them, follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men.

18. And ſtraightway they forſooke their nettes, and followed him.

19. And when he had gone a litle further thence, he ſaw Iames the ſonne of Zebedeus, and Iohn his brother, as they were in the ſhippe, mending their nets.

20. And anon he called them: & they left their father Zebedeus in the ſhip with his hyred ſeruants, and went their way after him.

Luke. 5.

2. And ſaw two ſhips ſtanding by the lake ſide, but the fiſhermen were gone out of them, and were waſhing their nettes.

3. And he entred into one of the ſhippes, which was Simōs, and required of him, that hee would thruſt off a litle from the land, and he ſate downe, and taught the people out of the ſhip.

4. Now, when he had left ſpeaking, hee ſaide vnto Simon, launch out into the deepe, & let downe your nettes, to make a draught.

5. Then Simon anſwered & ſaid vnto him: maiſter, we haue trauelled all night, and haue taken nothing: neuertheleſſe at thy word I will let down the nette.

6. And when they had ſo done, they incloſed a great multitude of fiſhes, ſo that their net brake.

7. And they beckned to their partners, which were in the other ſhyp, that they ſhould come, & help them: who came then, and filled both the ſhippes, that they di ſincke.

8. Now when Simon Peter ſaw it, he fel down at Ieſus knes, ſaying, Lord, goe from me: for I am a ſinful man.

ſed with deuilles, and thoſe which were Lunatike, and thoſe that had the palſie: and he healed them.

25. And there followed him great multitudes out of Galile, and Decapolu, and Ieruſalem, & Iudea, and from beyond Iordan.

9. For he was vtterly aſtonyed, and al that were with him: for the draught of fiſhes which they tooke.

10. And ſo was alſo Iames & Iohn, the ſonnes of Zebedeus, whiche were companyons with Simon. Then Ieſus ſayde vnto Simon: Feare not, from hence forth thou ſhalt catch men.

11. And when they hadde brought the ſhippes to lande, they forſooke all, and followed him.

MAT. 11. And he walking. Becauſe this hyſtorie is ſet down by Luke after two miracles, which wee ſhall ſee afterwarde, it was commonlye thought, that the myracle which is reported was wrought by him ſomwhat after they were called by Chriſt. But the reaſon which they follow hath but ſmall force: for it was not the purpoſe of the Euangeliſtes to write Chronicles from yeere to yeare in a certeine and diſtinct order of tymes: whereby it came to paſſe, that the order of dayes being not regarded, they accounted it ſufficient to gather ſummarilye the chiefeſt of the deedes of Chriſt: yet they kept an account of the yeares, that it might be euident to the readers how Chriſte beſtowed the courſe of three yeares from the beginning of his preaching, vnto his death. But thoſe myracles, which were wrought at that time, they ſet downe at lybertie, as hereafter by many examples ſhall more plainely appeare.

But now it appeareth by manye argumentes, that this hyſtorie is reported by the three: of the which yet this one may ſuffice the reader that is not contentious, that the three with one conſent doe teach, that Peter and Andrew, Iames and Iohn, were created Apoſtles. If they had beene called before, it ſhould followe that they had beene Apoſtats, that forſaking their mayſter, and deſpiſing their calling, had returned to their olde manner of life. This is the only difference betweene Luke and the other two, that hee onely rehearſeth the myracle, which the other doe omitte. But this is not vnuſuall amongſt the Euangeliſtes, to touch one part of a hyſtorie, omitting many circumſtances. Wherefore there is no abſurditie, if we ſay that one myracle is left out by two, which is reported by one. And that is to be remembred that Iohn ſaieth, 20.31. that of innumerable miracles of Chriſt, there were ſome choſen, which migh ſuffice for the prouing of his diuine power, and for the confirming of our fayth in him. Therefore it is no meruaile, if Matthewe and Marke doe briefly touch the calling of the foure Apoſtles, whoſe circumſtance Luke doth more at large ſet forth.

LV. 1. Hee ſtoode by the lake. Matthew and Marke call it the ſee of Galile, after the olde manner of theyr tongue. That lake in times paſte among the Hebrews was properly called eindath. The the language being corrupted, the word was turned into Genezareth. The prophan writers doe call it Geneſar: on that part that bordered vppon Galile, they called it the ſea of Galile. The banke that was neere to Tiberias, was named after that citie. In an other place there will be a more fitte occaſion to ſpeake of the largeneſſe and cituation of the ſame. Now we will come to the matter it ſelfe. Luke ſaieth, that Chriſt going vp into Peters ſhyp, launched out a litle from the land, that he might the more commodiouſlye teache the people from thence, whiche were come out of diuers places, for the deſire they had to heare him: and when he had ended his teaching, by a miracle he ſhewed a token of his diuine power: for though it is vſuall to fiſhers to make many draughtes in vaine, and then with one good draught to recompence the labour that they had ſpent in vaine: yet the myracle was ſet forth by this circumſtaunce, that when they had taken nothing all the night (which yet is moſt fit for catching) ſodenly a great multitude of fiſhes was heaped into their nettes, which filled their ſhippes. Therefore Peter and his felowes doe eaſily acknowledge, that ſuch a pray, as exceeded meaſure, came not to them by chaunce, but was giuen them of God.

LV. 5. Maiſter, wee haue trauayled all night. It is not to be doubted but that Peter knowing that Chriſt executed the office of a teacher, and touched with a reuerence of him, did ſo call him: yet he had not ſo profited, as he deſerued to be accounted amongſt his diſciples. For it is not enough to thinke reuerently of Chriſte, except we embracing his doctrine with obedience of fayth, do hold that which he requireth of vs. And though hee had no taſte, or very ſmall taſte of the Goſpell: yet he ſheweth how much he attributeth to Chriſt, wheras being wearyed with labour, without profit, that which he in vaine had tried, he againe attempted. Therefore it cannot be denyed, but that Chriſt was great, and that his auctoritie much preuailed with him. But this perticular fayth had in one onlye commaundement of Chriſte, and that in a priuate earthlye buſines, had not made Peter a Chriſtian, nor giuen him a place amongſte the chyldren of God: but that from this beginnning of obedience, he ſhould at length be lead to a full obedience. But ſith that Peter was ſo ready to obey the commaundement of Chriſte, whome as yet hee did not know eyther to bee a Prophet, or the Sonne of God. No excuſe canne ſerue our ſlouth, that being taught that hee is our Lord, and king, and iudge, and being tenne times commaunded by him to doe our duetie, doe not yet ſtirre a finger.

LV. 6. They incloſed a great multitude of fiſhes. The ende of the miracle was, that the deitie of Chriſte beeing knowne, Peter and others ſhoulde yeelde themſelues to be his diſciples. Yet generallye by this example wee are taught not to feare that the bleſsing of God and happye ſucceſſe ſhal not folow our labour, as oft as at the commaundement and direction of Chriſte wee laye our handes to worke: But there was ſuch plentie of fiſhes as ſanke the ſhyppes, and aſtonyed the myndes of them that beehelde it. For it was meete that the diuine glorye of Chriſte ſhoulde bee reuealed by this myracle, that the credite might be wholly his.

LV. 8. Lorde, goe from mee. Though menne in their dayly prayers doe deſire the preſence of God: yet it is neceſſary that aſſoone as GOD appeareth, that they ſhoulde be affrayde, and halfe dead with feare and amaſedneſſe, vntill he giue them comfort. There is good cauſe whye they ſhould ſo earneſtly pray for the preſence of God: for he beinge abſent, they are enforced to feele them ſelues to bee miſerable wretches: and his preſence is therefore fearefull, becauſe they then beginne to feele that they are nothing: nay, with what a heape of euils they are filled. After this maner Peter ſo reuerenceth Chriſt in this myracle, that he being amaſed with his maieſtie, would flee as much as he could. And this did not onely befall to Peter, but as by the text we doe gather, they were al afrayd. VVherefore we ſee that this feeling is planted in all men, that they ſhould be afraide at the preſence of God. And it is profitable for vs, that what fooliſh boldnes or pride ſoeuer is in vs might be humbled; ſo there ſhall preſently be giuen comfort, which may hold vs vp. Therefore Chriſt with a ſweete and friendly anſwere dooth recreate the mind of Peter, and forbyddeth him to feare. So the Lorde buryeth his in a graue, that then he may giue them life.

LV. 10. From henceforth thou ſhalt catch men. Matthew ſaieth, I will make you fiſhers of men. But Marke hath, I will make you to be fiſhers. By which wordes we are taught, that Peter and the other three were not onelye choſen of Chriſt to be diſciples, but created Apoſtles, or at the leaſt choſen in hope of Apoſtleſhippe. Therefore here is not onely diſcribed a generall calling to the fayth, but a ſpeciall calling to a certaine office.

I graunte that the office of teachinge was not yet committed vnto them: but yet Chriſte calleth and chuſeth them into his company, that he might frame them to teaching. And this is wiſely to be conſidered: for all are not commaunded to leaue their parentes and their old trade of lyuing, that they maye followe Chriſte on foote: but the Lorde is contente to haue ſome in his flocke and Churche, and to others hee appoynteth a proper ſtanding. Therefore lette them that haue the office of a publike perſon layde vppon them, knowe, that there is more to be required of them then of anye priuate perſons. So Chriſte chaunging nothinge in the common lyfe of others, dooth bring theſe foure from theyr worke, whereby they lyued before, that hee might vſe their help in a more notable office.

Alſo Chriſt choſe vnto him groſſe Idiotes no leſſe rude in witte, then voyde of learning, that hee myght frame them, naye, that hee might renew them with the grace of his ſpirite, that they might excell all the wiſemen of the world. For ſo it was his will to pull downe the pryde of fleſhe, and to giue a notable token of ſpirituall grace in them, that we might learne to aske the lyght of fayth from heauen, knowing that it cannot be obtained by our own induſtrie.

Furthermore, that he choſe not the vnlearned and rude, that he would leaue them alwayes ſuch: that which he did, maye not bee drawne into example: as if at this daye alſo ſuch Paſtors were to be ordayned, as are after to bee inſtructed to execute theyr office. For wee know what rule hee preſcribeth vs by the mouth of Paule: that is, that none may be called, except they be apt to teach. 1. Tim. 3. 2

And he did not chuſe ſuch, as if he preferred ignorauncе before knowledge: as ſome frantike men doe triumph to themſelues in theyr owne ignorauncе, and how much more they abhorre learning, ſo much the nerer they thinke themſelues to the Apoſtles. And his will was at the firſt to chuſe theſe baſe men, that he might ouerthrow the vanitie of the, that thinke that the vnlearned ſhall not enter into heauen. But after he ioyned Paule as a companion to theſe fiſhers: who from his youth was diligently trayned vp in learning, Act. 22.3. But yet it pertaineth nothing to the matter, to diſpute more ſubtilly of the maner of the metaphor: for that it was taken of the preſent matter: yet when Chriſte ſpake of the preaching of the Goſpell, he aptly alluded to fiſhing: becauſe that menne wandering, and ſcattered abroad in the world, as in a vaſt and confuſed ſea, are gathered togeather by the preaching of the Goſpell. But the hyſtorie which is recorded in the firſt chapter of Iohn differeth from this. For when Andrew was one of Iohns diſciples, he was by him delyuered to Chriſte, and after he brought his brother with him, and then they tooke him as their mayſter: but after they were receiued into a hygher office.

MAT. 22 And they without tarying. Here firſt appeareth the force of Chriſtes voyce, not that the onely voyce of Chriſte dooth ſo effectually pearſe into the hearts of men: but becauſe the Lord by his ſpirit doth inwardly driue all them, that he will draw and pull to himſelfe, that they may obay his voyce. Secondly, the aptnes to be taught, and the readineſſe to obey, is prayſed in the diſciples, which prefer the calling of Chriſt before all the buſines of the world. Eſpecially it becommeth the miniſters of the worde to marke this example, that all other cares being ſette by, they may addict & giue themſelues wholly to the Church, whereto they are appoynted.

MAT. 23 Ieſus went about all Galile. Matthew reportes the ſame things agayne in an other place. But there is no inconuenience, ſeeing Chriſte for a time ceaſed not dayly to worke almoſt innumerable myracles, that generally the courſe of the ſame is twiſe or thriſe mẽtioned. Now in the wordes of Matthew firſt it is to be noted, that Chriſt neuer reſted, that he might ſpread the ſeede of the Goſpel euery where. Alſo Matthew calleth it the Goſpell of the kingdome: whereby the kingdome of God is eſtabliſhed amongſt men, for theyr ſaluation. Therefore he maketh a difference betweene the perfect and eternall beatitude, and the proſperous and pleaſaunt things of this preſent life. That Mathew ſaith that Chriſt healed all diſeaſes, the meaning is, of what kinde ſoeuer they were. For it is certeine, that al were not healed of their diſeaſes, but there was no kind of diſeaſes that were offered him, that he healed not. And hee reckoneth the chiefe kindes of diſeaſes, wherein Chriſte ſhewed his power. The ſcripture calleth not all generally, that were vexed of the deuill, men poſſeſſed with deuils: but thoſe that with a ſecret vengance of God are deliuered bound to Sathan, that hee might poſſeſſe their mindes and ſenſes. They are called Lunatiks, in whom the force of the deſeaſe encreaſeth or decreaſeth, after the inclination of the moone, as they that are ſick of the falling ſicknes, and ſuch like: when we knowe that ſuche diſeaſes are not curable by naturall remedies, it foloweth that the deitie of Chriſt is here witneſſed, ſith that he cured them wonderfully.

21. So they entred into Capernaum, and straightwaye on the Sabboth day he entred into the Synagogue, and taught.

22. And they were astonyed at his doctrine: for he taught them, as one that had authoritie, and not as the Scribes.

23. And there was in their synagogue a man which had an vncleane spirit, and he cryed,

24. Saying, ah, what haue we to doe with thee, O Iesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroy vs? I knowe thee, what thou art, euen that holy one of God.

25. And Iesus rebuked him, saying, hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26. And the vncleane spirit tare him, and cryed with a loude voyce, and came out of him.

27. And they were all amased, so that they demaunded one of an other, saying, what thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for hee commaundeth the fowle spirites with authoritie, and they obey him.

31. And he came down into Capernaum, a citie of Galile, and there taught them on the Saboth dayes.

32. And they were astonied at his doctrine: for his worde was with authoritie.

33. And in the Synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an vncleane diuell, which cryed with a loud voyce, 34. Saying, oh, what haue we to doe with thee, thou Iesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroy vs? I know who thou arte, euen the holy one of God.

35. And Iesus rebuked him, saying, hold thy peace, and come out of him. Then the deuil throwing him in the middest of them, came out of him, & hurt him not.

36. So feare came on them all, and they spake amongo themselues, saying, what thing is this? for with authoritie and power hee commaundeth the fowle spirites, and they come out.

It is to be thought that this manne possessed with a deuill was one of that company, which Matthew made mention of somwhat before. But the narration of Mark and Luke is not in vaine: because they shew certeine circumstances, which do not onely make the miracle more manifest, but also doe containe profitable doctrine. For the deuill doth craftilye graunt, that Christ is the holy one of God, that he might make men suspect that he hath some familiaritie with Christe: by which subtilty hee also endeuored to bring the gospel into suspitiō, & at this day he ceaseth not to attēpt the same. This is the cause why Christ causeth him to hold his peace. And it may be that this confession was violently wrested out of him: but these two do not differ betweene themselues, that hee being enforced to giue place to the power of Christ, that he might proclayme him to be the holy one of God, and yet subtilly he endeuoureth to couer the glorye of Christe, with his darknes. It is also to be nored, that hee doth so flatter Christ, that hee might crafrely conuey himselfe from his hand. And after this maner he fighteth with himselfe: for to what purpose is Christ sanctified of the Father, but that delyuering menne from the tyrannie of the Deuill, hee might ouerthrowe his kingdome: but beecause Sathan cannot abyde that power, whiche hee perceyueth to bee prepared for his destruction, hee desires to make Christe quiet, and to be content with a vaine title.

MAR. 22. They were astonied at his doctrine. The Euangelists do meane that the power of the spirit did appeare in the wordes of Christe, which caused euen the prophane and colde hearers to wonder at them. Luke saith, that his word was with authoritie: that is, full of dignitie. Marke setteth it out more fully, and addeth an Antitheſis, that it was vnlike to the wordes of the Scribes. But when they were adulterous interpreters of the scripture, their doctrine was literall and dead, which shewed no force of the spirite, and there was no maiestie in it, but such colde
1. Cor. 4. 28 stuffe, as may at this daye be seene in the speculatiue dignitie of popery. Those maysters doe imperiously thunder out what soeuer they thinke good. But whē they in prophane maner do brabble of diuinitie, so that no religiō appeareth in their disputations, whatsoeuer they bring is filthy and toyish: for Paule hath not sayd in vaine, the kingdome of God standeth not in word, but in power.

In summe, the Euangelystes doe shewe, that when the maner of teaching was degenerate and verye corrupte, which touched the mindes of men with no reuerence of God, then the diuine power of the spirit was euidently seene in the words of Christ, which gate him credit. This is the power or rather dignitie and authoritie, whereat the people was astonyed.

LV. 33. A man which had an vncleane spirit. This speach auayleth asmuch, as if Luke should haue sayd, that he was stirred vp by the motion of the deuill. For by the permission of God, Sathan possessed the powers of the soule; so that hee woulde enforce them aswell to speake, as to other motions at his pleasure. Therefore, when menne possessed with diuelles doe speake, the diuelles doe speake in them, and by them, whom they haue authoritie to rule. It is probable that the tytle of the holy one of God was taken out of the common and accustomed maner of speaking: and therefore they so called the Messias: because he was seperate from al other, as one endued with a singular grace, and the head of al the Church.

MAR. 26. The vncleane spirit tare him. Luke vseth a more gentle word, yet in sense they agree very well: becawse they both would teache, that the departure of the diuell was violent and forcible. Therefore hee so threw down the wretched mā, as if he he wold haue torn him in sunder: yet Luke saith, that his purpose was in vaine, not that, that force was altogeather without hurt, or at the leaste without some payne: but that hee was after delyuered a hole and a sounde manne from the diuell.

LV. 36. So feare came on them all. The fruit of the myracle is, that they are enforced to thinke that there is in Christe somewhat more then appertaineth to men. And they wisely referre the glorye and power of the myracle to the doctrine. VVhat doctrine is this (say they) whereto the deuilles themselues are enforced to obey? They cal it a new doctrine, not in reproch, but becawse they acknowledge some vnusuall & extraordinarie thing in it. Therfore they do not accuse it of newnes, that they might discredit it: but this is rather a poynt of admiration, in that they deny it either to be common, or in the power of man. In this they onely offend, that they continue ſtill in theyr doubting, when it becommeth the children of God to goe on in further profiting.

that

Matth.8.

14. And when Ieſus cãe to Peters houſe, hee ſawe his wiues mother layd down, and ſick of a feuer,

15. And hee touched her hand, and the feuer left her, ſo she aroſe and miniſtred vnto them.

16. VVhen the euen was come, they brought vnto him manye that were poſſeſſed with diuels: and hee caſte out the ſpirits with his word and healed thoſe that were ſicke,

17. That it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by Iſaias the prophet ſaying, he took our infirmities, and bare our ſickneſſes.

18. And when Ieſus ſaw great multitudes of people about him, he commaunded them to goe ouer the water.

Mar.1.

29. And aſſoone as they were come oute of the Synagogue, they entred into the houſe of Simon and Andrew, with Iames and Iohn.

30. And Simons wiues mother in law lay ſick of a feuer, and anon they told him of her.

31. And hee came and tooke her by the hande, and lyfte her vpp, and the feuer forſooke her by & by, and she miniſtred vnto them.

32. And when euen was come, & the ſoune was down, they brought to him all that were diſeaſed, and them that were poſſeſſed with diuels.

33. And the whole citie was gathered together at the dore.

34. And hee healed manye that were ſicke of diuers diſeaſes: and hee caſte out manye deuilles, and ſuffered not the deuilles to ſaye, that they knew him.

35. And in the morning verye earlye before day, Ieſus aroſe, & wente out into a ſolytary place, and there prayed.

36. And Simon and they that were with him followed after him.

37. And when they had found him, they ſayd vnto him, all men ſeeke for thee.

38. Then hee ſayd vnto them, lette vs goe into the nexte townes, that I maye preache there alſo: for I came out for that purpoſe.

39. And hee preached in theyr Synagogues throughout all Galile, and caſt the deuils out.

Luke.4.

38. And he roſe vp, and came out of the Synagogue, and entred into Simons houſe. And Simons wyues mother was taken with a great feuer: & they required him for her.

39. Then hee ſtoode ouer her, and rebuked the feuer, and it left her: and immediately she aroſe, and miniſtred vnto them.

40. Now when the ſunne was downe, all they that had ſicke folkes of diuerſe diſeaſes, brought thẽ vnto him, and he layde his handes vpon euery one of them, and healed them.

41. And deuilles alſo came out of manye, crying, & ſaying, Thou art the Chriſte the ſonne of God: but hee rebuked them, and ſuffered them not to ſaye, that they knewe him to be Chriſt.

42. And when it was daye, hee departed, and went forth into a deſerte place, and the people ſought him, and came to him, and kept him, that he ſhould not depart from them

43. But hee ſayde vnto them, ſurely I muſt alſo preache the Goſpell of the kingdome of God to other cities: for therefore am I ſent.

29. MAR. They entred into the houſe It may bee eaſily gathered, that

Mat. doth not rehearſe this hiſtory in his order, by this, that Mark ſaith, that Chriſt namely had but foure diſciples onely following him. Alſo when he came out of the Sinagogue, & went ſtraight into Peters houſe, it is eaſily ſeene that the time was not exactly obſerued by Mathew. Alſo the Euangeliſtes ſeeme to haue reported this miracle for ſome ſpecyall cauſe, not that it was more notable then the reſt, or more worthy to be remembred: but becauſe that in it hee gaue to his diſciples a priuate and ſecrete token of his grace: then that the healing of this one woman gaue an occaſion, or was the procuring of many miracles; ſo that they came to him from al places to aske his help. Yet the power, which Chriſt ſhewed here, Luke doth amplifie in one word, ſaying that Peters mother in law was taken with a great feuer: for it was the more certeine and notable declaration of diuine power, in a moment of time, and only by touching, to take away ſo vehement & ſo grieuous a diſeaſe. And though he could haue done it onely with a becke, yet hee touched her hand, eyther to ſhew his affectiō, or for that he knew that this ſigne was then profitable: for wee knowe that he freely vſed outward ſignes, as the time required.

39. LV. He rebuked the feuer. Though this ſpeech may ſeeme harde to the reader not ſufficiently exerciſed in the ſcripture, yet it wanteth not a reaſon. For the feuer and other diſeaſes, famine, peſtilence, and all kinde of miſery are the officers of God, by whom he executeth his iudgments. Therfore, as at his commandement and appoyntment, it is ſaid that hee ſendeth forth ſuch meſſengers: ſo alſo doth he rebuke & cal back, whē he thinketh good. Matth. & Mark cōceale how he healed others. Luke ſaith it was by laying on of hands. And it was a ſigne of reconciliation vnder the law. wherefore neither without cauſe, nor out of time, doth Chriſt alſo lay his handes vpon thē, whom he abſolueth from the curſe of god. It was alſo a ſolemne manner of conſecration, as ſhall more at large be ſayd in an other place. But I ſimply interprete that Chriſt layd his hands vpon the ſicke, that commending them to his father, hee might obtaine grace and delyuerance from diſeaſes.

17. MAT. Which was ſpoken by Iſaias. This ſeemeth to bee cited litle to the purpoſe: nay, this propheſie ſeemeth to bee wreſted into a contrarye ſenſe. For Iſaias doth not ſpeake there of myracles, but of the death of Chriſt: nor of temporall benefites, but of the ſpirituall and eternal grace. And that which is certeinly ſpoken of the vices of the ſoule, Matthewe applieth to corporal diſeaſes. The anſwer is not hard, ſo that the readers conſider not onely what Chriſt outwardly beſtowed vppon theſe ſicke people, but to what end he healed their diſeaſes. They felte the grace of Chriſt in their bodyes: but we muſt looke vppon the ende. For it were very prepoſterous to ſtay vpon the outwarde benefit, as if the ſonne of God were a Phiſition of the bodyes. What then? namely, hee gaue ſight to the blinde, that he might ſhew himſelfe to be the light of the world: he reſtored life to the dead, that he might proue himſelfe to be the life & the reſurrection. The ſame is to be thought of the lame, and of the ſicke of the palſie: wherfore let vs follow this analogie, that what benefites ſoeuer Chriſt beſtowed vpon men in the fleſh, we may referre the ſame to that ſcope which Matthew propoſeth: that is, that he was ſent of his father, that he might delyuer vs from al euils and miſeries.

MARKE. 34. Hee ſuffered not the deuils to ſaye that they knewe him. There might be two cauſes why he ſuffered them not: one generall, that as yet the appoynted time of his full reuelation was not come: the other ſpeciall which we touched a litle before, that he refuſed them as preachers and witneſſes of his Godhead, which through their praiſing, coulde doe nothing elſe but ſlaunder and diſcredite him. And this laſt is wythout doubt, for the deadly diſcorde ought to bee ſhewed which the authour of eternall ſaluation and life ſhoulde haue with the prince of death and his miniſters.

MAT. 18. When Ieſus ſawe great multitudes. I doubt not but that Mathew doeth briefly touche that which others doe more fully and plentifully ſet forth: That which is concealed by Math. the other two do expreſſe: before it was day Chriſt went ſecretely into a deſert place, to ſeeke reſt. Marke ſayeth after, that Peter tolde him that all men ſoughte hym. And Luke ſayeth that the people came thither. Nowe that Math. ſayeth that he went ouer to the further ſhoare; both they ſay that he did it, that he might goe through all Galile, that he might preach in all places. But the further ſhoare in my iudgemēt, is called not that which is right ouer againſt it on the further ſide, but in reſpect of that place which was belowe Capernaum. Therefore he ſo went ouer parte of the lake, that he would not leaue Galile. It is to be noted that he ſayeth, that hee went or was ſent for that ende: for in theſe woordes he witneſſeth, howe readily he was bent to fulfil his office. But if any man ſhall aske whether it were better for the miniſters of the Goſpell, to runne hither and thither, that they might in al places ſparingly and ſlenderly taſt the doctrine of God; or remaine teachinge their hearers perfectlye whome they haue once wonne: I anſweare, the purpoſe of Chriſte whereof mention is heere made, was groūded vpon a moſt notable cauſe, becauſe it was agreeable to the commandemēt and calling of the father. For Chriſt was in ſhort time to goe throughout Iudea, that hee mighte euerye where waken the mindes of men, as with the ſounde of a trumpette, to heare the Goſpell, which matter ſhall more largely be entreated of other where.

Mathewe.	Marke 3.	Luke 6.
	13. Then he went vppe into a mountaine, and called vp vnto hym whome he woulde, and they came to him.	12. And it came to paſſe in thoſe daies that he went into a mountaine to pray, and ſpente the night in praier to God.
	14. And he appoynted twelue, that they ſhoulde be with him, and that he might ſend them to preach,	13. And when it was day, he called his diſciples, & of them he chooſe twelue, which alſo hee called Apoſtles.
	15. And that they might haue power to heale ſickneſſes, & to caſt out deuils.	14. Simon whom he named alſo Peter, and Andrewe hys brother, Iames and Iohn, Philip and Bartlemewe,
	16. And the firſt was Simon, and he named Simon, Peter.	15. Mathewe and Thomas: Iames the ſonne of Alpheus, & Simon called Zelous,
	17. Then Iames the ſonne of Zebedeus, and Iohn, Iames brother, (and named them Boanarges, which is the ſonnes, of thunder.)	16. Iudas Iames brother, and
	18 And	K 5. Iudas

18. And Andrew, and Phillip, and Bartlemewe, and Mathew, and Thomas, and Iames, the sonne of Alpheus, and Thaddeus, and Symon the Cananite:

19. And Iudas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

Iudas Iscariot, which was also the traitour.

17. Then hee came downe with them, and stoode in a plaine place, with the companie of his disciples, and a greate multitude of people out of all Iudea, and Ierusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyrus and Sidon, which came to heare him, and to be healed of him.

18. And they that were vexed with foule spirites, and they were healed.

19. And the whole multitude sought to touche him: for there went power oute of him, and healed them all.

MARKE. 13. He went vp into a mountaine. By this election hee doeth not as yet ordaine the Apostles, that they shoulde presently execute their office: but onely in hope of Apostleship, he adopteth them as disciples to keepe him companie, wherin the interpreters haue bene deceiued, which vnaduisedly doe confound these places with the tenth chapter of Math. And the woordes doe euidently declare, that they were only appoynted that they shoulde after be of that ambassage, which is enioyned them in Mathewe. And Marke and Luke doe afterwardes in the right place sette downe their sending foorth, which Mathewe doeth there make mention of. And it is no maruell if that the heauenlye master woulde a little frame and accustome them to so harde a charge, whose rudenesse coulde not be restrained by long vse of discipline. Both the Euangelists saye that Christ went vp into a moutaine. Luke declareth the cause, that he might the more freely pray out from companie, which he was wont to do very often, as may be seene in other places. But this example ought to be a perfecte rule to vs, that we doe begin with prayer, so oft as pastours are to be chosen for Churches: otherwise what soeuer we attempt, shall not prosper. For the Lorde did not praye so muche for his owne sake, as that hee might prescribe a lawe for vs: for we want wisedome and councell, and though we were moste prouident, yet wee cannot in any thing be easier deceiued then in this. Now how can we be out of daunger of offending, except the Lord should moderate our affections, considering howe greate the force, or rather the violence of fauoure and loue, or of hatred, or of ambition is to drawe vs away? Furthermore, though there be great diligence vsed in the election, yet all things shall prosper ill, except the Lorde take vppon him to gouerne those that are chosen, and endew them with necessary giftes. What then? will some manne say: Did not Christ earnestly require of his father that he would rule his election? I graunt this, and withall I adde, that by this testimonie he declared howe carefull he was for his Churche: therefore hee prayed not his father, after a dailye maner, but spent all the night in prayers. But if he that was full of the holy Ghost did so earnestly and carefully pray his father to be gouernoure of his election, howe much is our necessitie greater.

MARKE. 13. And called vnto him whome he woulde. I doubte not but that Marke woulde hereby signifie that they were taken to this so honourable an office by the meere grace of Christe, not for their owne woorthinesse. For if thou vnderstande that they were chosen that were more notable then others, this cannot agree in Iudas. Therfore the meaning is, that the Apoſtleſhyppe was not beſtowed according to the merites of menne, who were nothyng woorthy to be liſte vppe into that eſtate, but by the free mercy of God: And ſo that was fulfilled that Chriſt ſayde other where, you haue not choſen mee, but I haue choſen you. Iohn. 15. 16. In the ſame ſence alſo Paul often commendeth the purpoſe of God in his Apoſtleſhippe. But heere do ariſe moe queſtions. Firſt, why hee choſe Iudas of a determinate purpoſe, whome hee knewe to bee vnwoorthy of that honour, and ſhould become a traitour. Then, why God being ſo earneſtly beſoughte of his ſonne, ſuffered ſo faithleſſe and wycked a manne to creepe into the chiefe order of hys Churche, as if he had deſpiſed Chriſte. Thirdly, whye hee woulde that the firſt fruites of hys Churche ſhoulde be polluted with ſo vile a reproache. Fourthlye, whye Chriſt wittingly and willingly preferred Iudas before honeſt and faithfull miniſters. The firſt Obiection is thus aunſweared: It was the will of the Lorde purpoſely to meete with ſuch offences that ſhould fal out, leaſt we ſhoulde be troubled beyonde meaſure, ſo often as wee ſee falſe teachers occupie a place in the churche. Or that of profeſſours of the goſpell there become Apoſtates. And alſo in the perſon of one manne, he gaue an example of a horrible defection, leaſt they that are placed in higher eſtate of dignitie, ſhoulde flatter themſelues too much. Yet lette vs not ſaye that Chriſt ſuffered the repulſe. VVhen the father in woonderful councel adioyned one deuill to eleuen Angelles, yet hee ſo gouerned the falling out of the matter, that his falling awaye ſhoulde confirme the Faithe of the Churche, rather then ſhake the ſame. Thys ſame aunſweare may be geuen to the thirde queſtion. In the firſt beginnings it was ſpeedely ſhewed what the eſtate of the Churche ſhoulde be, leaſt the weake ſhoulde waxe faint at the fall of any of the reprobate: for it is vnmeete that the ſtabilitie of the Goſpell ſhoulde depende vppon menne. As concerning the laſt Obiection, Chriſte did not preferre Iudas before the holy and the godly diſciples: but he lifted him vppe on high, from whence he was to fall, becauſe he woulde he ſhoulde be a ſpectacle to all men, and an inſtruction to all ages, that no man ſhoulde abuſe the honour geuen him of God: then the pillers falling, that they that ſeeme to be of the common ſort of the faithfull might remaine ſtedfaſt.

Eph. 3. 7

LVKE. 13. VVhich alſo he called Apoſtles. This may be expounded two wayes: Either that he after conſecrating them into their office, gaue thys name vnto them: Either that he gaue them thys title in hope of the dignitie to come: that they mighte knowe to what purpoſe they were ſeparate from the common ſort, & for what vſe they were ordained. VVhich latter expoſition doeth agree with the woordes of Marke: for hee ſayth, that Chriſt did this, that they ſhould be with him, and that he might ſend them to preache. Therefore his will was, that they ſhould be hys companions, vppon whome he would after lay a greater charge, for when hee ſayeth that they ſhould be with him, and that he would ſend them foorth to preach, he doeth not appoynt that they ſhould be both in one moment of time, as I haue ſayde before.

MAR. 16. And he named Symon, Peter. Although it behoueth al chriſtians to be liuing ſtones of the ſpiritual tẽple, yet chriſt for the meſure of grace which he wold beſtow vpõ Simõ, gaue him a peculiar name, neither doth his his ſhamefull infirmitie in denying the Lord hinder this: for with this title his inuincible power and conſtancie, which continued euen to death, is ſet foorth. Yet the Papiſtes are to be laughed at, which thereof gather that the church was grounded vpon him, as ſhalbe ſhewed more at large in the 16. chapter of Mathewe. Chriſt called the ſonnes of Zebedeus, the ſonnes of thunder, for that he would geue them a ſoũding voyce, wherwith they ſhoulde thunder throughout all the worlde. And the thunder out of the mouth of Iohn is heard to this day, and it is not to be doubted but that his brother ſhoke the earthe while hee liued. But the woorde is corrupte, for the perfecte pronounciation ſhouldee be BENÆ Reges or Ragas. But it is not vnknowen howe eaſily woordes are chaunged when they are tranſlated into an other tounge.

Mathew 5.

26. VVoe be to you when al men ſpeake well of you: for ſo did their fathers to the falſe Prophets.

MAT. 1. He went vp into a mountaine. They that ſay that this is another ſermon of Chriſtes, and not that which is ſet down in the 6. chap. of Luke, are drawen with too light and friuolous an argument: for that Mathew ſayeth, that Chriſt ſpake in the mountaine to his diſciples, and that Luke ſeemeth to note, that he ſpake vnto them in a plaine place. For they doe very very prepoſterouſly read the wordes of Luke, adioyning them together, that Chriſt came downe into a plaine place, and that he lifting vppe hys eyes vpon his diſciples, ſpake thus. For it was the purpoſe of both the Euangeliſtes, to gather together into one place, the principall poynts of the doctrine of Chriſte, which did belong to the rule of godly and holy life. Therfore though Luke had firſt made mention of a plaine place, yet hee doeth not in a continuall courſe proſecute the ſame hyſtorie, but from myracles hee paſſeth to doctrine, neither aſsigning time nor place. As in Mathewe there is no noting of the time, but only of the place. And it is very likely that Chriſt did not ſo preach, but after hee hadde choſen the twelue. But I woulde not be too curious in keeping the order of time, which I did ſee not regarded by the ſpirite of God. For this ought to ſuffice the godly and modeſt readers, that they haue heere ſet before theyr eyes a briefe ſumme of the doctrine of Chriſt, gathered out of many and diuers of his ſermons, wherof this was the firſt, where he entreateth with his diſciples of true felicitie.

2. He opened his mouth. Heere in the Hebrew phraſe is the figure Pleonaſmes vſed, for that which were corrupt in other tongues, is vſuall amongſt the Hebrewes, to ſay he opened his mouthe, for, he began to ſpeake. And though many thinke it to be an Emphatycal kinde of ſpeache, vſed whē either ſome weighty or notable matter is vttered either in good parte or in euill. Yet becauſe many places of ſcripture doe gainſaye the ſame, the firſt expoſition doeth pleaſe me beſt. Alſo let their ſubtile ſpeculation go, which doe teach that Chriſt allegorically led his diſciples into the mountaine, that he might carie their mindes on highe, farre from earthly cares and ſtudies, for by going vp the mount, he rather ſoughte a ſecreate place out of the way, that being farre from company, he might refreſh himſelf a litle with his diſciples from wearineſſe. And firſt it is to be conſidered for what cauſe Chriſte ſpake to his diſciples of true felicitie. VVe knowe that not only the common people, but alſo the wiſe men were herein deceiued, thinking him to be happy that led a mery & a quiet life, free from all griefe, and had what he deſired. And certainly by the iudgement almoſte of all menne, felicitie is eſteemed by the preſent ſtate. Therefore Chriſt, that he might accuſtome his to the bearing of the croſſe, reprooueth this wicked opinion, that they are happy which nowe liue wel and proſperouſly according to the fleſh. For it cannot be that they ſhould paciently ſubmit their necke to beare ſorowes and iniuries, which accounte patience to be an enemie to a bleſſed life. Therefore it is one comforte whereby the bitterneſſe of the croſſe and of all miſchiefes is mitigated & alſo made ſweet, while wee are perſwaded, that in the midſt of miſeries we are happy: becauſe that our patience is bleſſed of the Lord, & ſhortly there ſhall folow a more ioyfull ende. I graunt that this doctrine doeth muche diſagree from common ſenſe: but ſo it behooued the diſciples of Chriſt to be taught wiſedome, that they might accounte their felicitie to be out of this world, and beyond the vnderſtāding of fleſh. And though carnall reaſon will neuer allowe that which Chriſt here teacheth, yet hee propoſeth no fantaſticall deuice, as in times paſt the Stoickes did ſporte with their Paradoxes: but in deede he declareth, why they are truly happie, whoſe eſtate is accounted miſerable. Therefore let vs remember that this is the chiefe poynte of the doctrine: that Chriſt denieth that they are miſerable miſerable and wretched that are oppreſſed with the iniuries of the wicked, and are ſubiect to diuers dangers. And Chriſt doeth not only proue that they are of a peruerſe iudgement, which meaſure the felicity of man by the preſent ſtate, becauſe that the miſeries of the godly ſhall ſhortly be chaunged into better: but alſo hee exhorteth them to patience, by propoſing a hope of reward before them.

3. Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirite, for. In Luke there is a bare Metaphor. But Mathewe doeth more plainly expreſſe the minde of Chriſt, becauſe that the pouerty of many is accurſed and vnhappy. Therefore when there be many oppreſſed with euils, which yet ceaſe not inwardly to ſwell wyth pride & cruelty, Chriſt pronounceth them happy, which being tamed & ſubdued with troubles, do ſubmit thēſelues wholely vnto God, and being inwardly humbled, they commit themſelues into his cuſtody: others do interpreat thē pore in ſpirite, which do arrogate nothing to thēſelues, but throwing downe al truſt in fleſh, they acknowledge their own nede. But becauſe it is neceſſary to be one, and the ſame ſenſe in the wordes of Luke and Mathewe. It is not to bee doubted but they are called poore which are oppreſſed & afflicted with aduerſities. This only is the difference that Mat. by adding that Epithyte, doth reſtraine the felicity to thē only, which vnder the diſcipline of the croſſe haue learned to be humble. For theirs is. We ſee that Chriſt doth not puffe vp the minds of his diſciples with a vain perſwaſion, or harden them with a hard hearted obſtinacy, as the Stoicks do: but he calling them to the hope of eternal life, he encorageth thē to patience: becauſe by this meanes they ſhuld enter into the heauenly kingdō. But it is worth the labor to note, that no mā is pore in ſpirit, but he that is brought to nothing in himſelf, & repoſeth himſelf in the mercy of God. For they that are brokē or ouerwhelmed with deſperation, when they fret againſt God, are of a lofty and proude ſpirite.

4. Bleſſed are they that mourne. This ſentence is not only next to that which goeth before, but it is as an Appendix or confirmation of it. For it was wont to be iudged, that troubles make a man vnhappy, becauſe they alwayes doe drawe ſorow and griefe with them, and that nothing is more cōtrary to felicitie then ſorow. But Chriſt doth not only deny that they that mourne are miſerable, but hee teacheth that they are holpe, euen by that ſorowe to happy life. For that they are by this meanes framed to receiue eternall ioy, and pricked forward as with ſpurres, leaſt they ſhould ſeeke any comforte any other where. So Paule ſayeth to the Romaines, chapter. 5. 3. we reioyce in tribulations, knowing that tribulation bringeth foorth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not aſhamed.

5. Bleſſed are the meeke. He meaneth thoſe meke and quiet, which are not eaſily prouoked with iniuries, & are not geuen to frowardnes for euery offence, but are ready rather to ſuffer any thing, then to do as the wicked do. But it ſeemeth very abſurde that Chriſt promiſeth the enheritance of thē earth to ſuche. For they rather vſurpe the gouernment of the earthe, which courageouſly repell all iniuries, and if at anye time they be hurte, they are ready with the hand to reuenge the ſame. And certainly experience teacheth, that the wicked do ſo much the more boldly and ſtoutlye go on forward, for that they are the more gently borne with. And hereof roſe that deueliſh prouerbe. They muſt howle with the wolues: becauſe that whoſoeuer maketh himſelfe a ſhepe, is preſently to be deuoured of the wolues. But Chriſt oppoſing his owne aid and the helpe of his father, againſt the fury and violence of thoſe euilles, doeth not wythout cauſe declare that the meeke ſhalbe Lordes and enheritors of the earth. The children of this world doe not thinke themſelues otherwiſe in ſafegard, except they ſharply reuenge what euill ſoeuer is done them, and ſo with force and armes defend their life. But ſith it is certaine that Chriſte is the onely keeper of our life, there remaineth nothing elſe, but that we ſhoulde hide our ſelues vnder the ſhadowe of hys wings. Alſo it behoueth vs to be ſheepe, if we couette to be accounted of his flocke. If anye Obiecte, that this heere ſpoken is againſt experience: Firſte I woulde hee ſhoulde weigh howe vnquiet thoſe cruell men be, ſo that they euen trouble themſelues: So that in ſo troubleſome a life, thoughe they were the Lords of the earth a hundred times, yet in poſſeſsing all things they poſſeſſe nothing. But for the children of God I aunſweare, though they can in no place ſette their foote vppon their owne grounde, yet they quietly enioy a dwelling place vpō the earth. And this is not an imagined poſſeſsion, for they dwel vpon the earth, which they know is graunted them from God. Alſo they are armed wyth the hande of God agaynſte the tempeſt and rages of all miſchiefes, and though they be ſet forth againſt all the dartes of Fortune, and ſubiecte to all inconuenience of euilles, and compaſſed aboute wyth all daungers: yet they dwell ſafelye vnder the defence of God, ſo that at leaſte they maye taſte nowe the fauoure of God. And this is ſufficient for them, vntill at the laſt daye they enter into the enheritance of the world.

6. Bleſſed are they which hunger. To hunger and to thirſt, is by the figure Synecdoche, taken for to want, to be without things neceſſarye, and alſo to be defrauded of their owne right. That which Mathew ſayth, to hunger after righteouſneſſe, is a placing of a part for the whole. Yet hee amplifieth the vnworthines, when he ſayth that by carefull ſighing they get nothing but that which is righteous: as if he ſhould ſaye: they are bleſſed, which though they moderate their deſires, ſo that they deſire nothing to be geuen them, but that which is right; doe yet neuertheleſſe languiſhe as hungry ſoules. For though their carefulneſſe wherewith they bee troubled, is ſcorned at, yet it is to them a preparation to felicitie, becauſe they ſhall at length be ſatisfied: for God will at length heare their ſighes, and wil heare their iuſt deſires, whoſe office it is to fil the hungry with good things as it is in the Virgines ſong.

7. Bleſſed are the merciful. This ſentence alſo is hard & cōtrary to the iudgemēt of man. For the world accouñeth them happy, which are careleſſe of the miſeries of other men, & prouide for their own eaſe: but Chriſt here calleth thē bleſſed, which are not only ready to bear their owne harmes, but do alſo take other mēs vpon thēſelues, that they may help thē that are in miſery, & willingly ioyn thēſelues to thē that are troubled, and put on the ſame affections, that thereby they maye the more willingly employe themſelues to helpe them. Hee addeth, for they ſhall obtaine mercy, that is, not onely with God, but alſo amongeſt men themſelues, whoſe mindes God will bowe to humanitie. But though ſometimes the world is vnthankful, and beſtoweth the woorſt reward vpon them that deſerue beſt, it ought to ſuffice vs, that there is fauour laide vp with God for the mercifull and

kinde, ſo that they ſhall haue him kinde and mercifull againe to them.

8. Bleſſed are the poore in heart. Chriſte ſeemeth heere to ſaye nothynge but that which is agreeable to the iudgement of all men. Al confeſſe that cleanneſſe of heart is mother of all vertues, but yet it is ſcarce the hũdred man that doeth not accompt ſubtletie as a moſt notable vertue. Heereof it commeth to paſſe that they are commonly thought bleſſed, which are moſt ſubtile in craftie conueiances, whiche by euill meanes doe craftelye circumuent them with whome they haue to doe. Therefore Chriſte agreeth not with the iudgemẽt of the fleſh, while he calleth them bleſſed, which are not delited with craftineſſe, but walke ſincerely amongſt men, and in words and countenance pretend no other thing, then they thinke in heart. And becauſe the ſimple are laughed at as men nothing warye, and becauſe they doe not with deceite enoughe prouide for themſelues, Chriſte calleth them higher: that if they be not wiſe enough to deceiue vpon earth, they ſhall enioy the ſight of God in heauen.

9. Bleſſed are the peacemakers. He doeth not only meane them which loue peace, and flee from quarels as muche as in them lieth, but doe alſo diligently ende diſſentions raiſed vppe amongeſt others, are the authours of peace vnto all, and doe take awaye the occaſion of hatreds and diſpleaſures. Neither is this raſhly ſpoken, for, ſith it is a painefull and a troubleſome matter to pacifie them that diſagree amongſt themſelues, the quiet men which ſtudie to maintaine peace, are enforced to beare this crueltie, that they heare the reproches, the complaints, and the quarelles on bothe partes. And thereof it riſeth that euery man would wiſh to haue them al patrons to be on his ſide. Therefore, leaſt we ſhould hang vppon the fauour of men, Chriſte commaundeth vs to regarde the iudgmente of his father, who being the God of peace, accounteth vs for his children, while we nouriſh peace, although our labor pleaſe not men, For to be called, ſignifieth as much, as to be accounted.

10. Bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution. The diſciples of Chriſt haue great neede of this doctrine, and how much the lother and more hardly fleſh doth admit the ſame, ſo much more dilygently it muſt be meditated. Neyther canne we vnder any other condition war vnder Chriſt, then that the greater parte of the world will ryſe vp in hatred agaynſt vs, and ſhall perſecute vs euen to death. So ſtandes the matter, Sathan the prince of the world wil neuer ceaſe to arme his children with madnes, that they may ſtrik the members of Chriſt. This is very monſtrous, and againſt nature, that they which loue righteouſnes ſhould be vexed as enemies, which they haue not deſerued. Therefore Peter ſaieth, if you auoyde from euill deedes, who is he that will harme you? But in ſo vn-
1. Pet. 3. 13. brydeled wickednes of the world, it falleth out too often, that the good men through the zeale of righteouſnes do enflame the diſpleſures of the wicked againſt them.

But this is the lotte, eſpecially of Chriſtians, to be hated of the greateſt number of men for fleſh cannot beare the doctrine of the Goſpel: none can beare to haue their faultes reproued. They are ſayde to ſuffer for righteouſnes, which thereby kindle the diſpleaſures of the wicked, and prouoke theyr fury agaynſt them: becauſe that with a care of right and equitie they oppoſe themſelues againſt euill cauſes, and defende the good as muche as in them lieth. And in this behalfe the truthe of God hathe woorthely the chiefe place. VVherfore by this note Chriſt diſcerneth his Martyrs from wicked men and euil doers. Now I returne to that which I ſayd euen now: Syth all that will liue godly in Chriſt muſt ſuffer perſecution, as Paule witneſſeth, this admonition doth generally belong to all the godly. If that at any time the Lord ſpareth our weakeneſſe, and permitteth not the wicked to vexe vs at their pleaſure: yet it is meete vnder a ſhadowe and at leiſure to meditate this doctrine, that we maye be prepared as oft as nede require to come forth into the field, nor come to the battell except we be well furniſhed. But ſith the condition of the godlye is moſte miſerable throughe the whole courſe of this life: Chriſte for a good cauſe raiſeth vs vp in hope of a heauenly life. And heerein the ſentence of Chriſt differeth much from the inuentions of the Stoicks, which commaunde euery manne to be ſatisfied with his owne opinion, that hee might be his owne chuſer of felicitie. And Chriſt doeth not vncertainlye plant felicitie vppon a vaine imagination, but groundeth the ſame vppon hope of a rewarde to come. 2. Tim. 3. 12.

11. VVhen men reuile you. Luke ſayeth, when they hate you, and ſeparate you, and reuile you, and put out your name as euill. By whiche woordes Chriſt would comfort his faithfull ones, that they ſhoulde not faynte in their mindes, though they ſee themſelues deteſted before the worlde. For this was no ſmall temptation, to be throwne out of the Churche as wicked and prophane. For ſith he knewe that nothing was more deadlye to the hypocrites, then that hee might foreſee with howe furious a violence the ennemies of the Goſpell were enflamed againſt his little and deſpiſed flocke; his will was perfectlye to arme them that they ſhoulde not bee ouerthrowen, though a great heape of reproches ſhould hang ouer them to ouerwhelme them. And heere appeareth howe popiſh excommunication is to be feared as nothing, while that thoſe tyrantes ſeperate vs from theyr ſynagogues, becauſe we will not be deuorced from Chriſt.

12. Reioyce and be glad, for. That wee ſhoulde not be ouerthrowen wyth vniuſt reproches, he declareth that there is a remedy at hand: for aſſoone as we lifte vppe our mindes to heauen, then preſently a great occaſion of ioy doeth offer it ſelfe, that it maye ſwallowe vppe the heauineſſe. The ſporte which the Papiſtes make wyth the name of rewarde, is heere eaſily wiped away. Neither is there, as they dreame, a mutuall relation, betweene rewarde and merite: but it is a free promiſſe of a rewarde. Further, if wee conſider howe maimed and corrupte thoſe good deedes are which come euen from the beſt menne, God ſhall neuer finde any worke woorthy a rewarde. Againe theſe clauſes are to be noted, for my ſake, or for the ſonne of man, alſo they ſhall ſay all maner of euil againſt you falſely: leaſt they which ſuffer perſecution for their owne faultes, ſhould preſently boaſt themſelues to be Martyrs of Chriſte: As the Donatiſtes in times paſt pleaſed themſelues wyth this only title, that they had the magiſtrates againſte them. And at thys daye the Anabaptiſtes, thoughe they diſturbe the Churche wyth theyr doating dreames, and ſlander the goſpell, yet they glory that they beare the enſignes of Chriſte, when as they are condēned righteouſly. But Chriſt pronounceth none bleſſed, but they which ſuffer in a iuſt defence of his quarell.

For ſo perſecuted they the Prophetes. This was purpoſely added, leaſt the Apoſtles hoping to triumph without ſweat or trauell, ſhould faint in perſecutions.

ſecutions. For becauſe that euery where in the ſcripture the reſtitution of all things is promiſed in the kingdom of Chriſt, it was daungerous leaſt they ſhould in a vaine hope lift vppe themſelues, and neuer thinke of the warfare. And it may be gathered out of other places, that they imagined that the kingdome of Chriſt, was full of richeſſe and pleaſures. VVherefore Chriſt doth not without a cauſe admoniſh them that the ſame troubles are prepared for them, which the Prophetes ſometime had experience of, for as much as they ſucceede in their place. Neither doeth he ſay that the Prophets were before them only in reſpecte of time: but becauſe they were of the ſame order, therefore it behooued them to frame themſelues after their example. That common fancie of nine beatitudes is ſo friuolous, that it neede no long confutation.

LVKE. 24. VVoe be to you riche men. As Luke rehearſeth onely foure principall bleſsings: ſo nowe he oppoſeth foure curſes, that the ſentences might anſwere one to the other. But this Antitheſis doeth not only tende to ſtriking a feare in the wicked, but to the ſtirring vppe of the faithfull, leaſt they ſhould ſleepe in the vaine and captious ſnares of the world. For we knowe howe quickely and readily a man may be made drunke with proſperitie, or entangled with the faire ſpeaches of men: whereby alſo it doeth often come to paſſe that the children of God doe enuie at the reprobate, to whome they ſee all things flowe proſperouſly and happelye. Further, he curſſeth the riche, not all of them, but they that take their cõfort in the worlde, that is, they ſo reſt in their fortune, that they forgette the life that is to come. Therefore hee meaneth that richeſſe are ſo farre from making a man bleſſed, that they often become an occaſion of deſtruction. Otherwiſe God doeth not remooue rich men out of his kingdome, ſo that they make not ſnares for themſelues, or by fixinge theyr hope in the earth, doe ſhut the gate of heauen againſt themſelues. It was aptly ſayde of Auguſtine, who that he might ſhewe that richeſſe of themſelues are no hinderance to the children of God, doeth ſaye that poore Lazarus was receiued into the boſome of riche Abraham. In the ſame ſence doth he curſe them that are ful and haue aboundance, becauſe they being puffed vppe with a confidence in preſent ioyes, that they refuſe all heauenly ioyes. The ſame is to be thought of laughter: for now by laughter he vnderſtandeth them that are geuen to the pleaſure of Epicures, & are drowned in the pleaſures of the fleſh, and doe flee from all troubles that are to be endured, for the defence of Gods glory. The laſt woe tendeth to the correction of ambition: for there is nothinge more common then to ſeeke the praiſes of men, or at the leaſt to be entãgled with them. Chriſte therefore ſheweth that the fauour of men is venimous & deadly, that he might feare his diſciples from it. But this admonitiõ eſpecially belongeth to teachers: who haue more neede to feare ambition then anye peſtilence, for it can not be but that they ſhoulde defile the pure doctrine of God, when as they ſeeke after the fauour of men. That Chriſt ſayeth All men, ought to be referred to the children of this world. which ſpeake well of none but of deceiuers and falſe prophets. For the faithfull and good miniſters of ſounde doctrine haue their praiſe and fauoure wyth good men. Therfore the wicked loue of the fleſh is here condẽned: for he can not be the ſeruaunte of Chriſte that ſeekes to pleaſe menne, as Paule teacheth. Gal. 1. 10.

Mathewe

Mathewe 5.

13. Ye are the ſalt of the earth: but if the ſalt haue leſt his ſauoure, wherewith ſhall it bee ſalted? It is thence forth good for nothing, but to be caſt oute, and to be troden vnder foote of men.

14. Yee are the lighte of the worlde: a citie that is ſette vppon a hill, can not be hidden.

15. Neither do menne light a candle, and putte it vnder a bushell, but on a candleſticke, and it geueth light vnto al that are in the houſe.

16. Lette your lighte ſo shine before men, that they may ſee youre good workes, and glorifie your father which is in heauen.

Marke 9.

49. For euerye manne ſhall bee ſalted with fire: and euerye ſacrifice ſhalbe ſalted with ſalte.

50. Salte is good: but if the ſalte bee vnſauerie, wherewith ſhall it bee ſeaſoned? Haue ſalte in youre ſelues, and haue peace one with another.

Marke 4.

21. Alſo he ſayd vnto them: Is the candle lyghte to bee putte vnder a bushel, or vnder the table, and not on a candleſticke?

Luke 14.

34. Salte is good: but if ſalte haue loſte his ſauoure, wherewith ſhall it be ſalted?

35. It is neither meete for the lande, nor yet for the dunghill, but men caſt it out. He that hathe eares to heare, let him heare.

Luke 8.

16. No manne when hee lighteth a candle, couereth it vnder a veſſell, neither putteth it vnder the table, but ſetteth it on a candleſticke, that they that enter in, may ſee the light.

Luke 11.

33. No manne lighteth a candle, and putteth it in a priuie place, neither vnder a bushell: but on a candleſticke, that they which come in, may ſee the light.

MATH. 13. Yee are the ſalte of the earth. That which is proper to the doctrine, he doeth attribute to the perſons, to whom the miniſterie of the ſame was committed. For Chriſte by calling his Apoſtles the ſalte of the earth, doeth meane that it is their office to ſeaſon the earth: becauſe that menne haue nothing but that which is vnſauerie, vntill they bee ſeaſoned with heauenly doctrine. And after hee admoniſheth them to what they are called, and pronounceth a grieuous and horrible iudgement againſt them, except they perform their office. And he ſheweth that the doctrine which was laid vppe with them, is ſo adioyned to a good conſcience and to a godly and vpright life: ſo that the corruptiō which were to be borne with in others, is deteſtable in them, and to be accounted as monſtrous: as if he ſhould ſay, if other menne are vnſauery before God, there is ſalte geuen to you, wherewith they may be made ſauery: but if you be vnſauery, frō whence ſhal you haue remedy, that ought to helpe others? But the Lorde doeth excellently proſecute his Metaphore, when hee ſayeth that when other things doe degenerate from their owne nature, are yet after their corruption profitable ſome way: but that ſalte is hurtfull, ſo that it alſo maketh the very dunghilles barren. This therefore is the ſum. The ſickneſs is very incureable, whē that the miniſters & teachers of the word doe corrupte and make themſelues vnſauerye: becauſe they oughte with their ſalte to ſeaſon the reſt of the worlde.

Furthermore, this admonition is not only profitable for the miniſters; but alſo for the whole flocke of Chriſte: for ſith it was the will of God that the earth ſhoulde be ſeaſoned with his word, it foloweth that what ſoeuer wanteth this ſalte, is vnſauorie before him, although it ſauour neuer ſo well vnto menne. VVherefore there is nothing better, then to admit that ſeaſoning, by which meanes only our vnſauerineſſe is amended. But yet let the ſeaſoners take heede that they nouriſhe not the worlde in his corruption, and eſpecially that they infecte it not with a vile and corrupt ſauour. Therefore the wickednes ſe of the Papiſtes is not to be borne with. As thoughe it were the purpoſe of Chriſte, to geue vnto hys Apoſtles an vnbrideled libertie, and to make them tyrauntes ouer ſoules, and not rather to admoniſhe them of their duetie, that they turne not oute of the righte waye. Chriſte declareth what maner of teachers hee woulde haue for his Churche. They that by no lawe doe chalenge themſelues to be Apoſtles, doe vnder this couer maintaine what abhomination ſoeuer they pleaſe to bringe in, becauſe Chriſte called Peter and ſuche lyke, ſalte of the earth. And yet they doe not conſider howe grieuous and ſeuere a threatninge is added, that they are woorſte of all if they become vnſauerie. This ſentence is placed by Luke abruptly, but to the ſame end that it is red here, ſo that it neede not any peculiar expoſition.

MARKE. 49. Euery manne ſhall be ſeaſoned with fire. I haue ioyned theſe woordes of Marke to the former woordes of Mathewe: not that they doe altogether agree in ſenſe, or that they were vſed at the ſame place or time, but rather that the readers may the better by thys compariſon perceiue the diuers vſe of the ſame ſentence. VVhen as Chriſt hadde ſpoken of the euerlaſting fire (as Marke reporteth) hee on the other ſide exhorteth his, that they ſhoulde nowe rather offer themſelues to the Lorde, to be ſeaſoned with fire and ſalte, that they may be made holy ſacrifices, leaſt that by their ſinnes they purchaſe to themſelues that fire whiche is neuer quenched. To be ſeaſoned with fire, is an vnproper ſpeache, but becauſe that the nature of ſalte and fire is like in purging and trying out of humours, therefore Chriſte applied the ſame woorde to bothe. Nowe we vnderſtande the occaſion of thys ſentence· namelye, that the faithfull ſhoulde not refuſe to be ſalted with fire and ſalte, ſince without this they cannot be made holy to God. And he alludeth to the commaundemente of the lawe, where the Lorde expreſlye forbiddeth that no oblation bee made without ſalte. And nowe in the Goſpell he teacheth the faithfull to be ſeaſoned, that they may be ſanctified. VVhen after he addeth, Salte is good: he generally extendeth it to al, whō God once vouchſafeth to ſeaſon with his woorde, and hee exhorteth them that they alwayes keepe their ſauoure. The Metaphore is ſomewhat the harder, becauſe that hee calleth whatſoeuer is ſeaſoned by the name of ſalte: yet the ſenſe is not made any thing the doubtfuller by it, for when they haue through their careleſneſſe loſt their ſauour whiche they had by the grace of God, there is no more remedye. And ſo they are vtterly loſt, that corrupt their faith, (wherby they were conſecrate) and themſelues, ſeeing that a good ſauour cānot be obtained by any other ſeaſoning. Furthermore, they are become corrupt by forſaking the grace of God, and are woorſe then the infidels, euen as ſalte corrupteth the earth and the dunghill.

Leuit. 2. 13.

MAR.

MARKE. 50. Haue ſalte in your ſelues. This woorde maye be taken heere diuers wayes, as it maye ſignifie either a ſeaſoning of good ſauoure which is obtained by faith, or the wiſedome of the ſpirite: as when Paule commaundeth that oure communication ſhoulde be ſeaſoned with ſalte, hee meaneth that it ought to be purged and pure frō all prophane follies and corruptions, and to be filled with ſpirituall grace, which maye edifie, and with his ſauour maye perfume all that ſhall heare it. If this expoſition ſtande, then the laſt clauſe muſt be vnderſtode of mutual peace, which is nouriſhed with that ſalte. Yet becauſe it is more probable that this latter ſentence doeth depende of the former ſpeache, Chriſt ſeemeth to me to exhort his diſciples to preſerue the force and ſtrengthe of theyr faith, which may alſo helpe others. As if he ſhoulde haue ſayde, you muſt doe your diligence, that you be not onely ſeaſoned within, but alſo that you may ſeaſon others: yet becauſe ſalte doeth bite with hys ſharpneſſe, he therefore doeth preſently admoniſh, that the ſeaſoning ſhoulde ſo be tempered, that peace may yet remaine ſafe. Col. 4. 6.

MATH. 14. You are the lighte of the worlde. Thoughe wee be all children of the light, after that we be lightened with faith, and are commanded to beare burning lightes in oure handes, leaſt wee wander in darkeneſſe, and alſo to ſhewe the waye of life to others: yet becauſe the preaching of the Goſpell was committed to the Apoſtles aboue all others, & at this day commaunded to the paſtours of the Church, therefore Chriſt geueth thys title peculiarely to them: as if he ſhoulde haue ſayd, that they were on thys condition placed in ſuche a degree, that they mighte geue lighte as from an highe to all others: After hee addeth two ſimilitudes. A towne ſette vppon a hill cannot be hidde, neither is it vſe to hide a candle when it is lighted: By which woordes he woulde ſignifie that they ſhould ſo liue, as if they were ſette oute to be looked vppon of all menne. And certainly, the higher a manne is placed, the greater hurte he doeth by hys euill example, if he behaue himſelfe peruerſly. Therefore Chriſte willed hys Apoſtles to bende themſelues the more to godly and holy life, then any meane men of the common ſorte: becauſe that all mennes eyes were ſette vppon them as vppon lanternes, neither are they by any meanes to be borne wyth, except that godlineſſe and integritie of life doe anſweare to the doctrine, whereof they are miniſters. The applying of this ſimilitude by Marke and Luke ſeemeth to be vnlike, for there Chriſte generally admoniſheth them, diligently to take heede leaſt any manne beinge in darkeneſſe ſhoulde nouriſh vppe himſelfe in a liberty e of ſinning: for that which is hidde for a ſeaſon, ſhall at lengthe bee reuealed. And thys is the meaning, excepte that Chriſt rehearſed both theſe ſentences abruptly not depending of the text.

MATH. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before menne. After that he had taught his diſciples, that they are ſo placed that their vices as well as their vertues are ſeene farre off, either for good or for euill example: nowe he commādeth them ſo to frame their life, that they may mooue all men to glorifie God. Let men (ſayeth he) ſee your good woorkes. For as Paul witneſſeth, the faithfull doe prouide for good things, not only before God; but alſo before men. For that he doeth after commaunde them in ſecrete and priuily to doe their good woorkes, is only ſpoken to reprooue their ambition. But now he commendeth to them a farre other end, that is, the glory 2. Cor. 8. 21.

of God alone. Furthermore, if the glory of good workes cannot be rightly attributed to God, except they be acknowledged as receiued frō hym, and he accounted as the only authour of them: Heereby it appeareth that without open and groſſe contempte of God, freewil cannot be exalted, as if that good workes either in parte or in whole ſprang out of the power of man. Againe it is to be noted howe louingly God dealeth with vs, in calling good woorkes ours, whereof by right he ſhoulde aſcribe the whole praiſe vnto himſelfe.

Mathewe 5.	Marke.	Luke. 16.
17. Thinke not that I am come to deſtroy the lawe or the Prophets. I am not come to deſtroy them, but to fulfill them.		17. Nowe it is more eaſie that heauen and earth ſhoulde paſſe awaye, then that one title of the lawe ſhoulde fall.
18. For truely I ſaye vnto you: Till heauen and earth pearish, one iote, or one title of the lawe ſhall not ſcape, till all things be fulfilled.
19. VVho ſoeuer therfore ſhall breake one of theſe leaſt commaundements and teache men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdome of heauen: but whoſoeuer ſhall obſerue and teache them, the ſame ſhall be called great in the kingdome of heauen.

17. Thinke not. Though Chriſt was of that perfection of life, that he might rightly ſay that he came to fulfill the law, yet he doth not here entreat of life, but of doctrine. Becauſe that he did proclaime that the kingdome of God was come, and did ſtirre vppe the mindes of menne wyth an vnwoonted hope, and did alſo receiue his diſciples by baptiſme: It is probable that the mindes of many doubted and diligently ſought to what purpoſe that newneſſe tended. Nowe Chriſt declareth that his doctrine is ſo farre from any diſſenting with the lawe, ſo that it agreeth very well with the lawe and the Prophets, and not ſo onely, but it bringeth a full perfection to the ſame. And it ſeemeth that he was eſpecially led by two cauſes to teſtifie this conſent of the law and the Goſpel. Aſſone as there ſprings out any newe kinde of teaching, the common people take it, as if there ſhoulde be an alteration of all things. And the preaching of the goſpell was in that order, (as I ſayde euen nowe) that made them hope that the Churche ſhoulde bee altered into an other eſtate then it was before: they did therefore thinke that the olde and vſuall kinde of gouernment was aboliſhed. VVhich opinion had bene very hurtfull many wayes: for the godly woorſhippers of God, woulde neuer haue embraced the Goſpell, if it had beene a defection from the lawe, and the light and troubleſome ſpirites would aſſay by taking ſuche an occaſion greedily to ouerthrowe the ſtate of religion: for we knowe howe ouerthwartly raſhneſſe lifts vp it ſelfe in new things. Furthermore, Chriſte ſawe very manye of the Iewes, which thoughe they profeſſed that they beleeued the lawe, yet they were altogether prophane and degenerate, for the eſtate of thinges amongeſt that people were ſo decaied, and all thinges were filled wyth ſuche corruptions, ſo that through either ſlouthe or malice, the Prieſtes kadde quenched the pure lighte of doctrine, ſo that there remayned no great greate reuerence of the lawe. If that there hadde beene brought a newe kinde of doctrine, that ſhoulde haue diſcredited the lawe and the Prophetes, then religion hadde beene miſerably ſhaken. This ſeemeth to be the firſt cauſe why Chriſte denied that hee came to deſtroye the lawe, as it may be eaſily gathered oute of the texte. For to confirme the ſame, he preſently addeth that it cannot be that one iote or title of the lawe ſhuld paſſe vnfilled, and hee accurſeth thoſe teachers, that doe not labour faithfully in mainteining the authoritie of the ſame. And the ſeconde cauſe was, that hee might take away the vile reproche whiche the rude and ignoraunt woulde charge him with. For it appeareth that the Scribes charged hys doctrine wyth this faulte, in ſo muche as he preſently inueigheth againſt them.

VVee muſt conſider this purpoſe of Chriſte, that he ſo calleth and exhorteth the Iewes to receiue the Goſpell, that yet hee keepeth them vnder obedience of the lawe: then hee mightily refelleth thoſe vnwoorthye reproches and cauilles, wherewith the ennemies ſought to bringe his preaching into ſlaunder and ſuſpition. For if anye minde to reſtore thinges confuſed into a better eſtate, hee muſte alwayes vſe this wiſedome and moderation; that the people maye knowe that the eternall woorde of God is touched thereby, and that there is no newe thing thruſt in, whych derogateth any thing from the ſcripture: leaſt any ſuſpition of repugnancie ſhoulde weaken the faith of the godly, and leaſte that raſhe vnadviſed menne ſhoulde become inſolent vnder pretence of holineſſe: Laſtly, that the prophane contempte of the woorde of God maye be ſtaied, and that religion be not brought into no reputation amongſt the vnlearned. And this defence of Chriſte wherewith hee excuſeth his doctrine, oughte to comforte vs, if we at this day ſuffer the like reproaches. The ſame faulte was alſo obiected againſt Paule, that hee was an Apoſtate from the lawe of God, wherefore it is no maruell if the Papiſtes out of the ſame mould doe coyne the like againſte vs. And by the example of Chriſte it is meete to auoide ſlaunderous reportes, yet ſo, that the truthe may be freely profeſſed, though it be ſubiecte to many vniuſt reproches. I came not to deſtroy. God hadde promiſed a newe couenaunt at the comming of Chriſte, but hee ſheweth alſo that it ſhall not be diuers from the firſte, but that thys rather was the ende that the league whiche he hadde made with his people from the beginning, might be ſanctified for euer. I will wryte (ſayeth hee) my lawes in their heartes, and I will forgette their ſinnes: By theſe woordes hee is ſo farre from departing from the former couenaunt, that hee rather affirmeth that it ſhall then be eſtabliſhed and confirmed when as the newe ſhall come in place. And that was the meaning of the wordes of Chriſte, when hee ſayde that he came to fulfill the lawe. For hee fulfilled it truelye, quickeninge the deade letter with his ſpirite: then hee in deede perfourmed that whyche before was ſhewed onelye vnder figures. So that the curſſe beinge abrogate, the ſubiection is taken awaye, and a libertye purchaſed for the faithfull, and nothynge is derogated from the doctrine of the lawe, but onelye expoundeth the minde of the lawe geuer, as appeareth Galathians the thirde and the fourthe Chapiters.

Ier. 31. 33.

Therefore, as concernynge the doctrine, wee maye not imagine anye abrogation of the Lawe by the comminge of Chriſte. For ſithe it is an euerlasting rule of a godly and a holy life, it must be vnchangeable, as the iustice of God is one, and the same whiche is therein comprehended.

As concerning the Ceremonies, thoughe they maye be accounted as a certaine addition to the same, yet the onely vse of them was abrogate: but the signification was the more approoued. So that the commyng of Christ did not derogate anye thing from the ceremonies, but rather the truth of the shadowes being shewen foorth, doeth obtaine the more assured credite vnto them: while wee beholding the perfecte effecte, doe acknowledge that they are not vaine nor vnprofitable. Therefore lette vs learne to keepe this sacred knotte of the lawe and the gospel inuiolable, which many do wickedly dissolue: And it doeth much auaile to the establishing of the truth of the gospell, while wee heare that it is nothing else but the fulfilling of the law, so that in a mutuall consent they shewe that God is the authour of them both.

18. Till heauen and earth pearish. Luke vseth other woordes, but the same sense. It is more easie for heauen and earth to passe away, then that one title of the lawe shoulde fall. For it was the will of Christ to teach in both places, that there is nothing so sure in the whole frame of the worlde, as is the certaine truth of the lawe, and that in euery poynte of the same. Some doe verye subtillye play with the woorde vntill, as if that the passing of heauen and earth which shall be in the last daye of iudgement, shoulde putte an ende to the lawe and the Prophets. And truely, as the tongues shall then cease, and prophesies be abolished, so I thincke that the wrytten lawe wyth the expolition shall cease. But because I thinke that Christe spake more simply, I will not feede the readers eares with suche deuices. Therefore lette it suffice vs to vnderstande this, that heauen shoulde fall, and the whole frame of the worlde shoulde come together, rather then the certaintie of the lawe shoulde wauer. But what is the meaninge of this; all thinges of the lawe shall be perfourmed euen to the least title? For we see how farre menne are from the perfecte fulfilling of the lawe, euen they that are regenerate with Gods spirite. I aunsweare, this fulfilling is not referred to the life of menne, but to the perfecte truthe of the doctrine, as if hee shoulde say, there is nothing inconstante in the lawe, and nothyng putte rashly in the same: Therefore it cannot bee that one letter of the same should vanish away.

19. VVho seeuer therefore shall breake. Heere Christe spealeth namelye of the preceptes of life, or of the ten woordes, according to which prescript order, it becommeth all the children of God to frame their liues. Therefore he pronounceth them to be false and peruerse teachers, which keepe not their disciples vnder obedience of the lawe: and that they are vnwoorthy to haue a place in the Churche, whiche diminish the authoritie of the lawe in the least parte of the same: and that they are good and faithfull ministers of God, whiche teache the obseruation of the lawe, as well in example of life as in woordes. Also hee calleth them the leaste commaundements of the lawe, according to the sense and iudgement of men: for thoughe there is not like waight in all the commaundementes, but while they be compared betweene themselues, some are lesse then other: yet may we nothing soner esteme and account that, as little, wherof the heauenly lawgeuer hath youtchsaued to geue a commaundemente.

For

For what sacriledge were it contemptuously to receiue that, which commeth out of his mouth? For by this meanes his maiestie should haue bene abased: wherefore whereas Christ calleth them the least preceptes, is a kinde of yeelding to our vnderstanding. When hee sayeth he shall be called least, is an allusion to that was sayde before of the commaundementes, but the meaning is euidente, they that bring the doctrine of the law into contept, yea though it be but in one sillable, shal be reiected as the woorst sort of men. The kingdome of heauen is taken for the renouation of the Church, or the second state of the Church as it then began to arise by the preaching of the Gospell. So in Luke 7.28. Christ accounteth him that is least in the kingdome of GOD, greater then Iohn: the reason of the speache is, because God restoring the world by the hand of his sonne, framed his kingdome perfectly. Therefore Christe will not that any teachers be admitted into his churche after the same be renewed, but suche as are faithfull interpreaters of the lawe, and wil endeuour to keepe the doctrine of the same sounde. But it is demaunded whether the ceremonies were accounted amongst the commandements of God, which are not required now to be obserued. I answere, the purpose and the end of the lawgeuer is to be considered: For God commaunded the ceremonies, that the outwarde vse of them might be temporall, and the signification eternall: hee breaketh not the ceremonies, that holdeth the effecte of them, and omitteth the shadowe. Nowe sith Christe banisheth them out of his kingdome, which accustome menne to the contempte of his lawe: their beastlinesse is monstrous, that are not ashamed wyth sacrilegious indulgence, to remit that which God doth so seuerely require, and vnder pretence of a veniall sinne to beat downe the righteousnesse of the law. Againe that title is to be noted which he geueth to good and holy teachers, that is, to such as exhort men not only in words, but especially in example of life to keepe the lawe.

Matth. 5.

	Marke.	Luke.
20. For I saye vnto you, excepte your ryghteousnesse exceede the righteousnesse of the Scribes & Pharises, yee shall not enter into the kingdome of heauen.
21. Yee haue heard that it was sayde to them of the old time. Thou shalt not kill: for whosoeuer killeth, shalbe culpable of iudgment.
22. But I saye vnto you, whosoeuer is angrye with his brother vnadvisedlye, shall be culpable of iudgement. And whosoeuer saith to his brother, Racha, shalbe worthy to be punished by the councel: and whosoeuer shall say, Foole, shalbe worthy to be punished with hell fire.

20. Except your righteousnes exceede. He reprehendeth the Scribes, which endeuoured to charge the doctrine of the Gospell, as though it were the ouerthrow of the law. Hee disputeth not this matter, but onely dooth shewe briefly that they haue nothing lesse in their mindes, then the zeale of the lawe: as if he ſhould haue ſayde, they pretend that they hate mee, becauſe they woulde not breake the lawe; but it appeareth by their lyfe how coldly they eſteeme the law, nay how ſecurely they ſcorne at God, while that with a painted and faigned righteouſneſſe they beare vp thẽſelues amongſt men. This is the iudgement of moſt of the interpreters. But ſee if hee doe not rather reproue the corrupt kind of teaching, which the Scribes and Phariſes vſed in teaching the people. For when as they reſtrayned the lawe of GOD onely to outward dueties, they framed their diſciples as Apes to hypocriſie. And I ſpeake not againſt it, that they lyued as wickedly, nay worſe then they taught. Therefore I do willingly ioyne theyr glory of falſe righteouſneſſe with their wicked doctrine: yet it dooth eaſily appeare by thoſe wordes that followe (what it is that Chriſt doth eſpecially inueigh againſt in this ſentence) where as he purging the lawe from their wicked commentes, doth reſtore the ſame to his former puritie. In ſumme, that which was wickedly obiected, (as we haue ſayde) againſt him, he forcibly returneth backe vpon themſelues. Behold, ſaid he, how perfect and apt interpreters of the lawe they are: for they doe frame a righteouſneſſe which ſhall ſhutte the gate of heauen againſt the followers of it. It muſt be remembred, that we ſaid otherwhere, that for the amplifying of the matter, the Phariſes are ioyned to the Scribes: becauſe that ſecte had got the reporte of holynes to themſelues before all others. Though they are deceyued that thinke they are ſo called of a ſeparation, as menne ſeparate from the common ſorte of men; they challenged a degree proper to themſelues. For they were called Pheruſiim, that is interpreters: becauſe that they not contente with the ſimple letter, profeſſed that they hadde the kaye, to gather the ſecrete vnderſtanding: whereof their greate heape of mixed inuentions ſprange, when as they drawing the maiſterſhip to themſelues with a wicked pleaſure and like boldnes they durſt intrude their own inuentions in ſteede of the ſcripture.

21. You haue heard what was ſayde. This ſentence and others following doth agree with that, that goeth before. For Chriſt dooth more at large ſhew in their kindes how ouerthwartly they doe wreſt the law; ſo that their righteouſnes is nothing els but droſſe. But they are deceiued that thought, that this was the reformation of the law, and that Chriſte extolled his diſciples into a higher degree of perfection, then Moſes euer could bring his groſſe and carnall people vnto, which was hardly fitte to learne the firſt elementes. So went the opinion, the beginning of righteouſnes was in tymes paſte delyuered in the lawe, but that the perfection is taught in the Goſpell.

But Chriſte meant nothing leſſe, then to chaunge or alter anye thing in the commaundementes. For God hath therein once eſtabliſhed a perfecte rule of lyfe, whereof he will neuer repent. But beecauſe that the lawe was corrupted with adulterous commentes, and was wreſted into a prophane ſenſe, Chriſt delyuereth the ſame from ſuch corruptions, and ſheweth the right vnderſtanding of it, from the whiche the Iewes were fallen away. And the doctrine of the law doth not onely beginne, but alſo perfourmeth an vpright lyfe: as maye be gathered out of this one Chapter, in that it requireth a perfect loue of God and our neighbour: ſo that he that is endued with ſuch a loue, wanteth nothing of the chiefe perfection. Therefore the law, by the commaundements of good lyfe, leadeth men to the marke of righteouſneſſe. Therefore Paule accounteth it weake, not in reſpect of it ſelfe, but in reſpect of our fleſh. For if the lawe did onelye giue an entraunce to true and perfect righteouſneſſe, then was Moſes proteſtation in vaine; I take heauen and earth to recorde this day againſt you, that I haue ſette before thee the waye of lyfe & death. Againe, & now O Iſrael, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but that thou ſhouldeſt wholly cleaue vnto him. This promiſe were alſo in vaine, and to no purpoſe, hee that doth theſe thinges ſhall liue in them. And it euidentlye appeareth out of other places of ſcripture, that Chriſt meant not to alter any thing in the commaundementes. For he commaundeth them, that woulde through their good workes enter into lyfe, to obſerue nothing but the commaundements of the lawe: and neyther hee nor his Apoſtles doe giue anye other preceptes of godly and holy lyfe. And truely they doe great iniurie to God the auctour of the law, which imagine that hee did onelye frame the eyes, handes, and feete to a feigned ſhewe of good workes, and that onely the Goſpell teacheth vs to loue GOD from the hearte. Therefore let that errour paſſe, that the wantes of the law are here amended by Chriſte: for we may not imagine Chriſte to be a new lawgiuer, to adde any thing to the eternal righteouſneſſe of his father: but as a faithfull interpreter he is to be heard, that wee might know, what manner of law it is, to what purpoſe it tendeth, and how farre it reacheth.

Deu. 30. 19

Leuit. 18. 5

Now it remaineth for vs to ſee what Chriſt condemneth in the Phariſes, and what his interpretation differeth from their commentes. The ſumme is, that they had tranſlated the doctrine of the lawe to a politike order, as if it ſufficed to doe the outward dueties. So it came to paſſe, that he thought himſelfe free from manſlaughter, that had not with his hand killed a mā. And he that had not defiled his body with adultery, thought himſelfe chaſte and pure before God. But this profanation of the lawe might not be borne, when as it is certaine, that Moſes did euerye where require a ſpirituall worſhip of God: and God, who delyuered the ſame by the hand of Moſes, according to his owne nature ſpake as well to the heartes, as to the handes and eyes. Chriſte alleadgeth the wordes of the law, but he applyeth himſelfe to the common capacitie of the ſimple, as if he ſhould ſay: the Scribes haue as yet deliuered vnto you, but a literall expoſition of the law, as if it were ſufficient if a man keepe his hands from manſlaughter & violence. But I admoniſh you to looke deeper into the matter: and becauſe that charitie is the perfection of the lawe, I ſay that thy neighbour is iniuried, as oft as any thing is vncharitably done againſt him. The laſt clauſe that he rehearſeth, that he ſhalbe culpable of a iudgment that killeth a man, doth confirme that which I ſaid euen now, that Chriſt reproueth that fault: that the law of God, which was giuē to gouerne the mindes of men, was turned into a polytike gouernement.

22. But I ſay vnto you. He doth not oppoſe his anſwere againſt the cōmandement of Moſes, but againſt the cōmon fantaſie of the Scribes. Alſo becauſe that the Phariſes did boaſt of antiquity (as commonly a long preſcription of time is pretēded for defence of errors) Chriſt calleth the people backe to his auctoritie, whereto al antiquitie ought of right to giue place: whereby we gather that the trueth is much more to be eſteemed thē either antiquitie or cuſtome.

Whoſo-

VVhosoeuer shall say vnto his brother. Christ setteth down three degrees of condemnation, besides the violence of the handes: wherby hee declareth that that commandement of the law, doth not only restraine the hands, but all affections contrary to brotherlye charitie: as if he shoulde haue saide, they that are onely angry with their brethren, or doe proudly lyft vp themselues, or doe hurt them with any opprobrious words, are murderers.

Now sith it is euident, that this word Racha is placed in the middest betweene anger and manifeste reproofe, I take it to bee an interiection of contempt or despite. And though Christe adiudgeth them onely to hell fire, which breake out into open reproofes, yet hee acquiteth not anger from this punishment: but alluding to the iudgementes of the world, he declareth that GOD will become iudge of that priuate and secrete wrath, that he may punish the same. And beecause that hee proceedeth further, that sheweth his indignation with bitter speech, hee saieth, that hee shall be found guiltie before a heauenly councell, that he may haue a greater punishment. And he adiudgeth them to hell fire, which breake out into reproaches, signifying that hatred or whatsoeuer else is against charitie, sufficeth to purchase the reward of eternall death, though no violence be offred. It is not to be doubted, but that this worde Gehenna is borowed: for with the Hebrewes it signifieth a valley. Also the valley of Hennon was an infamous place: becawse of their detestable superstition, for that they there offered their children to idolles. Heereof it came to passe, that holy men vsed that word for hell, that that vile vngodlynes might be had in the greater detestation, that the people might abhor that so detestable and horrible a name. And it appeareth that this manner of speach was vsed in Christ his time, and hell was called almoste by no other name then Gehenna, the worde somewhat altered from the natural sound.

Matthew. 5.	Mark.	Luk. 12.
23. If then thou bring thy gifte to the altar, & there remembrest that thy brother hath ought against thee.
24. Leaue there thine offering before the altar, and goe thy way: first, be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.
25. Agree with thine aduersary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him, leaste thine aduersary delyuer thee to the iudge, and the iudge delyuer thee to the sergeaunt, and thou be cast into prison.		58. VVhileſt thou goeſt with thine aduerſarie to the ruler, as thou art in the way, giue diligence in the way, that thou mayſt bee liuered from him, leaſt hee bring thee to the iudge, & ỹ iudge deliuer thee to the iayler, and the iayler caſte thee into priſon.
26. Verily I saye vnto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou hast payd the vttermost farthing.		59. I tell thee, thou shalt not departe thence, till thou hast payd the vtmoste mite.

23. If thou bring thy gift. VVith this clause he confirmeth and also expoundeth the former doctrine. The summe is, that we doe then satisfie that commuundement of the lawe, wherein wee are forbydden to kil, kill, if we nouriſh agreement and brotherly loue with our neighbours. And that he might the better perſwade vs to it, Chriſt pronounceth that euen the dueties of religion are not accepted of God, but refuſed of him, if we diſſent amongſt our ſelues. For in that he commaundeth them, that haue hurt any one of their brethren, to be firſt in fauour with him, beefore that they offer their gifte: hee declareth that there is no entraunce for vs vnto God, ſo long as through our faulte wee are at enmitie with our neighbours. If that men pollute and corrupt with their hatreds their whole worſhip which they offer, we hereof gather how much he eſteemeth mutuall concord amongſt vs. Yet here may a queſtion be moued, whether it be not abſurde that the dueties of charitie are more accounted of, then the worſhippe of God. For wee muſt ſay, that eyther the order of the law is prepoſterous, or els the firſt table ſhould be preferred before the ſecond.

This is eaſily aunſwered: for the wordes of Chriſte doe tend to no other purpoſe, but to ſhew that they doe in vaine and falſly profeſſe them ſelues worſhippers of God, which doe contemptuouſly diſpiſe their brethren, which they haue vniuſtly iniuried. For vnder this one kinde hee noteth all the outward exerciſes of relygion by the figure Sinecdeche: by which outwarde exerciſes men doe oft counterfeit holyneſſe, rather then truely teſtifie the ſame. And it is to be noted that Chriſt, after the maner of that time, ſpake of the ſacrifices. At this day our eſtate is vnlike: yet the ſame doctrine remaineth: that is, whatſoeuer we offer vnto God is corrupt, except we be at one with our brethren as much as it lyeth in vs. The ſcripture calleth almes, Philip. 4. 18. ſacrifices of a ſweete ſauour: yet we heare out of Paule his mouth, 1. Cor. 13. 2. 3. that he that beſtoweth all his goodes vppon the poore, is yet nothing, except hee haue charitie. Alſo God deoth not take nor acknowledge them for children, excepte they againe do ſhew themſelues to men as brethren. And though Chriſt doth commaunde them only that haue iniuried their brethren, to apply themſelues to appeaſe them: yet vnder this one kinde hee ſheweth howe precious brotherly concord is before God. And this ſetteth out much more, that he commaundeth to leaue the gifte before the altar, as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde: in vaine doe menne come to the Temple, or offer ſacrifices to GOD, ſo longe as they are at diſcord with their neighbours.

25. Agree with thine aduerſarie. Though Chriſt ſeemeth to goe further, not onely to exhorte them to reconciliation, which haue done iniurie to their brethren, but them alſo which haue bene iniuried: yet I thinke that he had a further regard: namely that he might cut off all occaſion of hatreds and diſcordes, and ſhew the meanes to maintaine good will: for from whence ſpring all iniuries, but that all men are too carefull to hold their owne right? that is, they are giuen too much to mainteine their owne commoditie, with the loſſe of other men: For almoſt all men are blinded with a peeuiſhe loue of them ſelues; ſo that they flatter themſelues, euen in the worſt cauſes. Therefore Chriſt, that he might preuent diſcordes, hatreds, ſtrifes, and all iniuries, forbiddeth that ſelfe loue, and commaundeth his diſciples to bend themſelues to moderation and equitie, that parting from the extremitie of their right, they might with ſuch equitie redeeme peace and friendſhip.

It were to be wiſhed, that there ſhould neuer fall any ſtrife or controuerſie amongſt vs: and ſurely men ſhould neuer fall into contention or ſtrife, if there were ſuch loue amongſt them as ought to be. But becauſe that it can hardly bee brought to paſſe, but that ſome ſtrifes will ariſe, Chriſt ſheweth a remedie how the ſame may preſently be ended: namelye, if we bridle our luſtes, and be ready e rather to paſſe it ouer with our loſſe, thē to proſecute our right with an vnappeaſable rygour. But chriſt vſed this exhortatiō diuerſe times, as it appeareth out of the 12. of Luke, where as the ſermon which he made in the mount is not ſet downe, but an epitome gathered of diuerſe ſentences of Chriſt. VVhereby it alſo appeareth what it is to be in the way: that is, beefore thou commeſt to the Iudge. Leaſt thine aduerſary delyuer thee to the Iudge. Some expound this clauſe metaphoricaly, that the heauenly Iudge wil deal with extremitie of law; ſo that he will forgiue nothing at all, except wee endeuour to pacifie thoſe contentions, which we haue with our neighbours. But I take it ſimply, that Chriſt, admoniſheth vs, that this is profitable for vs euen amongſt men. For the couetous deſire is often daungerous to the contentious. Yet I doe not deny but that the ſimilitude may bee aptly applyed to God: that is, that he ſhall feele iudgement without mercy, that is rygorous to his brethren, or bendeth himſelfe wholy to contention. But the Papiſtes are more then ridiculous, which by expounding this place allegorically, doe build their purgatory: but there is nothing more euidente, then that Chriſt doth ſpeake of maintaining good will amongſt men. They make no religion without ſhame, to peruerte his wordes, and to drawe them to a ſtraunge ſenſe, ſo that they might deceiue the vnlearned. But becauſe they are vnworthy of any long confutation, I will ſhewe in one onely word, how ſhamefull their ignorance is. They imagine the aduerſary to be the deuill, and that Chriſte commaundeth his faythfull ones to be louing vnto him: therefore that the Papiſtes maye finde out a purgatorie, it behoueth them firſt to be brethren & friends to the deuill.

It is well knowne that a quarterne is the fourth parte of a pound, but in this place it is taken for a farthing, or any other ſmal peece of money, as it alſo appeareth out of Luke. Now, if I would vſe cauilles, I woulde here alſo refell the folly of the Papiſtes. For if he that is once in purgatorie ſhall neuer goe out from thence, vntill he haue payde the vtterꝛmoſt farthing: it followeth that thoſe rites, which they call the ſuffrages of the lyuing for the dead, are in vaine. For Chriſt doth not admit others to make ſatiſfaction for the releaſe of the debter, but expreſly requireth of euery manne the payment of his owne debt. If then their Maſſes and other ſacrifices be vnprofitable, howe hotely ſoeuer their fire of Purgatorie doe burne, yet their Prieſtes and Monkes kytchens ſhall wax cold: for which cauſe they haue ſo painefully ſtriuen for the ſame.

Matth. 5.	Mark.	Luke.
27. Yee haue heard that it was ſayde to them of old time, Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie.
28. But I ſay vnto you, that whoſoeuer looketh on on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

29. VVherefore if thy right eye cause thee to offend, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is better for thee, that one of thy members perishe, then that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

30. Also if thy right hande make thee to offende, cutte it off, and caste it from thee: for better it is for thee, that one of thy members perishe, then that thy whole bodye shoulde bee caste into hell.

27. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Christ proceedeth in his disputation, prouing that the law of God is not only a gouernour of life, to fram the outward behauiour after a pollitike maner: but it also requireth the perfect and whole affections of the heart. But that must be remembred, which I gaue warning of before. Although Christ reporteth the words of the law, yet it is the grosse and adulterous sense, which false interpreters had gathered, that he reproueth: for he had said before, that he came not to be a new lawgiuer, but a faythfull interpreter of the law alreadie giuen. And for that it might be obiected, that that interpretation had cõtinued long, Christ expreslly graunteth it: but after this maner he answereth it, that the long continuance of errour ought to bee no preiudice to the truth.

28. Hee that looketh vpon a woman. The purpose of Christ is generally to condemn the lust of the flesh. Therfore he saith that they are adulterers before God, not only that defile other mens wiues, but they also that pollute their eyes with an vnchaste looke. But it is a figuratiue kinde of speeche, because that not only the eyes doe make men guiltie of adulterie, but also the blinde burning lustes of the hearte. Therefore Paule placeth chastitie in the body and the spirit, 1. Cor. 7. 34. But Christ thought it sufficient to confute that grosse opinio, which had taken place: because that they did thinke that they should auoyd nothing but outward adulterie. Notwithstanding, because the eyes, for the moste parte, procure the mindes to such filthy deuises, and lust entreth as it were by these dores. Christ vseth this manner of speach, when as he would condemne concupiscence, and that may easily be gathered by that word lust: whereby we are also taught, that not they onely are to be accounted adulterers, which conceaue whoredome in their mindes with full consente: but they also that admitte any prickes or motions of the same VVherefore the hypocrisie of the Papistes is too grosse and careless, which deny concupiscence to be sinne, vntil the whole hart do yeeld consent. But it is not so to be merueiled at, that they lessen sinne as they doe, when as it behoueth them to be dul and slow in accounting of their sinnes, which ascribe righteousnes to the deserres of their works.

29. If thine eye Because in the weakenesse and imbecilitie of flesshe, Christe might seeme to vrge men too seuerely, he preuenteth and aunswereth all those complayntes. In summe he declareth, though that bee hard, difficult, troublesom, or sharp, which God commandeth: yet we can make no excuse therby: because that the righteousnes of God ought to be more ef-eſteemed of vs, then all other thinges which are moſte deare & precious to vs. As if he ſhould haue ſayde, there is no cauſe whye thou ſhouldeſt obiecte to me, that thou canſt ſcarſly turne thine eye hether and thither: but that they are caught in ſnares before thou art aware For thou muſt rather forſake and leaue thine eyes then to departe from the commaundementes of God. Yet, it is not Chriſtes meaning that the body ſhould be lamed, that we might obey God. But becauſe that all men doe gladly deſire that their ſenſes may not be ſo maymed, but that they maye haue the free vſe of them, Chriſte dooth hyperbolically teach vs to cut away any thing that hindreth vs from that obedience vnto God, which hee requireth of vs in his lawe. And this hee dooth of purpoſe, becauſe that men do in this behalfe too licentiouſly nouriſh vp themſelues. If the mind were pure, the eyes and handes would alſo be obedient, which haue no proper motion of their owne. But we doe herein offende grieuouſlye, that we are not ſo carefull as wee ought to bee in auoydinge deceitfull baytes, ſo that rather with an vnbrydeled libertie we doe willingly prouoke our ſelues to euill.

Matth. 5.	Marke.	Luke. 16.
31. It hath beene ſayde alſo, whoſoeuer ſhal put away his wife, let him giue her a teſtimoniall of diuorcement.		18. VVhoſoeuer putteth away his wife, and maryeth another, committeth adultery: and whoſoeuer maryeth her that is put away from her husbād, committeth adultery.
32. But I ſay vnto you, whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife (except it bee for fornication) cauſeth her to commit adultery: and whoſoeuer ſhall marry her, that is diuorced, committeth adultrie.

31. VVhoſoeuer ſhall put away. Becauſe there will be a more conueniēt place to entreate of this doctrine more at large in the 19. after Mathew: I will now briefly touch that which Chriſt ſaith here. As the Iewes did falſlye thinke that they had doone their duetie towardes GOD, if after a politike ſorte, they had obſerued the law: ſo againe they fondly imagined that it was lawefull for them to doe whatſoeuer the politike law did not forbidde.

The diuorcementes which they were wont to make with their wiues Moſes had not forbidden, in reſpect of an outwarde order: but onely for reſtraint of luſt he had cōmanded to giue a byll of diuorcement to thoſe wiues that were put away. And it was a certeine teſtimonie of manumiſsion, that the woman might after be free from the yoake and power of her husband. And the husband did alſo confeſſe that hee did not put away his wife for any fault, but becauſe he did not lyke her. From hence ſprang that errour, that they thought no fault to bee in ſuch a diuorcement; ſo that they ſatiſfied the law: but they tooke a very wrong rule of a godly and holy lyfe, out of the ciuil lawe. For the politike lawes are ſometime bent to mens manners: but God in giuing a ſpirituall law did not regarde what menne could doe, but what they ought to doe. Therfore a perfect and vpright righteouſneſſe is therein contayned, though we haue not power to fulfill the ſame. So Chriſt dooth admoniſhe vs that that is not preſently lawful before God, which the polytike law of Moſes

Moſes doth tollerate. He ſaith, that vnder the pretence of the law, he abſolueth himſelfe, that putting away his wife, giueth her a bill of diuorcement. But the band of matrimonie is holyer, then that it may be broke & vnknitte at the will, or rather pleaſure of men. For though manne and wife doe ioyne themſelues togeather with a mutuall conſent: yet GOD doth ioyne them and knit them togeather in ſuch a knot, that cannot be diſſolued, that after it is not lawfull for them to depart. Yet hee putteth an exception, except it be for fornication. For that woman is worthylye put away, which hath traiterouſly broken matrimonie: for the band being broken through her fault, the man is ſet at libertie.

32. Cauſeth her to commit adultery. Becauſe the byll of diuorcement did permit, that the woman ſo ſeparated, might enter into new mariages, hee is worthily condemned as a baud or a betraier, that againſt all lawe and right, caſteth of his wife to others, which was giuen to him of God.

Matthew 5.	Marke.	Luke.
33. Againe, yee haue hearde that it was ſayd to them of old time, Thou ſhalt not forſweare thy ſelfe, but ſhalt performe thine oathes to the Lord.
34. But I ſay vnto you, ſweare not at al, neyther by heauen: for it is the throan of God:
35. Nor yet by the earth: for it is his footſtoole: neyther by Ieruſalem: for it is the citie of the great king.
36. Neyther ſhalt thou ſweare by thine head: becauſe thou canſte not make one hayre white or blacke.
37. But let your communication be, yea, yea: nay, nay: for whatſoeuer is more then theſe, commeth of euill.

33. Thou ſhalt not forſweare thy ſelfe. This alſo is not a reproofe of the law, but rather a true interpretation of the ſame: for God hath not onely condemned in the law al periuries, but vaine & light ſwearing, which derogateth from the maieſtie of his name. For not only he doth take the name of God in vaine, that ſweareth falſly, but he that vſeth the name of God in friuolous matters, or raſhly and contemptuouſly in common ſpeach. Further, when as the law of God condemneth euery prophaning of the name of God, the Iewes did imagine the fault to be onely in periuries. Chriſt reproueth this groſſe errour, that they thought it lawfull for them to abuſe the name of God without reproofe; ſo that they were not forſworne. It is commaunded that we ſhould religiouſly performe our oathes to God. For he that doth defraud and deceaue his neighbours after that he hath vſed the name of God for it, doth iniury, not to men onely, but to God. But the fault is in reſtraining that to one point, which extendeth more largely. Some apply this word perfourme, to vowes promiſed to God for relygions ſake. But the word doth beſt agree to al couenauntes and promiſſes confirmed by adding the name of God thereto: for then is God made a witneſſe between both parties, to whom they pledge their faith.

34. Sweare not at all. This clauſe, not at all, hath deceiued many: ſo that they thought that Chriſt had generally condemned all oathes. And many good men were driuen to this vnmeaſurable rigor, through the vnbrideled libertie of ſwearing, which they ſawe abounde throughout the world. And the Anabaptiſtes vnder this pretence haue kept a great ſtir, as though Chriſte would ſuffer vs to ſweare for no cauſe, for that hee forbiddeth to ſweare at all. But we muſt not fetch an expoſition out of any other place, then out of the wordes of the text: preſently there followeth, neither by heauen, nor by the earth. VVho ſeeth not that theſe kindes of oathes are ſet downe for interpretation ſake, which by this numbring of theſe perticuler oathes, might interprete the former ſentence? The Iewes had certaine extraordinary or indirect (as menne ſaye) maner of oathes: and when they ſwore by heauen, earth, or the altar, they counted this almoſt for nothing. And as one ſinne ariſeth of an other, ſo vnder this colour they faigned, that they did not ſo openly prophane the name of God. Chriſte, that he might meete with this ſinne, ſaieth, that they may not at all ſweare, either after this maner, or after that, neither by heauen, nor by the earth, &c. VVhereby wee gather that this phraſe (not at all) is not referred to the ſubſtaunce, but to the maner of ſwearing: as if he ſhould haue ſaide, neither directly nor indirectly: otherwiſe it were in vaine to rehearſe theſe kindes. VVherefore the Anabaptiſtes doe ſhewe their groſſe ignoraunce, and their delight in contention, while that frowardly they enforce one word, and with cloſed eies doe paſſe by the whole meaning of the ſentence. If any obiect that Chriſt permitteth no oath: I aunſwere that the interpreters wordes muſt bee vnderſtoode according to the meaning of the law. Therefore this is the ſumme that the name of God is taken in vaine other waies then by periury. Therefore we muſt refraine from all ſuperfluous oathes: but where as there is cauſe, the law doth not only permitte, but alſo commandeth to ſweare. So Chriſtes meaning was nothing elſe, then that al thoſe oathes are vnlawful, which by any abuſe prophane the ſacred name of God, the reuerence whereof they ought to preſerue.

Neyther by heauen. They are deceiued that ſay, that Chriſte reprooued theſe formes of ſwearing, as corrupt, becauſe that God alone ſhoulde be ſworne by: for the reaſons which he bringeth doe rather bend to the cõtrary parte: becauſe that then alſo the name of God is ſworne by, when as heauen and earth are named: becauſe there is no parte of the worlde, wherein God hath not imprinted ſome note of his glory. Yet this opinion ſeemeth not to agree with the commaundement of the law, whereas God expreſly commaundeth to ſweare by his name, nor yet with diuerſe places of the Scripture, whereas he complayneth, that he is iniuried ſo oft, as his creatures are ſworne by. I aunſwere it is an offence lyke to idolatrie, when as eyther the power of iudgement, or the auſthoritie of trying witneſſes is giuen to them. For we muſt conſider the end of ſwearing: namely, that menne doe appeale vnto God, as the reuenger of periurie, and the defence of trueth. And this honour cannot be giuen to another, but that his maieſtie ſhalbe prophaned. And for this cauſe the Apoſtle ſaieth, that one cannot ſweare, but by the greater: and this was peculyer to God alone, that he ſweareth by himſelfe. So whoſoeuer ſwore in tymes paſte by Moloch or by any other Idoll, did ſo much diminiſhe from the glory of God, in that an other was placed in his roumth, as vnderſtander of the thoughtes, & Iudge againſt their ſoules. And they that at this day doe ſweare by Angelles or dead Saintes, doe ſpoyle GOD of his honour, and do aſcribe a vain godhead to thoſe creatures. But there is an other thing to be conſidered, when as heauen and earth are ſworne by, in reſpect of the maker. For the relygion of an oath is not ſetled vpon the creatures: but God alone is called to witneſſe, they being brought forth as ſeales of his glory. The ſcripture alſo calleth heauen, the ſeat of God, not that he is included therein, but that menne might learne to lyfte their mindes on high, ſo oft as they thinke of him, and that they ſhoulde not imagine any earthly or baſe thing of him. Yea, the earth alſo is therfore called his tooteſtoole, that we might knowe that hee being euerye where, could not be contained in any certaine place. The holy neſſe of Hieruſalem did depende of the promiſſe: therefore it was holy, becauſe the Lorde had choſen it for the ſeat and palace of his Empyre. VVhen men ſwear by their head, they lay their lyfe as pledge of their good meaning, which is their ſinguler gyft of God.

37. But let your communication be. Secondly, Chriſte preſcribeth a remedy: namely, that menne ſhould deale truely and faythfully amongſt themſelues: for then playne ſpeach ſhall be of more value, then an oath is amongſt them, that knowe no other but corrupt and falſe dealing. And truely this is the beſt way to reproue and correct vices by, to note the fountaines from whence they ſpring. From whence commeth this raſh readineſſe of ſwearing, but that in ſo much vanitie, in ſo manye deceites, vnconſtancy and ſickleneſſe, nothing almoſt is beleeued? Therfore Chriſte requireth trueth and conſtancy in our wordes, that wee ſhoulde not neede to ſweare anye more. For, the repetition aſwell of the affirmation, as of the denyall, is for this purpoſe, that wee ſhould keepe our promiſſes, that all vpright dealing maye thereby appeare. And becauſe that this is the true and lawefull kinde of bargayning, where men ſpeake no otherwiſe with their tongue, then they thinke in their hearte, Chriſt ſaieth that whatſoeuer is more, proceedeth of euill.

And I allowe not their iudgemente, that attribute the faulte of ſwearinge to him, that dooth not beleeue the ſpeaker. But in my iudgement Chriſte teacheth, that it proceedeth of the vices of men, that they are enforced to ſweare: for if there were vpright dealinge amongſte them, if they were not diuerſe nor inconſtant of theyr worde, but mayntayned that ſimplicitie, which nature teacheth: yet it followeth not but that it is lawefull to ſweare, ſo ofte as neede requireth: for manye thinges may bee well vſed, which ryſe of an yll beginning.

Matth. 5	Marke.	Luke. 6.
38. Yee haue hearde that it hath bene ſayd, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. 39. But I ſaye vnto you, reſiſte not euill: but whoſoeuer ſhall ſmite		29. And to him that ſmyteth thee on the one cheeke, offer alſo the other: and him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take ſmite thee on thy right cheek, turne to him the other alſo.

40. And if any one will ſue thee at the lawe, and take away thy coate, let him haue thy cloake alſo.

41. And whoſoeuer will compell thee to goe a myle, goe with him twaine.

30. Giue to euery man that asketh of thee: and of him that taketh away thy goodes, aske thē not againe.

38. An eye for an eye. Heere is an other fault reproued, that whereas God had by his law commanded the Iudges and magiſtrates to reueng iniuries with like puniſhment, euery man vnder that pretence would reuenge themſelues. Therefore they thought they did not offende, ſo that they did not firſt prouoke any: but being iniuried, did recompence lyke for lyke.

But Chriſt teacheth vs otherwiſe, though the Iudges are commaunded to defend all men, and are ordained reuengers to bridle the wicked, and to reſtraine their violence: yet euery one ought patiently to ſuffer the iniuries done vnto them.

39. Reſiſt not euill. There is two wayes of reſiſting: the one, when as without daunger we driue awaye iniuries: the other, when wee recompence like for like. But though Chriſt permitteth not his, to repell violence with violence: yet he forbiddeth not them to withſtand vniuſt violence. And Paule can interprete vs this place beſt, when he commaundeth to ouercome euill with good, rather then to ſtriue with euill doing, Ro. 12. 17. For the Antitheſis is to be noted betweene an offence and the correction of a fault. Here he ſpeaketh of reuengmēt: and Chriſt, that he might take that lybertie from his diſciples forbiddeth them to reſiſt euil with euil. And alſo he ſtretcheth the law of patience further, that we ſhoulde not onely receiue iniuries without grudging, but rather prepare our ſelues to beare new iniuries. In ſumme, this is the purpoſe of this admonition, that the faythfull ſhould learne to forgette what miſchiefes ſoeuer are done vnto them, leaſt that when they are hurte, they breake into hatred or enuie, or deſire to hurt againe: but that they ſhuld frame themſelues to a greater patience, if that miſchiefes and iniuryes ſhould encreaſe and ſtirre vp more and more.

Whoſoeuer ſhall ſtrike thee. Iulianus and ſuche lyke did wickedly cauill at the doctrine of Chriſte, as if it did vtterlye ouerthrowe all lawes and iudgementes. For as Auguſtine ſayde very aptly and wiſely in his firſte Epiſtle, The counſell of our Sauiour was for no other purpoſe, then to frame the mindes of the faithfull to a moderation and equitie, that for one or two iniuries they ſhould not fayntе nor waxe wearie. And it is true that Auguſtine ſaieth, the lawe is not giuen for outwarde workes, if thou vnderſtand them rightly.

I graunt that Chriſte reſtraineth our handes aſwell as our mindes: but whereas a manne cannot defende him ſelfe and his, from iniuries, without reuenge, the wordes of Chriſte let not, but that lawfullye, and without offence he may auoyde the daunger comming. Certeinly Chriſt would not teach his diſciples to whet the mallice of the wicked, whiche burns too hotte before with a delight to iniury them.

And

And to turne the other cheeke, what were it elſe, but a prouocation to further miſchiefe? Therefore it is not meete nor conuenient for an interpreter to ſtand vppon the ſillables, but to marke the purpoſe of him that ſpeaketh. And there is nothing more vncomely for Chriſtes diſciples thē to play and cauil with the wordes, whereas the meaning of their maiſter is playne. And it is not harde to vnderſtande what Chriſtes purpoſe is: namely that the end of one trouble is the beginning of an other: and ſo the faythful muſt through the whole courſe of their life, with continual ſteppes paſſe through many iniuries. Therfore when they are once hurt, he woulde by that inſtruction frame them to bearing, that by ſuffering they might learne to be patient.

40. And if any will ſue thee. Chriſte toucheth the other faulte, which is when the wicked diſturbe vs with ſuites. And in this behalfe hee alſo commaundeth vs to haue our mindes ſo armed to patience, that our coat being taken way, we ſhuld be ready to giue our cloake alſo. It ſhalbe but folly for any man to ſtand vpon the wordes. Firſt, to giue vnto the enemies whatſoeuer they deſire, rather then to goe to lawe with them: For ſuche a facilytie were as a fanne, to kindle the mindes of the wicked to theftes and robberies, from the which wee know Chriſte his minde was farre. Then what meaneth this, that thou ſhouldeſt giue thy cloak to him that vnder colour of lawe, woulde take away thy coate? That is, if any man oppreſſed with wrongfull iudgement loſeth that which is his, & yet is ready to leaue the reſt, if neede be, deſerueth no leſſe praiſe of patience, then he that ſuffereth himſelfe to be twiſe ſpoyled, before hee wil goe to lawe.

Therefore the meaning is, that Chriſtians, when any attempt to ſpoile them of parte of their goodes, ſhuld be ready to be wholy ſpoyled. Hereby we gather, that they are not altogether ſecluded from iudgements, if they at any time haue place giuen them of iuſt defence: for though they lay not forth their goodes to the ſpoyle; yet they goe not from this doctrine of Chriſt, which perſwadeth them to beare oppreſſion with pacience. Truly it is a rare example, that any man ſhould come to ſue in the court with quiet and patient affection. But becauſe it may be that one maye defende a good cauſe, not in reſpect of his owne priuate commoditie, but for the common wealth, it is not lawfull ſimplye to condemne the thing it ſelfe, vntill the corrupt affection doth appeare. The diuerſe Phraſes in Matthew and Luke, doe not alter the ſenſe. A cloake is commonly of greater value then a coat: therefore when Matthew ſaith that thou muſt giue thy cloake to him that taketh awaye thy coat, hee meaneth, that when we haue a ſmall loſſe, we ſhould be willing and readye to beare a greater loſſe. But the wordes of Luke do agree with the olde prouerbe, my coat is nearer then my cloake.

LV. 30. To euery one that asketh, giue. Mathew hath the ſame words, as we ſhall ſee ſhortly after. For it may eaſily be gathered by the text, that Luke doth not ſpeake here of them, that by entreatie and prayers doe ſeeke for help: but of the contētions and violence, which the wicked vſe in taking away other mennes goodes. Aske not againe, ſaieth he, of him, that taketh away thy goodes. Yet, if any manne had rather reade theſe two ſentences a ſunder, there is no difference in the matter, and ſo it is an exhortation to be ready and willing to giue. As concerning the ſecond clauſe, where Chriſte forbiddeth to demaunde againe thoſe things, which were vniuſtly taken away, is vndoubtedly an expoſition of the former doctrine: that is, that we ſhould not take grieuouſly the loſſe of our goodes. But that muſt not be forgotten, which I ſpake of euen now, that the wordes are not to be vrged ſophiſtically, as though it were not lawfull for a godly manne, to recouer againe that, which is his, if at anye time God ſhall giue him a iuſt remedie: but onely preſcribeth to vs a law of patience, but that we ſhould paciently waite, vntill the Lord himſelfe ſhall take an account of thoſe ſpoyling theues.

42. Giue vnto him that aſketh, and from him that woulde borowe of thee, turne not away.		34. And if yee lende to them, of whom yee hope to receiue, what thanke ſhall yee haue? for euen the ſinners lend to ſinners, to receiue the like. 35. Lende, looking for nothing againe, and your reward ſhal be great.

42. To him that aſketh. Though the wordes of Chriſte, reported by Matthew, doe ſounde, as if hee commaunded to giue to all, without reſpect or choyſe: yet we may gather an other meaning out of Luke, who fetteth out the whol matter more fully. Firſt, it is certein & the purpoſe of Chriſt was to frame his diſciples to be liberall rather then prodigall. But it were fond prodigalitie raſhly to conſume thoſe things, which the Lord hath giuen. Further, we ſee what a rule of charitie the holye Ghoſt hath deliuered other where. Therfore let vs hold this, that Chriſt doth exhort his diſciples here: firſt, & they be liberal & charitable. Further, this is the maner that he preſcribeth them, that they ſhuld not think that they had don their cuetie, when they had holpē ſome few, but that they ſhuld endeuor to helpe al with their liberalitie, & that they ſhuld neuer be weary, while that the Lord doth giue them abilitie. Further, that no man cauill at the wordes of Matthew, let vs conferre them with Lukes wordes. Chriſte ſaith that we doe no duetie to God, while that in lending or doing other dueties we looke for any reward againe: and ſo he maketh a diſtinction betweene charitie and carnal friendſhip. For prophane men doe loue togeather not franckly, but with an affection of reward & gaine: and ſo it commeth to paſſe, that euery man, in that he loueth others, doth ſeeke to be beloued himſelfe, euen as Plato alſo doth wiſely weigh the ſame. But Chriſt requireth of his diſciples charitie, without hope of gaine, that they ſhould endeuour to helpe the poore, from whom there is no hope to haue ought againe. Now we ſee what it is to beare an open hande for them that aske: namely, to be liberally minded towardes all that neede our helpe, and which cannot recompence the beneſit they receiue.

L V. 35. Lend. This ſentence was corruptly reſtrayned, as if that in this place Chriſte did not onely forbidde his to commit vſury: But this hath hath a further meaning, as it appeareth out of the former sentence. For after that Christ had declared what the wicked are woont to do: that is, that they doe loue their friendes, and helpe them, of whom they hope for some recompence, and they lende to them that are like themselues, that they may receiue the like from them againe. He addeth, what he requireth of his disciples more then this: namely, that they should loue their enemies, that they should freely doe good, and freely lend. Now we see that this clause, looking for nothing, is corruptly vnderstoode of vsury to be so perticularly applyed: when as Christ onely exhorteth his to mutual offices of charitie, and faith, that the hyrelings shall haue no fauour before God: not that he simply condemneth those benefites, which are doone with hope of recompence: but he teacheth that it maketh nothing to testifie their charitie: because that hee onely is accounted liberall towardes his neighbours, which helpeth them without anye respecte of his owne commoditie, but hath only regard of the neede of them that he helpeth. But whether it be lawfull for Christians sometime to take some gayne of that which is lente, I will not dispute here at large, least of a corrupte sense, I should moue a question out of time (which I now confuted:) for I shewed euen now, that Christ meant nothing else, then that the faithfull shoulde exceede the prophane menne in lending: that is, that they should maintaine free liberalitie.

Matth. 5.	Mark.	Luke. 6.
43. Yee haue heard that it hath bene said, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy.		27. But I saye to you which heare, Loue your enemies, do wel to them, which hate you.
44. But I saye vnto you, loue your enemies: blesse them that curse you: doe good to them, that hate you: and pray for them, which hurte you, and persecute you.		28. Blesse them, which curse you, and pray for them, which hurte you.
		And a litle after.
45. That yee may be the children of your father, which is in heauen: for he maketh his sunne to arise on the euill and the good, and sendeth raine on the iust and the vniust.		32. For if yee loue them, which loue you, what thanke shal you haue? for euen the sinners loue those, that loue them.
46. For if yee loue them, which loue you, what rewarde shal ye haue? Doe not the Publycans euen the same?		33. And if yee doe good for them, which doe good for you, what thanke shall yee haue: for euen the sinners doe the same.
		And a litle after.
47. And if yee be friendly to your brethren onelye, what singuler thing doe you? do not euen the Publicans likewise?		35. Wherefore loue yee your enemies, and yee shall be the children of the most high: for he is kind vnto the vnkind, and to the euil.
48. Yee shall therefore be perfect, as your father which is in heauen is perfect.		36. Be yee therefore mercifull, as your father is mercifull.

43. Thou shalt loue thy neighbour. It is wonderfull that the Scribes were falē to that abſurditie, that they reſtrained the name of neighbour to their welwillers, when as nothing is more manifeſt nor more certeine, thē that God meaneth al mankind, when he ſpeaketh of our neighbours. For becauſe that euery man is addicted to himſelfe, ſo oft as ſome priuate commodities doe ſeparate ſome men from others, that mutuall communication is left, which nature it ſelfe doth teach. Therfore God, that he might keepe vs within the band of brotherly loue, he teſtifieth, that al they that are men, are our neighbours, for that common nature dooth tie them to vs. For ſo oft at I looke vpon man, it is neceſſary that I ſhould beholde my ſelf as in a glas: becauſe that he is my bone and my fleſh. And thogh the greater parte moſte commonly doth ſeperate it ſelfe from that holy ſocietie: yet the order of nature is not violated through their wickednes: becauſe that God is to be conſidered the auēthour of the fellowſhippe. VVhereby we gather that the commaundement of the lawe is generall, which commandeth vs to loue our neighbour. But the Scribes eſteeming neighbourhood according to euery mans minde, will haue none to bee accounted neighbours, but they that through their deſertes were worthy to be beloued, or at the leaſt, they that woulde deale friendly with them againe. And this did common ſenſe teach them: and therefore the children of the world were neuer aſhamed to profeſſe their hatredes, wherfore they could yeelde any account. But charitie, which God commendeth in his law, regardeth not what euery man deſerueth, but ſtretcheth out it ſelf to the vnworthy, to the peruerſe & to the vnthākful. But Chriſt reſtoreth this to the natural ſenſe, and deliuereth it from corruptiō: wherby that alſo appeareth that I ſaid before, that Chriſt did not make newe lawes: but only reproue the corrupt comments of the Scribes, wherwith the puritie of the law of God had bene corrupted.

44. Loue your enemies. This one poynt containeth in it all the former doctrine. For whoſo euer can frame his minde to loue his enemies, wyll eaſily temper himſelfe from all reuenge, and wil be patient in affliction: but much more ready to help thoſe that be in miſerie. Further Chriſt in a few wordes ſheweth the way and maner of fulfilling this commandement: Loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. For he ſhall neuer ſatiſfie this cōmaundement, that baniſheth not the loue of himſelfe, or rather deny him ſelfe, and ſo make much of thoſe men, which GOD hath ioyned to him, that he goeth on to loue euen thoſe, of whom he is hated. And by theſe wordes we learne, how farre the faithfull ought to bee from reuenge, wherein they are not onely forbidden to aske of God, but ſo to remitte & wholy to put our of their minds, ſo that they ſhal wiſh wel to their enemies, yet in the meane while they ceaſe not to cōmit their cauſe to God, vntill hee take vengeaunce of the reprobate. For they deſire as muche as lyeth in them, that the wicked ſhould return to a perfect mind, & ſo they ſeeke for their ſalnation, that they ſhuld not periſh. Yet with this comfort they eaſe al their troubles, that they doubt not, but that god wilbe a reuēger of that obſtinate malice, that he might declare þ he had a care of the innocent. This is a very hard thing, & altogether againſt the nature of fleſh, to recompence good for euil: but we muſt not ſeeke any excuſe out of our faultes or infirmities, but we muſt rather ſimplye ſeeke what the law of charitie requireth, that we vſing the power of the heauenly ſpirit, and that by ſtriuing we might ouercome what affections in vs were cõtrary to the ſame. This was the cauſe why the monkes and ſuche like rables imagined that theſe were counſelles and not precepets, becauſe that they meaſured what was due to GOD and to hys lawe, by the balance of mannes ſtrength. And yet the monks were not aſhamed to challenge to themſelues a perfection, becauſe they did voluntarily bind themſelues to obſerue his counſelles, and howe faithfully they performe the ſame which they doe onely vſurpe in woordes, I doe nowe omit to ſaye. And howe prepoſterous and fond a deuiſe it is of counſels, doeth hereof appeare. Firſt, becauſe it cannot be ſayd without iniurie to Chriſt, that he counſelled his diſciples, and did not according to his authority command that whiche was righte. Then it is more then follie to ſette the dueties of charitie at ſuche liberty, whiche depende vppon the lawe. Thirdlye, that woord, I ſay to you, ſignifieth in this place as muche as to denounce or to commaunde, which they haue corruptly expounded to counſell. Laſtly, that he expreſly eſtabliſheth it as a thinge neceſſarilye to be done, is eaſily prooued by Chriſtes woordes, while he preſently addeth,

45. That you may be the children of your father. When he expreſly ſayth that no manne can be otherwiſe the childe of God, except hee loue them that hate him, who nowe dareth ſay that we are not bounde to obſerue thys doctrine? For it is as much as if hee ſhculde haue ſayde: who ſoeuer will be accounted a Chriſtian, let him loue his ennemies: ſurely it is a horrible monſter that the worlde in three or foure ages ſhould be ſo ouerwhelmed with thicke darkeneſſe, that it could not ſee that to be expreſly commanded, which who ſoeuer negleſteth, he is wiped out from amõg the number of the children of God. Further it is to be noted that hee propoſeth not the example of God to be followed, as though that what ſoeuer hee did, became vs. For he puniſheth the vnthankefull, and often driueth the wicked out of the worlde, in which reſpect he propoſeth not himſelfe for vs to followe: for the iudgement of the worlde belongeth not to vs, but is proper to him: but hee woulde that we ſhoulde be followers of hys fatherlye goodneſſe and liberalitye. And not onelye the prephane philoſophers did ſee that, but ſome of the moſte wicked contemners of godlineſſe coulde make this confeſſion, we are in nothing more lyke to God then in being liberall. In ſumme, Chriſte witneſſeth that this is a note of our adoption, if we doe good to the euill and to them that are vnwoorthy. Yet thou muſt not vnderſtande that wee by this liberalitie are made the children of God, but becauſe the ſame ſpirite (whiche is the witneſſe, earneſt, and ſeale of our free adoption) doeth reforme the wicked affections of the fleſh, which ſtriue againſt charitie. Chriſte prooueth of the effecte that none elſe are the children of God, but they which ſtewe it in gentleneſſe and clemencie. And for that phraſe Luke ſayeth, yee ſhall be the children of the moſte high: Not that any man getteth this honour to hymſelfe, or that he then beginneth to be the ſonne of God, when that he loueth his ennemies: but becauſe it is the accuſtomed maner of ſpeaking in the ſcripture, to propoſe the benefites of the free grace of God in ſteade of rewarde, while that he woulde encourage vs to doe well. And this is the reaſon, becauſe he had regarde to what ende we are called: namelye, that the image of God beinge repaired in vs, wee ſhoulde liue holily and godly.

Hee maketh his ſonne to riſe. He rehearſeth two teſtimonies of the goodneſſe of God towardes vs, which are not onely moſt knowen vnto men, but common to all, when that rather ſocietie it ſelfe ſhoulde prouoke vs to performe the ſame one to another, though by the figure Synecdoche it comprehendeth many other like.

46. And doe not the Publicanes? Luke vſeth in the ſame ſenſe thys worde ſinners that is, naughty and wicked men: not that the office of it ſelf was to be condemned: (for the Publicanes were gatherers of tolle, and as it is lawfull for Princes to ſette the taske, ſo is it lawfull to demaunde and gather the ſame:) But becauſe thys maner of menne was wont to be couetous and ſnatching, yea faithleſſe and cruell. then, becauſe they were accounted amongeſt the Iewes as miniſters of vniuſt tyrannie. Therefore if any man ſhall gather out of the woordes of Chriſt, that the Publicanes were the woorſt of all men, he ſhal argue amiſſe; for he ſpeaketh after the common maner of ſpeach: as if he ſhould ſay, they that are almoſt without all humanitie haue yet ſome kinde of mutuall loue, while they ſeeke their owne commoditie.

48. Be yee therefore perfecte. This perfection requireth not an equalitie, but is only referred to a likeneſſe. Therfore though we be far from God, we are accounted to be perfecte as hee is, while we bende to that marke, which he propoſeth to vs in himſelfe. If any interpreat it otherwiſe, lette there be made no compariſon here betweene God and vs, but the perfection of God is called, firſt the free and meere liberaltie, whiche is done without accounte of gaine, then, the ſingular goodneſſe which ſtriueth with the malice and vnthankfulneſſe of menne: The which appeareth by the wordes of Luke. Be you mercifull as your heauenly father. For mercy is oppoſed to bought loue, which is tied to a priuate commoditie.

1. Take heede yee geue not your almes before men, to be ſeene of them, or elſe yee ſhall haue no reward of your father which is in heauen.
2. Therefore when thou geueſt thine almes, thou ſhalt not make a trumpet to be blowne before thee, as the hypocrites doe in the Synagogues and in the ſtreetes, to be praiſed of men. Verely I ſaye vnto you they haue their reward.
3. But when thou doeſt thine almes, lette not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth.
4. That thine almes may be in ſecreate, and thy father that ſeeth in ſecreate, hee will reward thee openlye.

1. Take heede. Chriſt doeth in this place exhort his diſciples to a ſyncere ſtudie of good workes: that is, that they ſhould ſtudie ſimplie to doe wel before God, and that they ſhoulde not boaſt themſelues before men. It is a moſt neceſſary admonition: becauſe that in vertues ambition is alwaies to be feared, and there is no woorke ſo laudable, that is not thereby often corrupted and defiled. But by the figure Synecdoche vnder this one kind is there a generall doctrine deliuered: For hee ſpeaketh of almes no more

then he speaketh a little after of prayers. Yet in many copies the woorde Righteousnesse is vsed for almes, as the olde interpreter also translated it. But that is of no wayght,for both wayes it sufficiently appeareth,that he correcteth this disease of ambition, whileſt that in doing well,it seeketh glory of men.

2. When thou geuest thine almes. Heere hee reproueth by name,the faulte which was commonly vsed and in custome,wherein the desire of vayneglory may not onely be seene,but almoste felt with the handes. For they emptied their baskets amongst the poore in the corners of the streetes,& in publike places where they vsed their publike meetings. In that they sought the publike places that they might haue many witnesses,shewed& appeared manifest,and vainglorious boasting: and not satisfied with that, they also vsed the sound of trumpettes. They fained that they called the poore vnto them (as they neuer want pretences):yet nothing was more euident,then that they sought commendation and praise. Further,when we serue the eyes of men,we then make not God the iudge and examiner of our life. Therfore Christ sayeth not without cause,that they that boast themselues after this sort,haue their reward now already: for they cannot haue regard to God, that haue their eyes possessed with such vanitie. By the same reason all hypocrites are called couetous of vaine glorye. For when hypocrites were called by prophane gesters which played counterfait persons vpon the stage & in playes:the scripture geueth thys name to men of a double and dissembling heart: Althoughe there are diuers kindes of hypocrites. For some though they be most guiltie to themselues,yet most impudently they chalenge to be accounted for good men before the worlde,and they endeuour to couer those faults whereof they are conuict in their owne conscience. Others do so securely nourish vppe themselues,that they dare also chalēge vnto themselues a perfect righteousnes before God. Others do wel,not for a desire of righteousnesse,nor for the glory of God,but onely that they may get themselues a fame and opinion of holinesse. Christ now noteth this later kinde,and rightly calleth them hypocrites, whiche while in their good woorkes they propose themselues no good end,they put the persons of others vppon them,that they might seeme holy and good worshippers of God.

3. Let not thy left hand know. The meaning of this speach is,that we ought to be content that God alone is witnesse of our doings, and so to bende our selues in obedience to him, that we be not caried about with vanitie. For it falleth often out that men doe not sacrifice so muche to God as to themselues. Therefore Christes meaning is that we shoulde not be caried away with contrary thoughts, but wholely bende oure selues to this,that we may worship God with a pure conscience.

4. That thine almes may be in secreate. This sentence seemeth contrary to many places of scripture,where wee are commaunded to edifie oure brethren wyth good examples. But if we consider the purpose of oure sauioure,we may not stretch the woordes any further. He commandeth hys disciples freely, and wythout all ambition to applye themselues to good woorkes. That this may be done,he willeth them not to looke for the beholding of menne,that they maye thinke it sufficient that God alone approoue their deedes. But this simplicitie taketh not away the care and diligence of profiting others by our example.

And

And a little before he doeth not precisely forbid to do good deedes before men, but condemneth the vaine ostentation. Thy father which seeth in secreat. He couertly condemneth the folly which raigneth euery where amongst men, that they thinke their labour to be lost, if they haue not many witnesses of their good deedes. Therefore he sayeth that God needeth not a great light to see and knowe their good deedes by: for he knoweth euen those that seeme to be buried in darkenesse. Therefore there is no cause why we shoulde thinke those things lost which menne see not, nor can beare witnesse of, because that God hathe his seate euen in the darkest dennes. And hee ministreth the aptest remedye for curinge this disease of ambition, while hee calleth vs to the beholding of God, who maketh to vanish, and vtterly blotteth, all vaine glory oute of our mindes. In the seconde clause which foloweth next, Christ warneth vs in seeking for a reward of our good woorkes, patiently to wait to the last day of the resurrection. Thy father, sayeth he, shall rewarde thee openly: VVhen? euen then when the morning of the last day shal arise, those things which are nowe hidden in darkenesse, shall be laid open.

Mathewe 6.	Marke.	Luke.
5. And when thou prayest, be not as the hypocrites: for they loue to stande, and pray in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the streetes, because they woulde be seene of menne: verely I saye vnto you, they haue their rewarde.
6. But when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber: and when thou hast shut thy doore, praye vnto thy father which is in secreate, and thy father which seeth in secreate, shall rewarde thee openly.
7. Also when yee praye, vse no vaine repetitions as the heathen: for they thinke to be hearde for their muche babling.
8. Be yee not like them therefore: for your father knoweth whereof ye haue neede, before ye aske of him.

5. VVhen thou prayest. He teacheth nowe the same of prayers, whych he taught before of almes. And this is too grose and shamefull prophaning of the name of God, that hypocrites praye or rather faine themselues to pray openly, that they may haue glory of menne. But sith that hypocrisie is alwaies ambitious, it is no wonder that it is so blinde: therefore he commaundeth his disciples, if they will praye rightlye, to enter into their chamber. And though some, because it seemeth at the first to be absurde, doe expounde it allegorically of the inwarde parte of the heart, yet there is no neede of this subtletie. VVe are commaunded in very manye places of the scripture, to pray to God or praise him in the publike assembly or company of men, and before al the people, to testifie our faith or thankfulnesse, that also we might stirre others by our example to doe the lyke. And Christ doeth not forbidde vs this, but onely admonisheth vs to haue God before our eyes so oft as we prepare our selues to prayer. Therfore these woordes are not to be vrged, Enter into thy chamber. As thoughe hee commaunded vs to flee from the company of menne, and should affirme that we coulde not pray rightly if any were by. For he speaketh by com-

pariſon, ſignifying that we ſhould rather ſeeke a ſecreate place, then deſire the company of men which ſhoulde ſee vs praying. And it is conuenient for the faithfull, to drawe themſelues from the companye of menne, that they may the more freely powre out their deſires and ſighs before God. A ſecreate place is alſo profitable for an other cauſe, that their mindes may bee the rather ſequeſtred and free from all allurementes: therefore Chriſte himſelfe did very often hide himſelfe in ſome ſecreate place that he might pray: but this is not the matter that is entreated of in this place, for he only reprooueth the deſire of vaine glorye. But this is the ſumme, whether a man pray alone, or whether he pray before others, yet he muſt haue this affection, as if he were ſecreat in his chamber, and had no other witneſſe but onely God. When Chriſt ſayth that we ſhall haue a reward for our praiers, he declareth ſufficiētly that what reward ſoeuer the ſcripture in diuers places doeth promiſſe vs, is not paied as of dette, but is a free gifte.

7. Vſe not muche babling. He reprehendeth an other fault in praier: namely much babling. And he vſeth two wordes, but in the ſame ſenſe. For Battologia ſignifieth a ſuperfluous and vnſauerie repetition: but Polulogia is a vaine babling. Chriſt reprooueth alſo their fooliſhneſſe, which, that they might perſwade and entreate God, do powre oute many woordes. And that diligence in praying which is ſo often commended in the ſcripture, is not contrary to this doctrine. For where the prayer is conceiued with earneſt affection, the tounge doeth not runne before the minde. Alſo the fauour of God is not obtained with a vaine heape of woordes: but the godly heart doeth rather ſende oute his affections, which as arrowes ſhall pearce the heauens: yet their ſuperſtition is heere condēned, which thinke they pleaſure God and doe him ſeruice with their longe murmured praiers, with which errour wee ſee Poperie ſo infected, that the greateſt force of their prayer is ſuppoſed to conſiſt in many wordes. For the mo wordes any manne hathe muttered, the more effectually he is accounted to haue prayed. Alſo they doe daily reſounde out in their churches long and tedious ſongs, as though they would allure Gods eares.

8. For your father knoweth. This one remedye is ſufficient to purge and take away this ſuperſtition which is heere condemned. For from whence commeth this fooliſhneſſe, that men ſhould thinke that they haue profited muche, where as they weary God with their muche babling, but becauſe they imagine him to be like a mortal man, which hath nede to be taught and admoniſhed. But who ſoeuer is perſwaded that God hath not only a care of vs, but knoweth alſo oure neceſsities, and noteth oure deſires and cares before he is admoniſhed, he vſeth not many woordes, but thinketh it ſufficient to make his prayers, as is expedient for the exercite of his faith. And he acknowledgeth it to be a thinge abſurde and to be laughed at, to deale with God rethorically, as if that hee were bowed with copye of woordes. But if God, before we aske doth know what we haue neede of, it ſeemeth to be in vaine to pray. For if of his owne accorde he be ready to helpe vs, to what purpoſe is it for vs to adde oure prayers, whiche breake as it were the willing courſe of his prouidence? The anſweare is eaſie by conſidering the ende of prayer: for the faithfull doe not praye as if they admoniſhed God of things that he knew not, or exhorted hym to doe his duetie, or ſtirred him vppe as one negligent or ſlowe: but rather that they might ſtirre vp themſelues to ſeeke him and exerciſe their faith in meditating of his promiſſes, and that they might eaſe themſelues by diſcharging their cares into his boſome, and laſtly, that they might teſtifie as well to themſelues as to others, that of him alone they hope & aske what ſoeuer is good. And that which he frely and vnasked determined to geue vs, he yet doeth promiſſe to geue at our requeſts. Wherefore both is to be holden, he of his owne wil preuenteth our prayers, and yet by prayers we obtaine that which we aske. But why he ſometime delayeth vs to a longer time, and alſo ſometime graunteth not our requeſtes, ſhall be ſhewed in another place.

Mathewe 6.	Marke.	Luke 11.
9. After this maner therfore pray ye: Our father which art in heauen, halowed be thy name.		1. And ſo it was, that as he was praying in a certain place, whē he praied, one of his diſciples ſaide vnto hym: maiſter teache vs to pray, as Iohn alſo taught his diſciples.
10. Thy kingdome come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heauen.		2. And he ſaid vnto them, when yee pray, ſay: our father, which art in heauē, halowed be thy name, thy kingdom come. Lette thy will be done euen in earth, as it is in heauen:
11. Geue vs this daye oure dailye breade.		3. Our daily breadgeue vs for the daye
12. And forgeue vs oure dettes, as we alſo forgeue our detters.		4. And forgeue vs our ſinnes: for euen we forgeue euerye man that is indetted to vs: and leade vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from euill.
13. And lead vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from euill: for thine is the kingdom, & the power, and the glory for euer. Amen.

It is vncertaine whether Chriſt deliuered this forme of praier to hys diſciples once or twiſe. This latter ſemeth more probable to ſome: becauſe Luke ſayeth that he was asked. But Mathewe bringeth him in teachinge of his owne accorde. Yet becauſe that Mathew, as we ſayd, gathereth together all the chiefe poyntes of doctrine, that by the continued courſe the readers may the better perceiue the ſumme and meaning: And ſo it maye be that Mathew omitteth the occaſion which Luke reporteth. yet I will not contend with any man about this matter.

LVKE. 1. As Iohn alſo taught. That Iohn taught his diſciples a priuate maner or forme of prayer, which I iudge he did as the time required. It is certaine that all things amongſt the Iewes were then very corrupt, & the whole religion was then ſo decayed, that it is no marual that there were but fewe which held the right order of prayer. Againe, when as the promiſed redemption was at hand, it was neceſſary that the myndes of the faithful ſhuld by prayer be ſtirred vp to the hope and deſire of the ſame. Iohn therefore might oute of diuers places of the ſcripture gather ſome praier which might be agreeable to the time, and moſte according to the ſpiritnall kingdom of Chriſt which he began now to reueale.

MATH. 9. After this maner therefore pray yee. For the whyche Luke ſayeth, When yee pray, ſay yee. Yet Chriſte commaundeth not his diſciples to pray in theſe conceiued wordes, but onely ſheweth to what purpoſe they ſhould referre all their requeſts and prayers. Therefore in theſe 6. petitions ons is comprehended whatſoeuer is lawfull for vs to aske of God. And there is nothing more profitable for vs then this doctrine: for when as this is a principall exerciſe of godlineſſe, yet in making prayers and conceiuing our requeſts all our ſenſes doe faile. So no man ſhall praye rightly, but he whoſe mouth and heart the heauenly maſter guideth. For thys cauſe was thys rule geuen, according to the which it is neceſſary to frame all our prayers, if we couette to haue them accounted lawful and approued of God.

It was not the will of the ſonne of God (as was ſayde euen nowe) to preſcribe vnto vs what woordes we ſhoulde vſe, as if it were not lawfull to decline from that fourme which he ſet downe: but yet he woulde that our praiers ſhoulde bee ſo directed and ordered, leaſte they ſhoulde wander beyonde theſe boundes. VVhereby we gather that the lawe of prayer which hee ſette downe, conſiſteth not in woordes, but in the matters and thinges themſelues. Further, in that I ſayde that this prayer conſiſteth of ſixe petitions, it is to be knowen that the firſt three, not hauinge regarde of vs, haue onely reſpecte to the glorye of God: And the laſt three are framed for thoſe thinges whiche are profitable for our ſaluation. For as the lawe is deuided into two tables, whereof the firſt containeth the dueties of godlineſſe, and the other of charitie: ſo in prayer Chriſt commandeth vs partly to looke and ſeeke for the glorye of God, and partlye hee permitteth vs to prouide for our ſelues. Therefore lette vs know that we are then well prepared to prayer, if we be not onely carefull of our ſelues and our owne commoditie, but doe firſt ſeeke the glorye of God: for it were too prepoſterous, onely to haue care of our owne matters, and to neglecte the kingdome of God, which is to be preferred farre before all thinges.

Our father which art in heauen. So ofte as we prepare our ſelues to prayer, we muſt eſpecially conſider two things, partly that we may haue entraunce to God, partly that wyth full and perfecte truſt we maye repoſe our ſelues vppon hym, that is, his fatherly loue towardes vs, and his great power. VVherefore lette vs not doubte but that God will willingly embrace vs, but that he is ready to heare our prayers, and alſo that he is willing of hys owne accorde to helpe vs. He is called by the name of father. Therefore Chriſte in this epythite doeth miniſter vnto vs muche matter for the ſtaie of our faith: but becauſe that wee reſt on the goodneſſe of God onely in parte, in the next clauſe hee commendeth to vs his power. For when the ſcripture ſayeth that God is in heauen, it declareth that all things are vnder his power, and that the world and what ſoeuer is in it, is contained in hys hand, that his power is ſpredde in euery place, and all things are ordained by his prouidence. Dauid ſayeth in the Pſalme 2.4. The dweller in the heauens ſhall laugh them to ſcorne. Alſo in the Pſal. 115.3. Our God in heauen hath done what ſoeuer he woulde But God is not ſo placed in heauen, as if he were ſhutte vppe therein: for that rather is to be conſidered which is ſayde in the ſeconde booke of the Chronicles, ſeconde chapter, and ſixte verſe. The heauen of heauens cannot containe hym. But this maner of ſpeache exempting him out of the order of his creatures, warneth vs that there ought no baſe or earthly thing enter into our mindes, when as he is conſidered of, becauſe that he is greater then all the worlde.

Nowe

Nowe we conceiue the purpoſe of Chriſte: namely, that in the beginning of prayer he woulde eſtabliſh the faith of his diſciples in the goodneſſe and power of God, for prayers ſhall want their fruite, excepte they be grounded vppon faith. Nowe ſith it is fonde, yea madde arrogancie, to cal God father, but as grafted into the body of Chriſt, we are acknowledged for ſonnes: Heereby we gather that there is no other maner of prayer to come to God with, but in the perſon of the mediatour.

Halowed be thy name. Heere doeth more euidently appeare that I ſaid, that in the firſt three petitions, the care of our ſelues beinge not regarded, the glory of God is ſought, not that it is ſeparate from our ſaluation, but that the maieſtie of God deſerueth to be preferred farre aboue al other cares. It is for our good that God doeth raigne, and that his glory be geuen vnto him: but no man is zealous enough for Gods glory, but he that after a ſorte forgetteth himſelfe, and aduaunceth foorth himſelfe to ſeeke the height of the ſame. Alſo there is greate ſimilitude and likeneſſe betweene theſe three petitions. For the halowing of the name of God is alwayes ioyned with his kingdome, and the principall parte of his kingdome is eſtabliſhed in this, that his will may be done. But who ſoeuer doeth conſider howe great our coldneſſe is, and howe ſluggiſh we are in ſeeking the chiefeſt things of all, whereof wee are heere in theſe petitions admoniſhed, he will graunte that there is in this nothing ſuperfluous or in vaine: but it is that theſe three things heere required, ſhoulde be thus diſtinguiſhed. To ſanctifie the name of God is nothinge elſe then to geue to God his honour, whereof he is woorthy, that menne ſhould neuer ſpeake nor thinke of him without great reuerence. This is hindered by prophaninge of his name: that is, when either his maieſtie is deminiſhed or that menne doe with leſſe reuerence and honour vſe it, then hee doeth deſerue. Alſo the glory whereby hee is ſanctified, riſeth and dependeth of this, when as men doe acknowledge his wiſedome, mercy, iuſtice, power, and all goodneſſe that is in him. For God hath his holineſſe alwaies remaininge perfecte to himſelfe: but men do partly obſcure the ſame through their own malice and wickedneſſe, and partly defile and pollute it throughe theyr ſacrilegious contempte. Therefore the ſumme of this petition is that the glory of God maye ſhine in the worlde, and be celebrated amongeſt men as it ought. And then doth religion flouriſh beſt, when men account that which proceedeth from God, to be right laudable, and ful of righteouſneſſe and wiſedome. For heereof it commeth to paſſe that they embrace his woorde in obedience of faith, and are ſatisfied and reſt in all hys deſires and woorkes. For that faith which we yeelde to the woorde of God (as Iohn ſayeth 3.33.) is as a ſubſcription, wherewith we teſtifie that God is true: euen ſo incredulitie, and contempt of his word ſtriketh him with moſte grieuous contumely. Nowe we ſee for the moſte parte howe malicioufly we account of Gods woorkes, and how great a libertie of reproouing, euery man taketh to himſelfe. If he chaſtice anye of vs, they keepe a ſturre, complaine and murmure, and ſome alſo doe breake oute into open blaſphemies, and except he ſatisfie our affections, we doe not thinke hym liberall enoughe towardes vs. Many doe ouerthwartly or ſcornefully bable of his vnſpeakeable prouidence and ſecreate iudgements. Alſo his holy name is ofte taken to groſe ieſtinges: to be ſhort, the greateſt parte of the worlde doeth prophane his holineſſe as much as in them lieth. Therfore it it is no maruaile if we require firſt that he may haue in the worlde that reuerence that he deſerueth. But thys is no ſmall accounte that GOD doeth make of vs, when hee commendeth to vs the care to ſeeke hys glorie.

10. Thy kingdome come. Thoughe the Grecke verbe bee a ſimple, yet the ſence ſhall remayne perfecte if we reade it as a compounde, as the olde interpreter doeth tranſlate it. But firſt the definition of the kingdome of God is to be conſidered: for he is ſayde to raigne amongeſt menne when as their fleſh is brought vnder the yoake, and that they haue bidden their affections farewell, and doe willingly and freely geue themſelues to bee ruled by him. For in thys corruption of nature all our affections are ſo many ſouldiours of Sathan, whyche ſtriue againſte the righteouſneſſe of God, and ſo do hinder or diſturbe his kingdom. VVherefore in thys petition we deſire that all lettes being taken away, he wold bring al mortal menne vnder his gouernment, and leade them to the meditation of the heauenly life, and this is brought to paſſe partly by the preaching of the woorde, and partly by the ſecreat power of his ſpirite. His will is to gouerne men with his woorde: but becauſe his naked voyce, without the inwarde woorking of his ſpirite be added, cannot pearce into the heartes, it is neceſſary that they bothe bee ioyned together to the eſtabliſhing of the kingdome of God. Therefore we pray that God woulde exerciſe his power as well in woorde as in ſpirite, that the whole world may willingly ſubmitte it ſelfe vnto him. All diſorder and confuſion hindereth the kingdome of God: neither is there any thing ordained in the world, but when he with his hande gouerneth their councelles and affections. Hereby we gather that the beginning of the kingdome of God in vs, is the deſtruction of the olde man, and the denial of our ſelues, that we might be renewed into an other life. But God alſo raigneth after an other ſort, while that he ouerthroweth his enemies, and bringeth them with Sathan their head perforce vnder his power, vntill they all are made his footeſtole. VVherefore the ſumme of this petition that God ſhoulde lighten the world with the light of his worde, and with the breath of his ſpirit frame the hearts in obedience to his righteouſneſſe, and that he would through his forces bring into order what ſoeuer is diſordered vppon earth: and that hee will beginne his kingdome at pulling vnder the luſtes of our fleſh. But nowe becauſe the kingdom of God encreaſeth continually vnto the ende of the world, it is neceſſarie daily to pray for his comming. For aſmuch iniquitie as remaineth in the world, ſo farre is the kingdome of God from that full perfection it requireth.

Thy will be done. Althoughe the will of God be one and ſimple, in reſpecte of it ſelf: yet it is propoſed vnto vs in the ſcriptures after two ſortes. For it is ſayde to be done that pleaſed God, when hee perfourmeth the ſecreate decrees of hys prouidence, thoughe menne doe obſtinately bend themſelues againſt it. But wee are commaunded to praye heere that hys will may bee done after an other maner: that is, that all creatures may quietly and wythout reſiſtaunce obey hym. The which doeth the better appeare by compariſon: for as hee hath the Aungelles ready at all commaundementes (whereof they are called his miniſters alwaies ready to obey him) ſo we deſire to haue all mennes mindes framed to that conſent to the righteouſneſſe of God, that they may willingly bende, whiche way ſoeuer hee becke. And this is a godly will wherein we ſubmitte our ſelues to the will of God, and ſubſcribe to all his decrees: but this petition comprehendeth ſomewhat more: that is, that God aboliſhing all reſiſtance of menne which ceaſeth not to ſtirre againſt him, woulde make them apt to be taught and humble to him, that they will not, nor deſire any thing except it pleaſe him and bee approoued by him. Yet a queſtion may be mooued, whether we ought to pray to God, for that whyche he fayeth ſhall neuer be to the ende of the worlde: I aunſweare it is no nede to ſifte euery manne while we pray that the earth may bee framed to obedience. For it ſufficeth vs to teſtifie in this petition, that what ſoeuer we ſee againſt the will of God, we hate and ſorowe and wiſhe the ſame extinguiſhed: that he ſhoulde be not onely a gouernour of all our affections, but that we might offer our ſelues wholely to fulfill that will, with that readineſſe that becommeth vs.

11. Geue vs this day our daily bread. This is, as I ſayd, the ſeconde table or part, of the order of prayer which Chriſt taught vs: for that I mighte the more aptly teache, I did ſo at the firſt diſtinguiſh them. As of the 2. tables of the lawe the firſt giueth in charge for the righte worſhip of God, and the other of the dueties of charitie. So in this prayer the firſt parte inſtructeth vs to ſeeke the glory of God, then in the other part he ſheweth what is conuenient for vs to aske for our ſelues. Yet it is alſo to be noted that thoſe prayers which we conceiue for our owne ſaluation or profit, ought ſo to be referred to the laſt ende: for it is not lawfull for vs ſo to be occupied with the care of our owne profite, but that the glory of God ſhould alwayes haue the firſt place. Therfore as oft as we pray, we muſt neuer tourne our eyes from this marke or line. There is yet this difference betwene the two ſortes or partes of prayer which I ſette downe: that while we ſpeake of the kingdome of God, and of the halowing of his name, it behooueth vs to lift vp our ſenſes on high, that hauing no regarde of our ſelues, they ſhould attend vpon God alone. And then, that we ſhould deſcend to our ſelues, and ioyne the care of our ſaluation with thoſe former petitions, whiche belong to God alone. And althoughe forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is to bee preferred before foode, euen as muche as the ſoule excelleth the body, yet Chriſt beginneth at breade, and the ſuſtentation of thys earthly life, that from ſuch a beginning he might lead them higher. Therfore we doe not deſire to haue our daily breade before reconciliation to God, as though that we ſhould eſteeme more of the corrupt foode of the belly, then of the eternall ſaluation of the ſoule: but our mindes doe aſcend from the earth into heauen, as it were by ſteppes. For when as God vouchſaueth to imploie himſelfe to nouriſhe the bodies, it is not to bee doubted but that he is muche more carefull of the ſpirituall foode. Therfore his ſo louing kindeneſſe doeth raiſe vppe our faith higher. That many doe take the Greeke worde ſignifying bread, for more then ſubſtantiall or ſupernaturall, is altogether abſurde. And the reaſon which Eraſmus bringeth is not onely friuolous, but alſo contrary to godlineſſe, it ſemeth not probable to him, that while we appeare in the ſight of GOD, Chriſte ſhould commaund vs to ſpeake of nouriſhments. As thoughe the like is not to bee founde oute of diuers places of the ſcripture, that by the taſte of theſe preſent goodes, we may be ledde into the hope of heauenly things: nay, but this is a iuſt triall of our faith, when as we aske nothing from any other then from God, and we do not onely acknowledge him to be the onely fountaine of al good things, but we alſo feele his fatherly goodneſſe ſtretched out euen to the leaſt thinges, ſo that hee refuſeth not to take care euen of our fleſh.

And that Chriſte ſpeaketh heere of the corporall foode, may firſte bee gathered heereof, that otherwiſe it ſhoulde bee maimed, and no full or perfecte prayer. For we are commaunded in many places to caſt all our cares into the boſome of God, and hee promiſeth liberally, that hee wyll faile vs in nothyng. Therefore in an exacte rule of right prayer, it is neceſſary that ſomewhat ſhould be commaunded for the innumerable neceſsities of this preſent life. Alſo thys woorde This day, ſignifieth that we aske heere of God, that we neede not care but for a day. For it is not to bee douted, but that his meaning was to reſtraine and moderate the couetouſneſſe of earthly foode whereunto we all are immoderately caried. Alſo it is ſufficiently knowen that the figure Synecdoche is vſed in thys woorde breade, for vnder it the Hebrewes doe comprehend all kinde of nouriſhment. But it is vſed heere more largely: for we doe not onely deſire to haue foode geuen vs by the hande of God, but alſo that he would geue vs what ſoeuer is neceſſary for to paſſe this life through with. Now the ſence is cleare: we are firſt commaunded to pray, that God would defende and nouriſh in this world the life which he hath geuen vs: and becauſe it needeth many helpes, that hee woulde geue vs what ſoeuer hee knoweth neceſſary. Nowe becauſe that the loue of God floweth continually to feede vs, the breade which he giueth, is called daily or continually comming, for ſo it may be interpreated.

Therefore this woorde ſignifieth as muche as if hee hadde ſayd. Lord ſith our life hathe daily neede of newe nouriſhment, be thou neuer wearie in beſtowing the ſame daily vppon vs. That Aduerbe This day, is vſed as I ſayde before, to brydle our greedie couetouſneſſe, that we myght learne continually to depende vppon the goodneſſe of GOD, and to be content wyth that meaſure whiche hee beſtoweth vppon vs day by day (as they ſay). But a queſtion is mooued: Sith it is certayne that Chriſte gaue thys as a generall rule of prayer to all the godly: and of that number there are ſome riche menne whych haue muche layed vppe in ſtore, howe hee commaundeth them to aske that which they haue at home, and to aske for a day whyche haue aboundaunce to ſerue them a yeare. The aunſweare is eaſie: for we are warned by theſe wordes, that there is not any heape of ſtore and prouiſion ought worth, excepte that God doe daily feede vs: thoughe wheate, wine, and all other thynges doe abounde, excepte they bee watered wyth the ſecreate bleſsinge of God, they ſhall preſently vaniſhe away, or the vſe of them ſhall be taken away, or that power whych is ingrafted in them to feede vs, ſhall fall away, that in our aboundaunce wee ſhall bee hunger ſtarued.

VVherefore it is no meruaile if Chriſte doeth generally call riche and poore to thys heauenly nouriſhment: but no manne ſhall pray ſo heartely, as hee that hathe learned by the example to hunger, and to abound, ſo that hee canne beare hys neede and wante patiently, and not become drunke with the deceitfull hope of his aboundaunce.

If any manne demaunde, why we aske to haue this breade geuen vs which nowe we doe call and accounte our owne: I aunſweare, it is called ours, not becauſe that it is due to vs by righte, but becauſe that it is appoynted for our vſe by the fatherly goodneſſe of God. And ſo after that ſorte it is made ours, for that the heauenly father doeth geue it vs freely, leaſt our wante be not ſupplied. VVee muſt till the fieldes, endeuoure to gather in the fruites of the earth, euery manne muſt applie himſelfe and beare the laboure of his calling, that hee may gette his liuing, yet this letteth not, but that wee are fedde by the free goodneſſe of God, without the whiche menne ſhoulde waſte away themſelues in laboure in vayne. Therfore we are taught to acknowledge as receiued from thence, whatſoeuer ſeemeth to be gotte by our induſtrie. Yet by this woorde it is alſo to be gathered, if we deſire to be fedde of God, we muſt abſtaine from that which is none of ours. For all the children of God, ſo ofte as they vſe this maner of prayer, do teſtifie that they deſire nothing but that which they may rightly call their owne.

11. Forgeue vs our debtes. Here it behoueth vs to remember that which I ſayde euen nowe, that Chriſte in placing the requeſtes of his, regarded not what was firſte or laſt in order. For ſith it is wrytten in the foure & fourtie chapiter of Iſai, and the two and twentie verſe, and the fiftie, and nine, the ſecond verſe, and Lam. 3. 44. that our ſinnes are as a wal which hinder vs from comming to God, and as a cloude whereby his eyes are hindered from beholding vs, it is neceſſary that our praiers ſhould alwaies beginne at the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, becauſe that wee are heereby firſte emboldened to pray to God while that hee is mercifull vnto vs, becauſe that hee cannot bee otherwiſe appeaſed towardes vs, then by forgeuinge ſinnes freely. But Chriſt comprehendeth in two petitions thoſe thinges which appertaine to the eternall ſaluation and ſpiritual life of the ſoule: as theſe two are the principall partes of the couenaunt of God, in which our whole ſaluation conſiſteth: that hee offereth free reconciliation, not imputing ſinnes vnto vs, and promiſeth the ſpirite whiche engraueth the righteouſneſſe of the lawe in our heartes. Therefore we are commaunded to aske both, and firſt we make requeſt for the obtaining of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes.

Mathewe calleth ſinnes debtes, becauſe that in guiltineſſe they binde vs to the iudgement ſeate of God, and make vs debters: Nay, they do wholly eſtraunge vs from God, ſo that there is no hope of obtaining peace & fauour, but by forgeueneſſe. So is that fulfilled which Paule teacheth, Romanes 3. 23. All are guiltie and are depriued of the glory of God: for though the righteouſneſſe of God doeth partly ſhine in his Sainctes, yet ſo long as they are cloathed with fleſh, they remaine laden with ſinnes. So there can none be founde ſo pure, whiche needeth not the mercy of God, whereof if we deſire to be partakers, it is neceſſary that we ſhould feele our owne miſerie. And they that imagine that they haue ſuche a perfection in thys worlde, that they are free from all ſinne and faulte, they doe not ſo muche forſake ſinne, as they doe Chriſte himſelfe, from whoſe Churche they exclude themſelues. For whereas hee commaundeth all his diſciples to flee daily to forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, hee wipeth himſelfe out of the number of hys diſciples, that thinketh this remeady to be ſuperfluous.

Nowe

Nowe this remiſsion which we deſire to haue beſtowed vppon vs, ouerthroweth thoſe ſatisfactions which the world endeuoureth to redeme it ſelfe withall. For that creditour is not ſayde to forgeue, whiche hauing receiued his paiment doeth require no more: but hee that willingly and freely leauing his owne right acquitteth his debtour. Neither hathe that common diſtinction of the faulte and of the puniſhment, any place heere. For it is not to be douted but that dettes doe ſignifie the deſeruing of the puniſhment.

If it be forgeuen vs freely, all recompences muſt needes vaniſh away. Neither is Luke his meaning anye other, thoughe hee nameth ſinnes, becauſe that God doeth not otherwiſe pardon, then by takinge awaye the guiltineſſe. As wee forgiue. This clauſe is therefore added, leaſt any man ſhoulde preſume to come to God to aske forgeueneſſe, except he be free and voide from all hatred, yet this pardonne which we deſire to be geuen vs, doeth not depende of that which we perfourme to others: but it was the will of Chriſte after this maner to forgeue all offences, and alſo the better to confirme the hope of oure forgeueneſſe as wyth a ſeale. Neyther is that clauſe which Luke hath, which ſignifieth As or For, anye thyng contrary: becauſe that it was not the purpoſe of Chriſte to note the cauſe, but onely to admoniſh vs what minde we oughte to beare towardes the brethren, while we deſire to be reconciled to God. And certainly if the ſpirite of God doeth raigne in our heartes, all euill will and deſire of reuenge muſt ceaſe. And ſith the ſpirite is a witneſſe of oure adoption, we ſee that heere is ſimplie ſet downe a note whereby the children of God maye be diſcerned from ſtraungers. They are heere called detters, not of money, or of ſome duetie, but they that are endaungered to vs through iniuries offered vs.

13. And leade vs not into temptation. This petition hathe bene corruptly deuided by ſome into two, when as by the matter it ſelfe it appeareth to be one and the ſame, and the conioyning of the woordes doeth ſhew the ſame. For that coniunction aduerſatiue, which is placed in the middeſt, ioyneth two clauſes together, whiche Auguſtine doeth alſo wiſely conſider. Therefore the ſentence ought thus to be taken, leaſt we be caried into temptation, deliuer vs from euill. And the ſumme is, that we acknowledging our owne weakeneſſe, doe deſire to be defended by the power of God, that we may ſtande ſtrongly againſte all the attempts of Sathan. As out of the former petition we haue ſhewed that no manne can be accounted a Chriſtian, except hee acknowledge himſelfe to be a ſinner, ſo by thys wee gather, that wee haue no powers of our ſelues to liue well, but as God doeth geue the ſame vnto vs. For who ſoeuer for the vanquiſhing of temptations doeth require the healpe of God, he graunteth hymſelfe to haue ſuche neede of him to be his deliuerer, that he ſhould otherwiſe be ouerthrowen. But this woorde Temptation is often taken generally for euery triall: in whiche ſence it is ſayde that Abraham was tempted of God whē his faith was tried. So we are tried as with aduerſities, ſo alſo wyth proſperities; becauſe that by this occaſion the affections whiche before lay hidde doe come to lighte. But heere is noted the inward temptation whiche may bee aptly called the ſcourge of the deuill to ſtirre vp our concupiſcence. For it were abſurde to aske of God, that hee ſhoulde deliuer vs from all inſtructions of our faith. Therefore all wicked motions which ſtirre vs vppe to ſinne, are comprehended vnder thys woorde temptation. And though it cannot be, but that we ſhall feele ſuch prickes in our mindes, becauſe that throughe the whole courſe of life wee haue continuall warre wyth the fleſh: yet we aske of the Lorde that he make vs not ſubiecte to temptations, or ſuffer vs to be ouerwhelmed. And that Chriſte mighte the better declare howe apte wee are to ſlide into theſe daily falles and ruines, excepte God ſuſtaine vs wyth his hande, hee vſed this maner of ſpeache, leade vs not into temptation: or as others tranſlate it, Carie vs not. It is certaine that euery manne is tempted of hys owne concupiſcence, as Iames teacheth in the firſt chapiter, and fourteene verſe. But becauſe God doeth not onely deliuer vs to the pleaſure of Sathan, that hee mighte kindle the fire of concupiſcence, but vſeth hym as the miniſter of his wrathe, ſo ofte as hee will driue menne headlonge to deſtruction, hee alſo after his maner leadeth menne to deſtruction. In the which ſence it is ſayde that the euill ſpirite of God came vpon Saule: and diuers places of the ſcripture rende to the ſame purpoſe, yet we may not call God the authoure of euill: becauſe that in deliuering menne into a reprobate ſence, hee doeth not exerciſe an vniuſt tyrannie, but executeth his iuſt iudgementes though they be ſecreate. Deliuer vs from euill. Euill in thys place may as well bee taken in the neuter gender as in the maſculine.

Chryſoſtome referreth it to the deuill, who is the framer of all euilles. and as a deadly ennemie of our ſaluation, doeth daily aſſaulte vs, yet it may as conueniently be taken for ſinne, but there neede no ſtriſe aboute that matter: Becauſe the ſenſe remaineth almoſte all one: that is, that we are caſt foorth to the deuill and ſinne, excepte the Lorde doeth defende and deliuer vs.

For thine is the kingdome. It is maruaile that the Latines did omitte thys concluſion of prayer. For it is not onely added to ſtirre vppe our heartes to require the glorie of God, and to admoniſh vs what oughte to bee the ende of our prayers: but alſo that it may teache vs, that our praiers which are heere taught vs, oughte to bee grounded no other where then vppon God alone, leaſt we ſhoulde ſtay vppon our owne merites.

Mathewe 6.	Marke 11.	Luke.
14. For if you do forgeue men their treſpaſſes, your heauenly father will alſo forgiue you. 15. But if yee dee not forgiue menne their treſpaſſes, no more will your father forgeue you your treſpaſſes.	25. But when yee ſhall ſtande, and pray, forgiue if yee haue any thing againſte any manne, that your father alſo which is in heauē, may forgiue you your treſpaſſes. 26. For if you wil not forgiue, your father which is in heauen, will not pardon you your treſpaſſes.

Chriſt doeth heere onely ſette downe, for what purpoſe that clauſe was was added, forgiue vs, as we forgiue: that is to ſay, that God will not bee otherwiſe entreated of vs, then we do ſhewe our ſelues ready to forgiue, if any ſhall hurt vs. And certainly, except we were harder then yron, this exhortation ſhuld mollify vs, that we might be ready to forgeue offences. Except God doe daily forgiue vs diuers offences, we know that we ſhall periſh many wayes. But he promiſeth vs forgiueneſſe of no other condition, except we pardonne our brethren what ſoeuer they haue faulted againſt vs. Therefore they doe willingly and with ſet purpoſe & mindes addicte themſelues to deſtruction, & they doe their diligence to prouoke Gods anger, whiche will not forgette the iniuries offered and done vnto them.

Mathewe 6.	Marke.	Luke.
16. Moreouer, when yee faſt, looke not ſowre as the hypocrites: for they diſfigure their faces, that they might ſeeme vnto men to faſt. Verely I ſay vnto you, that they haue their reward.
17. But when thou faſteſt, anoynte thine heade and waſh thy face.
18. That thou ſeeme not vnto men to faſt, but vnto thy father which is in ſecreate: and thy father which ſeeth in ſecreat, will reward thee openly.

Hee retourneth againe to the former doctrine. For when hee hadde begonne to reprehende the vaine oſtentation in almes and prayers, hee ſette downe a lawfull rule of praying. Nowe as concerning faſting, hee giueth the ſame commaundement to his diſciples, that he gaue before of prayers and almes, leaſt they wyth greater diligence ſeeke to pleaſe the worlde, then to haue G O D a witneſſe of their woorkes. Alſo, that hee commaundeth to annoynt the heade and waſhe the face, is hyperbolically ſpoken: for Chriſte doeth not ſo drawe vs from one kinde of hypocriſie, that he might lead vs into an other.

Therefore hee doeth not commaunde vs to faine daintineſſe, neither doeth he ſo exhorte vs to temperate diet, that hee might nouriſh a delicacie in oyntments and apparelling: but he doeth ſimplie exhort vs to keepe a moderation, wherein there ſhoulde bee nothing either ſtraunge or affectate: as if he ſhoulde haue ſayde, we muſt ſo apply our ſelues to faſtings, that we chaunge nothing in the accuſtomed maner of our life. That hee promiſeth frō God a reward to faſtings, is an improper maner of ſpeach, as is ſayde a little before of prayers, thoughe there is a greate difference betweene prayers and faſtings. For prayers and almes are chief amongſt the dueties of charitie: but faſting is of it ſelfe a woorke indifferente, and not of that ſorte whych God requireth and approoueth, as almes are. But it pleaſeth him onely as it is referred to an other ende: that is, that it may exerciſe vs to abſtinencie, that it may tame the wantonneſſe of the fleſh, that it may ſtirre vs vp & inflame vs to prayer, that it may be a teſtimony of our repentāce, ſo oft as we are vrged with the iudgemēt of God. Therfore the meaning of Chriſtes words is, that God wil ſōtime declare opēly that thoſe good woorkes doe pleaſe him, which ſeemed to be loſt, becauſe that men ſawe them not.

Mathewe 6.	Marke.	Luke 12.
19. Laye not vppe treaſures for your ſelues vppon the earth, where the moth and canker corrupte, and where theeues digge through and ſteale.		33. Sell that you haue, and giue almes: make you bagges which waxe not olde, a treaſure that can neuer faile in heauen, where no theefe cõmeth, neyther moth corrupteth.
20. But lay vppe treaſures for your ſelues in heauen, where neither the moth nor canker corrupteth, and where theeues neither digge through nor ſteale.		34. For where your treaſure is, there will your hearts be alſo.
21. For where your treaſure is, there wil your hearts be alſo.

19. Lay not vppe. This deadly plague raigneth euery where in the world, ſo that menne become madde through an inſatiable deſire of hauing. But Chriſte reproueth them of fooliſhneſſe, that their felicitie being ſette in richeſſe, gathered with greate care, is made ſubiecte to woormes and the canker, and is layed foorth to the ſpoyle of theeues. And what is more contrary to reaſon, then to lay vppe their goodes there, whereas eyther they may periſh of themſelues, or be ſtolen away by menne. But the couetous menne thinke not thus, for they ſhutte vppe their richeſſe into cheſtes well locked: yet they cannot auoide, but that their richeſſe ſhalbe ſubiecte to theeues or to the mothes. Therefore they are blinde, and lacke their right ſence, which beſtowe ſo muche labour and paine in gathering richeſſe, whiche are ſubiecte eyther to rottenneſſe, or to ſtealthes, or to a thouſande other ſuche caſualties: eſpecially ſith God doeth allowe vs a place in heauen to lay vp treaſure in, and doeth louingly call vs to poſſeſſe thoſe richeſſe which doe neuer periſh. And they are ſayde to lay vp their treaſure in heauen, whiche beinge looſed oute of the ſnares of this worlde, doe employ their cares and ſtudies in meditation of the heauenly life.

Luke ſetteth not downe the Antitheſis, but noteth the other occaſion why Chriſte commaunded them to prepare ſackes that doe not waxe olde. For hee hadde ſayde: ſell thoſe things which you poſſeſſe, that you may geue almes. Nowe becauſe it is harde and ſharpe to menne to ſpoyle themſelues of their owne goodes, to eaſe them of this trouble he propoſeth a large and a liberall hope of recompence: that is, that they whiche healpe the neede of their brethren vppon earth, doe lay vppe treaſure for themſelues in heauen, according to that ſaying of Salomon: Hee that geueth to the poore, lendeth to the Lord. But that commaundement which hee geueth of ſelling the poſſeſsions, is not ſo preciſely to bee vrged, as though it were not lawfull for a Chriſtian to keepe any thing for himſelfe. His will was onely to teache, that we muſt not geue to the poore after that ſorte, as that if any thing be ſuperfluous, that ſhould be beſtowed of them. But our landes may not be ſpared if the reuenewes whyche we haue at hande ſuffice not the neceſsitie of the poore. As if he ſhoulde haue ſayde, lette your liberalitie extende it ſelfe euen to the diminiſhing of the patrimonie and the alienation of landes.

21. Where

21. VVhere your treasure is. In this sentence Christe conuinceth and proueth them to be miserable menne, which haue their treasures laid vp vppon earth: becausse that their felicitie is corrupt and vanishing. But couetous menne say, that they are nothing the lesse hindered, but that they may haue their heart in heauen. But Christ opposeth this generall rule, that whersoeuer men doe faigne their chiefe felicitie to be, they are thyther bound and tied. It followeth hereeof that they renounce heauen, which desire to be happy in this world. VVe know how diligently the Philosophers disputed of the chiefe felicitie, yea and they trauelled most about this point, and not without a cause, sith that thereuppon dependeth the whole course of framing mans lyfe, and all the senses haue regarde to this.

If honour bee adiudged to be the chiefe felicitie, it is necessarye that ambition shoulde wholly e possesse the mindes of menne: if money, then couetousnesse shall presently obtaine the kingdome: if pleasure, it cannot be but that men should degenerate into a beastlye wantonnesse: for naturally we are all enclined to desire the chiefe good, so it commeth to passe, that false imaginations doe cary vs hither and thither. If that we were rightlye and certeinelye perswaded that our felicitie is in heauen, it were easie to ascend & clime into heauen, treading the world vnder feete, and despysing all earthly goodes, whose deceitfull bayghtes doe bewitch the moste parte of men. After this maner Paule, while hee would lift the faithfull vp on high, and exhort them to the study of the heauenly life, proposeth Christ vnto them, in whom onely the perfecte felicitie is to be sought: as if he shoulde haue sayde, that it were an absurd and an vnworthy thing, that their mindes shoulde bee setled vppon the earth, whose treasure is in heauen.

Matth. 6.	Mark.	Luke. 11.
22. The light of the bodye is the eye: if then thine eie be single, thy whole bodye shall be light.		34. The lyght of the bodye is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, then is thy whole body light: but if thin eye be euill, then thy body is darke.
23. But if thine eye bee wicked, then all thy body shall be darke. VVherefore, if the light that is in thee, be darknesse, how great is the darknes?		35. Take heede therefore, that the light, which is in thee, bee not darknesse.
		36. If therefore thy whole bodye shall be light, hauing no parte darke, then shall all be light, euen as when a candle doth light thee with the brightnesse.
24. No manne can serue two masters: for either he shal hate the one, and loue the other: or else he shal leane to the one, and despise the other. yee cannot serue God and riches.		Luke. 16. 13. No seruaunte can serue two maisters: for eyther hee shall hate the one, and loue the other, or els hee shall leane to the one, and despise the other. Yee cannot serue God and riches.

22. The light of the body is the eye. That is to be remembred, whiche I did first giue warning of, that here are short sentences gathered togeather, and not a continuall ſermon. Alſo the ſumme and meaning of this ſentence is, that menne through ſlouth do go aſtray: becauſe they bend not themſelues, as it becommeth them, to the right purpoſe. For whereof cõmeth it to paſſe that men ſo filthily doe wander, ſtide, or fall: but becauſe that through their corrupt iudgement, while that they had rather ſatiſfie their owne pleaſures, then the iuſtice of God, they do not onely choake the light of reaſon, which ought to gouerne their life, but they do wholy turne it into darkeneſſe? And Chriſt vſeth a ſimilitude, calling the eie the light of the whole body: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, when menne walke, neither the handes, nor the feete, nor the belly can direct nor gouerne the way, but onely the eye ſufficeth to guide the other members. Therefore if the handes and the feete are raſhly caried whither it is not meete, the fault is to be imputed to the eyes, which did not their duetie.

Now the ſimilitude is to bee applyed to the mind: al the affections are as certeine members of the ſame, but they haue neede of direction, becauſe they are blinde of themſelues. Now God vſeth a reaſon, which may bring them into order, and excel a candle for ſhewing the way. But what vſe they to doe for the moſt part? namely, that vprightneſſe of mind that was giuen them, they doe willingly corrupt and peruerte; ſo that there remaineth not one ſpark of light. He calleth that a ſimple eye, that is not couered with any webbe, nor blemiſhed with bleardnes, nor troubled with any other faulte. Hee taketh poneron for faultie. The light bodye, that is lightened, ſo that his deeds are rightlye ordered. And that is called darke, which is confuſedly caryed into diuers errours. Therfore wee ſee as we haue ſayde before, that the ſlouth of thoſe men is reproued in theſe wordes, which neglect the opening of the eyes of their mindes, to the gouernment of their affections. And it is friuolous that the Papiſtes doe hereof gather, that men do excell in reaſon and wiſdome, ſo that they haue free election of good and euill. For Chriſt doth not declare in this place what power we haue: but how it becommeth vs to walke: that is, that we may be directed to ſome certeine purpoſe. And hee teacherh that the courſe of mans life is therefore darke, beecauſe that no manne propoſeth to himſelfe a right end. but all menne doe nouriſhe themſelues to follow that which is euil, greedily. I graunt that by nature there is reaſon grafted into men, whereby they might diſcerne betweene vices and vertues: but I ſay that it was ſo corrupted through ſinne, that it fayleth at euery ſteppe. Yet it followeth not, but that menne doe willingly thruſte themſelues into darkeneſſe, as if with cloaſed eyes they fledde the profered light: becauſe that witting and willing they folow after their own luſtes.

23. If the light that is in thee. Hee calleth reaſon light, how litle ſoeuer was left remaining in menne after the fall of Adam: and hee calleth darkeneſſe groſſe and beaſtly affections. The meaning therefore is, that it is no meruaile if that menne doe ſo filthyly and beaſtly wallow them ſelues in the myre of ſinnes: ſeeing that there is no reaſon, whiche might gouerne the blinde and darke pleaſures of the fleſhe. But he ſaieth, that the light is turned into darkeneſſe, not onely when menne doe ſuffer the iudgement of their minde to be ouerwhelmed with the wicked luſtes of the fleſhe: but yeelding their witte to peruerſe thoughtes, do degenerate as it were into beaſtes. For wee ſee how malitiouſlye menne doe turne that wiſdome,that was giuen them to craft or ſubtiltie,that they myght ſeeke deepe thoughtes,as ſaith the Prophet Eſai. 29.15. that throughe their ſubtill ſhiftes they might proudlye ryſe vppe againſt GOD: to bee ſhorte,they do diuerſe wayes attempt to be wiſe,to their own deſtruction. VVherefore Chriſt doth not without cauſe pronounce, that it cannot be,but that horrible and thicke darkeneſſe ſhall reigne in the lyfe, when menne of ſet purpoſe doe make themſelues blinde. The ſame is the meaning of thoſe wordes in Luke,but that Chriſte doth there ioine this ſentence with that,which was expounded before in the fifte chapter of Matthew,no man lighteth a candle,and ſetteth it in a ſecret place, &c. Alſo in ſteede of this clauſe,if the light that is in thee,are darkeneſſe, &c. he ſetteth downe an exhortation, Take heede that the lighte that is in thee be not darkeneſſe: as if he ſhould haue ſaide,take heede, leaſt thy minde,which ſhould ſhine as a light,for the direction of all thy actions, doe not darken and peruert thy whole lyfe. After hee addeth,when the body is lightened by the eye,all the members of the ſame ſhalbe the better gouerned,euen as a light lighted ſhineth and pearſeth into al the parts of the chamber.

24. No man can ſerue. Chriſt returneth to his former doctrine,which is, that he may withdraw his diſciples from couetouſneſſe. He had ſaid before that the heart of man is bound and tyed to his treaſure. Now hee telleth them that their hearts are alienated from the Lord,which addict themſelues to riches. For the greater part of men do ſport themſelues vnder a falſe pretence,while that they doe imagine that they canne deuide themſelues betweene God and their couetous deſires. But Chriſte denieth it to be poſsible,that any man can at one time obey God & his own fleſhe. And without doubt that prouerbe was then commonly vſed: no man can ſerue two maiſters at once. Therfore that which was receiued by the opinion of all, he taketh for graunted,and ſo doth apply it to the preſent cauſe,where riches do reigne,there is the gouernment take from God. It is not impoſsible for them that are rich men to ſerue God: but whoſoeuer deliuereth himſelfe to ſerue his riches,it is neceſſary that hee ſhould ſet himſelfe free from the ſeruice of God: becauſe that couetouſneſſe doth alwayes make vs the bondſlaues of the deuill. I haue ioyned that to this texte,which Luke ſet downe in an other place: becauſe when the Euangeliſtes doe here and there,as occaſion ſeruеth, ſet downe out of the doctrin of Chriſte ſentences in diuerſe places,we neede not think much to apply them togeather. But that which is here eſpecially ſayd of riches,may be well extended to all other kinde of vices.

VVhen as God doth euery where commend ſo much ſinceritie, and doth abhorre the double heart,they are all deceaued,that thinke that hee will be content with the one halfe of their heart. They all confeſſe in worde, that God cannot be truely worſhipped, but with an entyre and whole affection: but indeede they deny it,while they endeuor to reconcile things contrary between themſelues. The ambitious man ſaith,I wil not ceaſe to ſerue God,though I apply a good part of my witte to hunte after honors. The couetous,the voluptuous,the gluttenous,the leacherous, the cruell,and euery one doe boaſt the ſame for themſelues, as though it were poſsible, for them to ſerue GOD in parte,which are openly ſeene of purpoſe to fight againſt him. It is true that the faythfull themſelues are neuer ſo wholly addicted to obey God, but that they are ofte withdrawne with ſinfull luſtes of the fleſh. But beecauſe they ſigh vnder this miſerable ſlauerie, and are diſpleaſed with themſelues, and doe not otherwiſe ſerue the fleſh, but vnwillingly, and with reſiſtance; they are not accounted to ſerue two maiſters: becauſe that their ſtudies and endeuours are ſo approued to the Lorde, as if they had yeelded perfecte obedience vnto him. And here is their hypocriſie reprooued, which flatter themſelues in theyr ſinnes, as if they coulde ioyne light and darkeneſſe togeather.

Matth. 6

25. Therefore I ſaye vnto you, be not careſull for your lyfe, what yee ſhall eate, or what yee ſhall drinke: nor yet for your body what you ſhall put on. Is not the lyfe more worthy then meat, and the body then rayment?

26. Behold the fowles of the heauen: for they ſowe not, neither reape, nor cary into the barnes: yet your heauenly father feedeth them. Are yee not much better then they?

27. VVhich of you by taking care, is able to adde one cubit to his ſtature?

28. And whye care yee for rayment? Learne how the lylyes of the fielde do grow, they labour not, neither ſpinne.

29. Yet I ſay vnto you, that euen Salomon in all his glory was not arayed lik one of theſe.

30. VVherefore, if God ſo cloath the graſſe of the fielde, which is to day, and to morow is caſt into the ouen; ſhall hee not doe much more vnto you, O ye of litle faith?

Mark,

Luke. 12.

22. And he ſpake vnto his diſciples: Therefore I ſay vnto you, Take no thought for your life, what yee ſhal eate: neither for your body, what you ſhal put on.

23. The life is more then meat, & the body more then the raiment.

24. Conſider the Rauens: for they neither ſow, nor repe: which neither haue ſtore houſe, nor barne, & yet God feedeth them: how muche more are yee better then fowles?

25. And whiche of you by taking thought canne adde one cubit to his ſtature?

26. If yee then be not able to do the leaſt things, why take ye thought for the remnant?

27. Conſider the Lylyes howe they grow, they labour not, neyther ſpinne they: yet I ſay vnto you, that Solomon himſelfe in all his royaltie was not cloathed like one of theſe.

28. If then God ſo cloath the graſſe, which is to day in the fielde, and to morow is caſt into the ouen, how much more wil hee cloath you, O yee of litle faith?

In all this Sermon Chriſte doth reprehend the exceſsiue care of meat and cloathing, wherewith menne doe vexe and torment themſelues, and hee giueth alſo a remedie to heale this diſeaſe. That hee forbiddeth them to be carefull, ought not to be taken ſo preciſely, as if hee would haue his to be careleſſe. For we know that men are borne of that condition, that they ſhould ſuſtaine ſome care: yea, this is not the laſte portion of the miſeries, which the Lorde hath enioyned to vs, as a puniſhment, that hee might humble vs. But he condemneth the immoderate care for two cauſes: that is, beecauſe menne doe waſte and torment themſelues therewith in in vaine, by taking more then is meete, or their calling wil beare: then, that they take more vppon themſelues, then is meete for them, and vſing their own induſtrie, they neglect to call vppon God. That promiſe is to be holden, Pſal. 127.2. VVhen the vnfaithfull doe lye downe late, and ſhall ryſe early, they ſhall eate the bread of ſorowe, the faythfull ſhall through the grace of God, enioy reſt and ſleepe. Therefore the ſonnes of God, though they be not free from labour and care, yet it cannot be properly ſayde, that they are carefull for the lyfe: becauſe that they repoſing themſelues in the prouidence of God, doe quietly take their reſt. Hereby it may be eaſily gathered, how much euery man ought to care for theyr lyuing: namely, that euery one of vs ſhould labour aſmuch as his calling doth beare, and the Lorde dooth further appoynte, that their neceſsitie ſhoulde prouoke euery man to call vppon God. Suche a care is a meane betweene ſlouthfull ſecuritie and exceſsiue tormentes, wherewith the vnfaithfull doe waſte themſelues. If that wee doe weigh the wordes of Chriſt wel, he doth not forbid vs euery care, but that which groweth of diſtruſt. Be not carefull, ſaith he, what yee eate or drinke, for that is the propertie of them that tremble for feare of pouertie and want, as if that they ſhould want prouiſion euery moment.

25. Is not the life more worth? Hee reaſoneth from the more to the leſſe. He had forbidden them to care too much how the lyfe may be maynetained, now he addeth a reaſon: The Lord, which gaue the lyfe it ſelfe, will not ſuffer that thoſe thinges ſhould be wanting, which apperteine to the ſuſtaining of the ſame. And certeinely we doe God no ſmal iniurie, ſo oft as we diſtruſt that God will not giue vs foode and cloathing, as though that he had caſt vs out vppon the earth by fortune. For whoſoeuer is certeinely perſwaded, that he knoweth what the eſtate and condition of our life is, let not the ſame man doubt, but that hee will verye wyell prouide for his neceſsities. Therefore as oft as any feare or carefulnes for prouiſion ſhall aſſaulte vs, let vs remember that God hath a care of our life which he hath giuen vs.

26. Beholde the fowles. This is the remedie whiche I ſpake of: that is, that we might learne to reſt vppon the prouidence of God: for infidelitie is the mother of all theſe exceſsiue cares. Therefore the onely meanes to amend this couetouſneſſe is, if wee embrace the promiſſes of GOD, wherein he witneſſeth that he himſelfe hath a care of vs. After this maner the Apoſtle minding to draw the faithfull from couetouſneſſe, confirmeth this doctrine, Heb. 13.5. becauſe it is written, I will not fail thee, neither forſake thee. Therfore the ſumme is, that he exhorteth vs to truſt in God, who neglecteth none of his creatures, though they bee the meaneſt.

It is diligently to be noted, that hee ſaith the heauenly father noury-ſheth the fowles. For although it is to be wondred at, how they ſuſtaine their life, yet how many of vs doe thinke that their life doth depende of that, that God doth vouchſafe to extende his prouidence euen to them? If that it be throughly fixed in our mindes, that God doth with his hand miniſter nouriſhment to the fowles, our hope maye be the eaſier, which are created after his image, and which are accounted amongſte his children. VVhen he ſaieth that the fowles doe not ſow, nor mowe, hee doth not in theſe wordes perſwade vs to ſlouth and idleneſſe, but onelye meaneth neth that though all helpes ſhould ceaſe, yet the only prouidence of God ſhall be ſufficient, which aboundantly beſtoweth vppon the beaſts, what ſoeuer is needefull.

Luke for the fowles, nameth Rauens, alludinge peraduenture to that place of the pſal. 147.9. who giueth foode to the young Rauens, that cal vppon him. And ſome thinke that Dauid did eſpecially ſpeake of the Rauens: becauſe that when at the firſt the olde ones haue forſaken them, it is of neceſsitie that they ſhould be fed of God. Hereby it appeareth, that Chriſtes wil was none other, then that he might teache his to caſte their cares vpon God.

27. Which of you by taking thought. Chriſte heere condemneth an other faulte, which is almoſt alwayes ioyned with the immoderate care of prouiſion: that is, that a mortall man taking vpon him more then is lawefull for him, doubteth not through ſacrilegious boldneſſe to paſſe his bounds. I know (ſaith Ieremy, 10.23. that the way of manne is not in himſelfe, neither is it in man to walk & to direct his ſteps. And there is ſcarſe the hundred man found, which dareth not promiſe himſelfe any thinge of his owne induſtrie and power. Heereby it commeth to paſſe, that God being not regarded, they doe not doubt to attempte anye thing, whiche chalenge to themſelues the proſperous ſucceſſe of thinges. Chriſte, that hee might brydle this madde boldneſſe, dooth ſay, that whatſoeuer pertaineth to the ſuſtentation of our lyfe, dependeth of the onely bleſsing of GOD. For it is aſmuch as if he ſhould haue ſayde, menne do fondly weary themſelues, when all their labours are ſuperfluous and vaine, and all their cares doe come to no effect, but as God bleſſeth them: the which is more plainely expreſſed by Luke, when Chriſt addeth: If you cannot doe that which is leaſt, why are ye carefull for the remnant? For by thoſe wordes it ſufficiently appeareth that hee reprocueth not onelye the dyſtruſte, but the pride that men doe challenge to their witte more then is meete.

Not Salomon in all his glory. The ſenſe is, the goodneſſe of GOD whiche ſhineth in hearbes and flowers, doth excell whatſoeuer menne can doe with their riches, power, or by any other meanes: ſo that the faithfull may account that they ſtall want nothing of perfect plentie, although all outwarde meanes be wanting; ſo that the only bleſsing of God may flouriſh.

O yee of litle faith. Chriſt dooth not without a cauſe in this beehalfe blame the want and weakeneſſe of faith: for the more care we haue according to the groſneſſe of our witte: ſo much the more doth our infidelitie bewray it ſelfe, except that all thinges fall out after our deſire: therfore very many, which in great matters ſeeme to be endued at leaſt with an indifferent faith, yet doe faint at the daunger of pouertie.

Matth. 6.	Mark.	Luke. 12.

32. For after all these thinges seeke the Gentiles: for your heauenly father knoweth that ye haue need of al these things.

33. But seeke yee first the kingdome of God, and his righteousnes, and all these thinges shal be ministred vnto you.

34. Care not then for the morow: for the morow shal care for it self: the day hath ynough with his own griefe.

ther knoweth that yee haue neede of these things.

31. But rather seeke yee after the kingdome of God, and all these thinges shalbe ministred vnto you.

32. Feare not litle flocke: for it is your fathers pleasure to giue you a kingdome.

He hath the same purpose here, that he had in the former doctrine: that the faithful trusting in the fatherly care of God, & hoping to haue from him what things soeuer they think to be necessary for them, shoulde not torment themselues with extreame carefulnes. He forbiddeth them to be carefull, or to seeke, as Luke reporteth: that is, after their manner, whiche seeke here and there, without respect of God, to whom onely they ought to bend themselues. Neither doe they rest at any time, but where they see aboundance of encrease: & they which do not attribute to God the gouernment of the world, do sweat and vexe themselues with cõtinual disquietnes. VVhen he saith that the gentiles do seeke after all these things, he vpbraideth them with their too grosse folly, from whence al such cares do spring. For whereof commeth it to passe, that the vnbeleeuers doe neuer rest in quiet state: but because they imagine that God is ydle, and sleepeth in heauen, or at the least that he looketh not vppon those thinges which appertaine vnto men, as vpon them, vvhom he hath taken into his charge, and feedeth as his houshold? So by this comparison, hee declareth that they haue profited ill, and doe not as yet vnderstand the firste rudiments of godlines: which doe not looke with the eies of their fayth to the hand of God, secretely filled with aboundaunce of all good thinges, that they might patiently, and with quiet mindes from thence looke for their sustentation. Your heauẽly father, saith he, knoweth, that you need these things: as if hee shuld haue said, al they that are so careful for their foode, doe giue no more honour to the fatherly goodnes of God and his secrete prouidence, then the vnfaithful doe.

L V. 29. Stand not in doubt. This clause answereth to the last sentẽce which is set downe in Matthew, Bee not carefull for the morowe. For Christ reproueth an other fault, that men bending their will to prouide for themselues, would gladly imbrace fiue worlds. The worde which Luke vseth doth properly signifie to looke aloft, as wee doe commonlye say, to make long discourses: for the intemperature of our flesh hath neuer enough, but that it would turne ouer the heauen & the earth a hundred times.

Hereof it cõmeth to passe, ỹ they giue no place to God his prouidẽce. Therfore vnder this title is reprehended too much curiositie or carefulnes: because that through the same we procure our selues troubles without profit, and doe so become willingly wretches before the time. That Matthewe saieth, That the daye hath enough with his owne griefe, appertayneth to this purpose, that the faythfull shoulde temper theyr cares, leaſt they deſire to prouide beyond the boundes of their vocation. For as it is ſayde, euerye care is not condemned: but that whiche wandereth throughe ouerthwarte and vnmeaſurable compaſſes, beeyonde boundes.

MAT. 33. Firſt ſeeke the kingdome of God. He brydeleth that too great care for foode by an other argument. For he reproueth that groſſe and ſlouthfull negleɛte, which the ſoule hath of the heauenly life. Therefore Chriſt teacheth vs, that it is prepoſterous, that menne being borne to a better life, doe wholly occupy themſelues in earthly thinges: And whoſoeuer ſhall eſteeme of the kingdom of God as the beſt, wil not exerciſe himſelfe in prouiding for his lyuing, but moderatelye: neyther is there any thing fitter to bridle the wantonneſſe of the fleſh, that it triumph not in the courſe of this preſent life, then the meditation of the heauenlye life.

The word righteouſneſſe may as well be referred to God, as to his kingdome: for we know ϕ the kingdom of God conſiſteth in righteouſnes, that is, in ſpirituall newneſſe of lyfe. VVhen he ſaieth, that other thinges ſhalbe miniſtred, hee meaneth thoſe thinges, which belonge to this preſent life, are to be placed in the ſecond place, and ſo ought to beſet after, or vnder the kingdome of God.

LV. 32. Feare not my litle flocke. VVith this ſentence Chriſt confirmeth that hope, whereunto hee exhorteth his diſciples: for how can God deny vile and corruptible meate to his, whom he hath adopted to be heires of his kingdome? And purpoſely he calleth his by the name of a litle flock, leaſt they ſhould therefore think themſelues to be of leſſe account with God: becauſe that through their fewneſſe, they are nothing accounted of before the world. The word which he vſeth, ſignifieth, that eternall lyfe doth flow vnto vs out of the fountaine of his free mercy. To this purpoſe alſo appertaineth the word of giuing. And when Chriſte witneſſeth openly, that God hath giuen vs a kingdome, and that for no other cauſe, but for that it ſo pleaſeth him: it is heereby more then manifeſt, that it is obtained by no deſertes of workes. Therfore ſo oft as the Lord raiſeth vs vp to the hope of eternall lyfe, we muſt remember that wee maye not feare the want of dayly foode.

5. Hypocrite, firste caste out the beame out of thine owne eye, and then shalt thou see clerelye to caste out the meate out of thy brothers eye.

42. Eyther howe canste thou say to thy brother: brother, let me pull out the moat, that is in thine eye, when thou seest not the beame that is in thine own eie? Hypocrite, caste out the beame that is in thine owne eie firste, and the shalt thou see perfectly to pull out the moat that is in thy brothers eye.

1. Iudge not. Christe dooth not in these words precisely restraine from iudgeing: but his will was to heale that disease, whiche is settled almost in all. For we see how al menne doe flatter and spare themselues, and euery man is a seuere censor against others. And there is a certaine sweetenesse in this sinne, so that there is almost no man that ytcheth not with a desire to enquire out other mens faultes. All menne doe confesse that it is a mischief intolerable, that they which spare themselues in their owne sinnes, should be so malitious against their brethren. And in times past prophane men did also condemne it by many prouerbes: yet it continued in all ages, and also remaineth at this day: nay, there is added to it an other plague worse then that, that the most parte by condemning others, seeke to get themselues further libertie of sinning. This wicked delyght in biting, carping, and slaundering doth Christ refraine, when hee saith, Iudge not. Neither ought the faithful to be so blind, that they shoulde discerne nothing: but only that they should bridle themselues, that they be no more desirous to iudge then is meete. For it cannot bee otherwise but that whosoeuer desireth to be iudge of his brethren, shuld be too extreame and rygorous. There is the like sentence in Iames, bee not manye maisters. Yet he doth not restraine nor withdraw the faithfull from executing the office of teaching: but he forbiddeth them to desire honour ambitiously. Therefore to iudge, doth signifie as much as to enquire curiously into other mens deedes. But first this disease doth alwayes drawe with it this sinne, that we condemn euery light offence, as though it were a most grieuous faulte: then it breaketh out into a peruerse boldnes; so that we doe proudly iudge ill of euery matter, although it may be taken in good parte.

Now we see to what purpose Christes counsel tendeth: that is, that we be not to desirous, or ouerthwart, or malitious, or els curious in iudging our neghbours. But he that iudgeth by the word and law of the Lorde, and directeth his iudgement according to the rule of charitie, dooth alwayes begin his iudgement at himselfe, he doth obserue the right manner and order of iudging: whereby it appeareth howe wickedlye they abuse this testimonie of this moderation, which Christe setteth downe, vnder which pretence they desire to take away all difference of good and euil. For it is not onely lawfull for vs to condemne and reproue all sinnes, but also necessary: except we wil wrangle with God himselfe, and abrogate his lawes, cut down his iudgements, and ouerthrow his throane of iudgment. For his wil is that we should declare his iudgment, which he pronounceth of the deedes of menne, wee must onely retaine that modesty, that he mey remaine the onely lawgiuer and iudge.

Least you be iudged. he denounceth a punishment againste those rygorous censors, which so much desire to sift out the faultes of others: that is, it shall come to passe, that they shall bee nothinge gentler entreated of others, but they shall finde the same extremitie exercised againste themselues, which they haue executed againste others. As there is nothing more deare or precious to vs then our name; so there is nothing more sharpe and bitter, then to be condemned and subiect to the reproaches and infamie of menne: and through our owne faulte wee procure, our selues that, which we of our owne nature doe so much abhorre. For which is hee amongst many, which doth not search more narrowly into other mennes deedes then is conuenient? whiche dealeth not hardlyer with light offences? which dooth not more ouerthwartly improue that which is of it selfe indifferent? And what is this els but to doe our dilygence, to prouoke God to be a reuenger against vs, that hee againe maye repay the like to vs. And though this be done by the iuste vengeaunce of God, that they should again be punished, which haue iudged others: yet the Lord doth execute this punishment by menne. For the iudgement of Chrisostome and others, which referre it to the life to come is wrested. For as Iesaias 33.1. threatneth that they shall be spoyled, whiche haue spoyled others: so Christ meaneth that there shall not wante reuengers, whiche shall punishe wicked and slaunderous menne with the lyke poison or rigor. If that menne cease, so that they escape punishmente in the world, which haue bene too desirously bent to condemne their brethrē, yet they shall not escape the iudgment of God.

In Luke there is sette downe a promisse: Forgiue, and yee shall bee forgiuen: giue, and it shall bee giuen vnto you, the meaning whereof is, that the Lorde will bring to passe, that hee that sheweth himselfe louing, gentle, and right towardes his brethren, shall feele the same gentlenesse of others towardes himselfe, so that hee shall bee handled gentlye and friendlye of others. But that which often falleth out to the children of GOD, to be recompensed with a moste vniuste reward, so that they are oppressed with many vniust slaunders, when as they haue hurte no mannes name, but haue spared the faultes of their brethren, dooth not disagree with this sentence of Christe. For wee knowe that those promisses, which apperteine to this present lyfe, are not perpetuall, nor without exception.

Also though the Lorde suffereth the innocency of his children to bee oppressed, and almoste ouerwhelmed: yet withall hee fulfilleth that which hee speaketh in an other place, that their vprightnesse shall shine as the morning. So his blessinge alwayes exceedeth all their vniuste slaunders. For so hee maketh the faythfull subiecte to vniuste reproaches, that at the length hee maye shewe forth the goodnesse of theyr cause.

Furthermore, the faythfull ones, howesoeuer they desire to execute that, whiche is ryght towardes theyr brethren: yet beecause they are sometyme caryed with extreame rigour againste their brethren, whiche either are innocent, or are not so much to bee blamed, they prouoke through their owne faulte the lyke iudgement against themselues. And though it may be imputed to the vnthankefulnesse of the worlde, that they doe not receiue measure pressed downe and running ouer: yet certeinelye they muste in parte impute it vnto themselues: beecause there is no manne that hath so lyberally nourished his brethren, as hee ought.

3. Why seest thou a moate. Hee dooth expressly reproue that faulte, which the Hypocrites doe commonlye commit. For when they are too quicke sighted in discerning other mennes faultes, and they doe not onlye amplifie them seuerely, but almost tragically, they cast their own offences behynde them: or els they are so wise in making them to seeme lesse, that euen in the moste grosse offence they desire to seeme excusable. Therefore Christ reproueth both the offences, too curious searching, which groweth of the want of charitie, while wee will too scrupulouslye searche out the sinnes of the brethren, and the sparing flatterie, wherewith we couer and nourish our own sinnes.

MAT. 7. 6. Giue yee not that which is holye to dogges, neither caste yee your pearles before swine: least they tread them vnder their feete, and turning againe all to rente you. There is no cause why I should often rehearse, that Matthew setteth downe manye shorte sentenses, which are not to be read: as in one text depending vppon an other. For this doctrine doth not depend vppon that which went before, but is altogeather of an other matter. For Christ admonisheth his Apostles, and in their person all the preachers of the Gospell, that they shoulde preserue and keepe the treasure of the heauenly wisdome onely for the sonnes of God, and that they should not throw it forth to the vnworthy and prophane conteners of God. But here aryseth a question: for afterwarde hee commaundeth them to preach the Gospell to euery creature.

And Paule saieth, 2. Corinthians, 2. 16. that his preaching is to the reprobate a sauour of death. And there is nothing more certeine, then that God commaundeth it daylye to bee proposed as a testimonie to the vnfaythfull, that they might be therby made the more inexcusable: I answere, because the ministers of the Gospel, & they that are called to the office of teaching cannot discerne betweene the children of GOD and swine, it is their partes to offer the doctrine of saluation generally to al. For although that at the first they shall see many stubborne and vnapte to bee taught: yet charitie dooth not suffer vs presentlye to accounte of them, as castawayes and loste: for this is to be considered, that Christe calleth dogges and hoges, not all menne, that are wicked or voyde of the feare of God, and without true godlynes: but them which by certein tokens doe shew a stubborne contempt of God; so that the disease may appeare incurable.

In an other place Christe opposeth dogges against the electe people of God, and them of the housholde of faith, when he saith, it is not good to take the childrens bread, and to giue it vnto dogs: and here he vnderstandeth dogges & swine, which being too corrupted with a wicked contempt of God, wil not admit nor abide any medicine. Heereby it appeareth how wickedly they do wrest the words of Christ, which think that he restraineth the doctrin of the gospel, to those only, whiche are apte to be taught, & wel prepared. For what shuld be done, if the godly teachers shoulde call no manne, but him that nowe by his obedience preuenteth the grace of God? but by nature wee all are rather wicked, and bente to ſtubbornneſſe: Vvherfore the remedie of ſaluation is to be denied to none but them that doe filthily refuſe the ſame offered vnto them, that it may appeare that they are reprobate, and damned of them ſelues: as Paule ſpeaketh of Heretikes, Tit. 3. 11. But there are two cauſes, why Chriſte forbadde that his Goſpell ſhould be propoſed to the deſperate contemners. For it is a manifeſt profanation of the miſteries of God, if wee ſubmitte them to the reproachfull skornes of the wicked. Chriſte alſo minded to comfort his diſciples, that they ſhould not ceaſe to beeſtowe their labour in teaching the Goſpell to the electe of God, though they ſhould ſee the ſame ouerthwartly refuſed by the wicked and prophane menne: as if he ſhould haue ſayde, leaſt this incomparable treaſure ſhuld waxe vile, and be of no account, the ſwine and dogges are to be dryuen from it. But theſe titles are to be noted, wherewith he adorneth the doctrine of ſaluation. Chriſt calleth it a holye thing, and compareth it to pearles. And heereby we gather how much wee ought to eſteeme of it. Leaſt they tread it vnder their feete. Chriſte ſeemeth to make a difference betweene ſwine and dogges: attributing a beaſtly dulneſſe to the ſwine, & madneſſe to dogges. And certeinely experience teacheth, that there are two ſuch ſortes of contemners of God. For example ſake: whatſoeuer is ſpoken in the ſcripture of the corruption of mans nature, of free iuſtification, of eternall election, many turne it either to careleſneſſe, or to the wantonneſſe of the fleſh, ſuch are aptly and worthily accounted ſwine. And others do rend the doctrine and the miniſters of the ſame, with ſacriligious raylinges: as though it ſhoulde ouerthrow the deſire of wel doing, the feare of God, and all care of ſaluation. Therefore though chriſt doth by both the names ſignifie the vncurable enemies of ẏ word of God; yet by theſe two ſimilitudes he brieflye ſheweth what ſome of them doe differ from others.

Matth. 7.	Marke.	Luke. 11.
7. Aske, and it ſhal bee giuen you: ſeeke, and yee ſhall finde: knock, and it ſhall bee opened vnto you.		5. And he ſayde vnto them, which of you ſhall haue a friend, and ſhall goe to him at midnight, and ſay to him: friend, lend me three loaues?
8. For whoſoeuer aſketh, receiueth: and he that ſeeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it ſhal be opened.		6. For a friend of mine is come out of the way to me, and I haue nothing to ſet before him.
9. For what man is there among you, which if his ſonne aske him breade, would giue him a ſtone?		7. And hee within ſhould anſweare and ſay, trouble me not, the dore is nowe ſhutte, and my children are with mee in bedde: I cannot riſe to giue them thee.
10. Or if hee aske fiſh, will hee giue him a ſerpent?		8. I ſay vnto you, though hee would not ariſe & giue him, becauſe he is his friend, yet doubtleſſe, becauſe of his importunitie, he would riſe, and giue him as many as hee needed.
11. If		9. And

11. If yee then which are euill canne giue to your children good giftes, howe much more shal your father which is in heauē, giue good thinges to them that aske him?

9. And I say vnto you, Aske, and it shalbe giuen you: seeke, and yee shall finde: knocke, and it shall bee opened to you.

10. For euerye one that asketh, receyueth: and hee that seeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it shalbe opened.

11. If a sonne shall aske breade of anye of you, that is a father, will hee giue him a stone? or if hee aske a fish, wil he giue him a serpent?

12. Or if hee aske an egge, will hee giue him a scorpion?

13. If yee then which are euil canne giue good giftes vnto your children, howe muche more shall your heauenlye Father giue the holye Ghoste to them that desire him?

7. Aske. This is an exhortation to prayer: and becauſe that in this exerciſe of godlines, which we ſhould haue an eſpeciall care of, we are ſo ſlowe and ſlouthfull, Chriſt vrgeth the matter by ſpeaking it three maner of wayes. For his ſpeach is not in vaine, when he ſaith aske, seeke, knocke but he applyeth himſelfe to ſtirre vp our ſlouthfulneſſe, leaſt the doctrin ſhould waxe colde. To the ſame purpoſe alſo beelonge the promiſſes which are added. yee shall finde, it shall bee giuen you, and it shalbe opened to you. For nothing ſhall better encourage vs to pray, then a certeine aſſuraunce of obtaining. For it cannot be that they ſhuld pray diligently, that doubt: yea prayer, without fayth, is but a vaine and ſporting ceremonie. Chriſte therefore that he might effectually ſtirre vs vp to this parte of our duetie, he doth not onely commaund vs what we ought to do: but promiſeth that our prayers ſhould not be in vaine. And this is diligentlye to be noted: firſt, that we might know that this lawe of prayer is appoynted and preſcribed vnto vs, that we might be certeinely perſwaded, that God is ſo mercifull to vs, that he wil heare our deſires. Then, ſo oft as we prepare our ſelues to prayer, or as oft as we feele that wee are not earneſt enogh in this deſire to pray, that we ſhould remember this ſo louing a bidding, wherein Chriſte teſtifieth vnto vs God his fatherly affection. So it ſhall come to paſſe, that euery of vs enioying the grace of Chriſt, may boldlye pray, and freely call vpon God, as Paule teacheth Epheſ. 3. 12. And becauſe we are more ready to diſtruſt then is meete, Chriſte repeateth the promiſe in diuerſe wordes, that he might alſo reproue this faulte. But hee vſeth the Metaphor of ſeeking, becauſe that wee thinke thoſe thinges which wee haue neede of to be farre from vs: and of knocking, becauſe that the fancies of our fleſh do imagine, that thoſe thinges are ſhutte vp from vs, which we haue not ready at hand.

8. For whosoeuer asketh, receiueth. Some thinke it is a prouerbe gathered of the common trade of lyfe: yet I doe more willingly encline to the contrary parte: for that Christ offereth the fauour of the father to them that pray: as if hee should haue saide, God is willing and ready to heare vs, if that we pray, & that there are great riches layd vp for vs, if § we do aske them. By which words he declareth that they do suffer iust punishments for their slouthfulnesse, which wanting thinges necessary, doe not seeke this remedie for their want.

It is certeine, that often when the faithfull doe sleepe, GOD waketh for their saluation, that he may preuent their requestes. For there is nothing more wretched then we are, if in so great a weakenes, or rather a slouthfulnesse, he should waite for our prayers, if hee shoulde not looke vppon vs in so much carelesnesse of vs. Nay, he is not perswaded by any other then by himselfe, to giue vs fayth, which should preuent our prayers both in order and in time. But because Christe speaketh heere to his disciples, hee dooth onely teach how the heauenly father would make vs partakers of his giftes. Therefore, although he doth giue vs all thinges freely, yet hee might exercise our faith, hee commaundeth vs to pray, that he might graunt to our requestes, those thinges, which come of his owne goodnes

9. What man is there among you. This is a comparison from the lesse to the greater. First, Christ opposeth the malice of men to the great goodnesse of God. And selfe loue maketh vs malitious: for while euery man is too much addicted to himselfe, hee despiseth and neglecteth others. But fatherly loue ouercommeth this faulte, so that menne forgettinge themselues, doe more lyberally bestow vppon their children. And from whence proceedeth this, but because that God, from whom all fatherlynesse descendeth, Eph. 3. 15. powreth this portion of his goodnesse into their heartes? If that a fewe droppes of loue in manne doe so much preuaile to doe well, what is to be hoped for out of the sea it selfe, whiche canne neuer be drawne drye? Can God himselfe bee strait, which doth so open the heartes of menne? yet heere must bee considered that sayinge of Iesaias 49. 15. Although a mother should forgette her children, yet the Lorde will be lyke himselfe, so that he will alwayes shew himselfe to be a father.

10. Good giftes. Christe did of purpose vse these wordes, leaste that the faythfull in prayer shoulde lose the raines too much to fond and euill desires. We know how intemperate and presumptuous our flesshe is in this behalfe: for there is nothing that we do not aske of God: & excepte that hee yeeld to our folly, we frette and fume againste him. Christ therefore maketh our requestes subiect to the will of God, that he should not giue vnto vs any thing, but that which hee knoweth profitable for vs. Wherefore let vs not thinke that hee hath no care of vs, so ofte as he graunteth not our requestes: because it is in him to iudge what is conuenient for vs.

But now, because all our affections are blinde, the rule of our prayer must be taken out of the word of God, neither are we meete to iudge of so weighcie a matter. Therefore, whosoeuer desireth to come to GOD with faithfull prayer, let him learne to bridle his heart, that hee aske not any thing, but according to his will, as Iames teacheth, 4. 3. of his Epistle.

Luke

Luke in the laste clause for good gifts, placeth the holy Ghost, not excluding other benefites, but shewing what is especially to be desired. For that ought alwayes to be in our minde, seeke first the kingdom of God, and other thinges shal thē be ministred vnto you. VVherfore it behoueth the children of God, to that ende that they might prepare themselues rightlye to prayer, to put of earthly affections, and to ascend to the meditation of spiritual life. And so it shal come to passe, that they shal make lesse account of meat and cloath, then of the seale and pledge of their adoption: But when God shall giue so precious a treasure, he will not deny others that are lesse.

L V. 5. VVhich of you shall haue a friend. Luke addeth this similitude, whereof Matt. maketh no mention, & the meaninge is: there is no cause why the faithful shuld faint in their heartes, if they do not presentlye obtaine their desires, or if that seeme harde to be obtayned, which they doe desire. For if importunitie of demaunding doth wreste out of men that, which they woulde not willingly doe, there is no cause why we shoulde doubt, but that God wilbe entreated of vs, if wee constantly continue in prayer, and that our mindes either through delay or difficultie waxe not weary.

Matth. 7.	Mark.	Luke. 6.
12. Therefore whatsoeuer yee would that men shoulde doe to you, euen so doe yee to them: for this is the law and the prophetes.		31. And as yee would that men should doe to you, so doe ye to them.
13. Enter in at the streight gate: for it is the wide gate and broad waye that leadeth to destruction: and many there be, which go in thereat, 14 Becausse the gate is streight, and the way narrow, that leadeth vnto life, and few there be that finde it.

It is in vaine to shew how this dependeth of the former, sith that often in such shorte sentenses, these clauses doe abounde. I sayde beefore, that Matthew doth not reporte one onelye Sermon of Christes: but out of diuerse sermons hee gathereth the summe of the doctrine. Therefore this sentence is to be read by it selfe, wherein Christ instructeth his disciples to equitie, and setteth downe a shorte and an easie definition of the same: that wee might know that so many contentions doe reigne in the world, and that men do hurt one an other so many waies, for no other cause, but because that wittingly & willingly they tread equitie vnder their feete: and yet euery one would haue the same streightly obserued towards himself. VVhere it standeth vpon our own profit, there is none of vs that cannot distinctly & subtilly declare what is right. Therfore sith al mē do shew thēselues ready teachers of righteousnes for their own cōmoditie: how commeth it to passe, that the same knowledg is not ready, whē either the profit or the losse of other men cōmeth in questiō: but because we are onely wise for our selues, & no man prouideth for his neighbours. And not so onely, but malitiously, and of set purpose, we close our eyes at the rule of equitie, which shineth in our heartes.

Therefore Christ teacheth that euery man may be a rule vnto himselfe of iust and vpright dealing towardes his neighbours, if he would perfourme that to others, which he requireth to be done vnto himselfe. So he confuteth all vaine pretenses, which menne imagine to couer, or to counterfeit their owne vnrighteousnesse. For without doubte perfecte equitie should reigne amongst vs, if we were as faithfull working (that I may so speak) disciples of charitie, as we are ready teachers to haue others to doe to vs.

For this is the law and the Prophetes. Christ doth not meane that this one poynt of doctrine is onely deliuered in the law and the Prophetes: but whatsoeuer is there commaunded concerning charitie, and what lawes and exhortations are there set downe for the maintenaunce of righteousnesse, are all referred to this purpose. The meaning therefore is, that hee satisfieth the second table, if hee shew himselfe in that sort to others, as he desireth others should shew themselues to him: as if he should haue saide, there should be no neede of long and tedious disputations, if this simplicitie were maintained, and menne should not with a prepostero us loue of themselues blot out that equitie, which is engrauen in their heartes.

13. Enter in at the strait gate. Because there is nothing more against the flesh, then the doctrine of Christ, no man shall at any time well profitte in the same: but he that learneth to gather his owne senses and all his affections as into a narow straite, that they may keepe themselues within those straites, in which the heauenlye maister brideleth our wantonnesse. Because menne doe willingly flatter themselues, leape and runne out of order: therefore Christe dooth here admonish his disciples, that they shoulde prepare themselues, as to a strait and thorny iourney. But because it is hard to restraine our lustes from this vnbrideled and wandring folly, he mittigateth this bitternesse with a comfortable reward, when hee saieth, by the narrow gate and way we enter into life.

Againe, least being caught with the baightes of a lycentious and a dissolute life, wee shoulde wander whither the pleasure of the flesh doth draw vs: he saieth, that they doe runne headlong to death, which hadde rather goe through the wide way and broad gate, then to goe through the straites, which lead to life. But he saith expresly, that many do runne through the wide way: because that men doe ouerthrow one an other, by peruerse and euill examples. For whereof commeth it to passe, that all menne doe wittingly and willinglye without all care, caste themselues headlong: but because they doe not thinke that they shall perishe while they perishe with a great companye? And on the other side, the small number of the faithfull dooth make many careless: for we are hardlye brought to renounce the worlde, and to frame our selues and our liues after the maners of a fewe. For wee thinke it an absurd thing to pull vs from the multitude, as if wee were not a parte of mannekinde.

But though the doctrine of Christe dooth holde vs as bondmenne, bringeth our lyfe into a streight way, seperateth vs from the multitude, and ioineth vs to a few companions: yet this straightnes ought to be no hinderaunce vnto vs, that wee shoulde anye whitte the lesse striue after life.

But

But it doeth ſufficiently appeare by Luke, that Chriſte ſayde this at an other time,and not then when hee vttered thoſe paradoxes of the bleſſed life(which we haue ſene before,)and deliuered to them an order of praier. And that is it which I haue touched ſo oft. Thoſe things which are ſet downe by the other Euangeliſtes, according to the order of the hyſtorie, are gathered together by Mathewe into one ſumme, that ſo it myght the better appeare,howe Chriſt inſtructed his diſciples. Therefore I thought it meete to adde all the place of Luke which agreeth to this matter. For when I ſhall diligently admoniſh the readers of the courſe of time which Luke obſerueth, I hope they will graunt me pardonne if in gathering the doctrine I be not more curious then Mathewe.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 13.
		23. Then ſayd one vnto him,Lord are there fewe that ſhalbe ſaued? And he ſayd vnto them,
		24. Striue to enter in at the ſtraighte gate, for many I ſay vnto you,will ſeeke to enter in, and ſhall not be able.

23. Then ſayde. Although Mathew rehearſeth this anſweare of Chriſt in one texte, with other ſentences ſpoken to the people, yet I thinke that he had occaſion geuen him to ſpeake this, by this preſent queſtion. Furthermore, the occaſion that mooued that this queſtion ſhoulde bee asked ſemeth to be, becauſe that Chriſt who profeſſed himſelf to be the author of life,could ſcarce gather him a few diſciples. And he might ſeme to condēne the whole Church,a ſmal company of men only excepted. But outwardly the whole people which regarded not the doctrine of Chriſt,but refuſed him altogither, ſeemed to bee adopted of God as heires of life. And we oftentimes doe doute the ſame, ſo ofte as we beholde the ouerthwart eſtate of the world. VVhat meaneth thys, that the greater parte foloweth a way contrary and diſagreeing to the goſpel? Therfore Chriſt ſpeaking to all, exhorteth them to ſtriue to enter in at the ſtraighte gate. By which woordes Chriſt meant to drawe his diſciples from fooliſh curioſitie, which hindereth and ſtaieth many, which looke aboute whether any other doe ioyne themſelues to them, as though they woulde not bee ſaued but with a great companie. In that he commaundeth to ſtriue or to endeuour,hee meaneth that they cannot come to euerlaſting life wythout great and many difficulties. Therefore lette the faithfull rather beſtowe their ſtudie vppon this, then be too curious about the multitude that go aſtray.

24. For many will ſeeke to enter. Thys is therefore added, leaſt we ſhould be deceiued wyth a vaine hope,as if many companions ſhoulde helpe vs. For as fleſh is gladde to flatter it ſelfe, many doe promiſſe themſelues an eaſie way to life, which in the meane ſeaſon doe pleaſe themſelues wyth euery thing. So others do againe deceiue others,that they ſleepe in a wicked ſecuritie. Chriſt that he might ſhake off ſuch delightes from his diſciples,affirmeth that they ſhalbe excluded,which promiſſe now vnto them ſelues a certaine poſſeſſion of life.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 13.
		25. VVhen the good man of the houſe is riſen vp, and hath shutte to the doore, and ye begin to stande without, and to knocke at the doore, saying: Lorde, Lorde, open to vs, and he shall answeare, and say vnto you, I know you not whence you are.

26. Then shall yee beginne to say, wee haue eaten & drunke in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streetes.

27. But he shall say, I tell you, I knowe you not whence you are: depart from me all yee workers of iniquitie.

28. There shall be weeping and gnashinge of teethe, when ye shall see Abraham & Isaac, and Iacob, and all the Prophets in the kingdom of God, and your selues thrust out at doores.

29. Then shall come many from the East, and from the VVest, and from the North, and from the South, and shall sit at the table in the kingdome of God.

30. And beholde there are laste, whiche shall be first, and there are first, which shalbe last.

25. VVhen the goodman of the house is risen. Although these things were spoken after at another time, as I sayd euen nowe, yet I had rather to haue respecte of the doctrine then of the time. For this is no small helpe to the vnderstanding, if those may be red together in one text, which do agree together in one sence. Because that Christ had affirmed that the gate is not opened to many which desired to enter into heauen. Nowe he sayeth that they shal profit nothing, although they occupy a place in the church: because that God shall at length rise in iudgement, that he maye exclude out of his kingdome, all them that vsurpe a place amongest them of his housholde. And he vseth the similitude of a housholder: who if he vnderstoode that some of his wicked and wanton seruauntes should steale out by night, and leaue the house open to theeues: he himselfe ariseth & locketh the gate: and will not lette in those wandering and nighte straying men, which do out of season wander by the high wayes. Further, in these wordes he admonisheth vs to take occasion while it is offred. For so long as the Lord calleth vs vnto him, we as it were haue a gate sette open for vs into heauen: but the greater part doth not vouchsafe to stirre a foote. Therefore Christ pronounceth that the gate shall at the length bee shut, and so they shalbe in danger to be shut out which waite for companie.

26. Thou hast taught in our streetes. Christ expreslye excepteth, that it shall profitte the Iewes nothing, that he came neare vnto them, and that he familiarly offereth himselfe that they shoulde enioy him, except they aunsweare at the day when they are called. But he doeth not prosecute that similitude. For, speaking of a housholder, hee doeth plainly without a figure declare himselfe to bee the iudge: and this doeth not agree to any other then vnto himselfe. Thou hast taught in our streetes: that is, that the Iewes shoulde not through their negligence lose that saluation which they might now obtaine.

28. VVhen yee shall see Abraham. VVhen as the Iewes had nothing like

vnto the holy fathers, yet they woulde vainly bragge of that ſtocke, neyther was there any thing ſo vſuall amongeſt them, as to abuſe the title of the Churche: Chriſte teſtifieth that this degenerate people, which departed from the faith and Godlineſſe of the fathers, are eſtranged from the kingdome of God. And heerein is contained a ſecreate reproofe, becauſe that they which deſire to haue companions in ſeeking ſaluation, did not rather endeuour to adioyne themſelues to Abraham, the Prophettes, and the holy fathers, then ſeeke about for their equals, which by their examples were fallen farre out into innumerable corruptions. As if he ſhoulde haue ſayde, If you doe nowe neglecte to enter in at the ſtraighte gate, becauſe the multitude of them which goe aſtray doeth come behinde you, doe you not ſee howe you are ſeperated from the company of the faithfull, while you doe linke your ſelues to the company of the vnfaithfull? If that the ſight of the worlde doeth nowe blinde your eyes, this ſlouthfulneſſe ſhalbe taken from you at the laſt day, but too late. For then you ſhall knowe that you and your like are ſtraungers from the kingdom of God, and that you haue not any thing common with Abraham.

29. They ſhall come from the Eaſt. It is an amplification gathered heereof, that the Iewes being reiected (which thought themſelues only to be the lawfull heires of God) the Gentiles ſhoulde bee ſette in their place, that they may receiue the life promiſed to Abraham and his ſtocke. And hee oppoſeth the Gentiles againſt them, that he might pricke them forward as with a godly iealouſie to faith. Euen as Paule Romanes 11.14. wryteth that it ſhoulde be an ornament of his miniſterie, if hee might prouoke them of his owne countrey and fleſh to ſuche an emulation. And ſo it was neceſſary that the Iewes ſheulde be pricked when as they pleaſing themſelues too muche, did proudly contemne God and all his giftes. But becauſe that Mathewe hath this ſentence againe a little after, I doe nowe touche the ſame the more ſparingly.

30. Beholde there are laſt. Chriſt vſeth theſe woordes oftentimes, as wee ſhall ſee other where, but in a diuers ſence. In this place hee meaneth nothing elſe but to ouerthrowe the vaine confidence of the Iewes: which when all the worlde was forſaken, were choſen of God, being placed in this dignitie, imagined that God was bounde to them: For thys cauſe Chriſt telleth thē that their lot ſhalbe ſhortly altered, ſo that the Gentiles which were then as outcaſtes ſhould haue the chiefe roumthe: And the Iewes being put from their honour, ſhoulde not holde the loweſt corner in the Churche.

15. Beware of falſe Prophetes, whiche come to you in sheepes cloathing, but inwardly they are rauening wolues.		43. For it is not a good tree that bringeth foorth euill fruite: neither an euill tree, that bringeth forth good fruite,
16. Ye shall know them by their fruites, doe men gather grapes of thornes? or figes of thiſtles?
17. So euery good tree bringeth foorth good fruit, and a corrupt tree bringeth foorth euill fruit.		44. For euery tree is knowen by his owne fruite: for neither of thornes gather menne figges, nor of bushes gather they grapes.
18. A		45. A

18. A good tree cannot bring foorthe euill fruite: neither can a corrupt tree bring foorth good fruite.

19. Euery tree that bringeth not foorth good fruite, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire.

20. Therefore by their fruites yee ſhall knowe them.

45. A good man oute of the good treaſure of his heart bringeth foorth good, and an euill manne out of the euill treaſure of his heart, bringeth foorth euill, for of the abundance of the heart his mouth ſpeaketh.

15. Beware. Chriſt teacheth in theſe woordes that his Church ſhould be ſubiect to diuers deceits, and therefore it woulde be daungerous leaſt many ſhould fall from the faith, except they bent theſelues to take hede. VVe know how ready men are to vanitie, and ſo they doe not onely of nature deſire to be deceiued, but al men ſeeme to be wiſe to deceiue them ſelues. And Sathan alſo a woonderfull craftes man in deceiuing, ceaſeth not to lay ſnares wherein he may entangle the ſimple and vnwarie. But the Iewes did hope that they ſhoulde haue a pleaſant eſtate vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, free from al trouble and vexation. Therfore he admoniſheth his diſciples, if they deſire to ſtand faſt, that they ſhoulde prepare themſelues to auoide the ſubtile ſleights of Sathan. For it is the wil of the Lord (as I haue already ſayd) to exerciſe his church with continual warfare in this worlde. VVherefore, that we may continue his diſciples vnto the ende, it ſufficeth not onely that we be taught, and that we ſubmit our ſelues to be gouerned by his worde: but becauſe that we ſhall be daily aſſaulted by Sathan, it is neceſſary that our faith be armed to reſiſt. And it is the chiefeſt thing, if we ſuffer our ſelues to be gouerned of the good and faithfull miniſters of Chriſt: but becauſe that on the contrary ſide there doe ariſe falſe teachers, except we doe watche diligently, and be armed with conſtancie, we ſhall be eaſily led from the flocke. To this purpoſe alſo pertaineth that ſaying of Chriſt, Iohn 10. 3. The ſheepe doe heare the voice of the ſhepheard: and they will not heare a ſtranger, but flee from him. VVhereby we alſo gather that there is no cauſe why the faithfull ſhuld be diſcouraged in their mindes, or troubled, while the wolues doe breake into the folde of Chriſt: while the falſe Prophets do endeuour with falſe doctrines to ouerthrowe the pure faith of Chriſt, but they ought rather to be ſtirred vp to ſette diligent watch. For Chriſt doeth not in vaine bidde vs beware, wherefore if our owne ſlouthfulnes doth not circumuēt vs, we ſhal eaſily eſcape al his deceits. And certainly without this hope we ſhould not be bolde nor couragious to take hede. VVhen we know now that the Lord wold not haue deceiued vs by the inuaſions of Sathan, lette vs goe forwarde without feare, asking of him the ſpirite of diſcretion, by whom as he ſealeth the beleefe of his truth in our hearts, ſo, that he would reueale the deceits and ſutteties of Sathan, leaſt we be deceiued. VVhen Chriſt ſayeth they come in ſhepes clothing, which are inwardly rauening wolues: hee meaneth that they wante not faire pretences, if we doe not with wiſedome liſt them throughly.

16. By their fruites. If this note of difference had not bene added, the authoritie of all teachers might without exception haue come in queſtion. For if a deadly daunger were to be feared in the teachers, and that there were no meanes to auoide it, then all of neceſsitie ſhould be ſuſpected, ſted,and there ſhould not be a better remeady,then for all men to ſtutte their eares. And we ſee prophane menne pretend this daunger, that they might without puniſhment reiecte all kinde of doctrine, the weake alſo and the rude doe ſtande in doubt. Chriſt therefore leaſt that his Goſpell and the ſyncere and faithfull miniſters of the ſame ſhould looſe the reuerence due,commandeth that they ſhould iudge of falſe Prophets by their fruites. VVherefore the Papiſts are too fooliſh and corrupt, which that they might ſtirre vppe enuie againſt vs, doe preciſely caſt foorth this ſentence of Chriſte: beware of falſe prophets:and with their outeries, they make the ſimple,not knowing any cauſe why, raſhly to abhorre vs. But it is neceſſary that who ſoeuer deſireth to obey the councell of Chriſte, ſhould iudge wiſely and diſcretely: for we doe not onely willingly confeſſe,that falſe prophets ſhould be taken heede off, but we do alſo diligētly and earneſtly exhort the ſimple that they ſhoulde beware of them. Onely we admoniſh them, that accōrding to the rule of Chriſt they doe firſt certainly knowe them,leaſt the ſimple doe beare the puniſhment of their raſhneſſe in refuſing the pure woorde of God:for there is great difference betweene careſull heede taking, and prepoſterous loathing. But the Papiſts doe too wickedly abrogate the commaundement of Chriſte, which by caſting foorth a falſe feare, do driue the miſerable ſoules from ſearching. Therefore let this be firſt conſidered,that they which through feare doe refuſe or flee the doctrine whiche they knowe not, doe therein wickedly,and make ſinall accounte of this commaundement of Chriſte. Now remaineth to be ſeene,what fruits Chriſt noteth,and in my iudgement they are deceiued which reſtraine it to the life. For this triall were very vncertaine, when as the moſte wicked deceiuers doe imitate a moſte fained holineſſe, and alſo pretende I knowe not what ſhowes of moſte ſtraight life. I graunt that their hypocriſie ſhall be at the length reuealed, becauſe there is nothing more hard then to coūterfeit vertue. But Chriſt woulde not ſubmit his doctrine to ſo vnrighteous and baſe a iudgement, that it ſhould be meaſured by the life of men. Therfore vnder their fruites he comprehendeth the maner of teaching,and that is the chief. For therby Chriſt prooueth that he was ſent of God, becauſe he ſeeketh not hys owne glory,but his fathers which ſent him. Iohn 7.18. If any do obiect that fewe haue that capacitie geuen them to iudge good fruits from euil, I aunſweare as I ſayde euen nowe, that the faithfull when neede is, ſhall neuer wante the ſpirite of diſcretion, ſo that they diſtruſt in themſelues, and bidde their owne vnderſtanding farewel,and giue themſelues wholy to be gouerned of him. In the meane while let vs remember that all doctrines are to be brought to be tried by the worde of God, and therefore to be ruled by the analogie of faith in iudging falſe prophets. Then muſt be conſidered what God enioyneth to his Prophetes and miniſters of his woorde, for thereby may their faithfulneſſe be eaſily diſcerned. As for example ſake,if we propoſe vnto vs thoſe things which Paule requireth in Biſhops,that onely deſcription ſhal ſuffice to condemne the whole dunghill of Poperie: for the popiſh ſacrificers ſeeme to do their diligence to ſette vppe a contrary ſhew. VVherefore it is no merualle if they forbid men to iudge of falſe prophetes. But this place doeth euidently ſhewe that titles are nothing to be accounted off,no,nor the calling it ſelfe is of any eſtimation,except they be called paſtours,and being called to the office fice of teaching, do faithfully follow their calling. Do men gather. By thoſe Prouerbes which were then commonly vſed, and receiued by the conſent of all men, doth Chriſt prooue that no man can be deceiued by falſe prophets, but he which wil willingly be blinde. Becauſe the fruits do openly make triall which are the faithful ſeruaunts of God, and the falſe labourers, euen as the fruites doe ſhew the tree. The ſentence in Luke ſeemeth to be generall, whereby Chriſt teacheth that euerye man may be iudged by his fruits, as a tree is knowen by his fruit. For after he had ſet downe a reproofe againſt hypocrites, which ſee a moat in the eye of an other, not ſeeing a beame in their owne, hee preſently addeth. For an euill tree can not bring foorth, and that cauſall worde (For) ſeemeth to ioyne two ſentences together. But becauſe it is certaine that Luke in that ſixt chapter, rehearſeth diuers ſermons of Chriſt, it may be alſo that he doeth briefly touch that which Mathew ſetteth downe more fully. Neither doe I reſt vppon that cauſall aduerbe, whiche is oftentimes in other places ſuperfluous, which may alſo appear by that clauſe: for Luke ſo concludeth this ſpeach. A good manne out of the good treaſure of his heart. Neither doe I doubt, but that Chriſt doeth plainly ſette downe what maner of iudgement thys ſhould be, which he commaundeth to be had by the fruits: that is, that the faithfull ſhoulde diligently examine what fruite they bring foorth into the worlde, whiche profeſſe themſelues to be the ſeruaunts of God: as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde, titles doe ſmally auaile, vntill hee that ſpeaketh ſhall prooue in deede that he is ſent from God: yet I do not deny but that this place may bee applied to the generall doctrine. And certainely the laſt clauſe, namely: that of the aboundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, doeth reache further then to the falſe prophetes, ſeeing that is ſo common a prouerbe. If any doe obiecte that mennes tongues doe often lie, ſo that they ſpeake beſt which are woorſt affectionate: I anſweare, Chriſt doeth here teache ſimply, that which is moſte commonly vſed. For althoughe hypocrites doe pretende one thing in wordes, which they doe neuer thinke in their heart: yet that letteth not but that the toung may be aptly and very well called the figure or ſhewe of the minde.

Mathewe 7.	Marke.	Luke 6.
21. Not euery one that ſayeth vnto mee Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdome of heauen, but hee that doeth my fathers will which is in heauen. 22. Many will ſay to mee in that day, Lorde, Lorde, haue we not by thy name propheſied? and by thy name caſt out deuilles? and by thy name done many great woorkes? 23. And then will I profeſſe to them, I neuer knewe you, departe from mee, yee that woorke iniquitie.		46. But why call ye me maſter, maſter, and do not thinges that I ſpeake.

21. Not euery one that ſayeth. Chriſt ſtretcheth his ſpeache further. Neither ſpeaketh hee onely of falſe prophetes, which breake in amongſt the flocke, to ſteale and to deuoure: but of hirelings, which vnder the countenaunce of ſhepheardes doe deceitfully thruſte in themſelues, and yet haue haue no affection of godlineſſe. And although this doctrine comprehendeth all hypocrites what degree or place ſoeuer they are in: yet he doeth properly touche falſe teachers whiche ſeeme to excell aboue others. Neither doeth he direct his ſpeache to them alone, that hee might waken them out of their ſecuritie, wherin they lie as drunken menne, but he alſo admoniſheth the faithfull, that they geue not to ſuche diſguiſed people, more then is meete. In ſumme, hee foretelleth that aſſoone as the doctrine of the Goſpell ſhall beginne to bring foorth fruite, ſo that it ſhall haue many diſciples, there ſhall be many not onely of the common ſorte which ſhall falſly and hypocritically geue their name to the Goſpell, but alſo amongſt the paſtours, there ſhall be the ſame falſhoode, ſo that they ſhal denie in deedes and life that which they profeſſe with mouth. Therfore who ſoeuer deſireth to be accounted amongeſt his diſciples, he muſt doe his diligence that hee may ſincerely and from his heart addicte himſelfe to meditate newneſſe of life. In Luke there is a generall reproofe, But why cal ye me maiſter, maiſter. But becauſe that this corruption doth for the moſte parte ſpring from diſſembling teachers, and doeth the more eaſily ſpreade from them to the whole body: therfore in Mathew Chriſt doth namely inueighe againſt them. To doe the will of the father, doeth not onely ſignifie philoſophically to frame their life and maners to a rule of vertues, but alſo to beleeue in Chriſt, as it is ſayd in Iohn 6.40. Therfore in theſe wordes faith is not excluded, but is eſtabliſhed as the ſpring from whence the reſt doe flowe.

22. Many ſhall ſay vnto mee. Chriſte citeth againe the hypocrites before his iudgement ſeat, as we ſayd euen now out of Luke. for ſo long as they occupie a place in the Churche, they doe partly flatter themſelues, and alſo they doe partly deceiue others. Therefore he ſayeth that there ſhall be a day wherein hee will purge his floore, and the weedes and chaffe ſhall be ſeparate from the pure wheate. To propheſie in Chriſtes name, is by his authoritie, and as it were by his gouernment to execute the office of teaching. For prophecie in my iudgement is taken in this place generally, as in 1. Corinthians 14. he might haue ſimply vſed the woorde of preaching: but purpoſely he vſed that which was of greater eſtimation, that hee might the better declare that the outwarde profeſsion is nothinge woorth, howe excellently ſo euer menne doe account of it. So to worke myracles in the name of Chriſte, is nothing elſe then to doe myracles by his power, aide, gouernement and leading. For althoughe the name of woorkes is ſometime reſtrained to one ſorte or kinde of myracles, yet in this place and in many others, he noteth all myracles.

23. I will profeſſe to them. By thys ſpeache Chriſte ſeemeth to allude to the vaine boaſting wherein hypocrites doe nowe at this day vaunt themſelues, as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde, while they confeſſed mee with their tounge, they thought that they had diſcharged their ductie well: and now a holowe confeſsion of my name with their tounge is hearde. But I in like ſorte confeſſe againſt them, that what ſoeuer they profeſſe, is vaine and lying.

But what meaneth this confeſsion of Chriſt, that he neuer accounted them amongeſt the number of his diſciples: no not euen when they glorieed that they were the pillers of the Churche?

There-

Therefore hee commaundeth them to ceaſe, which vnder a deceitfull title haue for a time ſtolne an vniuſt poſſeſsion to their houſe. It ſeemeth that Paule tooke out of this ſermon of Chriſte that which hee ſayeth. 2. Tim. 2. 19. The Lord knoweth who are his, let euery one that calleth on the name of the Lord depart from iniquitie. For the firſt clauſe tendeth to this purpoſe, that the weake ſhoulde not fainte nor be troubled at the falling away of ſome, whoſe name was great and famous. For hee ſayeth that they were neuer knowen of the Lorde, though they daſiled the eyes of men with a vaine ſhew. Then he exhorteth all them which would be accounted amongſt the diſciples of Chriſt, that they ſhould ſpedily withdrawe themſelues from iniquitie, leaſt that Chriſt doe driue them away out of his ſight, when he ſhall ſeparate the lambes from the goates.

Mathewe 7.

24. VVho ſoeuer then heareth of me theſe words, and doeth the ſame, I will liken him to a wiſe man which hath built his houſe on a rocke.

25. And the raine fell, and the floudes came, and the windes blewe, and beat vpon that houſe, and it fell not, for it was grounded on a rocke.

26. But who ſoeuer heareth theſe my wordes, and doeth them not, ſhall be likened to a foolish man which hath builded his houſe vpon the ſande.

27. And the raine fell, and the floudes came, and the windes blewe, and beat vpon that houſe, and it fell, and the fall thereof was great.

28. And it came to paſſe when Ieſus had ended theſe woordes, the people were aſtonied at his doctrine.

29. For he taught them as one hauing authoritie, and not as the ſcribes.

Marke.

Luke 6.

47 VVho ſoeuer cõmeth to me, and heareth my words, & doth the ſame I will ſhew you to whom hee is like.

48. Hee is like a man which built a houſe, and digged deepe, and laide the foũdatiõ on a rock. & when the waters aroſe, the floud beat vpon that houſe, and could not ſhake it: for it was grounded vpon a rocke.

49. But he that heareth and doeth not, is like a man that built a houſe vpon the earth without foundation, againſt which the flud did beat & it fel by and by, and the fall of that houſe was great.

24. VVho ſoeuer then. Becauſe for the moſte parte it is harde to diſcerne the true profeſſours of the Goſpell from the counterfeit, Chriſt by an apt ſimilitude ſheweth wherein they differ moſt. For he propoſeth two houſes, whereof the one was built without a foundation, and the other had a good foundation. For when there was to the ſhew the ſame outward appearance in them bothe, the firſt being beaten with winde and ſtormes, or ſhaken with flouds, doeth preſently fall: but the latter ſtandeth faſt vpon his ſure foundation againſt all violence. Chriſt therfore compareth the vaine and windie profeſsion of the Goſpell, to a beautifull, but no ſound building, which thoughe it was ſette vppe to the ſhewe, yet it was ready to fall at euery moment, becauſe it lacked a foundation. Therefore Paul cõmandeth vs to be wel & throughly groũded in Chriſt, & to haue deepe deepe rootes, leaſt wee bee caried away at euery blaſte. In ſumme, this is the purpoſe, true godlineſſe cannot bee diſcerned from counterfaite holineſſe, vntil an examination and trial do come: for temptations wherwith we are tried, are like to floudes and ſtormes, which doe eaſily beate downe vnſtable mindes, whoſe lightneſſe is not perceiued in a calme and quiet time. Heareth theſe wordes. The relatiue Theſe, doth not note one kinde of doctrine, but the whole ſumme of doctrine. For the Goſpell, except it be deepely fixed in our mindes, (hee ſayeth) is like vnto a wall whych is builte highe, and is ſtrengthened with no foundation. Therefore it is as muche as if he ſhoulde haue ſayd, that is in deede the true faith which taketh deepe rootes in the heart, and reſteth vppon an earneſt and a conſtant zeale as vppon a foundation, ſo that it yeeldeth not to temptations. But ſuch is the vanitie of mans vnderſtanding, they which dig and pearſe not inwardly euen to the denial of themſelues, doe build vpon the ſande.

28. VVhen Ieſus had ended theſe wordes. I vnderſtande as well that ſermone which he had when he deſcended out of the mountaine, as the reſt of hys doctrine which he had nowe vttered to the people. Therefore the meaning is, when as hee had in diuers places geuen a taſte of his doctrine to the people, they were all amaſed, becauſe that a certain new and vnwonted maieſtie did drawe the mindes of men vnto him. VVhat it is to teache with authoritie and otherwiſe then the Scribes were accuſtomed, I haue before declared.

Mathewe 8.	Marke. 1.	Luke 5.
1. Nowe when he was come downe from the mountaine, great multitudes folowed him.	40. And ther came a Leper to him, beſeching him, & kneled down vnto him, & ſaid vnto him: If thou wilt thou canſt make me cleane.	12. Nowe it came to paſſe as hee was in a certaine citie, beheld there was a manful of Leproſie, and when he ſaw Ieſus, he fell on his face, and beſought him, ſaying, Lorde: if thou wilt, thou canſte make me cleane.
2. And lo there came a Leper, and woorshipped him, ſaying: maiſter: If thou wilt, thou canſt make me cleane.	41. And Ieſus had compaſſion, & put forth his hand, & touched him. & ſaid to him, I wil: be thou clean.	13. So he ſtretched foorth his hand, and touched him, ſaying, I wil, be thou cleane, and immediately the Leproſie departed from him.
3. And Ieſus putting foorth his hande, touched him, ſaying: I wil, bee thou cleane: and immediately his Leproſie was cleanſed.	42. And aſſoone as he had ſpoken, immediately the Leproſie departed from him, & hee was made cleane.	14. And he commanded him that he ſhould tell it no man: but go, ſayeth he, and shew thy ſelf to the prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing, as Moſes hath cõmãded for a witnes vnto thẽ.
4. Then Ieſus ſayde vnto him: See thou tel no manne, but goe and shewe thy ſelfe to the prieſte, and offer the gift which Moſes commaunded, for a witneſſe to them.	43. And after he had geuen him a ſtraight commaundement, hee ſent him away foorthwith,	15. But ſo much more wẽt ther a fame abroade of him: and great multitudes came together to heare and to be healed of him of their infirmities.
	44. And ſaide vnto him, See thou ſay nothing to any man, but gette thee hence, and shewe thy ſelfe to the prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſinge thoſe thinges whiche Moſes commanded, for a teſtimonial vnto them.	16. But he kept himſelf a part in the wildernes, and prayed.
	45. And by and by he aroſe, and tooke vppe his bedde, and went foorth before them all, in ſo muche that they were all amaſed, and glorified God, ſaying: wee neuer ſawe ſuch a thing.	17. VVhen

1. VVhen hee was come downe from the mountaine. Nowe Mathewe retourneth to the hyſtorie. He ſayd before that Chriſt aſcended into the mountaine: Then he gathered as into one heape many poyntes of the doctrine of Chriſte: and nowe he addeth, that when as he preached in the mounte, hee healed a certaine Leper. Marke and Luke doe reporte the ſame hyſtorie, thoughe they doe not ſette downe the time. Alſo the Godheade of Chriſte was ſhewed in the ſame, in ſo muche as with his onely woorde, and touching with his hande, he preſently cured the man of his leproſie. But though this leproſie hadde beene an other kinde of diſeaſe, then that which is called elephantiaſis: yet it appeareth plainly that it was harde to be cured. And if it had continued any long time, it was a rare exãple to haue any man healed of the ſame. But if wee graunt that Phiſitions coulde by the knowledge of their Arte haue holpe the ſame, yet it appeared in thys myracle, that there was no helpe of man in it.

2. Hee came and woorshipped. VVhat the Verbe doeth ſignifie, which they tranſlate to worship, may eaſily be gathered out of this place. For the other two Euangeliſtes doe helpe vs well in the interpretation of it: of whiche Marke ſayeth he kneeled downe, and Luke ſayeth hee fell vpon his face. Therefore in his geſture, that is, in his kneeling, the Leper ſhewed a ſigne of reuerence. And we knowe that the Iewes did comnonly vſe worſhipping, as the people of the Eaſt are much bent to ſuch ceremonies. VVherfore many thinke that this Leper thought not to worſhip Chriſte with any diuine worſhippe, but onely to ſalute him honourably as ſome excellent Prophet of the Lorde. But I doe not diſpute with what affection hee worſhipped Chriſt: but what he attributed to him I ſee, that is, that hee coulde make him cleane if he woulde. By which woordes hee witneſſeth that he acknowledged a diuine power in Chriſte. And when Chriſt anſweareth that he will, he ſheweth that hee hathe more attributed to him by manne, then is proper to manne. For it is neceſſary that he ſhoulde be of greate power, that ſhoulde reſtore menne to health: for whether the Leaper beleeued Chriſte to be the Sonne of God, or that hee hadde this power giuen him as Moſes and the Prophets: Yet hee doubteth not but that he hath in his hand and power the gift of healing. And that he ſpeaketh vnder condition: If thou wilt thou canſt, is not contrary to that aſſurance of faith, which God requireth in our prayers: neither ought men to hope after more then God promiſeth. And the Leper was not aſſured either by Oracle or by any promiſe of God, what Chriſte woulde doe to him, therefore hee ſhoulde haue done raſhly, if hee hadde paſſed beyonde theſe boundes: for whereas we reade that ſome did ſometimes pray ſimplie, it is to bee vnderſtoode that they had ſome ſingular motions, which can not be holden as a rule. Yet I knowe not whether one ſpeaking properly, may ſay that the Leper conceiued this as a praier: For he only ſayth that he is ſo perſwaded of the power of Chriſt, ſo that hee doubteth not but that he coulde heale his Leproſie. Then he offreth himſelfe to be healed by him, being yet vncertaine of the ſucceſſe: becauſe the will of Chriſt was not as yet knowen vnto him.

3. Putting foorth his hande hee touched him. The touching of a Leper in the time of the lawe was contagious: but becauſe there was that puritie in Chriſte, whiche ſwaloweth vppe all vncleanneſſe and pollutions, he doth neither defile himſelfe by touching the Leper, neither doth he tranſgreſſe the the lawe. Hee taking vppon him our fleſh, doeth not onely vouchſafe vs the touchinge of his hande,but tooke vppon him one,and the ſame body wyth vs,that we might be fleſh of his fleſh: Neither doeth he onely reach his arme to vs, but deſcendeth from heauen euen to the very helles: yet notwithſtanding, hee was not any thing blotted thereby,but remaining perfecte,hee tooke away all our filthineſſe, and hath waſhed vs with hys holineſſe. But when wyth his woorde alone,hee was able to heale a Leper,he alſo touched him wyth his hande,to witneſſe his mercifull affection,and no marueile,ſeeinge that hee woulde take vppon him our fleſhe, that hee might purge vs from all our ſinnes, wherefore the reaching out of his hande,was a ſigne and a token of his great fauour and goodneſſe. And certainly, that whiche wee doe careleſly paſſe by through our colde reading, can not bee well conſidered wythout great woonder; that the Sonne of God was ſo farre from abhorringe to ſpeake with the Leper, that hee reached out his hand alſo to touche his vncleanneſſe.

4. Ieſus ſayde vnto him. Some, that they might excuſe the Leper, do not thinke that hee was earneſtly forbidden by Chriſte, that hee ſhoulde not publiſhe the myracle, but that it was rather vſed to pricke him forwarde: yet others are of a better iudgement whiche thinke that the cauſe of his forbidding,was,for that the time appoynted was not yet come. I graunt that this myracle ought not to haue bene ſuppreſſed:but there was ſome certaine reaſon why the Lorde would not haue his fame ſpred ſo ſoone, or at the leaſt not vttered by the Leper, therefore I iudge that the Leper by his prepoſterous zeale was ſo farre from deſeruing any praiſe,that he was rather to be condemned becauſe he did not obey the commaundement.If hee woulde haue bene thankefull to him that healed hym, hee coulde not otherwiſe haue done it better then by obedience, which wyth God is preferred before al ſacrifices,1.Sam.15.22.and it is the beginning and chiefe of all lawfull worſhippe.

Therfore by this example we are taught,that they do wickedly,which maintaine an vnaduiſed zeale: for the more they applie themſelues in the ſeruice of God,the more they encreaſe the number of rebelles againſt hys commaundement.

Shewe thy ſelfe to the prieſt. Becauſe the Ceremonies of the lawe were not as yet abrogated, Chriſte woulde not that they ſhoulde be contemned or pretermitted. Nowe God in his lawe hadde commaunded (as it is reported in the fourteenth chapiter of Leuiticus,and the ſeconde verſe,) that if any manne was cleanſed from his Leproſie,that hee ſhould offer himſelfe to the prieſt, with a ſacrifice of thankes giuinge. And the ende was, that the prieſt by his iudgement ſhould approoue the benefite of God, and alſo,that hee that was healed,ſhoulde ſhewe ſome teſtimonie of his thankefulneſſe. Chriſte therefore ſending the Leper to the Prieſt, doeth declare that hee hadde no other purpoſe,but that hee might ſette foorth the glorie of God. For the ſhewing is referred to a triall,and the gifte was a token of thankes giuing. His will was that the prieſtes ſhoulde iudge, that the grace of God might bee the more euident and vndoubted: and that the Leper ſhoulde acknowledge that hee was healed of God. Yet (as I ſayde euen nowe) hee commaundeth to keepe the rites preſcribed in the lawe vnto the time of the abrogation.

The Papiſtes are without all reaſon, in that out of this place they gather a lawe of their confeſsion. Allegorically they call ſinne a leproſie: and the ſacrificers which the Pope conſecrateth, to be the iudges of the ſpiritual leproſie. But if we ſhould graunt that this power was geuen to the prieſtes in the lawe, that the people might know that all their cleanneſſe and iudgement of the ſame did depende vppon the Prieſthoode: Yet the Popiſh ſacrificers did wickedly, to take that vnto themſelues. For what honour ſo euer was geuen to the Prieſtes of the law, the ſame doth Chriſte nowe chalenge to himſelfe alone. Therefore he onely knoweth and iudgeth of the ſpirituall leproſie, and hee is onely worthy to whom they that are cleanſed, ſhould offer the gift of their purgation. And therfore vnder the lawe was their cleanſing ſealed by the offering of a ſacrifice, becauſe that menne are not otherwiſe cleanſed then by ſhedding of bloud. Therefore to geue that right to any other, which God hathe aſſigned to his owne Sonne, is moſte hainous ſacrileadge. And that Chriſte commaunded the miniſters of the Goſpell to declare vnto ſinners that they are made cleane, whiche the Papiſtes doe imagine to appertaine to their fained iuriſdiction, is not to be wreaſted that they might diſcerne of the leproſie.

MARKE. 44. For a witneſſe vnto them. Some do take a teſtimonie for a lawe or a ſtatute, as it is ſayd in the hundreth two and twentie Pſalme, and the fourth verſe. God gaue this as a teſtimonie to Iſrael. Yet this ſemeth to mee to be colde: for I doubt not but that the pronowne Them, hath relation to the prieſtes. Therefore in my iudgement Chriſte hadde reſpecte to the circumſtaunce of this preſent matter: becauſe that in thys myracle there ſhoulde be moſte euident proofe to conuince them for their vnthankefulneſſe. Neither is that any lette that Chriſt commaunded the Leper to holde his peace: for his will was not that the remembraunce of this myracle ſhould be buried for euer. Therfore, when as by the commaundement of Chriſt the Leper came into the prieſts ſight: it was to witneſſe vnto them that they were inexcuſable, if they woulde not embrace Chriſte for a miniſter of God, and alſo all occaſion of ſpeaking euill was taken away, when as Chriſte did not omitte any poynte of the lawe.

In ſumme, if they had not ben incurable, they might haue ben brought to Chriſte, but this ſo ſolempne a witneſſe of God was effectual enough for the condemning of the vnbeleeuers.

45. So that Ieſus coulde no more. Heereby we gather why Chriſte would not that this myracle ſhoulde ſo ſoone haue bene vttered, that he might by that meanes haue hadde the more libertie to teache, not that the ennemies roſe vppe againſte him whiche ſought to ſtoppe his mouthe: But becauſe the importunitie of the people was ſo great in deſiring myracles, that hee hadde no time for doctrine: and his will was to haue all menne more bent to the woorde then to ſignes.

Therefore Luke ſayeth that hee dwelt in the deſartes. For he auoided the reſort of menne, becauſe he ſawe hee coulde not ſatisfie the deſires of the people, except he ſhould ouerwhelme his doctrine with aboundance of ſignes.

Mathewe

Mathewe 8.	Marke.	Luke 7.
5. VVhen Ieſus was entred into Capernaum, there came vnto him a Centurion beſeeching him,		1 VVhen he had ended al his ſayings in the audience of the people, hee entred into Capernaum.
6. And ſaide, maiſter, my ſeruaunt lieth ſicke at home of the palſie, and is grieuouſly pained.		2. And a certaine Centurions ſeruaunt was ſicke, & ready to die, which was deare vnto him.
7. And Ieſus ſayde vnto him, I will come and heale him.		3. And when he heard of Ieſus, hee ſent vnto him the Elders of the Iewes, beſeeching him that hee would come and heale his ſeruaunt.
8. But the Centurion anſweared, ſaying: Maiſter, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldeſt come vnder my rouſe: but ſpeake the woorde onely, and my ſeruaunt ſhalbe healed.		4. So they came to Ieſus, and beſought him inſtantly: ſaying, that hee was woorthy that he ſhoulde doe this for him.
9. For I am a manne alſo vnder the authoritie of another, and haue ſouldiours vnder mee: and I ſay to one, Goe: and he goeth, and to another, Come, and he commeth, and to my ſeruaunt, Do this, and he doeth it.		5. For he loueth, ſayde they, our nation, and he hath built vs a ſynagogue.
		6. Then Ieſus went with them: but when he was nowe not farre from the houſe, the Centurion ſent friendes to him, ſaying to him, Lorde, trouble not thy ſelfe: for I am not woorthy that thou ſhouldeſt enter vnder my rouſe.
10. VVhen Ieſus heard that, hee marueiled and ſayde to them that folowed him: Verely I ſay vnto you, I haue not found ſo great faith euen in Iſrael.		7. VVherefore I thought not my ſelf worthy to come vnto thee: but ſay the woorde, and my ſeruaunt ſhalbe hole.
11. But I ſay vnto you, that many ſhall come from the Eaſte and VVeſt, and ſhall ſitte downe with Abraham and Iſaac, and Iacob in the kingdome of heauen.		8. For I likewiſe am a manne ſette vnder authoritie, and haue vnder me ſouldiours, and I ſay vnto one: Goe, and he goeth, and to an other Come, and he commeth, and to my ſeruant Do this, and he doeth it.
12. And the childrē of the kingdome ſhall bee caſte out into vtter darkeneſſe: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teethe.		9. VVhen Ieſus heard theſe thinges, he marueiled at him, and turned him, and ſayde to the people that folowed him, I ſay vnto you, I haue not founde ſo great faith: no not in Iſrael.
13. Then Ieſus ſayde vnto the Centurion: Goe thy way, and as thou haſt beleued, ſo be it vnto thee. And his ſeruaunte was healed the ſame houre.		10. And when they that were ſent, turned backe to the houſe, they founde the ſeruaunt that was ſicke, hole.

5. VVhen Ieſus was entered. They which thinke that Mathewe and Luke doe ſet downe two diuers hyſtories, do ſtriue about a matter of nothing. This onely diuerſitie is in the wordes. That Mathew ſayeth that a Centurion came to Chriſt. But Luke ſayeth that he ſent certaine of the Iewes which ſhould ſpeake vnto him in his name. But Mathew doth not without a cauſe attribute that vnto him, which was done at his requeſt and in his name. But the two Euangeliſtes do ſo agree in all circumſtances, that it were a follie to imagine two myracles of one. Alſo I doubt not but the companie of ſouldiours, which the Centurion guided, had their ſtanding in the Citie of Capernaum, as they were woont to diſtribute legions for the defence of the cities. VVhen hee perceiued the maners of the people to be very wicked and corrupt: (for we knowe that Capernaum being a citie neare to the ſea ſide, was filled with moe ſuperſtitions then others,) yet that hindered not but that the countrey ſuperſtitions being condemned, he might haue a taſte of true and ſincere godlineſſe: for he could not builde a ſynagogue for the Iewes without ſome enuie and daunger, neyzher could he loue that nation, but becauſe that he embraced the worſhip of God alone. Therefore before that Chriſte healed his ſeruant, he himſelfe was healed of the Lord. And that was wonderfull, that a warriour which had paſſed the ſeas with a band of ſouldiours, that he might accuſtome the Iewes to beare the yoke of the Romaines tyrannie, ſhould willingly ſubmitte himſelfe and yelde obedience to the God of Iſrael. That Luke ſayeth that this ſeruant was deare vnto him: he by this meanes preuenteth a dout which might come into the readers minds. For we know that the maſters had not the ſeruants in ſuch eſtimation, except they were ſuche as through ſingular induſtrie, faith, or ſome other vertue, had obtained their fauour. Luke therefore declareth that hee was no common or vile bondman, but a faithful ſeruaunt endued with rare giftes, which was in great fauour with his maiſter: for this cauſe hee had ſo great a care of his life, and did ſo diligently commend him. But it appeareth by both the Euangeliſts, that it was a ſodaine palſie which at the firſt did put him in deſpaire of life, for the ſlow palſies are without torments. And Mathewe ſayeth that the young man was grieuouſly vexed. And Luke ſayeth hee was neare vnto death: ſo both ſayings preuaile to ſet foorth the glory of the myracle, either the ſorowe and paine, or the great daunger, ſo that I dare ſay the leſſe, for the certaintie of the maner of the diſeaſe.

LVKE. 5. For hee loueth our nation. It is not to be doubted but that the Iewes commende him for his godlineſſe. For he coulde not for any other cauſe loue ſo deteſted a nation, then for loue of the lawe and woorſhippe of God. And by building of a Synagogue, he did euidently declare that hee fauoured the doctrine of the lawe. VVherefore they ſay, and not without a cauſe, that hee was woorthy to haue Chriſte ſhewe himſelfe bountifull to him, as to a godly woorſhipper of God. Yet it is to be wondered at, that by their entreatie they ſhoulde obtaine the fauour of God for a Gentile, whiche they themſelues contemptuouſly refuſed. For if Chriſte bee a miniſter and a diſpenſer of the gifts of God for them, why doe not they enioy that grace themſelues, before they gette it for ſtraungers. But ſuche ſecuritie doeth alwaies raigne amongeſt hypocrites, that they thinke to make God after a ſorte obedient vnto them, as if it were in their power to make the grace of God ſubiect to their power and wil. Then beinge filled therewith, or rather becauſe they doe not vouchſafe to taſte thereof at all, they reſigne it vnto others as a thynge ſuperfluous.

MATH. 8. I am not woorthy that hee ſhoulde come vnder my rouſe. Becauſe Mathewe is ſhorter, hee bringeth the manne ſpeaking thus himſelfe. But Luke expreſsing it more fully, ſayeth that hee gaue this in commaundement to his friends, but the meaning of both is all one. But there are two principall poyntes of this ſentence. The Centurion ſparing Chriſte, for honour ſake, requireth that Chriſte ſhoulde not wearie himſelfe, becauſe hee accounteth himſelfe vnworthie of his comming. Then hee attributeth ſo great power to him, that hee beleeueth that by his onely will and woorde, he canne reſtore his ſeruaunt to life. A woonderfull humilitie: that hee ſhoulde extol a manne of a ſeruile and a captiue nation ſo much aboue himſelfe. And it may be that being accuſtomed to the pride of the Iewes, through his owne modeſtie hee did not take in ill parte to be accounted a prophane manne, and ſo was afraide to iniurie the Prophete of God, if hee ſhoulde bee compelled to come to a manne that was a Gentile and vncleane. VVhat ſoeuer the matter is, it is certaine that hee ſpeaketh from his heart, and that hee eſteemeth ſo reuerently of Chriſte, that hee dareth not call him to him. Naye, as it foloweth in the texte in Luke, hee accounted himſelfe as vnworthie his ſpeache. Yet it may bee demaunded by what reaſon he was perſwaded ſo highly to extol Chriſt: and that whiche preſently foloweth, encreaſeth the doubt the more. Onely ſpeake the word and the childe ſhalbe healed. For if he had not knowen Chriſt to bee the Sonne of God, it hadde beene ſuperſtition to haue geuen the glory of God to a man.

But it is ſcarce credible that hee coulde bee rightly inſtructed in the Godhead of Chriſte, whiche as yet was vnknowen almoſte to all. Alſo Chriſte imputeth not, nor chargeth his woordes with ignoraunce, but declareth that they proceede of faith. And this reaſon enforced many interpreaters to thinke that the Centurion celebrateth Chriſte as the true and onely God. But I thinke, that when the godly manne was fully aſſured of the diuine woorkes of Chriſte, he ſimplie apprehended the power of God in him. And without doubte hee hadde alſo hearde ſomewhat of the promiſed Redemer. Therefore thoughe hee vnderſtode not Chriſte to bee God manifeſted in the fleſhe: yet hee was ſo perſwaded, that the power of God was ſhewed in him, and that ſuche a gift was giuen him, that in his myracles hee ſhewed the preſence of God. So hee doeth not ſuperſtitiouſly aſcribe that vnto manne, whiche was proper to God: but conſidering what was committed of God to Chriſte, he beleeued that by his woorde alone, hee coulde heale his ſeruaunt.

If auy Obiect, that there is nothing more proper to God, then to do by his word what he pleaſeth, & that this mighty power can not wythout ſacriledge bee giuen to a mortall manne: that againe is eaſilye aunſweared. Althoughe the Centurion did not ſo ſubtilly diſtinguiſh, yet hee did not attribute thys power to the woorde of a mortal manne, but of God, whoſe miniſter hee was certainely perſwaded Chriſte was. This he douted not of. Therefore when as Chriſte hadde the power of healing, hee acknowledging it to bee a heauenly power, doeth not tie it to his bodily preſence, but is ſatisfied with his woorde, from whence hee beleueth that ſuche power proceedeth.

The ſimilitude whyche the Centurion vſeth, is not taken of the like, as they ſay: but compareth the leſſe wyth the greater. For hee accounteth more of the Diuine power, whyche hee declareth to bee in Chriſte, then of that power whyche hee himſelfe hadde ouer his ſeruaunts and ſouldiours.

10. Iesus marueiled. Although it cannot befal to God to marualle, becauſe that it ariſeth of thinges that are newe and vnlooked for: yet maye it befall to Chriſte, as he hadde with our fleſh taken vpon him mannes affections. Nowe that which Chriſt ſayeth, that he founde not ſo great faith euen in Iſrael, was ſpoken in a certaine reſpecte, and not ſimplie: for if we conſider all the poyntes of faith, the faith of Marie did heerein at the leaſte excell, that ſhe beleeued that ſhe was with childe by the holy Ghoſt, and that ſhe ſhould beare the onely begotten ſonne of God. Then, that ſhe acknowledged her ſonne borne of her wombe, to bee her creatour, and the maker and onely redeemer of all the worlde. But Chriſt commended the faith of this heathen manne before the faith of al the Iewes for two eſpeciall cauſes: Namely, that of ſo little and ſmall a taſte of doctrine, hee brought forth ſo great fruit, and that ſo ſodeinly: for this was not common, ſo highly to extoll the power of God, which only beganne to ſhine as certaine ſparkes, in Chriſt. Then, whereas the Iewes were bent to outwarde ſignes more then was meete, this heathen man requireth no viſible ſigne: but ſayeth that the onely worde ſhould ſatisfie him. Chriſt was a comming to him, not that hee needed, but that hee mighte prooue this faith of his. VVherefore for this cauſe eſpecially he cõmendeth this faith, becauſe he reſted vppon his worde onely. VVhat would euen one of the Apoſtles haue done? Come Lorde, ſee and touche. This manne deſireth neither his corporal comming nor his touching: but beleeueth that there is ſo great power included in the worde, that thereby hee doeth certainly looke for the healthe of his ſeruaunt. And hee geueth this honour not to the worde of a manne, but to the worde of God, which ſheweth that Chriſt is not a priuate manne, but a Prophet ſent from God. And hereby may a general rule be gathered, although God would that our ſaluation ſhoulde be wrought in the fleſh of Chriſte, and doeth daily ſeale the ſame by his Sacramentes, yet the certaintie of the ſame is to bee fetched out of the worde. For except this authoritie be giuen to the worde, that we beleeue that ſo ſoone as God ſpeaketh by his miniſters, our ſinnes are forgiuen vs, and wee reſtored to life, all the hope of our ſaluation falleth away.

11. Many ſhall come from the Eaſt. As in the perſon of the ſeruaunt, Chriſt gaue a taſte, and as it were the firſt fruites of his grace to the Gentiles: ſo hee teacheth that his maiſter was a token of the calling of the Gentiles which was to come, and of ſpreading the faith throughout al the world. For hee teacheth that they ſhoulde come, not onely out of the next borders, but from the furtheſt coaſtes of the worlde. And though this was witneſſed by many propheſies of the prophetes, yet at the firſt this ſeemed to be abſurde and incredible to the Iewes, which imagined that God was bounde to the ſtocke of Abraham. VVherefore this cannot bee hearde without admiration, that thoſe which were then ſtraungers, ſhoulde bee of the houſholde and heires of the kingdome of God. And not onely ſo, but the couenaunt of ſaluation ſhoulde preſently bee publiſhed, that all the worlde might be gathered into one body of the Churche, while the Gentiles which ſhoulde come to the faith, ſhoulde, as he ſayeth, be made partakers of the ſaluation with Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob. Heereby we doe aſſuredly gather that the ſame ſaluation whiche is geuen vnto vs thoroughe Chriſte, was in times paſt promiſed alſo to the Fathers: for

For otherwiſe inheritaunce could not be common, except the faith were one, which is the meanes to obtaine the ſame.

In the worde ſitting downe there is an alluſion to tables. Yet beecauſe wee knowe that the heauenly lyfe needeth not meate and drinke, the ſpeach ſignifieth as much as if it had bene ſayde, they ſhal enioy the ſame lyfe.

12. But the children of the kingdome. VVhy calleth hee them the children of the kingdome, which were nothing leſſe then the children of Abraham? For certeinely it is not meete that they ſhould be accounted in the flocke of God, which are ſtraungers from the fayth. I anſwer, although they were not rightly of the Church of God: yet beecauſe they did occupy a place in the Church, he graunteth them this title. Then it is to be noted, that the couenaunt of God was of ſuch force, that ſo longe as it contiuued in the ſtocke of Abraham, the enheritaunce of the heauenlye kingdom ſhould properly belong to them. At the leaſt, in reſpect of God himſelfe, they were then as yet holy braunches of a holye roote: and the forſaking which followed, ſheweth ſufficientlye that they were then retained in the houſhold of God. Secondly, it is to bee noted, that Chriſte ſpeaketh nor of perticuler men, but of the whole nation. And this was much harder then the calling of the Gentiles. For it was ſomewhat tollerable that the Gentiles ſhoulde be grafted by free adoption into the body of Abraham with his poſteritie: but that the Iewes theſelues ſhuld be thruſt out, that the Gentiles might ſucceed into their emptie roumth, that was accounted wonderfull. Yet Chriſt ſaith, that both theſe thinges ſhould come to paſſe, that God would admit ſtraungers into the boſome of Abraham, and that he would driue out the children. In outwarde darkeneſſe, there is a ſecrete Antitheſis. For God declareth that out of his kingdome, which is the kingdome of light, there reigneth nothing but darknes. And the ſcripture doth metaphorically by darknes ſignifie a horryble griefe, which cannot be expreſſed by wordes, nor in this life canne be comprehended in any ſenſe.

13. Goe, and as thou beliewſt. Heereby it appeareth how louingly Chriſt powreth forth his grace, where hee obtaineth a veſſell of fayth opened. For although he ſpeaketh to the Centurion in theſe wordes: yet it is not to be doubted, but that by him he calleth vs all to hope well. But we are heereby alſo taught, why God for the moſt part dealeth more ſtreightlye rowardes vs: for our vnbeliefe reſtraineth his lyberalitie. Therefore if by fayth wee open a paſſage for him, hee will heare our requeſtes and prayers.

Matth.	Marke.	Luke. 7.
		11. And it came to paſſe the day after that he went into a citie called Naim, and many of his diſciples went with him, and a great multitude.
		12. Now, when he came neere to the gate of the citie: beholde, there was a dead man caryed out, who was the onely ſonne of his mother, which was a wydow, and much people of the citie was with her.
		13. And when the Lorde ſawe her, hee had compassion on her, and saide vnto her, weepe not.

14. And hee went and touched the coffin, and they that bare him stood still, and he said, young man I say vnto thee, arise.

15. And he that was dead, sate vp, and began to speake, and he deliuered him to his mother.

16. Then there came a feare on them all, and they glorified GOD, sayinge, a great Prophete is rayſed vppe amonge vs, and GOD hath viſited his people.

17. And this rumor of him went forth throughout all Iudea, and throughout all the region round about.

11. And it came to passe. VVhen as in all the miracles of Chriſt, that analogie is to be holden, which Matthew teacheth, let vs know that this young manne, which Chriſt rayſed from death, is a token of the ſpirituall lyfe, which Chriſt reſtoreth to vs. The name of the citie maketh for the certeintie of the hyſtorie. To the ſame purpoſe alſo appertaineth that which Luke ſaieth: that a great company followed them both: for both Chriſt had many companions with him, and many for ductie ſake, were preſent with the woman, to perfourme the bury all. Therefore the reſurrection of the young manne was ſeene of ſo many witneſſes, that the miracle might not be doubted of. Hyther alſo appertaineth the famouſneſſe of the place: for we knowe that the aſſemblyes were in the gates. And that the dead was caryed out of the citie, was according to the olde maner of all nations. Alſo Hierome writeth that the citie of Naim ſtood in his time, and it was ſcituated two myles beneath the mount Thabor towardes the South.

12. The onely begotten ſonne of his mother. This reaſon perſwaded Chriſte to rayſe the young manne: for he ſeeing a widowe depryued of her onelye ſonne, tooke pittie vppon her. Neyther did hee defer his fauour, vntyll ſome ſhould require it, as hee did in other places: but hee preuenteth the prayers of all, and reſtoreth the young manne to his mother, which looked for no ſuch thing. VVherein we haue a notable ſpectacle of his free mercie, while that he quickeneth vs, and rayſeth vs vp from death. It may be, that by touching the coffin, his minde was to ſhew how litle he feared death, and the graue, that he might giue vs life. And certeinely he doth not onely vouchſafe to touch vs with his hand, that he might giue lyfe to the dead: but that he might cary vs into heauen, he himſelfe deſcended into the graue.

14. Young man, I say to thee. By this phraſe Chriſt declareth how truely Paule teacheth, Rom. 4. 17. God calleth thoſe thinges whiche are not, as if they were. He calleth the dead man, and maketh him to heare him, that death it ſelfe might ſodenly be chaunged into life. And heerein wee haue firſt a notable token of the reſurrection to come, euen as hee commaundeth, Ezechiell 37. 4. to commaunde the drye boanes to heare the word of God. Thē we are alſo taught, how Chriſt doth quicken vs ſpiritually through faith: namely, while he addeth his ſecrete power to his word, ſo that it pearceth cuē to the dead ſoules: cuē as he ſaith, Ioh. 5. 25.

The

The houre commeth, when the dead shall heare the voice of the sonne of God: and they which heare it, shal liue.

16. There came a feare on them all. It is necessarye that the feeling of the presence of God should bring a feare with it. But this difference there is betweene the feare of vnbeleeuers and the godlye: the vnbeleeuers are eyther astonyed through feare, or being afraid, they some against GOD. But the godly and the religious being touched with a reuerence, do willingly humble themselues. Therefore this feare is taken in good parte: because that they yeelding honour to the power of God, which they beholde, they doe not onely reuerence God: but also giue thanks to him. That they do say, that God visiteth his people, I vnderstand it not of euery visitation, but such as should wholy restore them. The Iewes were not onely fallen, but they lay in a miserable and a vile slauerie, as if God had not looked vpon them. This onely hope remained, that God had promised himselfe to be their redeemer, after they were afflicted with extreame miseries. Therefore I thinke that by this myracle they were warned to hope for their restitution at hand. They are only deceiued in the maner of the visitation. For though they acknowledge and commend the wonderful grace of God in him, that a great Prophet was risen: yet this title is farre inferiour to the dignitie & glory of the promised Messias. VVhereby it appeareth that the fayth of that people was then very confused, and ouerwhelmed with many clowdes of fansies.

Matth. 8.	Mark.	Luke. 9.
19. Then came there a certeine Scribe, and sayd vnto him, Maister, I will follow thee, whither soeuer thou goest.		57. And it came to passe, that as they went in the way, a certein man said vnto him, I will follow thee lord, whither soeuer thou goest.
20. But Iesus sayde vnto him, the Foxes haue hoales, and the byrds of the aire haue neastes: but the sonne of man hath not whereon to reste his head.		58. And Iesus saide vnto him, the foxes haue hoales, and the birds of the heauen haue neastes: but the son of man hath not whereon to lay his head.
21. And an other of his disciples said vnto him, Maister, suffer me to goe firste to bury my father.		59. But he said to an other, follow me: and the same saide, Lorde, suffer me first to go bury my father.
22. But Iesus saide vnto him, follow me, and lette the dead bury theyr dead.		60. And Iesus said vnto him, let the dead bury their dead: but goe thou & preach the kingdome of God.
		61. Then an other sayd, I will follow thee Lord: but let mee firste go bid them farewell, which are at my house.
		62. And Iesus said vnto him, no manne that putteth his hand to the plough, and looketh back, is apte to the kingdom of God.

19. Then came there a certeine. Matthewe proposeth to vs two menne, but Luke three; which, when they were al ready to giue theyr name

to

to Chriſt,yet as they were by their ſeuerall vices hindered from a righte courſe,ſo accordingly they receiued diuerſe aunſweares. Yet at the firſt it might ſeeme abſurde,that Chriſt ſhould turne awaye, and not receyue him into his company,which offred preſently and without delay to followe him:and retaineth the other with him,which was more ſlowe and not ſo ready,but asked a time of reſpite . But hee had good reaſon for both. VVhereof proceedeth ſuch readines of the Scribe,that hee ſhoulde ſo readily prepare himſelfe to waite vppon Chriſte: but becauſe hee did not account how hard and ſtreight the condition was of his folowers? It is to be noted that the Scribe,which was accuſtomed to a quiet and a profitable life,and had bene in honour,could not haue borne the reproches,pouertie,perſecutions,and the croſſe . This manne would followe Chriſt: but he dreameth of a ſoft and pleaſaunt waye, and of lodginges filled with all good thinges : when as Chriſtes diſciples ſhoulde walke through thornes,and ſhould through continuall ſorowes, goe forward to the croſſe. Therefore the more haſte he maketh, the vnreadier hee is : for he doth euen as he that would goe to warre vnder the ſhadow and in dallyaunce,without ſweating,out of the duſte,and without the reach of the dartes. It is no merualle to haue ſuch refuſed by Chriſte: beecauſe that as they doe raſhly thruſt in themſelues ; ſo being diſcouraged at the firſt brunt, and being tried at the firſt skirmiſh, they take them to theyr feete,and doe filthily forſake their place . Conſider alſo that this Scribe might ſeeke to be with Chriſt,that he might be fedde at his table freely, daintily,and in ydleneſſe. VVherefore let vs vnderſtand, that we are all admoniſhed,that we ſhould not raſhlye and carelefly intrude our ſelues to be the diſciples of Chriſt,accounting nothing of the croſſe and troubles:but let vs rather conſider before hand what a condition remaineth for vs. For with this inſtruction he entertaineth vs into his ſchoole, that we denying our ſelues,ſhould take vp our croſſe.

20. The Foxes haue holes. The Sonne of God declareth what the condition of his lyfe ſhould be,whileſt hee was conuerſaunt vpon the earth: and he preſcribeth to all his Diſciples what maner of lyfe they ought to frame themſelues: yet it is merueile , that Chriſt ſaith, that he hath not a foote of ground,where he might lay his head,when as there were many kinde and godly men,which would haue receiued him into their houſe. But it is to be noted , that he ſaide this for admonition ſake, leaſte that the Scrybe ſhoulde looke for a large and a fatte rewarde, as from a rich maiſter,when the Lord himſelfe lyued by entreatie in other mennes houſes.

21. That I may bury my father. VVee haue ſayde that the Scribe was refuſed to be a companion of Chriſte: becauſe that he raſhly thruſt in himſelfe,imagining that he ſhould haue a profitable kinde of life . But this which Chriſt retaineth had a contrary faulte: for this imperfection,that it was heard for him to forſake his father,hindred him,that hee woulde not preſently haue followed the calling of Chriſt. But it is to be ſuppoſed that he was an old man:becauſe he ſaieth,ſuffer me, that I may bury him. For this ſpeach declareth that he had not much time left him. Luke declareth that he was commaunded of Chriſt,that he ſhould folow: For the which Matthew ſaith, that it was one of his diſciples. Alſo he refuſeth not the calling, but craueth that hee may haue libertie for a time to go to do his dutie to his father. For his excuse signifieth as much, as if he should say, that he were not free, vntill his father were dead. But by the aunsweare of Christe we vnderstand that children must so do their dutie to their parentes, that so oft as God calleth other where, they not regarding the other, should giue the chiefe place to his commaundements. For all dueties to men ought to giue place, so ofte as God commandeth that our diligence be imployed vpon him.

Nowe euery man must see what God requireth of them, and what the calling asketh of them, to which they are tyed: least the earthly parentes should hinder them from yeelding the right, which is due to the chief & onely father of all men.

22. Let the dead bury their dead. Christ dooth not in these wordes condemne the duetie of buriall. For it were filthy and beastly to cast out the bodies of the dead, without buryall. And we know that the right of buriall was delyuered of God to men, and was vsed amongst the Saintes, for to confirme the hope of the last resurrection. His will was onelye to teach, that whatsoeuer calleth vs back, or hindereth vs frō a right course, doth sauor of nothing but death. As if he should haue saide: that they alone doe liue, which apply their endeuours and all the parts of their life to obey God: and they which sitte in the world, and do passe by their dutie to God, that they might yeelde themselues obedient to men, are lyke to dead men, which in vaine and vnprofitably imploy themselues in caring for the dead.

L V. 60. Goe and preach. Matthew saieth only, follow me: But Luke doth more plainely declare to what end he was called: namely, that hee should be a minister and preacher of the Gospell. For if he shoulde haue bene left in a priuate lyfe, there had bene no necessitie of leauing his father: so that for fauour of his father, he fainte not from the Gospell. But because the preaching of the Gospell suffered him not to sitte at home, Christe for good cause draweth him from his father. But as the wōderfull goodnesse of Christ appeareth in him, that he would bestow so honorable an office vpon a man, as yet so weake: so it is worth the labour to note, that he with flattery dooth not nourishe, but correcteth the faulte, which as yet stoocke fast vnto him.

L V. 61. And an other saieth. Matthewe maketh no mention of this third man. And it appeareth that he was more tied to the world, then at lybertie, and ready to follow Christ. Hee offereth himselfe to followe Christe, but with an exception, when hee hath bid them of his houshold farewell: that is, when he hath set his businesse in order at home, as they vse, which prepare themselues to goe forth or depart. This is the cause why Christe doth so sharpely reproue him. For in word hee professeth himselfe to be a folower of Christe: yet hee turneth his backe towardes him, vntill he had done his earthly businesse. Now, when Christ saieth, that they are not fit for the kingdome of God, which looke backe, wee must diligently seeke what he meaneth hereby. They are saide to looke backe, which being entangled with the cares of this worlde, doe suffer themselues to be lead out of the right way: and especially they, which drowne themselues in those cares, which make them vnprofitable to follow Christ.

Matth. 9.

Matth. 9

1. Then he entred into a ship, and passed ouer, and came into his owne citie.
2. And loe, they brought to him a man sick of the palsie, lying on a bed, and Iesus seeinge their faith, saide to the sicke of the palsie, son, be of good comfort, thy sins are forgiuen thee.
3. And behold, certeine of the Scribes saide with themselues, this man blasphemeth.
4. But when Iesus sawe their thoughtes, he saide, wherefore thinke ye euil thinges in your heartes?
5. For whether is it easier to say, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, or to saye, arise, and walke.
6. And that yee maye knowe that the sonne of man hath auctoritie in earth, to forgiue sinnes, (then saide he to the sick of the palsie) Arise, take vp thy bedde, and goe to thy house.
7. And he arose, and departed to his own house.
8. So when the multitude saw it, they merueiled, and glorified god, which had giuen such authoritie to men.

Marke. 2.

1. After a few dayes he entred into Capernaum againe, and it was noysed that he was in the house.
2. And anon, many gathered together, insomuch that the places about the dore coulde not receiue any more: and he preached the word to them.
3. And ther came vnto him, that brought one sicke of the palsie, borne of foure men.
4. And becaus̄e they could not come neere vnto him for the multitude, they vncouered the roof of the house wher he was, and whē they had broken it open, they let down the bedde, wherin the sick of the palsie lay.
5. Now, when Iesus saw their faith, he said to the sick of the palsie, sonne, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee.
6. And there were certein of the Scribes, sitting there, and reasoning in their heartes.
7. Why doth this man speake such blasphemies? who canne forgiue sinnes, but God onely?
8. And immediatly, whēIesus perceiued in his spirit, y thus they thought with thēselues, he said vnto them, why reason ye these things in your harts?
9. Whether is it easier to say to the sicke of the palsie, thy sins are forgiuē thee: or to say, arise, take vp thy bed, & walk?
10. And that ye may know the son of man hath auctoritie in earth to forgiue sins, he saidto the sick of the palsie,
11. I say to thee, arise, & take vp thy bed, & get thee hence to thine own house.
12. And by & by he arose, & took vp his bed, & went forth before them al, insomuch that they were al amased, and glorified God, saying: we neuer saw such a thing.

Luke. 5.

17. And it came to passe, on a certeine day, as he was teaching, that the Priestes and doctors of the law sate by, which were come out of euery towne of Galyle, & Iudea, and Ierusalem, and the power of the Lord was in him, to heale them.
18. Then behold, men brought a man lying in a bed, which was taken with a palsie: & they sought meanes to bring him, and to lay him before him.
19. And when they coulde not find what way they might bring him in, becaus̄e of the preasse, they went vp on the house, & let him downe through the tylinge bed & al, in the midst before Iesus.
20. And when he sawe their faith, hee saide vnto him, man, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee.
21. Then the Scribes and Pharises began to think, saying, who is this that speaketh blasphemies? who cā forgiue sins, but godonly?
22. But when Iesus perceiued their thoughtes, he answered and said vnto them, what thinke yee in your heartes?
23. Whether is it easier to say, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, or to say, arise, and walke.
24. But that yee may know that the sonne of man hath auctoritie in earth to forgiue sinnes (he said to the sicke of the palsie) I say to thee, arise, take vppe thy bed, and go to thine own house.
25. And immediatly he rose vp before them, and tooke vp his bed whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, praysing God.
26. And they were al amased, and praised God, and were filled with feare, saying: doubtlesse we haue seene strainge thinges to day.

MAT. 1. And came into his owne citie. This place declareth that the citie of Capernaum was cõmonly thought to haue bene the place, where Chriſt was borne: becauſe that he did much frequent the ſame. It is not to be doubted, but that the three do ſet down the ſame hiſtory, although one do more exactly ſet downe the circumſtaunces then the other. Luke ſaith, that the Scribes came out of diuerſe partes of Iudea, in whoſe ſight Chriſt healed the man ſicke of a palſie. Yet he declareth that other were alſo healed by the grace of Chriſt. For before he come to ſpeake of the man ſicke of the palſie, ſpeaking in the plural number, ſaith, that the power of God was ſhewed in healing their diſeaſes. The glory of this miracle was wonderfull, that a man taken in all partes of his body, whom they had let downe in a bed by cordes, ſodenly aroſe both ſound & nimble. Yet there is an other eſpeciall cauſe, why the Euangeliſtes doe ſtande more vpon this miracle, then vpon others: that is, becauſe the Scribes doe take in ſcorne, that Chriſt ſhould take vppon him the power and auctoritie of forgiuing of ſinnes: but it was the will of Chriſte to confirme & ſeale the ſame with a viſible ſigne.

2. And when he had ſeene their faith. God only knoweth our faith, but in that their painefull trauaile they ſhewed a token of their faith: for they woulde neuer haue taken vppon them ſo troubleſome a buſines, neyther would they haue wreſtledde with ſuch lets and hinderances, if theyr mindes had not bene aſſured with hope of certeine ſucceſſe; ſo the fruite of their faith appeared in this, that they were not wearye, though they could enter in no way. For that opinion ſeemeth hard to me, that ſome think Chriſt, as he was god, knew their faith, which lay hid within. Now becauſe that Chriſt graunted to their faith that benefit, which he was about to beſtow vpon the man ſicke of the palſie, it is accuſtomed to bee demaunded in this place, how much men may be holpen by the fayth of other men. And firſt it is certeine, that the fayth of Abraham profited his poſteritie, while that he embraced the free couenant of ſaluatiõ offred to him and to his ſeede. The ſame may be alſo taught of al the faithful, that through their faith, they cauſe the grace of God to ſpred to their childrẽ, and that before they are borne. And that hath place in young infantes, which by reaſon of their age, are not capable of faith. But they which are of age, and haue not faith of their owne (whether they be ſtraungers or borne of Gods children) in reſpect of the eternall ſaluation of the ſoule, cannot be holpe by the faith of others, but by meanes. For whereas our praiers are not without fruit, wherin we aske of God, that he would cõuert the vnbeleeuers to repentance, it appeareth that our faith doth profit them: yet ſo that they cannot be ſaued, vntill that they haue faith themſelues. And it is well known, that whereas there is a mutual conſente of faith, there the ſaluation of ſome is againe holpe of others. This alſo is without controuerſie, that the vnbeleeuers haue earthly benefites beſtowed vpon thẽ for the godlies ſake. Cõcerning this preſent place, though it is ſaid, that Chriſt was moued by the faith of others: yet the ſicke man could not haue his ſinnes forgiuen, except he had faith of his own. Chriſt doth often giue the health of body to the vnworthy, as God doth dayly make his ſunne to riſe vpon the good and euill: but hee reconcileth vs vnto himſelf by no other meanes but by faith: wherefore that figure Sinecdoche is in that word them: becauſe that Chriſt did not ſo behold the faith of thẽ that bore the ſick man, but that he beheld alſo his own faith, Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee. Chriſt in theſe wordes ſeemeth to promiſſe to the man ſick of the palſie, more then he ſought for: but whē he would cure his body, he beginneth to take away the cauſe of his diſeaſe, and alſo he teacheth the man ſicke of the palſie, how he came by that ſickneſs, and how he ought to make his prayers. For becauſe that commonly men doe not think thoſe paines, which they endure, to be Gods whips, they do onlye wiſh for releaſe and eaſe in the fleſh, and are careleſſe for their ſins. Like as if a ſicke man neglecting his diſeaſe, ſhoulde onely ſeeke remedy for his preſent griefe. But the onely deliuerance from all troubles is, to haue God mercifull vnto vs. Sometime it falleth out, that the wicked eſcape out of their troubles, and yet haue God no leſſe their enemy then before: but while they thinke themſelues diſcharged, they preſentlye fall either into the ſame daungers againe, or into moe, and thoſe more grieuous, which doe teſtifie that there is no meaſure nor ende, vntill the wrath of God be appeaſed: as he witneſſeth by the Prophet Amos 5. 19. If thou eſcape from a Lyon, a Beare ſhall meete thee: if thou ſhutte thy ſelfe into a houſe, a ſerpent ſhall bite thee. So this phraſe of ſpeach is ofte vſed in the ſcriptures, to promiſſe forgiuenes of ſinnes, when releaſe of paine is ſought for.

It behoueth vs alſo to vſe this order in prayers, that beeing admoniſhed of our ſinnes, by the feeling of our ſorowes, we might firſt be careful, to obtaine forgiuenes, that God being reconciled vnto vs, might withdraw his handes from puniſhing.

3. And behold, certaine of the Scribes. They accuſe Chriſt of blaſphemy, and of ſacriledge, becauſe he chalengeth that vnto himſelf, which is proper to God. For the other two Euangeliſtes doe adde, who can forgiue ſinnes, but God alone. Alſo it is not to be doubted, but that their deſire to ſpeake euill, caryed them headlong to this wicked iudgemente. If they thinke it worthy to be reproued, why doe they not ſearche it out? Then, ſith the ſpeach is ambiguous, and Chriſt ſpeaketh no otherwiſe, then the Prophetes were woont, when they witneſſed the grace of God, why do they take it in ꝑ worſe part, which might bee more fauourably interpreted? Therefore it appeareth, that they were firſt infected with euill wyll and choler, which doe ſo gladly take an occaſion to condemne Chriſte. Alſo they doe ſecretely imagine in their heartes, how in his abſēce they may diffame him amongſt their companions. This is truly ſaid of them, that God onely hath power and auctthoritie to forgiue ſinnes, but they conclude euil, that it belongeth not to Chriſt, when as he was God manifeſted in the fleſhe. It was their duetie to haue demaunded by what right Chriſt tooke that auctthoritie vpon him. Now, without any inquirie, they imagine him to bee ſome of the common ſorte of meune, they do raſhly proceede to condemne him.

4. When Ieſus ſaw their thoughtes. Heerein doth he make a manifeſte ſhew of his godhead, in that hee vttereth their ſecrete thoughtes. For no man knoweth what is in man, ſaue his ſpirite, 1. Cor. 2. 11. Therefore Marke addeth that he knew in his ſpirit: as if he ſhould haue ſayde, man coulde not diſcerne that, which lay hidde in their heartes: but Chriſte by his diuine ſpirit ſearched and pearced thither. And hee ſaith, that they thought euil things, not that it grieued them to haue that attributed to a mortall man, which God chalengeth to himſelfe alone: but becauſe they did did proudly and maliciouſly refuſe God, offering himſelfe openlye vnto them.

5. Whether is it eaſier. The meaning is: Sith it is not eaſier by a word to giue lyfe to a dead body, then to forgiue ſinnes, it ought not to be wondred at, that hee forgiueth ſinnes, whereas hee perfourmeth the other. But Chriſt ſeemeth to reaſon very ſlenderly: For as much as the ſoule excelleth the body: ſo much doth forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, exceede the curing of the bodye. But it is eaſily aunſwered: for Chriſt applyeth his ſpeach to their capacitie, which as they were menne vnregenerate; ſo were they more mooued with outwarde ſignes, then with all the ſpirituall power of Chriſte, which auailed to euerlaſting ſaluation. So in Iohn 5.28. hee proueth the effectuall power of the Goſpell to giue lyfe to men, by this, that at the laſte daye hee wyll rayſe vppe with his voyce the dead out of theyr graues. Therefore this argument was forcible enoughe to confute them, which did moſte eſteeme of an outwarde myracle, that they coulde not rightlye denye, but that he had forgiuen the ſickmans ſins; while that he reſtored him ſtrength and health: becauſe that the forgiuenes of ſinnes appeared by this effect.

6. Hath authoritie in earth. This power was farre beyonde that, which was committed to the Apoſtles, and which the Paſtors of the Churche doe execute at this daye. For they doe not forgiue, but teſtifie forgiuenéſſe, whyle that they vtter the ambaſſage committed vnto them. But Chriſte in theſe wordes affirmeth, that hee is not onely a miniſter and a witneſſe of this grace, but alſo the auchthour of the ſame. But what meaneth that clauſe, vppon earth? For why ſhould hee ſay, that wee hadde our ſinnes forgiuen vs heere, except the ſame were confirmed in heauen? Namely, this was the will of Chriſt, to ſhew that they nead not to ſeeke farre for forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: becauſe that in his perſon it was brought as it were into mennes handes. For (ſuch is our readineſſe to diſtruſt) we neuer dare account God to be merciful towardes vs, except he comming neere, doe ſhewe himſelfe familyarly vnto vs. Now, becauſe that Chriſt for this cauſe came downe to the earth, that hee might offer to men the preſent grace of God, hee is ſayde to forgiue ſinnes vppon earth: becauſe that in him, and through him, the will of GOD was reuealed, whiche, to the capacitie of the fleſhe, was hydde beefore, aboue the clowdes.

8. When the multitude ſaw it. For this merueiling, whereof heere is mention made, the other two doe ſaye they were aſtonied or amaſed. Luke alſo addeth that they were afrayde: but it is the purpoſe of them all to teach, that the power of God was not onely ſimply knowne, but that they were all ſtriken into a merueiling: ſo that they were enforced to giue the glory to God. But the feare which folowed this merueiling, preuayled thus farre, that they ſhoulde not murmurre againſt Chriſte, but that they ſhoulde reuerentlye ſubmitte themſelues vnto him, as to a Prophet of God.

Matthew expreſly ſaith, that they glorified God, which had giuen ſuch power vnto men: wherein they ſeeme to be farre wide. For though they ſee a man with their eies, yet in their minde they ought to behold in him ſomewhat aboue manne. This was well done, that they affirme that the nature of man in Christ was endued with so great power, for the good of all mankinde: but their confession was somwhat erronious, beecause they doe not as yet vnderstand him to be God, manifested in the flesh. In summe, this was true, that God had giuen such power to menne, but these men, which knew not the maiestie of God ioyned with flesh, did not as yet vnderstand the manner and cause of the giuing.

Matth. 9.	Marke. 2.	Luk. 5.
9. And as Iesus passed forth from thence, hee saw a manne sitting at the receit of custom, named Matthew: and he said vnto him, follow me, and hee arose, and followed him.	13. Then hee wente againe towarde the sea, and all the people resorted vnto him, and hee taughte them.	27. And after that he went forth, and saw a Publycan, named Leui, sitting at the receit of custome, and said vnto him, follow me.
10. And it came to passe, as Iesus sate at meat in his house behold many Publicans & sinners, that came thither, sate downe at the table, with Iesus and his disciples.	14. And as Iesus passed by, hee sawe Leui the sonne of Alpheus sitte at the receite of custome, and sayde vnto him, follow mee, and he arose and followed him.	28. And he lefte all, rose vp, and followed him.
11. And when the Phariſes sawe that, they said to his disciples, why eateth your maister with Publycans and sinners?	15. And it came to passe, as Iesus sate at table in his house, many Publycans and sinners sate at table also with Iesus and his disciples: for there were manye that followed him.	29. Then Leui made him a great feaſt in his owne house, where there was a great company of Publycans, and of other, which sate at table with them.
12. Now, when Iesus heard it, he said vnto them, the hole need not a Phisition, but they that are sicke.	16. And when the Scribes and Phariſes saw him eate with the Publycans & sinners, they sayde vnto his disciples: how is it, that hee eateth and drinketh with Publicans and sinners?	30. But they that were Scribes and Phariſes amonge them, murmured againſte his disciples, saying, why eate yee, and drinke yee with Publycans & sinners?
13. But goe yee, and learne what this is, I will haue mercie, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.	17. Now, when Iesus heard it, he said vnto them: the hole haue no neede of the Phisition, but the sicke, I came not to cal the righteous, but the sinners to repentance.	31. Then Iesus answered, & sayd vnto them, they that are hole, neede not the Phisition, but they that are sick.
		32. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentaunce.

9. Sitting at the receite of custome. That Matthew is receiued from the custome house (which place as it was woont to bee giuen to spoyles and vniuſt exactions, so it was then become moſt infamous) not onelye into the felowship of Christe, but is also called to the office of an Appostle: We haue herein a notable example of the fauour of God. And it was the will of Christe to chuse into that office not onely simple and vnlearned men, that he might ouerthrow the wisdome of the worlde: but also this Publycan, which had liued a life not to be commended, full of diuers corruptions that he might be a spectacle of his gratious goodnes, & that he

he might teach in his person, that the calling of vs all doth not depende vpon the deseruing of our own righteousnes, but of his meere liberalitie. Therfore Matth. was not only a witnesse and a preacher of the grace giuen in Christ, but also a testimonie and a figure of the same. Now in this he declareth his thankfulnes, that he is not ashamed to commit to perpetual memorie what maner of man he was, and from whence he was taken, that he might þ more set forth the grace of Christ in his own perso. After the same maner speaketh Paule, 1. Tim. 1. 15. This is a true saying, and by al meanes worthy to be receiued, that Christ Iesus came into the world to saue sinners, of whõe I am chief. It appeareth that this was a gentile name, in that Marke and Luke doe name him Leuy: but the cause why he tooke this forren name was: becausse he was a Publicã. Folow me. It is not to be doubted, but that Christ shewed in mo words to what purpose, & vppon what condition he called him: and that is more plainely gathered out of Luke, who saith that he arose, & left al, that he might folow Christ. For it was not necessary, that he should haue left al things, except he had bene called to be a dayly disciple of Christ, & in hope of an Apostleship. Further, wee behold the diuine efficacie of the voice of Christ, in this, that he is so quickly ready to obey: not that it inwardly pearseth alike into the hearts of all menne, into whose eares it soundeth: but it was the will of Christe to shewe a singuler example in this man, that we might know that he was not called by man.

LV. 29. And he made him a feast. This seemeth to differ from that whiche Luke had said, that he had left all things: But the answere is easie, Math. reiecting al impedimentes, giueth himself wholy to Christ: yet so that he did not cast away his substãce belonging to his household. While Paul by the example of soldiours exhorteth the ministers of the worde, that they being freede and deliuered from all impedimentes, should imploye their endeuor vpon the church, saith, 2. Tim. 2. 4. No man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affaires of this life: becausse he would please him, that hath chosen him to be a soldiour: but he dooth not meane that they which are chosen to be soldiours, doe diuorce their wiues frõ thẽ, forsake their children, and renounce their houses for euer: but for a time to abstaine from their houses and from all cares. Nothing withheld Matthew, but that he folowed whither Christe called him, and yet so farre as the estate of his calling did permit, he did freely vse his house & his goodes. But it behoued him to byd the custome house farewell: becausse that being occupied there, he could not be a companion of Christ. The greatnesse of the feast is not so much referred to the multitude of the guestes, as to the plentie and daintines of the meates. For we know that Christ vsed not that austeritie, but that hee suffered himselfe sometime to be daintily enterteined of rich men; yet so as all gluttony was secluded. And it is not to be doubted, but as hee was a singuler example of temperaunce, so he would exhort his hostes to a moderat and a meane diet, and woulde neuer suffer prodigall and excessiue daintyes. That Matthew saieth that sinners came: that is, menne of most wicked lyfe, or noted with infamy: by this it came to passe, that the Publicans did not eschewe the company of suche, becausse that they themselues were commonlye hated and infamous. For as a lytle correction doth make them that sinne ashamed: so too much seuerity doth dryue ſome to deſpayre, ſo that they caſting by all ſhame, doe throwe themſelues into all filthines. It was no offence to gather tribute or cuſtome: but when as the Publycans ſaw themſelues reiected as prophane and deteſtable menne, through the common reproach, they did not deſpiſe, but reioyſed in the company of the infamous, and ſometime they thruſt in thēſelues amongſt the adulterers, the drunkards, and ſuch lyke: whoſe wickednes they would haue condemned, and they woulde haue bene nothing like them, if they had not beene driuen to this neceſsitie by open hatred and reproaches.

MAT. 11. VVhy eateth your maiſter with Publycans. The Scribes doe aſſault the diſciples of Chriſt, and that they may procure them to fal away, they lay forth that, which at the firſt ſight is euill and ſhamefull. For, to what purpoſe became he a peculyer maiſter to them, but that they ſhuld withdraw themſelues from the common people, that they might lead a more holy life. But it ſeemeth that he leadeth them from an honeſt and tollerable eſtate of lyfe to a prophane lycentiouſneſſe, that they might defile themſelues with filthy gueſtes. This reproach might haue dryuen the diſciples, which were as yet but rude and flexible, to forſake theyr maiſter. But they doe well, in that they make their complainte to theyr maiſter: becauſe they themſelues were not ſufficientlye armed againſte this cauill: for Chriſt aunſwering for them, confirmeth them againſt the time to come.

12. The Hole need not. By Chriſtes aunſweare it appeareth that the Scribes offended two wayes: that they made no account of the office of Chriſt: and that in ſparing their owne faultes, they doe proudly deſpiſe all other. VVhich thing muſt therfore be noted: becauſe that this diſeaſe hath alwayes beene too common. For hypocrites being full and drounken with a windy hope of their owne righteouſneſſe, doe not accounte wherefore Chriſt was ſent into the earth: they know not in how great a labyrinth of miſchiefes mankinde is drowned, how horryble a wrath and curſe of God doth lye vpon all men, and with how confuſed a heap of ſinnes they are preſſed downe: and ſo it commeth to paſſe, that they being not moued with the miſeries of men, doe neuer thinke vppon anye remedie. And now they pleaſing thēſelues, wil not abyde to be brought into order, and they think themſelues vnworthy to be accounted amōgſt ſinners. Chriſte reproueth this ſecond errour, by aunſwering that the whole nead not a Phyſition. For by a figure hee teacheth that they are therefore offended at the beholding of ſinners: becauſe they chaleng thēſelues to be righteous. Becauſe (ſaieth hee) you are hole, you deſpiſe the ſicke; ſo that you loath them, and the ſight of them is troubleſome vnto you: but it behoueth a Phyſition to be farre otherwiſe. After he ſheweth that he muſt take vpon him the parte of a Phiſition, becauſe that he was ſent of the father to call ſinners. And though Chriſte beeginneth with reprouing thē: yet if we deſire to profit in his doctrine, that muſt be eſpecially holden, which hee ſetteth downe in the ſecond place: namely, that his comming was, that he might giue life to the dead, that he might iuſtifie the guiltie and condemned, that hee might cleanſe the polluted, and them that are defiled with filthyneſſe: that hee might pull them that are loſt euen from the helles: that he might cloth thē with his glory, which are couered with filthineſſe; that hee might renew thē that are

corrupte with the filthyneſſe of ſinnes, and prepare them for a bleſſed immortalitie.

If wee conſider that this is his duetie and the ende of his comminge, if wee remember that for this cauſe hee put vppon him our fleſh, ſhedde his bloud, became a ſacrifice of death, and deſcended euen to hell, it ſhall neuer ſeeme ſtraunge vnto vs: the vileſt amongſt menne, euen thoſe that are couered with a dunghill of ſinnes, are gathered by him into ſaluation.

Hee ſeemeth to thee to be vnworthy of the grace of Chriſte, whom thou dooſt abhorre: why then became Chriſt a ſacrifice for ſinne, and accurſed, but that hee might reach out his hand to accurſed ſinners? Now if wee beginne to loath that both Baptiſme, and alſo the holye Supper dooth ioyne vs in company with wicked menne; ſo that their companye ſhall ſeeme to defile vs with any blotte, let vs preſently enter into our ſelues, to ſearch our owne ſinnes without flattery. And this examination ſhall bringe vs to this paſſe, that wee will gladly ſuffer our ſelues to be waſhed in the ſame fountaine with the moſte vncleane, ſo that we wyll not refuſe that righteouſneſſe, whiche hee commonlye offreth to all the wicked, that lyfe giuen to the dead, and ſaluation to them that were loſt.

13. Goe yee, and learne. Hee ſendeth them away, and commaundeth them to departe: becauſe they ſeemed to be ſtubborn, and ſuch as would not learne. Or he ſheweth that they contend with God and the prophet, which through pride being become cruell, do grudge that the wretched ſhould be holpen, and that phiſicke ſhould be miniſtred to the ſicke. This teſtimonie is taken out of the prophet Oſea. 6. 6. where the Prophette preaching of the vengeaunce of God againſt the Iewes, leaſt they ſhould take exception that they obſerued the outward worſhip of God, as they were accuſtomed in ſecuritie to bragge of their ceremonies: he affirmeth that GOD is not pleaſed with their ſacrifices, where their mindes are voyde of godlyneſſe, and their manners eſtraunged from integritie and righteouſnes. But that GOD ſaieth, that hee will not haue ſacrifices, appeareth by the ſecond clauſe to bee ſpoken by compariſon, that the knowledge of God is more to be deſired then ſacrifices. By which words he doth not preciſely reiecte ſacrifices: but hee maketh leſſe accounte of them, then of godlyneſſe and fayth. Yet wee muſt ſo account, that fayth and ſpirituall worſhippe doe of themſelues pleaſe God, that charitie and the dueties of men towardes their neighbours are required for themſelues. The ſacrifices are but accidentes (as they ſay) which are of no eſtimation or account, wheras trueth it ſelf is wanting. Of the which thing I haue entreated more at large vppon the tenth chapter to the Hebrewes. In that word mercy the figure ſynecdoche is to be noted: For vnder one parte the Prophet comprehendeth what duetie ſoeuer we owe vnto our brethren.

For I came not. Although this is ſpoken to ouerthrow the pride and the hypocriſie of the Scribes: yet it generally containeth a very profitable doctrine. For wee are admoniſhed that the grace of Chriſte ſhall no otherwiſe profit vs, then while we being grieued with our ſinnes, and ſighing vnder the burthen of them, doe humbly come vnto him. Againe, weake conſciences are here put in a certeine hope : for they nead not feare leaſt Chriſte ſhould reiect ſinners, becauſe that he deſcended from his heauenly glory to call them.

But that clauſe is alſo to be conſidered, to repentaunce : that we myght know that our forgiueneſſe is not ſuch, as nouriſheth ſinnes but ſuch as calleth vs to endeuour our ſelues to lyue holyly and godly. For hee reconcileth vs to the father with this condition, that beeing redeemed with his bloud, wee ſhoulde offer our ſelues true ſacrifices, as Paule teacheth, Titus, 2. 12. Heerein appeareth the mercy and loue of GOD, that denying worldlye luſtes, wee ſhoulde lyue ſoberlye and righteouſly, &c.

Matth. 9.	Marke. 2.	Luke. 5.
14. Then came the diſciples of Iohn to him, ſaying: why do we and the Phariſes faſt oft, and thy diſciples faſt not? 15. And Ieſus ſayd vnto them, can the children of the mariag chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them: but the dayes will come, when the bridegroome ſhall be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſte. 16. Moreouer, no manne peeceth an olde garmente with a peece of new cloath: for that that ſhoulde fill it vp, taketh awaye from the garment, and the breach is worſe. 17. Neither doe they put new wine into olde veſſels: for then the veſſels woulde breake, and the wine would be ſpilte, and the veſſelles ſhould perish: but they put new wine into new veſſels, and ſo are both preſerued.	18. And the diſciples of Iohn, & the Phariſes did faſt, and came and ſaid vnto him, why doe the diſciples of Iohn and the Phariſes faſt, and thy diſciples faſt not? 19. And Ieſus ſaide vnto them, can the children of the mariage faſt, whiles the bridgroome is with them? as longe as they haue the bridegrome with them, they cannot faſt. 20. But the dayes wil come, when the bridegroome ſhal be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſt in thoſe dayes. 21. Alſo no man ſoweth a peece of newe cloath in an olde garment: for elſe the new peece taketh away the filling vp from the old, & the breach is worſe. 22. Lykewiſe no manne putteth newe wine into olde veſſelles: for elſe the newe breaketh the veſſelles, and the wine runneth out, and the veſſels are loſte: but new wine muſte be putte into newe veſſelles.	33. Then they ſayde vnto him, why doe the diſciples of Iohn faſt often, and pray, and the diſciples of the Phariſes alſo, but thine eate and drink? 34. And he ſaid vnto them, canne yee make the children of the weddinge chamber to faſt, as long as the bridgrome is with them? 35. But the dayes will come, euen when the bridgrome ſhall bee taken from them: then ſhall they faſte in thoſe dayes. 36. Againe hee ſpake alſo to them in a parable: no manne putteth a peece of a newe garmente into an olde veſture: for then the newe renteth it, and the peece taken out of the newe, agreeth not with the olde. 37. Alſo no manne powreth new wine into olde veſſels: for then the new wine will breake the veſſels, and it will runne out, and the veſſelles will perish. 38. But new wine muſt bee powred into new veſſelles: ſo both are preſerued. 39. Alſo no man that drinketh old wine, ſtraightway deſireth new: for he ſaith, the olde is better.

14. The

14. Then came. Luke bringeth in the Phariſes ſpeaking: Marke ſeemeth to ioyne them both togeather. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Phariſes malitiouſly endeuoured by this ſubtiltie to drawe the diſciples of Iohn to theyr ſide, and to quarrell with the diſciples of Chriſte. Their likenes in praiers and faſtinges was a plauſible baight to make them ioyne in fellowſhippe: And the contrary bechauiour of Chriſte was an occaſion of diſcorde and diſpleaſure to the frowarde and them that were too much giuen to pleaſe themſelues. By this example wee are admoniſhed wiſelye to take heede, leaſte wicked and craftie menne doe by anye light pretence ſowe diſcordes amongſte vs. Truely Sathan is a merueilous workemanne in forging ſuch deceites: and it is an eaſie matter to diſturbe vs about a matter of nothing. And wee muſt eſpeciallye beware, leaſt for outwarde rites the conſente of fayth be hindered, and the band of charitie be broken. All men almoſte are troubled with this diſeaſe; ſo that they attribute more then is meete to ceremonies and elementes of the worlde (as Paule calleth them, Colloſſ. 2. 8. Galla. 4. 3. 9.) So that they doubt not to preferre thoſe firſte rudimentes farre beyonde the chiefe perfection.

Then followeth of frowardeneſſe and pride an other miſchiefe: for that all menne would gladly driue the whole worlde to followe theyr example. If any thing pleaſe vs, wee doe preſently deſire that it ſhould paſſe for a law, that others ſhould liue according to our pleaſure. VVhē we read heere that the diſciples of Iohn were taken with the ſnares of Sathan: let vs firſt learne that holyneſſe conſiſteth not in things that be outwarde and indifferent, and alſo to brydle vs with the brydle of moderation and equitie, leaſt we deſire to binde others to follow our pleaſure: but let euery manne remaine in his owne lybertie. I thinke that Iohn exerciſed his diſciples in a certeine rule of faſting and prayers, and had for that end ceteine appoynted dayes for faſtinges, and a preſcripte forme, and certeine appoynted houres for prayers: and therefore I account theſe prayers amongſt outward rites. For though calling vppon God is one of the chiefeſt in ſpirituall worſhippe, yet the ſame beeing framed to the rude capacitie of menne, is worthily accounted amongſte ceremonies and thinges indifferent, the obſeruation whereof ought not too ſeuerely to be vrged. Nowe, why Iohns diſcipline was more ſtreight then Chriſtes, I haue ſaid other where, and ſhall haue more conueniente place to ſpeake of the ſame againe.

15. The children of the bridgroome. Chriſte excuſeth his diſciples by the circumſtaunce of the time: becauſe that God would as yet handle them gently, as if they were in the mariage chamber. For hee compareth himſelfe to a bridegroome, which maketh his friendes merie with his preſence.

Chriſoſtome thinketh that this ſimilitude was taken out of the teſtimonie of Iohn Baptiſt. He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: which opinion I doe not reproue, but I doe not thinke that it is of ſufficient force. Let this ſatiſfie vs, that Chriſte ſaieth, that hee ſpareth and cheriſheth his diſciples ſo long as he is conuerſaunt with them.

But, leaſt any man ſhould enuy that ſhort time of pleaſure, which they had, he declareth that they ſhal ſhortly be handled more hardly & more ſtreightlye. And ſo this is the excuſe, that prayers and faſting do belong to them that are ſadde and in aduerſities : I ſpeake of extraordinarye prayers, whereof he maketh mention in this place . But it was Chriſtes will by a litle at once to accuſtome them to beare greater thinges , and he would not lay a greater burden vpon thē, vntil they had gotten more ſtrength.

Hereof for doctrine may two thinges be gathered: we may not murmurre, if GOD at any time doe beare with the infirmitie of our brethren, and doe handle them gently, while that hee doth handle vs more hardly and more ſtreightly. Then, if at anye tyme GOD giue vs a releaſe from ſorow and troubles, we muſt take heede that we become not drunken with delyghtes, but let vs rather remember that the maryages ſhall not laſt alwayes. The children of the bridegroome, or of the bride chamber, is vſed in the Hebrew phraſe for the gueſtes bidden to the maryage.

16. No manne peeceth an olde garment. Hee confirmeth the former ſentence with two ſimilitudes : whereof the one is taken of garments, and the other of wyne veſſelles . They that thinke that olde garmentes and olde bottelles are compared to the Phariſes , and the newe wyne and newe cloath to the doctrine of the Goſpell, haue no colour . But the ſimilytude is very apte and fitte for the preſent matter: if we interprete this of the weake and tender diſciples of Chriſt , and of diſcipline more harde and ſtreight then they were able to beare . He reporteth it not, as if antiquitie were not fitte for young ſchollers : neyther doth Chriſte compare his diſciples to olde bottelles , and torne garmentes , as if they had beene worne with long vſe: but becauſe they were weake, and not ſtrong enough.

The ſumme is this, that all menne generally are not to be driuen to one, and the ſame manner of lyuing: becauſe their eſtate is vnlyke , and all thinges doe not agree to all menne, the weake are eſpecially to bee borne with, leaſt they be broken with violence , or ouerthrowne with the waight of the burden. Further, Chriſte ſpeaketh after the manner of the country: in that hee vſeth the name of bottelles for barrelles or firkinnes.

LV. 39. No manne that drinketh olde wine. Luke onely maketh mention of this, and it dooth verye well agree with that , which goeth before . And although it is diuerſly wreſted by the interpreters : yet I do ſimplye take it to bee an admonition to the Phariſes , leaſte they giue more credit then is meete to an olde receiued cuſtome. For howe commeth it to paſſe that wine not altering the taſte , ſhoulde not pleaſe all mennes mouthes alyke : but, becauſe that vſe and cuſtome doth frame the taſte? By this order, which Chriſte vſeth towardes his diſciples, it followeth that, that, whiche hath but ſmall pompe and ſhewe , is nothinge leſſe to bee accounted of : as olde wine, though it dooth not fume ſo as newe wine dooth, yet it is as pleaſaunt, and as good for nouriſſinge the bodye.

Mat. 9.

18. VVhile he thus spake vnto them: behold there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying: My daughter is nowe deceased, but come and lay thine hand on her, and she shall liue.

19. And Iesus arose, and followed him with his disciples.

20. And behold a woman which was diseased with an issue of bloude twelue yeares, came behinde him, and touched the hem of his garmēt.

21. For she said in her selfe: If I may touche but his garmēt onely, I shall be whole.

22. Then Iesus turned him about, and seeing her, did say: Daughter bee of good cōfort, thy faith hathmade thee whole: and the woman was made hole at that houre.

Marke 5.

22. And beholde there came one of the rulers of the Synagogue, whose name was Iairus: and when he saw him, he fel downe at his feete,

23. And besought him instantly, saying: My litle daughter lieth at the poynt of death: I praye thee that thou wouldest come and lay thine handes on her, that shee may be healed, and liue.

24. Then hee went with him, and a great multitude folowed him, and thronged him.

25. And there was a certaine woman, which was diseased with an issue of bloude twelue yeares.

26. And had suffered many thinges of Phisitions, and had spent all that she had, and it auatled her nothinge, but shee became much worse.

27. And when she had heard of Iesus, shee came in the preace behinde, and touched his garment.

28. For shee sayde: If I may touch but his cloathes, I shalbe hole.

29. And straight way the course of her bloude was dried vppe, and shee felt in her body, that shee was healed of that plague.

30. And when Iesus did knowe in himselfe the vertue that went out of him, hee turned him rounde about in the preace, and sayde, who hath touched my cloathes?

31. And his disciples sayde vnto him: Thou seest the multitude throng thee, and sayest thou who did touche mee?

32. And he looked rounde about, to see her that had done that.

33. And the woman feared and trembled: for shee knewe what was done in her, and shee came and fell downe before him, and tolde him the whole truthe.

34. And hee sayde to her: Daughter, thy faith hathe made thee hole: Goe in peace, and be hole of thy plague.

Luke 8.

40. And it came to passe when Iesus was come againe, that the people receiued him, for they all waited for him.

41. And beholde there came a man named Iairus, and hee was the ruler of the Synagogue, who fel downe at Iesus feete, and besought him that he would come into his house.

42. For he had but a daughter only, about twelue yeares of age, and shee lay a dying, and as hee went the people thronged him.

43. And a woman hauing an issue of bloud twelue yeres long, which had spent al her substance vppon Phisitions, and couldc not be healed of any,

44. VVhen shee came behind him, shee touched the hemme of his garmente, and immediatelie her issue of bloude stanched.

45. Then Iesus sayde, who is it that hath touched me? VVhen euery manne denied, Peter said, and they that were with him, maister, the multitude throste thee, and treade on thee, and sayest thou, who hathe touched mee?

46. And Iesus sayde: Some one hath touched mee: for I perceiue that vertue is gone from me.

47. VVhen the woman sawe that shee was not hid, shee came trembling, and fell downe before him, and tolde him before al the people, for what cause shee had touched him, and howe shee was healed immediately.

48. And hee sayde vnto her: Daughter, bee of good comforte, thy faith hathe made thee hole, goe in peace.

18. VVhile he thus spake. They that imagine that Marke and Luke doe not sette downe the same hystorie which Mathewe doeth, are so plainely confuted confuted out of the text, ſo that it neede not any long diſputation. Three with one mouthe doe ſaye that Chriſte was required by the ruler of the ſynagogue, that he would come to his houſe to heale his daughter. In this they differ, that the name of Iairus is ſuppreſſed by Mathewe, and is ſet downe by Marke and Luke. And he bringeth in the father ſpeaking thus: my daughter is deceaſed, the other two doe ſay that ſhee was at the poynt of death, and that he was tolde of her death by the way, as he was bringing Chriſt. But in that there is no difficultie: for Mathew endeuouring to be ſhort, doeth in a worde ſet downe togither thoſe things which the other doe digeſt diſtinctly in their places. But ſeeing all other things do ſo aptly agree togither, ſith ſo many circumſtaces doe concord in one, as if three fingers ſhuld ſeeme to be directed togither to ſhew one thing, no reaſon doeth ſuffer this hyſtorie to be drawn to diuers times. The Euangeliſts do with one mouth declare, that when Chriſt was required of the ruler of the ſynagogue to come to his houſe, by the waye a woman was healed of an iſſue of bloud by a ſecrete touching of his garment, and that Chriſt after he was come into the rulers houſe, did raiſe a dead maiden. So I do not thinke it needefull to vſe a long circumſtance of words, to prooue that the three do report one and the ſame hyſtory. Let vs now come to the particulers. Beholde a certaine ruler. Although it appeareth by the other two Euangeliſts that his faith was not ſo ſtrong, that he hoped that he coulde reſtore his daughter to life: yet it is not to be doubted, but that he being rebuked by Chriſt, conceiued a greater hope then hee had brought from home. But Mathew (as it is ſayd) endeuouring to be ſhort, placeth in the beginning that which was wrought in ſucceſſe of time, yet the hyſtorie is thus to bee gathered: that Iairus firſt demaunded to haue his daughter cured of her diſeaſe: and then to bee reſtored from death to life, after, when Chriſt had encouraged him. VVorshipping is taken for the bowing of the knee, as we gather by the words of Marke and Luke: for Iairus did not giue diuine honour to Chriſt, but worſhipped him as a Prophet of God. And it is well knowen that the bowing of the knee was very common amongſt the inhabitants of the Eaſt. Come and lay thine hand on her. VVee haue heere a notable ſpectacle of the fauour of God towardes vs: if thou compareſt the ruler of the ſynagogue, with the Centurion a heathen manne, thou wilt ſay that in him there was a full great light, & in this ſcarce one little droppe of faith: he imagineth that Chriſte hath no power to doe her good, except hee touche her, and hauinge receiued woorde of her death, hee is ſo afraide as if there were no further remedie. Therefore we ſee that his faith was weake and very colde: but that Chriſte yeeldeth to his requeſtes, and encourageth him to hope wel, declareth that his faith howe ſmall ſo euer it was, was not vtterly reiected. Therefore though we be not inſtructed fully in the faith, as it were to be wiſhed, yet there is no cauſe why our weakeneſſe ſhoulde hinder vs or driue vs from calling vpon God.

20. A woman which was diſeaſed with an iſſue of bloud. The Euangeliſtes doe expreſly declare that this iſſue of bloud had endured for the ſpace of 12. yeares, and that the woman had not beene ſlacke in ſeeking remedies, in ſo much that ſhee had conſumed al her ſubſtance vpon Phiſitions, wherby the glory of the myracle was ſo muche the greater. For it doeth euidently appeare that the diſeaſe being incurable, was not healed by the power of man, and that so sodenly, and by the touching of his garment only. But that the woman thought shee should be presently whole, if shee might onely touche his garment, was the singular worke of the holy Ghost, and may not be drawn to a generall rule. VVe know how ouerthwartly superstition plaieth with a foolish & an vnaduised imitation of holy men: but they are Apes and not imitatours, which take vpon them to folowe any one singular example, without a commaundement from God, and rather after their owne fansie, then by the direction of Gods spirite. Also it may be that the faith of the woman, had mixed in it some fault or error, which Christ through his mercy doth tolerate & pardon. And that after shee was founde to bee the partie, shee doeth feare and tremble, suche doubting cannot be excused, bicause it is contrary to faith. VVhy doeth shee not rather directly come to Christe? If she woulde not for reuerence, from whence then did shee hope for helpe, but by his mercie? Then howe commeth it to passe, that shee feareth as one that hadde offended, if shee were perswaded of his fauour? Christe vouchsafeth to commende her faith. For that is it which I touched euen now, God doth deale louingly & gently with his, so that he accepteth their faith, though it be maimed and weake, not imputing the defects and wats of the same. Therefore this woman came to Christe by the direction of faith. But that shee stacke in his garment, rather then shee woulde by praiers offer her self vnto him to be healed, she did peraduenture of an vnaduised zeale somewhat goe out of the way: especially sith that by and by after, she sheweth that shee attempted it of a doubtfull and a wauering minde. But if we graunt that she was thus directed by the spirit, yet that rule remaineth fast, that our faith must not be caried hither and thither by priuate examples, because it must be throughly grounded vppon the woorde of God, according to that saying of Paule, Rom. 10. 17. faith cõmeth by hearing, and hearing by the woorde of God.

This admonition is very profitable, that wee shoulde not geue the title of faith to euery vaine conceiued opinion: VVho is it that toucheth? Marke declareth it more plainely, that Christe looked about him, that he might knowe who it was. But this seemeth to bee absurde, that Christe shoulde powre foorth his grace, not knowing to whome hee shoulde doe good. And that is as harde that hee sayeth a litle after, that he fealt that power was gone out of him. As though it should passe from him after any other order then of his free gift, when and to whome hee shall thinke good to distribute the same. But it is not to bee doubted but that wittingly and willingly hee healed the woman, and it is not to be doubted but that by his spirite hee drewe her vnto him that he might heale her: but he requireth her that shee woulde willingly come foorth amongest the people. If Christe hymselfe shoulde haue declared his owne myracle, peraduenture his woordes shoulde not haue beene beleeued: but now when as the fearfull woman telleth what is befallen vnto her, her confession hathe the more credite.

22. Daughter be of good comfort. The weakenesse of her faith is proued by this speach: for if her fearfulnesse had not bene faultie, Christ would not haue reproued her, by exhorting her to be of good cõfort, yet he also praiseth her faith, wherby is gathered that which I sayd before, when as by the direction of the spirit, & a sincere desire of godlines, she sought Christ, yet ſhee wauered ſo that ſhee needed not to be confirmed. So we ſee that faith, that it may pleaſe God, hath neede of forgiueneſſe, and alſo to bee raiſed with new helpes, that it may gette more ſtrength. Now this muſt Analogically be ledde from the healing of the body to the ſaluation of the ſoule: for as Chriſte attributeth the deliuerance of the woman from her diſeaſe to faith, ſo it is certaine that by faith which reconcileth vs to God, we obtaine forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. VVhen he commaundeth her to goe in peace, and ſayeth that ſhee is healed of her diſeaſe, heereby we gather that ſhe had then truely confirmed that benefite which ſhee had receiued, when as ſhee heareth that by the mouth of Chriſt, which ſhee had nowe found by experience. For we cannot otherwiſe enioy the benefites of God truely and with a quiet conſcience: but while wee poſſeſſe them hidden in the treaſurie of his promiſſes.

Math. 9.

23. Nowe when Ieſus came into the rulers houſe, and ſawe the minſtrels and the multitude making noiſe,

24. He ſaid vnto them, gette yee hence: for the maid is not dead, but ſleepeth. And they laughed him to ſcorne.

25. And when the multitude were put foorth, he went in, and tooke her by the hande, and the maide aroſe.

26. And this bruite went throughout all that land.

Marke 5.

35. VVhile he yet ſpake, there came from the rulers houſe certaine, whiche ſaide: Thy daughter is dead. VVhy diſeaſeſt thou thy maſter any further.

36. Aſſoone as Ieſus hearde that woorde ſpoken, he ſayde vnto the ruler of the ſynagogue: Be not afraide, onely beleeue.

37. And he ſuffered no man to follow him, ſaue Peter, Iames, and Iohn, the brother of Iames.

38. So he came vnto the houſe of the ruler of the Synagogue, and ſawe the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly.

39. And he went in and ſayd vnto them, why make yee this trouble and weepe? the childe is not dead, but ſleepeth.

40. And they laughed him to ſcorne: but he put them all out, and tooke the father and the mother of the childe, and them that were with him, and entred in where the childe lay.

41. And toke the childe by the hand, & ſaid vnto her, Tabitha cumi, which is by interpretation, maiden I ſay vnto thee ariſe.

42. And ſtraight way the maiden aroſe and walked, for ſhee was of the age of 12. yeares, and they were aſtonied out of meaſure.

43. And he charged them ſtreightly, that no man ſhould knowe of it, and commaunded to giue her meat.

Luke 8.

49. VVhile he yet ſpake, there came one from the ruler of the ſynagogues houſe, which ſayd to him, Thy daughter is dead, diſeaſe not thy maſter.

50. VVhen Ieſus heard it, he anſwſweared him, ſaying: Feare not, beleue onely, and ſhe ſhalbe made whole.

51. And when he went into the houſe, he ſuffered no man to goe in with him, ſaue Peter & Iames and Iohn, & the father and the mother of the maide.

52. And al wept and ſorowed for her, but hee ſayde: weepe not, for ſhee is not dead but ſleepeth.

53. And they laught him to ſcorne, knowing that ſhee was dead.

54. So he thruſt them all out, and tooke her by the hand, and cried, ſaying: maid, ariſe.

55. And her ſpirite came againe, and ſhee roſe ſtraighte way, and he commanded to giue her meat.

56. Then her parents were aſtonied, but hee commaunded them, that they ſhoulde tell no man what was done.

MARKE.

MARKE. 36. Be not afraide,onely beleeue. The meſſage of death cauſed him to deſpaire,becauſe he had required nothing elſe of Chriſte, but that he would helpe the ſicke maid. Therfore Chriſt commaundeth that hee ſhould not with feare and diſtruſt ſhut out al hope of grace,which death it ſelfe cannot hinder. For by this phraſe only beleeue, he declareth that hee wanteth not power,ſo that Iairus will accept him, and he alſo exhorteth him to be of good comfort,for he cannot beleeue more, then God in his great power is able to perfourme. And verely it ſo falleth out with vs al: for God would deale more liberally with vs,if we were not ſo ſtrait: but our hardnes of belief doth hinder god,that he powre not his gifts more plētifully vpon vs. In ſumme,we are taught in this place,that we can neuer exceede meaſure in beleeuing,becauſe our faith howe large ſo euer it be,can neuer conceiue the hundred part of the goodneſſe of God.

37. And he ſuffered no man. He forbade them entrance,either becauſe they were vnworthy to be witneſſes of the myracle: or becauſe that he would not haue the myracle ouerwhelmed with the murmuring multitude: for it were better that the damſell whoſe body they had ſeene deade,ſhoulde ſodenly come foorth aliue and ſtrong into the ſight of men. Marke and Luke ſay that he tooke with him but thre of his diſciples,they both adde the parents: And Marke only ſayeth that he tooke them which were Iairus his companions when hee came to require Chriſt. Mathewe who is ſhorter,omitteth this circumſtance.

LVKE. 52. And al wept. The Euāgeliſts do make mention of mourning, that their hope in the reſurrection may be the more certaine. Alſo Mathew ſayeth expreſly that there were minſtrels,which was not wont to be,but where as they were aſſured that the body was deade,and when as they prepared the funeralles. In the mournefull funeralles the pipe did ſound,ſayeth he. And although they thought after this maner to honour their deade, and as it were to adorne their buriall, yet wee ſee howe the worlde is alwaies ready, not onely to nouriſh, but alſo to ſtirre vppe her own faults. It was their duetie to apply theſelues by al means to appeaſe mourning, but as though they had not offended inough with their outragious ſorow,with new prouocations they do ambitiouſly prouoke the ſame. The Gentiles alſo thought that this melodie appeaſed the ghoſtes: whereby we gather with how many corruptions Iudea was then filled.

MARKE. 39. But ſleepeth. To ſleepe is taken in diuers places of the ſcripture,for,to die: And doubtles by this ſimilitude gathered of the temporall reſt,is noted the reſurrection to come. And Chriſt doeth heere eſpecially make a compariſon betweene ſleepe and death, that hee might confirme the hope of life: as if he ſhould haue ſayde,you ſhall ſee her preſently raiſed vp,whome nowe you thinke to be dead. And it is no maruel that he was laughed to ſcorne of blockiſh and groſe menne,whiche were wholely occupied in prophane mourning, and vnderſtoode not his purpoſe. And yet this auaileth to the ſetting foorth of the myracle,that none of them doubted of her death.

41. Hee tooke her by the hande and ſayde. Although this crie did naturally profite nothinge to the wakeninge of the ſenſes of the deade, yet doeth Chriſt here ſhew notably the power of his voice, that he might the more accuſtome men to geue eare to his doctrine. And herein appeareth howe effectual the voyce of Chriſt is,which pearceth vnto the dead,ſo as it geeth ueth life euen in death it selfe. Therfore Luke sayeth that her spirit came againe: as if he should haue said, that the spirite being called by the commaundement of Christ, was straightway present.

43. And he charged them. Although Christ woulde not generally admit all to beholde her raising vppe, yet the myracle coulde not remaine long hidde. And it was not meete to suppresse the power of God, whereby the whole worlde was prepared to life. VVhy then did hee commaunde the maides parents to silence? It may be that his will was that they shoulde not so muche conceale the thing it selfe as the maner, and that onely but for a time: for we see in other places also, howe he sought for opportunitie. They that thinke that they were forbidden to speake, that they might be the more whetted on, are hardly taken, when they flee to this answer. I graunt that Christ wrought not this myracle, but that it should be vttered, but at a more apt time, or when the multitude was dismissed, where was no meane nor moderation. Therefore hee woulde geue them space that the more quietly and aduisedly they mighte consider the woorke of God.

Mathewe 9.	Marke.	Luke.
27. And as Iesus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying and saying: O sonne of Dauid, haue mercie vpon vs.
28. And when hee was come into the house, the blinde men came to him, and Iesus sayd vnto them: Beleeue yee that I am able to doe this? And they sayde vnto him, yea Lorde.
29. Then touched hee their eyes, saying: according to your faith be it vnto you.
30. And their eyes were opened, and Iesus charged them, saying: See that no man know it.
31. But when they were departed, they spredde abroade his fame through out all that land.
32. And as they went out: behold, they brought to him a dumbe man possessed with a deuill.
33. And when the deuill was cast out, the dumbe spake: Then the multitude marueiled, saying: the like was neuer seene in Israel.
34. But the Pharisees sayde: Hee casteth out deuils, through the prince of deuils.

27. And as Iesus departed. The other Euangelists do say nothing of these 2. myracles: for, as we haue said other where, and Iohn doeth plainly affirme that it was not their purpose to rehearse all the deedes of Christe, but onely to gather some principall poyntes, which prooue him to be the Messias. Further, Mathewe sayeth that two blinde men were restored to their sight, but not so speedily, as often other where hee was accustomed to helpe the miserable. For he doeth not aunsweare them as they crie after him in the way, but as though he dissembled the matter, hee suffereth them to followe him into the house. There he doeth at length enquire of them what they doe beleeue of his power. Therefore his minde was in deede and woordes to examine their faith, for hee holdinge them in suspence pence, nay paſsing by as though he heard not, he maketh a triall of their patience, and what roote faith hadde taken in their mindes. After, when he demaundeth whether they beleeue, he proſecuteth the ſame examination. But it may be demaunded whether to be perſwaded of the power of Chriſt and of God, is ſufficient to make any manne faithful. For thus much doe the wordes ſignifie, doe you beleeue me, that I can doe it? But it appeareth out of diuers other places of the ſcripture, that the knowledge of the power is but vaine and cold, except we be aſſured of his wil. Yet Chriſte being ſatisfied with their anſweare, approoueth their faith as perfect in all poyntes, I anſweare, when at the firſt they confeſſed him to be the ſonne of Dauid, they conceiued ſomewhat of the grace. For with this title they honoured the redeemer of their nation, and the authour of all their good. Therefore hee demaunding of his owne power, hee doeth more depely enquire, whether they do conſtantly beleeue. Therfore faith comprehendeth the mercy and fatherly loue of God with power, & the ready will of Chriſt with might. But becauſe that men do commonly attribute leſſe to the power of God and might of Chriſt then is meete, the blinde menne are not asked without a cauſe, whether they beleeue that Chriſte can doe that which they profeſſe, though the purpoſe of Chriſte was ſimply to know whether that from their heart they gaue to him the honour of the Meſsias. And for this cauſe is their faith approoued, that in ſo baſe & cõtemptible an eſtate, they acknowledged the ſonne of Dauid.

29. According to your faith. Although it is ſayd that this benefite is ſpecially beſtowed vpon two blinde men, yet out of theſe preſent wordes of Chriſt, we may gather this general doctrine, that we ſhal neuer be ſuffred to depart without our requeſts, ſo that we pray with faith. If that theſe two by a ſmall faith as yet not throughly grounded, doe obtaine that which they require, much more at this day ſhall their faith preuail which being endued with the ſpirite of adoption, and made partakers of the ſacrifice of the mediatour, doe come to God.

30. He charged them. Either his will was to haue other witneſſes of the myracle, or elſe that hee woulde deferre the reporte thereof to an other time. Therefore that is woorthy to be reprooued, that they doe vtter the ſame preſently euery where. For that ſome imagine that Chriſte forbade them, that he might the rather ſtirre them forwarde, we haue confuted in an other place. It is certaine there was ſome cauſe of forbidding whiche is vnknowen vnto vs: but theſe menne of an vnaduiſed zeale doe vtter it before the time.

32. They brought vnto him a dumbe man. It is probable that this manne was not dumbe by nature, but when he was deliuered vp to the deuil, that he was depriued of his ſpeach: yet al thoſe that are dumbe, are not poſſeſſed of deuils. But this man was ſo afflicted, that by manifeſt ſignes it appeared that his tongue was tied. And that after his healing the people do cry out, that the like was neuer ſeene in Iſrael, ſeemeth to be an hyperbolicall kinde of ſpeache: for by greater myracles had God in times paſt reuealed his glory amongſt that people. But it may be that they had regarde to the ende of the myracle, ſo that then the minds of all men were ſtirred vp to loke for the cõming of the Meſsias. And they ſo extold the preſent grace of God, ſo as they wold diminiſh nothing from his former works. And it is to be noted, that this ſpeache was not premeditate, but ſuch as in admiration brake out ſodenly.

34. The

34. The Phariſes ſayde. Heereby it appeareth how mad they were, which were not afraide to defame with wicked ſpeache ſo notable a woorke of God. For the Antitheſis is to be noted betweene the praiſe of the people and the blaſphemie of theſe men. For that the people ſayeth, the like was neuer done in Iſrael, was a confeſsion proceeding from a feeling of the glory of God. VVhereby it doeth the better appeare that theſe men were ſtarke madde, which durſt blaſpheme God to his face. Yet wee are alſo taughte, when wickednes is growen to extremitie, that there is none ſo manifeſt a woorke of God which it will not peruert. But this is monſtrous, ſeldome ſeene and incredible, that mortall men ſhould riſe vppe againſt their maker: but that blindneſſe is ſo much the more to be feared, (which I ſpake of before) whereby the Lorde after his long ſufferaunce executeth his vengeance vppon the wicked.

Mathewe 9.	Marke.	Luke.
35. And Ieſus went about all cities and townes, teaching in their Synagogues, and preaching the Goſpel of the kingdome, and healing euery ſickeneſſe, and euery diſeaſe among the people.
36. But when hee ſawe the multitude, hee had compaſſion vppon them, becauſe they were diſpearſed and ſcattered abroade, as sheepe hauing no shepheards,
37. Then ſayde hee to his diſciples, ſurely the haruеſt is great, but the labourers are fewe.
38. VVherefore pray the Lorde of the haruеſt, that he would ſend foorth labourers into his haruеſt.

35. And he went about. This is ſpoken by preuention, that wee myghte knowe that the whole miniſterie of Chriſte is not particulerly deſcribed: but generally, that he was diligent in his office, namely that hee mighte publiſh the doctrine of ſaluation, and confirm the ſame by myracles. VVe haue ſayd in an other place before, that it is called the Goſpel of the kingdome, of the effecte: becauſe that by this meanes God doeth gather vnto himſelfe a people that was miſerably diſpearſed, that hee might raigne in the midſt of them: and for that cauſe truely hath he raiſed vp his throne, that he might endue all his with full felicitie. Yet let vs remember that it behoooueth vs to become ſubiecte to God, that by him wee may be caried into celeſtiall glory.

36. He had compaſſion vpon them. Hereby we gather firſt how ſluggiſh the Prieſts were, which being placed through out the whole lande, that they might ſhewe foorth the light of the heauenly doctrine, were become idle bellies. And they proudly boaſted themſelues to be the chief biſhoppes of the people: and there was no ſmall multitude of them which gloried in this title: yet Chriſte acknowledgeth none of them to be paſtours. The ſame want is found at this day in Poperie, which yet is repleniſhed with paſtorall titles: for greate is that ſinke or heape of that leude companie which vnder the name of the cleargie doe deuoure vppe the people. For though they be dumbe dogges, yet they are not aſhamed arrogantly to bragge of their hierarchie. But the woorde of Chriſt is to be heard which ſayeth that there are no paſtours, whereas there are no labourers, & that thoſe ſheepe are wandring and diſpearced, which are not gathered togither into the folde of God by the doctrine of the Goſpell. And in that he is touched with compaſsion, he prooueth himſelfe to be a faithfull miniſter of his father, in caring for the ſaluation of the people, for whoſe ſake he had take vpon him our fleſh. And though he is now receiued into heauen, and hath not the ſame affections, whereunto hee was ſubiecte in this mortall life, yet he caſteth not away the care of his Church: but he hathe regard vnto his wandering ſheepe, and his owne flocke cruelly putte to flight and ſcattered by the wolues.

37. The harueſt is great. By this Metaphore he declareth that many of the common ſorte were ready to receiue the goſpell. For though the greater number did moſt vnworthily and vnthankefully refuſe ſaluation offred them: yet he compareth that ſmall number of the elect which was mixed amongſt the vnbeleeuers, vnto a plentifull harueſt, becauſe that God eſteemeth more of that ſmall company of them, then of all the world beſide. And though many did then intrude themſelues in: yet he doeth not account them amongſt labourers, becauſe that few did behaue themſelues faithfully: for he taketh this name of labourers in the good part. VVhen Paule complaineth of euill woorkers, he hath reſpecte vnto their vaine-glory and boaſting. For he beſtoweth not this title vpon them that apply their labour onely in deſtroying and waſting: but becauſe that vnder a falſe pretence they chalenge the ſame vnto them ſelues.

Pray the Lord of the harueſt. Becauſe that no ſyncere or fitte miniſter of the Goſpell will thruſt in himſelfe: neither doe others rightly diſcharge the office of teaching, but thoſe which are raiſed by the Lord, and are by the ſpirite furniſhed with their giftes, ſo ofte as we ſee the want of good paſtours, it is neceſſary that we ſhoulde lift vppe our eyes to him for remedie. But there was neuer more neede of this prayer, then in the horrible confuſion of the Church, which doeth now appeare in euery place.

Math. 8.	Marke 4.	Luke 8.
23. And when he was entred into the ship, his diſciples followed him.	35. Nowe the ſame day when euē was come, he ſayd vnto them: Lette vs paſſe ouer vnto the other ſide.	22. And it came to paſſe on a certaine day, that hee went into ship with his diſciples: and he ſayde vnto them, Let vs goe ouer vnto the other ſide of the lake, & they lanched forth.

25. Then hee sayde vnto them, where is your faith? and they feared, and wondered among themselues, saying: who is this that commaundeth bothe the windes and the water, and they obey him?

Because that shortly after there is again mention made of a lake, wherinto it is sayde, the swine were caried headlong: al doe not agree whether it be one and the same lake. All doe confesse that the waters of Genesara were pleasant to the taste, and wholesome to be vsed: but Strabo sayeth that the lake of Gadara was so noysome and pestilent, that the beasts whiche dranke of it, lost their hooues and their haires. Therfore it is not to be doubted, but that they were two diuers lakes, and in space farre distant one from an other. But without question this place ought to be vnderstoode of Genesara: which Christ passed ouer and went to the Gadarens, which are called Gergesens by Mathew. And they which of the diuersitie of the name do gather that two diuers hystories are recorded, while they woulde seeme to be subtile, they slippe into too grosse ignoraunce. For the Countrey of the Gergesens was also called Gadarena, of a famous Citie called Gadaris. The name was chaunged in Hieromes time, therefore hee calleth them Gerasens, according to the custome then receiued. Yet I doe not denie but that the swine were caried headlong by the deuilles, into the lake of Gadara. But when Christe sayeth, let vs goe to the further shoare, I cannot interpreate that but of Genesara. Nowe it remaineth that we shoulde consider the time, whiche cannot be gathered neither by Mathew nor by Luke. Onely Marke noteth that it was the euening of that day when Christ spake of the preaching of the gospell, vnder the parable of seede. Vvhereby it appeareth that they did not obserue the order of the time, the whiche Luke doeth also euidently declare, when he sayeth that it came to passe vpon a certaine day: by which woordes he sheweth that he did not muche busie himselfe what was don first or last.

23. When hee was entred into the shippe. Marke sayeth that other shippes did passe with them also: but that Christe with his disciples went vppe into his owne shippe: Luke doeth also rehearse his woordes. Mathewe is brieffer, yet in summe they agree: namely, that Christe laide himselfe to rest, and while he slept, sodenly there arose a tempest. First it is certaine, that the tempest which did trouble the lake, came not by chance. For how can it be that God would suffer his owne sonne to be tost with the blind force of the windes? But his will was by this meanes to reueale to his Apostles how little and how weake their faith was as yet.

And thoughe Christes sleepe was naturall, yet it auailed to the same

vſe,that the Diſciples ſhoulde the better knowe their owne infirmitie. I will not ſay,as many doe, that Chriſte fained himſelfe to be a ſleepe,that hee might trie them: I doe rather iudge that hee ſlepte as the condition and the neceſsitie of humane nature did require. Yet his Godheade did watch, ſo that the Apoſtles ought not to haue feared but that they ſhould haue preſently bene comforted,helpe being prepared for them from heauen. Therefore lette vs knowe that all this was done by the ſecreat prouidence of God,that Chriſte ſlept, that the ſtorme aroſe, the waues couered the ſhippe,and that the ſhippe hardly eſcaped drowning. And lette vs learne heereby,ſo oft as any aduerſitie doth ariſe,that our faith is tried of the Lorde:but if the troubles doe encreaſe,ſo that they doe almoſte ouerwhelme vs,it is by the ſame purpoſe of God to exerciſe our patience: or that by this meanes our hidden infirmitie might come to light: as wee ſee,when the waues couered the Apoſtles, their infirmitie was reuealed, which before was hidde.

25. Maiſter ſaue vs. A godly prayer,as it ſeemeth: for what could they haue done better,then being at the poynt to be loſt,to ſeeke for preſeruation at Chriſte? But ſith that Chriſt condemneth them of infidelitie,wee muſt ſeeke wherein they offended. And I doubt not but that they ſtucke too muche to the carnall preſence of their maiſter. For,as it appeareth by Marke, they doe not ſimplie entreat him, but they expoſtulate the matter with him: Maiſter,careſt thou not that we periſh? Luke alſo noteth an amaſed trembling: Maiſter,maiſter,wee periſh. They ought to account that the Godheade of Chriſte was not oppreſſed with the ſleepe of the fleſh,and to haue fledde to the ſame. But they reſt vntill extreeme daunger enforceth them:then exceſsiue fear amaſeth them,ſo that they thinke they cannot be ſafe,except they waken Chriſt. This is the cauſe why hee accuſeth them of infidelitie. For in that they required that hee woulde helpe them, was rather a teſtimonie of their faith, if they had truſted in his diuine power,and patiently without feare hadde hoped for the helpe which they required. And thus is the queſtion aunſweared,which maye be demaunded of his reprooving them: whether all feare is naught and repugnant to faith. Firſt he doth not ſimplie reprooue them becauſe they feare,but becauſe they be fearefull. Marke alſo vſeth ſuche a phraſe as noteth that they did feare beyond meaſure. Then by oppoſing faith to their feare, he ſheweth that he ſpeaketh of exceſsiue feare, whiche doeth not ſo much exerciſe their faith, as ſhake the rootes of faith out of their mindes. And thereby appeareth that euery feare is not contrary to faith: for if we feare nothing,a retchleſſe ſecuritie of the fleſhe doeth oppreſſe vs: ſo faith fainteth,the deſire to pray waxeth dull, and the remembraunce of God is at length extinguiſhed. Further,they which are not touched with a feeling of euilles,are rather blockiſh then conſtant. So we ſee that feare which ſtirreth vp faith,is not of it ſelfe to be condemned vntill it exceede meaſure. And herein is the exceſſe,if that the tranquillitie of our faith,be therby either troubled or waxe faint,which ought to reſt vpon the word of God: but becauſe it neuer falleth out,that the faithfull do ſo gouerne themſelues that their faith is kept vnſhakē,they do almoſt alwaies offend in fearing. But it is requiſite to determine,not to condemne the ſhaking of faith for euery feare, but for that feare which diſturbeth the peace of conſcience,ſo that it reſt not in the promiſſes of God.

26. He rebuked the windes. Mathew rehearſeth alſo the words of Chriſt, wherwith he ſpeaketh to the ſea, and commaundeth it to be ſilent, that is, to be calme, not that the lake had any ſenſes, but that he might ſhew that the power of his voyce doth pearce euen into the dumme elements. And not onely the ſea and the windes, creatures without ſence, doe obey the commaundement of God, but the wicked alſo themſelues with all theyr ſtubbornneſſe. For when as God will appeaſe warlike tumults, he doeth not alwaies mollifie the cruell mindes of men, and frame them to obey him, but he yet cauſeth their weapons to fall out of their handes, be they neuer ſo madde. And ſo is that fulfilled which is wrytten. Pſal. 46. 9. He maketh warres to ceaſe vnto the ends of the world: he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the ſpeare in ſunder, and burneth the chariotes with fire.

27. And the men meruailed. Marke and Luke ſeeme to attribute this to the Apoſtles: for after they had ſayd that Chriſte had reproued them, they adde, they cried out with feare, who is this? yet this is rather to be applied to others, which did not as yet know Chriſte. But lette vs folowe bothe: heerein doeth nowe appeare the fruite of the myracle, when the glory of Chriſte is ſhewed foorth. If any thinke that the Apoſtles ſpake it, then this ſhalbe the meaning of the woordes: his diuine power was ſufficiently prooued, in that the windes and the ſea doe obey him. Yet becauſe it is more probable that other ſpake it, the Euangeliſtes doe teache in theſe wordes, that their minds were ſo ſtriken with the myracle, that the reuerence of Chriſt, was a certaine preparation to faith.

beſought him: ſaying: If thou caſt vs out, ſuffer vs to goe into the heerde of ſwine.
32. And he ſayde vnto them: Goe, ſo they went out, and departed into the heerd of ſwine: and beholde, the whole heerd of ſwine was caried with violence from a ſtiepe downe place into the ſea, and died in the water.
33. Then the herd-men fled, and when they were come into the citie, they tolde all things, & what was become of them that were poſſeſſed with de-uils.
34. And beheld al
the citie came out to meete Ieſus, & when they ſawe him, they beſought him to departe out of their coaſtes.

8. For he ſayd vnto him: Come out of the man thou vncleane ſpirite.
9. And hee asked him: VVhat is thy name? and hee aunſweared, ſaying: my name is Legion, for wee are many.
10. And they prayed him inſtantlye, that hee woulde not ſende them away out of the countrey.
11. Nowe there was there in the mountaines a great herd of ſwine feeding.
12. And all the deuilles beſoughte him: ſaying, ſende vs into the ſwine, that we enter into them.
13. And incontinently Ieſus gaue them leaue. Then the vncleane ſpi-rites went oute and entred into the ſwine, and the heerd ranne headlong from the high bank into the ſea, (and there were about two thouſand ſwine) and they were drowned in the ſea.
14. And the ſwineheardes fled and tolde it in the citie, and in the countrey, and they came out to ſee what it was that was done.
15. And they came to Ieſus, & ſawe him that had beene poſſeſſed with the deuill, and had the Legion, and in his right minde, and they were afraide.
16. And they that ſawe it, tolde them what was done to him that was poſſeſſed with the deuill, and concerning the ſwine.
17. Then they began to pray him, that he woulde depart out of their coaſtes.
18. And when hee was come into the ſhippe, he that had beene poſſeſſed with the deuill, praied him that hee might be with him.
19. How beit Ieſus would not ſuffer him, but ſayde vnto him: Go thy way home to thy friendes, and ſhewe them what greate thinges the Lorde hathe done vnto thee, and howe he hath had compaſſion on thee.
20. So he departed, and beganne to publiſhe in Decapolis, what greate things Ieſus had done vnto him: and all men did marueil.

30. Then Ieſus asked hym: ſaying, what is thy name. And he ſaide, Legion, becauſe many de-uils were entred into him.
31. And they beſought him, that he wold not command thē to go out into the deepe.
32. And there was thereby, an herd of ſwine feding on an hill, & the deuils beſought him that he wold ſuffer them to enter into them: ſo he ſuffered them.
33. Then went the deuils out of the manne, and entred into the ſwine: and the heerd was caried with violence frō a ſtepe downe place, into the lake, and was choked.
34. VVhen the herdmen ſawe what was done, they fledde: and when they were departed, they tolde it in the citie and in the countrey. 35. Then they came out to ſee what was done, and came to Ieſus, and founde the man, out of whom the deuilles were departed, ſittinge at the feete of Ieſus, clothed, & in his right mind, & they wer afraid.
36. They alſo which ſaw it, tolde thē by what means he that was poſſeſſed with the deuill, was healed. 37. Then the whole multitude of the country about the Gadarenes, beſought hym, that he wold depart frō them, for they were takē with a great feare, and he went into the ship and returned. 38. Then the man, out of whome the deuilles were departed, beſoughte him that hee might be with him:
but Ieſus ſent him away, ſaying: 39. Return into thine own houſe, and ſhewe what greate things God hath don vnto thee.
So hee went his way, and preached throughoute all the Citie, what great thinges Ieſus hadde done vnto him.

I haue before confuted their error which thinke that Mark and Luke do report not this, but an other myracle. For when as the three Euangeliſts doe note that region which is againſt Galile, as Luke alſo declareth, and all the circumſtances doe agree: who will beleeue that all theſe thinges fell out at diuers times.

28. There met him two poſſeſſed with deuils. This difference cauſed the interpreters to erre, and to ſeparate Mathewe from the other two: becauſe he nameth two, and the other but one. But Auguſtines coniecture is probable, who thinketh that ther were two, yet they made mẽtion but of one, becauſe he was the more famous: and ſo the myracle ſhould be the more notable in him by reaſon of the greatneſſe of the diſeaſe. And certainely we ſee that Marke and Luke do beſtowe moe wordes in amplifying the cruelty of the deuil, that it might appeare that the miſerable man of whõ they ſpeake, was wonderfully tormented. Therefore in that they reporte a notable example of the diuine power of Chriſt, thogh they ſay nothing of the other man, yet they diſſent not from the hyſtorie of Math. which addeth the hyſtorie of the other who was not ſo wel known. That Luke ſayth, a certaine man met him out of the citie, it is vncertaine whether he meaneth that he was a citizen of Gadara, or whether he came out from thence to meete him. For when as he was commaunded to go home, and to preache the grace of God amongeſt his owne friendes, Marke ſayeth that hee did this in Decapolis, whiche was a countrey next ouer againſte Galile, wherby it is to be cõiectured that he was not a Gadaranite borne. Further, Mathew and Marke do expreſly ſay that he came not out of the Citie, but out of the graues. And Luke himſelf in the whole courſe of the hyſtorie, declareth that he liued in the deſart. Therefore theſe wordes (A certaine man met him out of the citie) I do thus interpreate, before Chriſt came to the Citie, a certaine man poſſeſſed with a deuil, mette him by the way out of that coaſt. But their opinion which thinke that hee dwelte in the graues, either becauſe the deuils were delited with the ſauour of the dead carcaſes, or that they were pleaſed with the ſighte of the ſacrifices, or becauſe they woulde catche the ſoules which delired to be neare vnto their bodies, is friuolous and fooliſh. The vncleane ſpirite did rather holde this man amongſt the graues, that he might be conſumed with continual terrour, by the ſorowfull beholding of the deade, as one baniſhed from the company of menne, would dwell amongſt the dead. Further, wee learne hereby that the deuil doth not only vexe men in this preſent life, but perſecute them euen vnto death, ſo that his kingdom might flouriſh euen in death.

MAR. 3. And no man could binde him, no not with chaines. He coulde not naturally breake chains, wherby we gather that ſathan is permitted to haue ſometime extraordinarie motions, whoſe force excedeth our vnderſtanding and vſual reaſon. And it is often ſeene that frantike men haue much more ſtrength, then if they were in perfect health. And it is not to be denied but that the deuil doth there alſo play his partes, ſo oft as God doeth ſuffer him, but this violent force which the Euangeliſts do here ſpeake of, was far greater. Truly a ſorowful & a horrible ſpectacle but we are ther by admoniſhed how miſerable & fearful a thing it is, to be ſubiecte to the tyranny of ſathan: and we muſte muche more feare the vexation of the ſoule then the torments of the body, how ſharp or cruell ſo euer they be.

6. He worshipped him. This was the order of the hyſtorie, when the poſſeſſed with deuils mette him, Chriſt commaunded the vncleane ſpirits to come out of them, then did they humbly beſeech him that he would not torment them before the time. Therefore he did not worſhippe Chriſt, before Chriſt ſpake to them: neither did they cõplaine that Chriſt troubled them, vntil he commaunded them to go foorth. But it is to be noted that they came not willingly into Chriſtes ſighte, but drawne by his ſecreat power: for as they were wont before by their furious fierceneſſe to drawe men into the graues: ſo now a greater power bringeth thẽ againſt their wil to the tribunal ſeat of their iudge, wherby we gather that all the kingdom of Sathan is ſubiect to the power of Chriſt. For the deuils haue not nowe any more their owne deſire, when Chriſte citeth them before him, then the miſerable men had before, which by his tyrannie were caried hither and thither. To be ſhort, by the ſecreate power of Chriſte they are brought before him, that by calling them out, he might declare hymſelfe to be the deliuerer of men. Alſo by compulſion they woorſhip him, and their reprochefull complaintes doe teſtifie that their confeſsion was not voluntarie but wreaſted out by violence, they ſay: VVhat haſt thou to doe with vs? By which woordes they deſired to driue him away: but becauſe they ſawe themſelues holden faſt bound, ſo that it were vaine to flee from his power, they complaine that they are tormented before the time, and with it they ioyne an entreatie. So wee ſee the deuilles doe nothinge but breathe out crueltie againſt God, and yet with their pride wherein they ſwell, they fall downe as confounded creatures, and that at the ſame preſent: bicauſe their malice and peruerſeneſſe, which is neuer tamed, ceaſeth not to wreaſtle againſt the power of God, and yet in the meane ſeaſon it is enforced to giue place.

This ſeemeth to be the cauſe why Chriſt doeth not openly reiecte here the confeſsion of the deuill, as he did in other places: bicauſe it was euident that it could not doe ſuch harme in that place. Note that Chriſt had a conſideration of menne, and for that cauſe, when malicious and wicked men were by, that he might the readilier ſtop falſe reportes and ſlanders, he did the more ſharply put the deuils to ſilence. As concerning this place it is inough, and more then inough, that the deuilles humbly entreating, did outragiouſly fret againſt him.

MATH. 29. Art thou come hither to torment vs before the time. Some interpreat this to bee the kinde of torment, that they are enforced to leaue that manne which they poſſeſſed, free, and at libertie. Other referre it to the laſt day of iudgement. But I vnderſtande that they being amaſed at the preſence of their iudge, did thinke of their puniſhment, for an euill conſcience telleth them what they haue deſerued though Chriſte holde his peace. For euen as the wicked beinge at the iudgement ſeate, do conceiue their puniſhment: ſo of neceſsitie muſt the deuils & all wicked men tremble at the ſight of God: euen as if they did nowe feele the helles, the fire vnquenchable, and the torments to come. And when the deuils knew that Chriſte ſhoulde bee the iudge of the worlde, it is no maruell if his ſight ſtricke a feare into them of preſent tormẽt. The queſtion is in vaine which ſome do moue, whether they knew of the day of iudgemẽt. Then what doeth this clauſe meane, Before the time? namely, becauſe the reprobate do neuer thinke it time for them to be puniſhed: for they doe gladly delay it from day to day. For as they accounte delay for gaine, ſo long as the Lord doeth beare with them: ſo (thoughe to no purpoſe) by running backe they flee his iudgement.

MARK. 9. My name is Legion. Chriſt asked this queſtion of the deuil, that he might the better ſet foorth the excellencie of his grace. This man had not ſo great a vengeance laid vppon him without a cauſe, that as it were an hoaſt of deuils ſhould dwel in him. Then, what great mercy were it to draw this man out of ſo many deſtructions, which was loſt more then a thouſand times? Alſo the power of Chriſt did ſhine herein wonderfully, that at his voice he ſodenly put to flight, not one deuil, but a great multitude. And this word Legion is not taken for a certaine number of menne, but onely for a great multitude. Heereby it appeareth howe miſerable a creature man is, where as he is without the protection of God: for euery man lieth open, not only to perticular deuils, but is a receptacle to whole multitudes of deuils. Heere is alſo confuted that common errour which the Iewes and Chriſtians haue borowed of prophane men: namely, that perticular men are aſſaulted by perticular deuils. But the ſcripture doeth plainly affirm, that the Lord as he pleaſeth, ſendeth one deuill to ſcourge a whole nation, and ſometime many to torment one manne: ſo againe, ſometime one Angell is ſette ouer a whole people, and to perticular men are many appoynted to watch ouer them for their ſaluation. So muche the more carefully it behooueth vs to watch, leaſt ſo great a multitude of enemies doe circumuent vs.

10. They praied him inſtantly. Luke ſayth that they entreated that they might not be ſent into the deepe: which is ſo expounded of ſome as if they fled the deſart. But I doe refer it to the deſire which they had to hurt, becauſe that deuils do only deſire this one thing, to wander amongſt men, as Lions hunting after their pray. It greueth them to be drowned in the depe, wherin their power to hurt and to deſtroy ſhould be taken away. And it may be gathered by Markes wordes, that this is the natural ſence of this place. For he ſayeth that they required that they might not be compelled to goe out of that country. In ſumme, they declare this to be their nature, that they deſire nothing more, then the deſtruction of mankinde.

MAT. 31. Suffer vs to go into the heerd of ſwine. Some thinke that they deſired to enter into the ſwine, becauſe they do hate deadly all the creatures of God. I graunt that this is true, that they are wholely bent to ouerthrow and peruert the whole order of nature framed by God: but it is certaine that they had a further regard, namely that they might cauſe the inhabitants of that nation to curſſe God for the loſſe of their ſwine. For the deuill ſent lightening vppon Iob his houſe, not for the hatred of the woode or the ſtones: but that the holy man, bearing vnpatiently the loſſe, ſhould murmure againſt God. And Chriſt allowing it, doeth not heare their requeſtes, but for this cauſe, that hee might knowe what manner of people the Gadarenes were.

And it may be that he gaue that liberty to the deuils ouer their ſwine, that hee might bee by that meanes puniſhe their offences. But as no certaine cauſe doth appeare vnto vs, ſo it doth behooue vs reuerently to deeme of the ſecret iudgement of God, & with godly humility to honor the ſame.

But this place doth teach vs how foolishly certeine prophane menne doe trifle, which imagine that diuelles are not essentiall spirites, but onelye wicked affections. For how can couetousnes, ambition, crueltie and infidelitie, enter into swine? Therefore wee knowe the euyll spirites (as they are appoynted to destruction) to be enemies of mankinde: to that end, that they maye cary as many headlong with them to the same destruction as they can.

MAR. 15. They came to Iesus. VVee haue hereby a notable instruction, all which feele the hand of God doe not profit as they ought: that they might thereby submit themselues vnder true holynesse. The Gadarenes beholding the miracle, were afraid: namely, because the maiestie of God did shine in Christ. Thus farre they did well: But that they sende him out of their coastes, what could they haue doone worse then that? They also were scattered: the shepheard is ready, which gathereth together: nay, God stretcheth out his armes by his own sonne, that he might cary them (which were ouerwhelmed with the darkenesse of death) in his owne armes into heauen. They had rather lose the saluation offered them, then any longer abide the presence of Christ. They seeme to be offended at the losse of their swine: but Luke noteth a greater cause, that they were taken with a great feare, and certeinly being exasperated by receiuing that losse, they would els not haue required him, but they would haue driuen him out more roughly. But when they reuerence him, as a minister of God, and being afrayde, doe yet desire to haue him further from them, we see that they were touched with no feeling of the grace of God. And certeinly, though all the wicked doe reuerence God, and doe bestow much time in appeasing him: yet, if their choice were giuen them, they would conuey themselues a great way from him: because his face is terrible to them, so long as they think him to be a iudge rather then a father. Hereof it commeth to passe, that the doctrine of the Gospell (then the which nothing can be imagined to be sweeter) is in diuers places grieuous and sowre, so that a great part of the world would wish it buried. Yet it is true, that parte of the feare ryseth through their losse: So at this day, while menne doe openlye and priuately account that the kingdome of Christ is against their commodities, being possessed with a wicked feare of the flesh, they will not taste of his grace. Therefore at his comming, they, imagining God rather to be angry then merciful, as-much as in the lyeth, send him away to an other place. And this is a token of vile blockishnesse, that the losse of their hogges doth more terrifie them, then the saluation of the soule doth make them ioyfull.

LV. 38. The man besought him. The Gaderenes cannot abide him, with them: but the man which was delyuered from the deuill, desireth that hee may lose his countrey, and follow him. Hereby appeareth how much difference there is betweene the knowledge of the goodnes, and of the power of God: because the power striking in a feare, maketh men to flye from the sight of God, & driueth them farre away: but the goodnes doth sweetely allure; so that they account nothing more to be desired, then to be vnited to God.

It is vncerteine why Christe refused to haue this man to follow him, except he hoped that greater profit should arise by his telling that so excellent and notable a benefit amongst his owne countrey men. And

Mar. & Lu. do teſtifie that he did ſo. Chriſt purpoſely cõmandeth him to ſhew forth the work of god, not his own: ſo that he being accoũted for a true Prophet & miniſter of God: and this hee dooth that he might get credit to his doctrine. For ſo it was meete by a litle at once to inſtructe that rude people, which as yet knew not his godhed. And though Chriſt is the ladder whereby we aſcend to God the father: yet, becauſe hee was not as yet reuealed, he beginneth at the father, vntill he haue a more fitte opportunitie.

Now this doctrine is to be added: Chriſt in the perſon of one manne ſheweth a token of that his grace, which he extendeth to al mankinde. For though we are not tormented of the deuill, yet he holdeth vs bound vnto him, vntil the ſon of God deliuer vs from his tirannye. We wander naked, rent, and deformed vntill he reſtore vs to a ſound and a perfect minde. It remaineth that we teſtifie our thankfulnes in celebrating his grace.

Matth. 10.	Mark. 6.	Luke. 9.
1. And hee called his twelue diſciples vnto him, and gaue them power againſt vncleane ſpirits to caſt them out, and to heale euery ſickenes, and euery diſeaſe.	7. And hee called the twelue, and beganne to ſend them two & two, and gaue the power ouer vncleane ſpirits.	1. Then called he the twelue diſciples together, and gaue them power and auctority ouer deuils, and to heale diſeaſes.
2. Now the names of the twelue Apoſtles are theſe: the firſt is Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother: Iames, the ſonne of Zebedeus, and Iohn his brother.		2. And he ſent them to preach the kingdome of God, and to cure the ſicke.
3. Philip and Bartlemew, Thomas and Matthewe the Publican: Iames the ſonne of Alpheus, & Lobbeus, whoſe ſurname was Thaddeus.
4. Simon the Cananite, and Iudas the Iſcariot, who alſo betrayed him.
5. Theſe twelue did Ieſus ſend forth, and commanded them, ſaying, goe not inte the way of the Gentiles, and into the citie of the Samaritanes enter yee not.
6. But goe rather to the loſte theepe of the houſe of Iſrael.
7. And as yee goe, preach, ſaying, the kingdome of heauen is at hand.
8. Heale the ſicke, cleanſe the Lepers, raiſe vp the dead, caſt out the deuils, freely ye haue receiued, freely giue.

Heere is diſcribed the calling of the Apoſtles: but not ſuche a calling as you heard of before, when the Lord minding to prepare them to their office, choſe them into his fellowſhip: for now they are called to the preſent execution of the ſame, they are commaunded to prepare themſelues to the worke, commiſsions are giuen them, and leaſt they ſhoulde lacke auctoritie, they are adorned with the power of the ſpirit. Therfore firſt they were choſen and prepared in hope that they ſhould work, now Christ telleth them that the houre is come, when they muſt ſet their handes to the work. Yet it is to be noted, that he ſpeaketh not as yet of the perpetuall Apoſtleſhip: but onely of a temporall embaſſage, wherby the mindes of men might be ſtirred vp & wakened, that they might be the readier to heare Christ. Therefore now they are ſent into Iudea, to declare that the time of the promiſed reſtitution & ſaluation is at hand: and afterwarde Christ ordeineth them to ſpread the Goſpell through all the world. Here he onely chuſeth them as helpers, to prepare that people to come to heare him, where his voyce could not come. After he reſigneth vnto them that office of teaching, which he executed himſelf. And this is worth the noting, leaſt wee ſhould imagine that here were ſet down a certein and a perpetual law to al the miniſters of the word, while the Lord dooth giue in charge to the publiſhers of his doctrine, what he would haue them doe for a ſhort time. The ignoraunce whereof deceiued many, inſomuch that without difference, they would bring and tye all the miniſters of the word to this rule.

1. He called hin twelue. The number of twelue doth note the reformation that ſhould be of the Church. For as the people came of the twelue Patriarches; ſo Christ doth now call the remnauntes diſpearſed to the remembraunce of their firſte beginning, that they might conceaue ſome certeine hope of theyr reſtitution. And though the kingdom of God did not ſo floriſh in Iudea, as to find there remayning a perfect eſtat of the people: but that nation which was now miſerablye decayed, deſerued through their vnthankfulnes rather twiſe to periſh for diſpiſing the grace offered: yet this hyndered not but that they ſhould be born again anew. And after it came to paſſe, that God out of Siō ſent the ſcepter of the poer of his ſon further abrod, that fluds might runne out of that fountain, which ſhould plentifully water the foure quarters of the world: Then God gathered togeather his Iſrael from euery place, that not onelye the diſpearſed and torne mēbers ſhould be knit togeather into one body, but alſo ſuch men, as before were altogether ſtraungers from the people of God. Therefore the Lord doth not in vaine appoynt twelue, as patriarkes, but doth thereby declare the renuing of the Church. Note further that by this number he admoniſhed the Iewes to what end he came. And becauſe they gaue no place to the grace of God, he begat a new Iſrael to himſelfe.

If thou ſhouldeſt beholde the firſt beginning, this might ſeeme to thee a matter to be laughed at, that Chriſte dooth lay ſuch honorable offices vppon men ſo obſcure, and of no eſtimation: yet the incredible ſucceſſe, and the plentifull encreaſe of the Church dooth ſhew that the Apoſtles in degree of honour, and in fruitefulneſſe of children are nothing inferiour to the Patriarches, but that they farre exceede them.

Hee gaue them power. Becauſe the Apoſtles were almoſt not accounted of amongſt menne, and the ambaſſage, which Chriſt committed vnto them was diuine, and beecauſe they did excell neyther in wiſdome nor eloquence: and that the excellency and newnes of the matter required mo then humane giftes, it was neceſſary that they ſhoulde haue ſome other authority.

Therefore Christ giuing them power to worke miracles, furniſheth them them with enſignes of celeſtiall power, which might get them credite and reuerence amongſt the people. And by this is the lawfull vſe of miracles gathered. For when Chriſte ordeined them preachers of the Goſpel and workers of miracles iointly togeather, ſo that the miracles ſhuld be nothing els then ſeales of their doctrine, it is vnlawfull to break that knot that cannot be vnknit. Wherefore the Papiſtes are falſe counterfeites, and doe wickedly depraue the workes of God, by ſeperating the word from the miracles.

2. Firſt Simon. The Romaniſtes doe very fondly gather their ſupremacie from hence, we doe willinglye graunte that Simon Peter was the firſt amongſt the Apoſtles: but no reaſon doth allow to extende that to the whole world, which was of force amongſt a few men. Note further that he which is firſt numbred, hath not therefore preſently Lordeſhippe amongſt his fellowes. Now, if we graunt all thoſe thinges, which they demaund of Peter, vntill they proue theſe wicked and ſacrilegious Apoſtates to be Peters ſucceſſours, his dignitie ſhal make nothing for the Romane ſeate.

5. In the way of the Gentiles. Heereby appeareth more euidently that, which I touched euen now, that the office which was layd vpon the Apoſtles was for no other purpoſe, but to make the Iewes attentiue to heare Chriſt, by ſtirring them vp to looke for their ſaluation at hande. Therefore now he encloſeth their voyce within the boundes of Iudea, which hee after commaundeth to ſound euerye where to the furtheſt coaſtes of the worlde: the reaſon is, becauſe he was ſent of the father, a miniſter of cyrcumciſion, to fulfill the promiſes made in times paſte to the fathers, Rom. 15.8. But God had made a ſpeciall couenaunte with the ſtocke of Abraham. Therefore Chriſt doth not without cauſe at the beginning continue the grace of God amongſt the elect people, vntil the full tyme came for the further publiſhing of the ſame. And after his reſurrection he ſpread forth that bleſsing, which was ſecondlye promiſed to all the Gentiles: becauſe that the vaile of the temple was then rente and the partition wall was pulled downe. Therefore, if this diſcharge ſeeme to any to be too hard, in that Chriſt alloweth not the gētiles to be partakers of the Goſpell, let him plead with God, who excluding the reſt of the world, did make his couenaunt onely with the ſeede of Abraham, of which couenaunt this commaundement of Chriſt doth depend.

6. But goe rather to the loſt sheepe. Hee aſsigneth, as I ſayd, the firſt place to the Iewes, becauſe they were the firſt borne: and becauſe GOD did then account them onely of his houſhold, when the other were ſtraungers. And he calleth them loſte ſheepe, partlye that the Apoſtles being touched with compaſsion, might the more readily, and with more willing endeuour helpe them: partely that they might know that there was great aboundaunce of worke for them, and yet vnder the figure of that nation Chriſt teacheth what is the condition of all mankind. The Iewes, which were neere, and in couenaunt with God, and ſo heires of the eternall lyfe, are yet accounted loſt, vntill they recouer ſaluation in Chriſt. Therefore what remaineth for vs, which are farre inferiours in honour to them? But he giueth that name of ſheep alſo to the reprobat, which were not properly of the flocke of God: becauſe the adoption belonbelonged to all the people: so other where he calleth them the children of the kingdome, which for their vnfaithfulnesse were to be caste out, Matth. 8. 12. In summe, Christ commendeth the Iewes to the Apostles vnder the title of sheepe, that they might bestow their labour vpon thē: because none could be accounted as in the flock of God, but those which were gathered into the sheepefold.

7. Preach, saying. This is that embassage wherewith I saide, Christe would that the mindes of the people should bee stirred vppe in hope of the redemption at hand. For the kingdome of heauen, Luke saieth, the kingdome of God, in the same sense: namely that the Iewes might know, firste, that they were to be restored by the benefit and good work of God, and not of men: then that their estate should be happy vnder God their kinge: thirdly, he promiseth them not an earthly and a fraile felycitie, but a heauenly and euerlasting.

8. Heale the sicke. As he gaue them power, so hee commaundeth thē to be faithfull and liberall disposers of the same: and hee commandeth them not to suppresse those thinges, which were layde vp with them for the common good of all men. But by these miracles hee declareth for what purpose he was sent of the father, and what is the end of his Gospell. Neyther is it without aduice that he commaundeth them rather to rayse the dead, and to heale the sicke, then to afflicte the whole with diseases, or to kill them that lyue. Therefore these myracles haue an Analogy and similytude with the office of Christe, that we might know that he came to be the auēthour of all good thinges to vs, which shoulde deliuer vs from the tyranny of Sathan and of death, which shoulde heale our sicknesses and our sinnes, and should helpe all our miseries.

Freely yee haue receiued. That they might the more willingly bestowe those giftes, which he had giuen vnto them, he declareth that they were not bestowed vpon them for their own priuate glory, but ỻ they might be as it were certeine conduit pypes for the conueiance of the free goodnes of God, as if he should haue sayde, consider from whence you had this power: as it came vnto you by none of your owne deseruing, but of the meere grace of God; so nowe it is meete that by your ministerie it should be freely bestowed vpon others.

VVee know how hardly euery man doth parte from that to others, which hee thinketh to be peculyer to himselfe: also where some one is lyfted vp aboue the rest of his brethren, how ready he is to despise all other. Therfore he could not better perswade to a free bestowing of spirituall gifts, thē by teaching them, that no man excelleth by his own industrie, but by the free liberalitie of God. And Christe now sheweth in his ministers a token of that grace, which was foretolde by Iesaias, 55. 1. All yee that thirst, come yee to the waters, drinke, and take wine and milke without money: yet he also sheweth that no man can be a sincere minister of his word, and dispenser of his grace, but he that is readye to bestow his labour freely: and that all hyrelinges doe vnworthilye corrupt and prophane the holy office of teaching. But this is not againste free bestowing, that the teachers of the Churche are mainteined with publike stipendes, so that they do willingly and freely serue Christe and the Church: and let theyr prouision for their liuing be as it were an increase of their labour.

Matth. 10.	Mark. 6.	Luke. 9.
9. Poſſeſſe not gold, nor ſiluer, nor money in your girdles. 10. Nor a ſcrippe for the iourney, neither two coates, neither shoes, nor a ſtaffe: for the workman is worthy of his meate. 11. And into whatſoeuer city or town ye ſhall come, enquire who is worthy in it, & ther abide yee, til yee goe thence. 12. And when yee come into an houſe, ſalute the ſame. 13. And if the houſe be worthy, let your peace come vpon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace returne to you. 14. And whoſoeuer ſhall not receiue you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that houſe or out of that citie, ſhak off the duſt of your feete. 15. Truelye I ſaye vnto you, it ſhalbe eaſier for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of iudgemente, then for that citie.	8. And commanded them that they ſhoulde take nothing for their iourney, ſaue a ſtaffe only: neyther ſcrip, nor bread, nor money in their girdles. 9. But that they ſhoude be shod with ſandalles, and that they ſhould not put on two coates. 10. And he ſaide vnto them, whereſoeuer yee ſhal enter into an houſe, there abyde, til ye depart thence. 11. And whoſoeuer ſhall not receiue you, nor heare you, when yee depart thence, ſhake off the duſt that is vnder your feet, for a witneſſe vnto them. Verelye I ſay vnto you, it ſhalbe eaſier for Sodom or Gomorrha at the daye of iudgment, then for that citie.	3. And hee ſaide vnto them, take nothing to your iourney, neither ſtaues, nor ſcrip, neither bread, nor ſiluer, neither haue two coats. 4. And whatſoeuer houſe ye enter into, there abyde, and thence depart. 5. And whoſoeuer will not receiue you, when you goe out of that citie, shake off the very duſte from your feete for a teſtimonie against them.

9. Poſſeſſe not. Beecauſe the order of theyr ambaſſage was ſuch, that Chriſte woulde that his Diſciples ſhoulde goe throughout all Iudea in a fewe dayes, and ſpeedilye to turne againe to him, hee forbiddeth them to carye burdens with them, which ſhoulde hinder this ſpeede. But ſome doe thinke verye foolyſhly, that this is preſcribed as a perpetuall lawe to the miniſters of the worde, or the Apoſtles. A little after doe followe verye manye ſentences, whiche extende further: but it is certeine that theſe commaundementes of leauinge all lettes and hynderaunce are reſtrayned to that ambaſſage, whiche wee ſayde was appoynted for a tyme.

Further, that prohibition in Matthew of golde, ſiluer, a ſcryppe, and two coates ought to be read in one ſentence, as it appeareth by the other two. Therefore I had rather tranſlate it, cary not with you: becauſe it was the Lordes will ſimply to forbydde that they ſhoulde not take anye thing with them for prouiſion for that iourney. At home they might haue ſcrippes, and ſhowes, and other coates: but that they might be the lyghter for the iourney, hee commaundeth them to leaue all burdens. Thereunto alſo belongeth that ſaying of Marke, that they ſhould be ſhodde with ſandalles. They ſeeme to differ in the rodde or ſtaffe: for for in Marke a ſtaffe is allowed, in Matthew and Luke it is denied. But ſeeing the interpretation of the Hebrew word thet is doubtfull amongſt the Hebrewes, though the Euangeliſtes did write in Greeke, they haue diuerſly taken the worde rabdon. Therefore Matthew and Luke doe meane ſtaues, which are a burden to them that beare them: but Marke meaneth a ſtaffe whereon trauellers doe eaſe or reſt themſelues. And it appeareth that it was the manner of them that trauailed to cary a ſtaf: according to which vſe that was ſaid, Gen. 32. 10. VVith my ſtaffe I paſſed ouer this Iordan. In which words Iacob confeſſeth that he came into Syria emptie, and not laden with riches.

10. For the workemanne is worthy of his meate. Chriſt aunſwereth a doubt: for that condition might ſeeme to be hard to goe through Iudea, not furniſhed with any prouiſion for the iourney. Therefore Chriſt willeth them not to be afrayde of fainting for want: becauſe that whither ſoeuer they ſhould come, they ſhould at leaſt be worthy of theyr meate.

He calleth them labourers, (not that they were lyke the ordinary miniſters, which doe dreſſe the vineyarde of the Lord, and which in planting and watering doe apply themſelues in husbanding of the ſame) but onely beecauſe they were preachers of a more plentifull and full doctrine. Neythe had they as then enioyned them any other office of teaching, then to make the Iewes giue eare to the preaching of the Goſpel. Leaſt they ſhuld obiect that they ſhould be defrauded of theyr due food, becauſe that no manne would acknowledge them for labourers: Chriſt preuenteth that difficultie alſo, commaunding to enquire, who in euery citie was worthy of that meſſage of ſaluation. In which wordes he commaundeth them to enquire whether there be anye godlye and honeſte men, which haue any feare of God and relygion in them, of whoſe aptnes to be taught there may be any hope, that they might eſpecially offer their labour to them. For becauſe it was not laweful for them longe to tary in euery place, it was meete that they ſhould beginne there, where there was ſome preparation.

11. Tary there vntill. This declareth alſo the haſte they ſhould make, for if they ſhoulde in any place haue made any longer taryinge, they ſhoulde haue chaunged theyr hoſte, leaſte they ſhoulde charge anye one manne too much. Therefore, when as Chriſte commaundeth them to taryе with theyr firſt hoſte, vntill they goe into an other cittie, hee declareth that they muſt make haſte, that they ſhoulde preſently runne into an other cittie, when they haue preached the Goſpell in one.

12. Salute the ſame. Becauſe they coulde not diſcerne the true worſhippers of GOD from contemners, hee commaundeth them that at the entraunce into euery family, they ſhould friendly inſinuate themſelues. For the ſalutation is a certeine entraunce to ſpeach. Nowe, they were willed to goe to ſuch menne as were knowne and reported to ſeeke after godlynes. But becauſe that it falleth ofte out, that they, which haue the greateſt fame, doe bewray their own vngodlyneſſe, when they ſhall be thorowly tryed, it was meete that this commaundement ſhould be added.

Therefore

Therefore this is the meaning, try at the firſt entraunce, whether the hoſtes will gladly heare you: whoſoeuer will gladly imbrace your doctrine, tary with them, that your ſaluation may be confirmed: if any refuſe it, depart preſently from them, and as much as you can, pull backe againe your ſalutation. For the phraſe ſignifieth as much, as if he ſhuld haue ſayde; becauſe that through their vnthankfulnes they are vnworthy to enioy that bleſsing of God, which you praid for them, breake off all communication with them. The name of peace hath relation to the manner of ſaluting, which the Iewes commonly vſed. For ſith peace doth with them ſignifie a proſperous eſtate, they pray for peace to them, whom they deſire to be well and proſperouſly, and whoſe good they wiſh to be ſafe. I graunt that the Apoſtls brought an other kind of peace to men: but their light is too ſwift, which draw this place to the free reconciliation of God with men.

14. Whoſoeuer receiueth you not. A ſeuere denouncing of vengaunce againſt the contemners of the Goſpell: wherby Chriſt would encourage his diſciples, leaſt the vnthankfulnes of the world ſhould hinder them in their office. He commaundeth his Apoſtles what hee would haue them doe, if they fall amongſt contemners; yet this was his eſpeciall purpoſe, to comfort them in their ſorow and wearines, if their doctrine were any where refuſed, leaſt they ſhould faint in the middeſt of their courſe. And we ſee how Paule, 2. Cor. 2. 15. vſing this comfort, doth boldly deſpiſe all contempt of men, doth conſtantly go forward through all lets, and doth glory that he is a ſweete ſauour to God, though he is deadlye to them that periſh. But this place teacheth how much the Lord eſteemeth his Goſpell: and certeinly, ſith it is an incomparable treaſure, they are too much and vilely vnthankful, which refuſe the ſame, being offered vnto them.

Further, when as it is the ſcepter of his kingdom, it cannot be reiected but with manifeſt reproach to him. Shake of the duſt. As the Lord doth here commend the doctrine of the Goſpell, that all men might receiue the ſame with reuerence, and ſtriketh a feare vnto the rebellyous by this grieuous decree of vengeaunce for them: ſo he commaundeth his Apoſtles to be the declarers of that vengaunce, which he appoynteth, which cannot be, but that they ſhould be enflamed with a moſt vehement zeale to vtter that doctrine, which they preach. Therfore it is to be noted, that no man can be a fitte teacher of the heauenly doctrine, but he that is ſo affected, that he is vexed and tormented at the contempt of the ſame. It is probable that the Iewes then vſed to ſhake of the duſt, as a figure of curſing, as if they did it to witneſſe, that the inhabitauntes of the place were ſo wicked, that they infected the earth with their contagion. I gather that it was an accuſtomed manner by this, that Chriſte ſpeaketh as of a thing knowne. And this manner of execration doth the more confirme that, which I ſayde before, that God was not more offended with any offence, then with the contempt of his word. Neither doth he commaund vs after ſo ſolemne a ſorte to deteſt either adulterers, or murtherers, or any other wicked perſons.

15. Truly I ſay vnto you. Leaſt it ſhould ſeeme to be a vaine skarcrowe, Chriſt affirmeth that they ſhall be more grieuouſly puniſhed, which contemne the Goſpell, then the Sodomites. That is farre from the meaning ning of Christ, which some haue, imagining this to be spoken of the destruction of Hierusalem. For wee must vnderstand the day of generall iudgement, wherein they shall both giue an account, that there may bee a comparison of the punishmentes. Christ nameth Sodom rather then any other cities, not onely because it excelled all in moste haynous sinnes, but because it was consumed of the Lorde by a woonderfull manner of destruction, that it might be an example to all ages, and that the name it selfe should be abhorred. Yet it is not to be merueiled, that Christ saieth, that they shall be more easily dealt with, then the vnfaythfull, whiche refuse to heare the Gospell. For when menne shall deny auctoritie to their creator and maker, neither will vouchsafe to heare his voyce, but doe reiect him calling louingly, and will not beleeue him, promising all thinges lyberally: this wickednesse is as the greatest heape of all sinnes. If that so horrible a punishment doth folow the repulse of so base or obscure manner of preaching, how terrible a punishment dooth nowe remaine for them, which reiect Christ speaking with full mouth?

Further, if God doth so seuerely threaten the contemners, what shall become of those furious enemies, which fight against the Gospell eyther with blasphemies and a venomous tongue, or doe cruellye persecute it with fire and swordes?

Matth. 10.	Marke.	Luk. 12.
16. Beholde, I send you as sheepe in the middest of wolues: be therefore wise as serpents, and innocent as doues.
17. But beware of menne: for they will deliuer you vp to the councils, & wil scourg you in the Synagogues.
18. And yee shalbe brought to the gouernours and kinges for my sake, in witnesse to them, and to the Gentiles.
19. But when they deliuer you vp, take no thought how or what yee shall speak: for it shal be giuen you in that houre what yee shall say.		11. And when they shal bring you vnto the Synagogues, and vnto the rulers and Princes, take no thought howe, or what thing yee shall answer, or what yee shall speake.
20. For it is not yee that speake: but the spirite of your father, whiche speaketh in you.		12. For the holy Ghoste shall teache you in the same houre, what yee ought to say.

The commaundementes, which Matthew heretofore set downe, doe only belong to their former progresse or iourny, which was in few daies to be ended. Now Christe proceedeth further, and hee armeth them against the time to come, that they might know that they were chosen to declare that message not for a short time, but that there remained for them a matter of greater weight, and of much more trauaile. For though they were not presently brought forth into these broyles, wherof Christ speaketh: yet it was profitable for them to be warned before hande, that if they then should abide any troubles, they might know, that these were but certeine preparations of a more harder warfar, wherunto they were prepared . This was alſo true in the firſt ambaſſage , that the Apoſtles were lyke to ſheepe amongſt woolues: but the Lorde ſparing their infirmitie,held backe the ſeueritie of woolues, that they ſhould not hurte, peculierlye referring it to that time, which the Lord had appoynted to handle them more ſtraitlye. For they were vſed as maryage gueſtes, the Brydegroome being with them beefore the reſurrection : but after the Brydegroome departed from them that tenderneſſe and eaſe ceaſed,and theyr eſtate was then ſo harde , that they ſhould then vnderſtand , that they were not in vayne furniſhed before hand with theſe defences. Alſo it may be,that theſe wordes, which were ſpoken at diuerſe tymes, were here by Mathew gathered into one place: for Luke,as we ſhal ſee after, reporteth that the ſame woordes were ſpoken to the ſeuentie Diſciples, whiche were putte in the place of the Apoſtles.

But this is out of queſtion, that they were not by theſe wordes foretolde what ſucceſſe they ſhould haue of this iourney , which they nowe entred into,but that they were forwarned of the whole courſe of theyr apoſtleſhip.

16. Beeholde, I ſende you. The exhortation which preſently followeth dooth ſhewe euidently whereto this admonition tendeth. Therfore the text ought thus to be reſolued, you haue neede of wiſdome and ſimplicitie : becauſe you ſhall be as ſheepe amongſt woolues . But the reaſon is gathered of the neceſsitie : beecauſe excepte they doe wiſely looke to themſelues, they ſhould be preſently deuoured of woolues , but if they were affrayde of the maddeneſſe of the woolues , or were not carefull, that they ſhoulde wauer , and ſo at the length fall from theyr office. VVee will firſt declare what this meaneth , that they ſhould be ſent as ſheepe amongſt woolues. Although menne are cruell and bloudy, the Lorde could mittigate theyr crueltie , who tameth and maketh gentle the wylde ſauage beaſtes ſo ofte as hee pleaſeth. The Lorde doth not bring a great company of menne into the obedience of his Goſpel, but leaueth them in the fearceneſſe of their witte, he dooth it of purpoſe that hee might exerciſe his miniſters . And though all are woolues by nature,whom GOD dooth not regenerate with the ſpirite of meekeneſſe: yet Chriſte dooth eſpecially note the raging enemies of the Goſpell, which hearing the ſhepheardes voyce , are not tamed, but are enflamed with greater crueltie . Therefore the Lorde ſendeth forth the miniſters of his word on this condition , that they ſhould lyue amongſt woolues: that is, that they ſhoulde haue manye deadlye enemies , and ſhoulde bee compaſſed about with many daungers on euery ſide,ſo that they ſhoulde hardly execute theyr office amongſt ſo manye lettes . And that theyr tryall might bee the ſharper , hee giueth them no weapons wherewith they ſhoulde violently defende themſelues:but caſteth them vnarmed and naked to the teeth of the woolues. For in that he compareth them to ſheepe, is not referred to gentle and quiet manners, or to the lenitie of the minde: but he onely declareth that they are nothinge ſtronger,or more able to reſiſt the violence of the enemies, then are the ſheepe againſte the madneſſe of the woolues.

Chriſte alſo requireth of his Diſciples that they ſhoulde haue mindes as ſheepe, that they might ſtriue with patience againſt the malice of the wicked, and ſhoulde receiue iniuries quietlye ; but the ſimple meaninge of this place is, that the Apostles had manye enemies mighty and cruell, prepared agaynst them, when as they themselues should be without all defence. If anye manne except that this Antithesis cannot after this sorte stand betweene the sheepe and the woolues, the aunswere is ready. For though the Lord by calling the enemies of the gospel wolues, dooth rather note their power then their delight to hurte: yet because no manne is knowne for a woolfe, except he waxe mad against the Gospell: therefore he ioyneth these two togeather, that they are caried with a cruell desire to suck bloud, and also that they haue power to performe the same.

Bee yee therefore wise. The meaning is, that the wisdome in takinge heede should so be tempered, that they should not be more fearful then becommeth them, and so become more neglygent in theyr office. For we see them which would be accounted circumspect and prouidente, to become very tymerous and slouthfull. It is meete for the Disciples of Christ to be cyrcumspect to take heede, seeing that daungers doe hang ouer them euery where. But: because the greatest daunger is, least they shoulde through slouth waxe neglygent, hee commaundeth them sincerelye to goe forwarde whyther soeuer theyr calling shall carry them. And this hee declareth by two similitudes; when serpentes perceyue that they are hated, they doe dilygently auoyde and flye from whatsoeuer is noysome to them: so the faythfull are commaunded to haue care of theyr lyfe, least they rashly leape into daunger, and throw themselues into all perilles. But the Doues on the contrary parte, though they bee fearefull by nature, and are subiect to innumerable daungers, doe waite as careleese creatures while they are stricken, and commonlye they caste themselues into the snares of the takers. To this simplicitie doth Christ exhorte his Disciples, least too much fearefulnesse shoulde hynder them in perfourming theyr course. There are some, which, as Phylosophers, will more subtilly argue heere of the nature of the serpent and of the Doue: but the similitude reacheth no farther. Therefore we see that carnall wisdome, or rather craftinesse condemned by Christ, wherein a great multitude of menne flatter themselues more then is meete, whyle they looke hether and thether aboute them so farre as they can go. So while they wil not caste themselues into daunger, they renounce Christe that calleth them.

17. Beware of menne. Erasmus addeth them: because he thought that the article had the force of a pronoune demonstratiue. But in my iudgment it is better to take it indefinitelye: as if Christ should haue sayde, you must walke wisely amongst menne, where al thinges are full of deceites and daungers. But he seemeth to fight against himselfe: for this were the best way of taking heede, to doe their owne busines at home, and not to sende them forth abroade: I aunswere, hee noteth here an other kynde of heedefulnesse, not that they shoulde leaue theyr office for feare, but that they should not be troubled beeyonde measure with sodaine mischiefes. For we knowe that they which are assaulted vnawares, doe become as people halfe dead.

Therefore Christ commaundeth his to looke beefore what shall followe, that they might in tyme prepare theyr mindes to beare conflicts.

To be ſhort, he ſoundeth an alarme to them, that they might the ſpedilyer prepare themſelues to battell. Far as too litle forecaſt, and too much doubtfulnes doth weaken many: ſo careleſſe ſecuritie doth make many drunken, that they running on vnadui ſedly, doe faint at the moſt neede. For they will delyuer you vp to the councilles. VVee may eaſily gather by theſe wordes, that the contentions, which Chriſt now ſpeaketh of to his Apoſtles ought not to be tyed to their firſt iourney, wherein they founde no ſuch thing. But this is the purpoſe of his forewarning, that they ſhould not be at any time diſmaide: for it was a poynt of ſingular vertue, that poore menne ſhould be of a bolde courage: when they ſhould come before Princes, and not bee amaſed at any gliſtering ſhew of the world. He admoniſheth them alſo that they ſhal not haue contentions in Iudea onely, but in places further diſtant, not onelye that they might prepare themſelues by long meditation for that warfare, but that being confirmed with their maiſters wordes, they ſhould not doubt but that they were gouerned by the heauenly prouidence. That which is added for a witneſſe to them and to the Gentiles, hath this meaning, the will of God is to be declared alſo to ſtraunge Princes and to nations that be a farre of, that they might be inexcuſable: whereby it followeth that the Apoſtles ſhall not looſe theyr labour: for euen where menne ſhallbee conuicted for contumacy, the iudgement of GOD ſhall be ſhewed.

19. Bee not carefull. This is added for a comfort: for Chriſt ſhould haue exhorted his diſciples a hundred tymes in vaine, if he had not alſo promiſed them that GOD would be preſent, and that through his power they ſhould certeinly be conquerers. Hereby we gather, that it was not the purpoſe of Chriſt in vttering theſe daungers, to diminiſh theyr zeale: whereby it was neceſſary that they ſhould be the more enflamed, if they would execute theyr office rightly.

It is a great thing to come before Princes, for not onely feare, but euen ſhamefaſtnes alſo dooth amaſe the mindes of good menne. Then what if Princes ſhoulde breake out, and almoſte thunder with deadlye anger? yet Chriſt forbiddeth his to be carefull: becauſe the ſpirite ſhall teach them what to ſay. For the more a manne knowing his own weakneſſe, diſtruſteth himſelfe, ſo much the more hee feareth, except hee haue helpe from an other place. And we ſee many, which doe therefore faynt, becauſe they meaſure the ſucceſſe of theſe thinges, which they take in hand to doe by theyr owne forces, which are very ſmall, or none at all. Therefore Chriſt forbiddeth his diſciples to look what they can doe, and commaundeth them only to depend and truſt to the heauēly grace.

The queſtion is not here (ſaith hee) of your abilitie, but of the power of the holy Ghoſt, who frameth and directeth the tongues of the faythfull to a pure confeſsion of fayth. And leaſt they ſhoulde feare a preſent wante, he declareth they ſhall haue helpe ſent them euen in the very moment. For the Lord dooth make the faythfull voyde of the gyfte of vtteraunce, ſo long as hee requyreth no witteneſſe of them: and where neceſsitie ſhall require it, hee maketh them verye eloquente, whiche ſeemed before to be tonguetyed. So in our tyme wee haue ſeene certeine martyres, whiche beeing almoſte bruitiſh, after they were called to make confeſsion of their faith, they excelled wonderfully with the gift of ſpeaking aptly and learnedly. Further, Chriſt would not that the Apoſtles ſhoulde be without all feare: for it was profitable for them to bee carefull to ſue by prayers, that the holy Ghoſt might be giuen them, but he would that they ſhould caſt awaye that carefull meditation, wherewith men did much hinder themſelues. For whyle they enquire with themſelues what ſhall com to paſſe, if this or that ſhoulde fall out, they are vexed with miſerable diſquietneſſe, and doe not reſte vppon the prouidence of God. And whoſoeuer will not giue this honour to the prouidence of God, that it is able in due time to ſupply their want, ſuch certeinly are worthy to be tormented.

Matth. 10.	Mark.
21. And the brother ſhall betraye the brother to death, and the father, the ſonne, and the children ſhal riſe againſt their parentes, and ſhall cauſe them to die.
22. And ye ſhal be hated of all men for my names ſake: but he that endureth to the end hee ſhalbe ſaued.
23. And when they perſecute you in this citie, flye into an other: for verely I ſay vnto you, yee ſhall not finiſh all the cities of Iſrael, till the ſonne of man bee come.
24. The diſciple is not aboue his maiſter, nor the ſeruaunt aboue his Lord.		Luke. 6. 40. The diſciple is not aboue his maſter: but whoſoeuer will be a perfecte diſciple, ſhall bee as his maiſter.
25. It is enough for the diſciple to be as his maſter is, and the ſeruaunt as his Lord. If they haue called the maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more them of the houſhold?

21. And the brother ſhall betray. Firſt, he admoniſheth them how grieuous troubles doe remaine for them: then he mitigateth all the ſharpneſſe by adding a notable conſolation. Firſt, he declareth that theſe things, which were wont to be a defence, or to bring ſome eaſe, ſhould bring an encreaſe of greater miſery to his diſciples: for the brethren, which ought to helpe the oppreſſed, to reach the hand to them that are in calamitie, and to prouide for their ſafegard, ſhuld become their deadly enemies. Yet they are deceaued, which think that this doth befall onely to the faythful, to be delyuered to death by their brethren. For it may be, that the father may perſecute the ſonne of a godly zeale, if hee ſee him to be an Apoſtate from the ſincere worſhip of God. And in this behalfe the Lord cõmãdeth vs to be forgetful of fleſh & bloud, & apply al our endeuor to the maintenaunce of the glory of his name. Neither doth euery manne ſpare his kinſfolkes where the feare and relygion of God doth floriſhe: but he had rather they ſhould al periſh, if neede ſo required, then to haue the kingdome of Chriſt ſhaken, the doctrine of ſaluation extinguiſhed, & the worſhip of God aboliſhed. If our affections were ordered a right, this ſhould be the onely cauſe of right hatred. But when Chriſte would eſtablyſh the kingdome of GOD, and reſtore godlyneſſe into his perſecte ſtrength, but would alſo call menne backe from deſtruction to ſaluation: there is nothing more vnworthy then for that cauſe to hate the miniſters of ſo comfortable a doctrine. This, as it is a monſtrous thing againſt nature, might haue much troubled their ſimple minds: yet Chriſt foretelleth that ſo it ſhal come to paſſe.

22. Hee that endureth. This one promiſe is ſufficient enough to ſtaye the mindes of the godly, although all the world ſhould ryſe againſt thē, while he promiſeth them a happy and a bleſſed end. For if the aſſurance of their purpoſe doth cary them to death, whiche fight vnder earthlye captaynes, being vncerteine of the end of the warre, ſhall menne then doubt to imploy themſelues to follow Chriſt to the end, which are certeine of the victory?

23. And when they perſecute you in this citie. He preuenteth that, whiche they might haue excepted. If the hatredes of the whole world were to be borne, what end then at the length? Though therefore they coulde be in ſafetie in no place: yet Chriſt admoniſheth them not to deſpayre: but where they are throwne out of one place, they ſhuld rather attempt whether they may profit any thing by their labour in an other place. And the interpreters are deceiued, while they think this to bee a naked permiſsion: when Chriſt rather commaundeth his diſciples what hee woulde haue them to doe. For he that hath abyden one perſecution, would gladly take his eaſe as a ſoldiour that hath done his duetie. But Chriſt alloweth not ſuch a vacation to his, but willeth them to run the whole courſe with an vnwearied minde. In ſumme, the Apoſtles are cōmaunded to offer themſelues to new skirmiſhes, leaſt they ſhould thinke that they had done their dutie, when they had paſſed ouer one or two. Neither doth he ſuffer them to flye into corners, where they might lye ydely. But though their labour tooke not good ſucceſſe in one place, the Lord doth exhort them to go forward. But vnder the commaundement is alſo contayned a permiſsion. And the flying of perſecution is thus to be vnderſtoode. For all that flye are not generally to be condemned, neither yet is euery flyght lawfull. The heate of ſome of the old writers was too great in this matter, which condemned flight, as if it were a kind of deniall. For if this were true, ſome part of the ignominie ſhoulde redound to Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Againe, if it were lawfull generally to flye, there ſhoulde be in the time of perſecution no difference betweene the good paſtor and the hyreling. Therefore that moderation is to bee noted, which Auguſtine preſcribeth to Honoratus, leaſt any man fearefully forſaking his ſtanding, ſhould either traiterouſly forſake his flocke, or giue an example of ſlouthfulnes: and yet that no man ſhould vnaduiſedly thruſt in himſelfe headlong. If either the whole Church be aſſayled, or that part be folowed to death, the paſtor ſhall doe yll, if he withdraw himſelfe, whoſe duetie it were to oppoſe his life for euery particuler man of his flocke: but it may be ſometime that his abſence ſhall be beneficiall to the Church, by appeaſing the fury of the enemies. Therefore let, in ſuch a caſe, the ſimplicitie of the doue preuaile, leaſt nice mē make a cloake for their fearefulneſſe, as fleſh is alwayes too wiſe in auoydinge of troubles. For verely I ſay vnto you. That is not lykely that ſome do vnderſtand it of their firſt ſending forth: but it rather comprehendeth the whole Apoſtleſhippe. But herein conſiſteth the difficultie, what the com-

ming of the Sonne of manne should signifie. Some menne expounde it, that the Gospell shoulde haue such passage, that all menne should know that Christe should reigne truely, and that the restitution of the kyngdome of Dauid shoulde be hoped for of him. Other doe referre it to the destruction of Ierusalem, wherein Christ appeareth as a reuenger of vnthankefulnesse. The first exposition is tollerable, the latter is more wrested: yet I doe iudge that to be a comfort giuen peculyarly to the Apostles, Christe is sayde to come when hee bringeth remedie to thinges in despayre.

The ambassage, which they were to vndertake, was woonderfull, that they should spread the doctrine of the gospel throughout the whole world. Therefore Christ promiseth that he himselfe will come before they shall passe through all Iudea: namely, beecause hee will beautifie his kingdome by the power of his spirite, that that glorye and maiestie shoulde verelye shine in the Apostles, whiche as yet was hydde from them.

24. The Disciple is not aboue his maister. Now hee exhorteth them to patience by his owne example. And certeinly this comfort is such, as swalloweth vppe all sorowe, while we consider that our lotte is common to vs with the Sonne of GOD: yet that he might make vs the more ashamed thereby, he taketh two similitudes from the custom of menne. The disciple accounteth himself honored, to be made equal with his maister: & dares desire no greater honor. Then, that condition, which the Lords doe beare patiently, the seruauntes doe not refuse to beare the same. Sith the Sonne of God is both these wayes aboue vs, as he to whom the chief authoritie is giuen of the father, and hath the offices of a maister committed vnto him: let vs be ashamed to flye from that, which he himselfe disdayned not to take vppon him for our cause. But these thinges do rather neede meditation, then exposition: becawse they are euident enough of themselues. Luke reporeteth this sentence in his sixt chapter, not depending vppon the text: but vttered abruptlye amongst other wordes. And becawse Matthewe dooth in this place declare verye well to what purpose it apperteineth, I thought that I could not place it better anye other where. But in the translation I followed neither Erasmus, nor the olde interpreter, for this cause. The Greeke Participle doth signifie aswel a thing made perfect, as apt, lyke, or meete. Further, sith Christ speaketh here of a lykenesse, and not of a perfection, the latter sense seemeth to be the better, as if he should haue sayde, there is nothing more meete nor conuenient, then that the disciple should frame himselfe after the example of his maister.

25. If they haue called the maister of the house. It is as much as if he should haue called himselfe the Lord of the Church: as the Apostle to the Hebrewes 3.2. comparing him to Moses and the Prophetes, saith, that they were seruauntes: but that he was the Sonne and heyre. For though hee vouchsafeth vs the honour of brethren: yet he is the firste borne and the head of all the body: to be short, he hath the chief gouernment and power in his hand. Wherefore there is nothing more absurd then to desire to be counted amongst the number of the faythfull, and yet to grudg at GOD when he frameth vs to the image of his owne Sonne, whom hee hath sette ouer his whole houshold.

For what nice fancies are theſe, if we would poſſeſſe a place in his houſe, and excell aboue the Lord himſelfe? The meaning is, we are too ſofte & daintie, if it behard for vs to beare the reproaches, which our Prince did willingly ſubmitte himſelfe vnto. The word Beelzebub is corrupted: it ſhuld properly be called Baalzebub. So they called the chiefe of the feigned Gods of the Philiſtines, which the citie Accaron did worſhippe. And the leſſer Gods were called Baalim, which at this day in Popery are called Patrones. And whereas Baalzebub ſignifieth a Patrone of a flye, or of flyes: ſome thinke that the name was deryued and taken of this, that the Temple ſwarmed with aboundaunce of flyes, through the plentie of the ſacrifices. But I doe rather coniecture that they ſought helpe at the ydoll againſt the flyes, which were noyſome to the place. For when Ochozias ſuperſtitiouſly ſought an aunſwere of his health from it, he called it ſo. VVhereby it appeareth that it was not a name in skorne. For as godly men tranſlated the word Gehenna, to the helles, that they might note that place with infamy: ſo for hatred and deteſtation of the Idoll, they called the deuill Baalzebub. VVherby we gather that the reprobate, that they might make Chriſt the more deteſtable, noted him with the greateſt infamy they could, as by calling him a deuill, who ſhoulde bee the greateſt enemy of relygion. VVherefore, if it befall vs to be touched with the ſame ignominie, it ought not to ſeeme ſtraunge to vs, to haue that fulfilled in the members, which began in the head.

Math. 10.

26. Feare them not therefore: for there is nothing couered, that ſhal not be diſcloſed, nor hid, that ſhall not be knowne.

27. VVhat I tell you in darkeneſſe, that ſpeake yee in light: and what yee heare in the eare, that preach yee on the houſes.

28. And feare yee not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoule: but rather feare him, which is able to deſtroy both ſoule and body in hell.

29. Are not two ſparowes ſolde for a farthing, and one of them ſhall not fal on the ground, without your father?

30. Yea, and all the haires of your head are numbred.

31. Feare yee not therefore, ye are of more value then many ſparowes.

Marke. 4.

22. For there is nothing hid, that ſhall not be opened, neyther is there a ſecret, but that it ſhal come to light.

23. If anye manne haue eares to heare, let him heare.

Luke. 8.

17. For nothing is ſecrete, that ſhal not be euident, neither any thing hid, that ſhal not be known and come to light.

Luke. 12.

2. For there is nothing couered, that ſhal not be reuealed, neither hid, that ſhal not be knowne.

3. VVherfore whatſoeuer ye haue ſpoke in darknes, it ſhal be heard in the light: and which yee haue ſpoken in the eare, in ſecret places, ſhalbe preached on the houſes

4. And I ſay vnto you, my friēds be not afraide of them that kill the body, and after that are not able to doe any more.

5. But I wil forewarn you, whom ye ſhal feare: feare him, whiche after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hel: yea, I ſaye vnto you, him feare.

6. Are not fiue ſparowes bought for two farthings, and yet not one of them is forgotten before God.

7. Yea, & al the haires of your head are numbred: feare not therefore, yee are more of value then many ſparowes.

26. Feare them not therefore. VVhen as the Apoſtles ſhoulde ſee the Goſpel to be ſo contemptible, and that they ſhould remember the fewneſſe of the beleeuers, they might alſo caſt of all hope for the time to come. Now Chriſt anſweareth this doubt, declaring that the Goſpell ſhould be ſpred further, and that it ſhall paſſe throughe all the lettes of menne, ſo that at lengih it ſhould ſhine foorth openly. For though this ſaying ſeeme to be a prouerbe; there is nothing c. uered, that ſhall not be diſcloſed: yet here it ought eſpecially to bee reſtrained to the doctrine of ſaluation, whiche Chriſt ſayeth, ſhall be the conquerour what ſoeuer menne deuiſe to oppreſſe the ſame. Though hee preached ſometime openly in the Temple: yet becauſe his doctrine was refuſed, he yet lay hid as it were in darke corners, but he ſayeth that the time ſhal come when it ſhalbe vttered abroad, which we knowe was done ſhortly after: for there was neuer any ſound of thunder more hard in any quarter of the world, then the voyce of the Goſpell which ſounded through out the whole worlde. And becauſe this promiſſe ought to comfort their mindes, Chriſt exhorteth them that they ſhoulde boldly and valiantly apply themſelues to the ſame, and that they ſhoulde not be afraide though they ſaw the Goſpell as yet not regarded, but that they ſhoulde be crying preachers of the ſame. That which I reported out of Marke, was ſpoken peraduenture at an other time, and in an other ſenſe: yet becauſe there are redde ſhort ſentences, I followe that which was moſt probable to me. For after that Chriſt commanded there his diſciples, that as burning lightes they ſhoulde giue a cleare light farre frō them, preſently after he addeth, ther is nothing hid which ſhal not be made open. And the lighte of the Goſpell was lighted by the Apoſtles in darke places, ſo that by their miniſterie it ſtone aloft through the whole world. And the text in the eight after Luke is altogether like this. As cōcerning the place of the 12. chapter, it is not to be doubted but that it anſweareth to this, yet in wordes there is ſome difference: for Chriſt commaundeth there, that the Apoſtles ſhoulde bring thoſe things into light, which they had ſpoken in the darke: whereby he declareth that they had as yet but whiſpered of the Goſpell, but that the meſſage which they did beare, was ſo notable that it ſhoulde ſpreade it ſelfe to the furtheſt partes of the worlde.

28. And feare yee not them. Chriſte teacheth his diſciples to contemne death by a moſt notable reaſon, becauſe that men created to enioy the celeſtiall immortalitie ought to deſpiſe this fraile and tranſitorie life. For the ſumme tendeth to this purpoſe, if the faithfull would conſider wherfore they were borne, and what their condition is, there is no cauſe why they ſhoulde ſo gredely deſire this earthly life. Though the ſence of the woordes are more full and more plentifull, for Chriſte teacheth that the feare of God is vtterly dead in them, which for feare of tyrantes doe fall from the confeſſion of their faith, and that there raigneth a beaſtly blockiſhneſſe in their hearts, which for feare of death doubt not to forſake the ſame confeſſion of faith. For the Antitheſis betweene the two contrary feares, is to be noted. If the feare of God be choaked with the feare of men, doeth it not appeare that we yelde more to them then to God himſelfe? Nowe heereof it foloweth that the heauenly and eternall life being reiected, we cauſe that this onely remaineth for vs, that wee become like to beaſtes. The power of eternall life and death is in the hande of God alone: him we neglect becauſe the feare of men doth carie vs away. Doth it not euidently appeare that the ſhadowiſh life of the body is more eſtemed of vs, then the eternal ſtate of the ſoul? nay, the celeſtiall kingdom of God is nothing ſet by of vs, in reſpect of the fleeing & vaniſhing ſhadow of this preſent life. Therfore the words of Chriſt ought thus to be reſolued: Know that you haue giuen you immortal ſouls which are ſubiect to the wil of god alone, they come not into the power of men. And ſo your faith ought not to yeld to no terrors or threatnings of men. For how cõmeth it to paſſe, that in your vexation the fear of men ſhould preuail, but becauſe the body is preferred before the ſoule, & immortalitie is leſſe eſtemed of, then this tranſitory life. Therfore in Luke there is an emphatical repetition. Certainly I ſay vnto you, feare him. As if Chriſt ſhuld haue ſaid, we haue no reſpecte of God, ſo oft as we giue place to the feare of men: contrariwiſe if we reuerence God, the victory is eaſily in our own hands, ſo that no force of men ſhuld draw vs from our duety. Alſo the experiẽce of al times teacheth vs how neceſſary this exhortation of Chriſt was to the miniſters, & generally to al the godly. For ther was neuer time wherin men haue not violently lift vp themſelues againſt God, & haue endeuoured to ouerwhelme the goſpell. Al are not armed with like power to cauſe and ſtrike a fear of death: but in the greater nũber that monſtrous cruelty doeth raigne, which when occaſion ſerueth, ſhew eth it ſelfe. Alſo ſathan doth oft ſuborne the giants, at whoſe ſight the ſeruaunts of Chriſt do fal down dead, except they be armed with this doctrine, to be conſtãt without ſhaking. But when as theſe two clauſes do ioyne together in one ſentence, ſome that are vnlearned, do naughtily take this part from the other, that men are not to be feared. For Chriſt (as was now ſaid) oppoſeth the godly and holy feare of God, as a remedy againſt the peruers feare of men, which draweth vs out of the right way. Otherwiſe the conſequence doth not folow, if we feare God who is Lorde of body & ſoule, men are not to be feared, whoſe power reacheth not beyonde the body. And that Chriſt attributeth to menne a power of killing, is ſpoken by a kinde of graũting. So God ſlacketh the bridles to the wicked, that they being puft vp with a truſt of their owne power dare do any thing, and they do alſo amaſe the minds of the ſimple, as if they could do euery thing. Therfore the wicked do triumph in vaine, as if the life of the godly were ſubiect to their pleaſure, and God holdeth them bound, ſo that he reſtraineth their cruelty and violent forces, as oft as he pleaſeth: yet by his permiſsion they are occounted able to kil: becauſe he often ſuffereth their furie weakely to creepe. Laſtly, the ſermon of Chriſt conſiſteth of two partes: for that we might learne patiently to beare the loſſe of this bodily life, he doeth call vs firſt to the beholding of the eternall life and death. Then by degrees he deſcendeth hither alſo, that the keeping of our life is in the hand of God.

29. Are not two ſparowes. Chriſt proceedeth further, as I ſayd euen now, thoughe the tyrantes become madde, yet they haue not any power ouer the body: therefore they do wickedly which feare the cruelte of men, as if they were not in the cuſtody of God. Therfore in dangers let vs remẽber this ſecond comfort, ſith God is the keeper of our life, we may ſafely reſt our ſelues in his prouidence: nay he is iniuried, if we commit not our life to him, whereof he vouchſafeth to take the charge. But he extendeth the prouidence of God generally to all creatures, that frõ the greateſt to the the leaſt he might ſhew that we are preſerued by his defence. There is almoſt nothing leſſe eſtemed then ſparowes (for two were then ſolde for a farthing: or as Luke ſayth, fiue for two farthings) and yet the eye of God is watchful to defend them alſo, ſo that nothing can come by chãce vnto them. VVil he neglecte the life of men, who is carefull for ſparowes? But two things are here to be noted: for firſt Chriſt doth define the prouidẽce of God farre otherwiſe then many do, which are not much vnlike to the Philoſophers: which though they ſay that the world is gouerned of god, yet they imagine a confuſe prouidence, as if God regarded not particular creatures. But Chriſte diſtinctly affirmeth that euery one of the creatures are vnder the hand & cuſtodie of God, ſo that nothing is left to fortune. For certainly the will of God is oppoſite to chaunce: neither yet by thys meanes is the Fatũ of the Stoyckes eſtabliſhed: for it is one thing to imagine a neceſsitie wrapped or tied faſt to the manifold courſe of cauſes, & an other thing to make all the world and all the partes of the ſame ſubiect to the wil of God. I graunt that there is a chance in the very nature of thinges: but I ſay that nothing can fall in the blinde wheele of Fortune, where the will of God doth gouerne. Secondly it is to be noted, that the prouidence of God is to be conſidered, not as curious and vaine men doe vſe, but that it may be a helpe to our faith, and may ſtirre vs vp to call vpon God. For he doth not therfore teach that al the haires of our head are nũbred, that he might nouriſh vain ſpeculations, but that we might learn to depend of the fatherly care of God which he hathe for this fraile fleſh.

31. Ye are of more value. This is generally true of al men, for whoſe cauſe the ſparowes are created: yet it is ſpoken properly of the children of God, which haue a greater right then by creation. But that dignitie doeth not other waies appertaine to men then by the free liberalitie of God.

Math. 10.	Mar. 8.	Luke 9.
32. VVhoſoeuer therefore ſhall confeſſe me before mẽ, him will I confeſſe alſo before my father which is in heauen. 33. But who ſoeuer ſhall denye me before men, him will I alſo denie before my father which is in heauẽ 34. Thinke not that I am come to ſend peace into the earth: I came not to ſende peace, but a ſworde. 35. For I am come to ſet a man at variãce againſt his father, & the daughter againſt the mother, & the daughter in law againſte her mother in law. 36. And a mans enemies ſhalbe they of his own houſe.	38. For who ſoeuer ſhall be aſhamed of me, & of my woordes among this adulterous & ſinful generation: of him ſhall the ſonne of man be aſhamed alſo, when hee commeth in the glory of his father, with the holy Angels.	26. For who ſoeuer ſhalbe aſhamed of me & of my words, of him ſhal the ſonne of man be aſhamed, when he ſhal come in his glory, and in the glory of the father, and of the holy angels. Luke 12. 8. Alſo I ſay vnto you, who ſoeuer ſhall confeſſe me before men, him ſhall the Sonne of man confeſſe alſo before the Angels of God. 9. But he that ſhal deny me before men, ſhal be denied before the Angels of God. In the ſame Chapter. 51. Thinke ye that I am come to giue peace on earth? I tell you nay but rather debate. 52. For frõ henceforth ther ſhalbe 5. in one houſe deuided, three againſt two, & two againſt three. 53. The father ſhalbe deuided againſt the ſon, & the ſon againſt the father: the mother againſt the daughter, & the daughter againſt the mother, the mother in law againſt her daughter in law, & the daughter in law, againſt her mother in law.

32. VVhosoeuer therefore. He applieth that nowe to the preſent purpoſe whiche he ſpake before of the contempt of death, becauſe we muſt ſtriue againſt the horrour of death, leaſt it drawe vs from a free confeſsion of faith which God doeth ſtraightly require, and the worlde can not beare it. Therefore for this ende it becommeth the diſciples of Chriſt to be alwaies ſtronge and couragious, that they may be alwaies ready for Martyrdome. Further, though the confeſsion of Chriſt is neglected as a light matter of the greater part of men: yet here it is accounted and woorthily, as an eſpecial worſhip of God, and a ſingular exerciſe of godlineſſe. For if earthly kings for the greater defence of their glory & encreaſe of their richeſſe, do call their ſubiectes to armes, why ſhoulde not the faithfull defend the glory of their heauenly king at leaſt with their toung? VVherefore it is certaine that they doe quenche faith as muche as in them lieth, which ſuppreſſe the ſame inwardly, as though the outward profeſsion of it were but vaine. For Chriſt doeth not in vaine call vs heere his witneſſes, by whoſe mouth his name ſhould be renowmed in the worlde. I ſay the will of Chriſt is, that the profeſsion of his name ſhould be oppoſed againſt all falſe religions. Becauſe it is an odious thing, he teacheth vs, that no mannes faith ſhould lie choaked in the heart, but that it ſhould openly ſhew it ſelfe before men. VVho ſoeuer auoideth it and holdeth his peace, doeth not he by dalying with the ſonne of God, baniſhe himſelfe out of the houſholde of God? There is required of the teachers a more notable confeſsion of faith, then of priuate men. Then becauſe all menne are not endued with like meaſure of faith, as euery man doeth more excell wyth the gifts of the holy Ghoſt, ſo ought he to goe before in his example. Yet there is not one of the faithfull which the Sonne of God will not haue to be a witneſſe. But where, when, howe oft, howe, and howe farre our faith is to be profeſſed, it is hard to ſette downe a certaine lawe: but the occaſion is to be conſidered that none of vs doe fail in his duetie in time. And we muſt aske alſo of the Lord the ſpirite of wiſedome and boldneſſe, by whoſe direction we may knowe what is conuenient, and that we may boldly execute that which is certainly committed vnto vs.

Him will I confeſſe. There is added a promiſſe, which in this behalf ſhould kindle our zeale. The Antitheſes are to be noted: for if we compare our ſelues with the Sonne of God, howe vile a thing is it to denie him our teſtimonie, when he offereth his againe to vs as in ſteade of recompence? If we compare men mortall and of no eſtimation, with God and Angelles, and all the heauenly glory, howe much more excellent is that whiche he promiſeth, then that which he requireth? For although men be vnfaithful and peruerſe, yet Chriſt eſteemeth as much of it, that we giue teſtimonie to them, as if it were the companie of God and Angels. Therefore to amplifie it, it is ſayde by Marke and Luke, In this adulterous generation, leaſt we ſhoulde thinke that we loſt our labour, becauſe the hearers are not meete for it. Further, if the promiſſe mooue not any man ſufficiently, there followeth a horrible threatning, when Chriſte ſhall appeare to iudge the worlde, he will deny all them, which vnfaithfully haue denied him before men. Nowe let the enemies of the croſſe goe and pleaſe themſelues with their owne diſſimulation, when as Chriſt ſhall blot them out of the boke of life. For who ſhall God acknowledge in the laſt day as children, but them which are offered to him by Chriſte? And he declareth that he himſelfe ſelfe will be a witneſſe againſt them, that they ſhall not falſly thruſte in themſelues. That which is ſayd, that Chriſte ſhall come in the glory of his Father, and of the Angels, is thus muche in ſence: his diuine glory ſhall then be ſhewed openly. And the Angels as they doe nowe compaſſe the throane of God, ſo ſhall they attend vppon him to adorne his maieſtie. The place out of the 12. of Luke anſwereth to the text of Mathew. But that which we ſet down out of the 9. chapter, and out of Marke, ſemeth to be ſpoken at an other time, but becauſe there is no difference in the doctrine, I thought good to ioyne them together.

LVKE. 51. Thinke yee that I am come, That which Chriſt required euen nowe of his diſciples euery one of vs might performe for himſelfe without any buſineſſe, if all the worlde with one conſent woulde ſubſcribe to the doctrine of the Goſpel. But becauſe the greater part is not only againſt it, but doeth alſo ſharply reſiſt it, we cannot confeſſe Chriſte without the variance and hatred of many. Therefore Chriſte admoniſheth his diſciples that they ſhoulde prepare themſelues to the battell: for of neceſsitie they muſt fight for the teſtimonie of the truthe. And ſo hee preuenteth a double offence which otherwiſe might haue troubled their weake minds not a little. Sith the Prophets promiſed peace and a quiet ſtate vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, what ſhould the diſciples elſe hope for, then to haue all things quiet whether ſoeuer they ſhould come? Now when Chriſte is called our peace, and the Goſpell reconcileth vs to God: it followeth that there ſhoulde be alſo brotherly concorde amongſt vs. Therefore to haue ſtrifes and contentions kindled in the worlde where the Goſpell is preached, ſeemeth not to agree with the propheſies of the Prophets, & much leſſe with the office of Chriſt, and nature of the Goſpell. But that peace which the Prophets commend, becauſe it is ioyned with faith, flouriſheth not but amongſt the true worſhippers of God, and in godly conſciences, and it belongeth not to the vnbeleuers, thoughe it be offered them. And there is nothinge but they can abide, rather then to come in fauour wyth God: whereby it commeth to paſſe that the meſſage of peace, doeth ſtirre them vppe into a greater tumult. For in ſo muche as Sathan poſſeſſeth a kingdome amongeſt the reprobate, he is madde at the name of Chriſte, and aſſoone as the doctrine of the Goſpell is vttered, their wickedneſſe is whetted, which lay before a ſleepe. So Chriſt who is properly the author of peace, through the malice of men, is the occaſion of troubles. Heereby we learne howe muche the wickednesſe is of our corrupt nature, whiche doeth not onely defile ſo incomparable a gift, but doeth tourne it to the worſte. In the meane ſeaſon if tumultes doe ariſe, where the kingdom of Chriſte beginneth to ſhewe it ſelfe, let vs not be troubled as with a newe or an vnwonted matter: when he himſelfe compareth his Goſpell to a ſworde, and ſayeth that it is a ſeparation or makebate. Some thinke that heere is deſcribed the puniſhment which is laide vpon the contemners of the Goſpell, that ſome of them ſhould riſe as enemies againſt others: but the text ſheweth that Chriſte exhorteth heere his diſciples to conſtancie, if a great part of the world ſhould diſſent from them, and that with their voyce, as with the ſound of a warlike trumpet they ſhoulde ſtirre vp very many enemies to their armes.

35. For I am come to ſet at variance. Heereby is more euidently perceiued that which we ſaid a little before, that againſt the nature of the Goſpell, it falleth out through the fault of the wicked, that contentions and tumults do arise. For that which Malachie 4.6. speaketh of Iohn Baptist, belongeth to all the ministers of Christ, that they are sent for this ende, that they should turne the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers. But the malice of the wicked bringeth to passe that they which were ioyned before, shoulde at the hearing of the voyce of Christ, be deuided into contrary partes, so that they should breake all bands of frendshyp. Furthermore Christ declareth that the world was come to that confusion, that all lawes of nature should be little estemed, and that no humanity should be any more accounted off. For when Micheas complaineth 7.6. that a mans enemies are them of his owne house, he bewaileth an extreme and a sore corruption. Christ declareth that the same shall come to passe, where his doctrine shalbe vttered, which otherwise were not to be beleued. Yet he doeth not meane that this shalbe alwaies, as some froward menne do dreame that they cannot otherwise be good disciples of his, except they be deuided frō their parents, childrē and wiues, but all lawfull felowshyp is rather sanctified by the vnitie of faith. Christ onely giueth warning, that it becommeth not his disciples to be troubled so oft as that falleth out.

30. Saying: This man began to builde, and was not able to make an end?

31. Or, what king going to warre against another king, sitteth not downe first, & taketh not counsell, whether hee be able with tenne thousand, to mete him that commeth against him with twentie thousand?

32. Or else while he is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

33. So likewise who soeuer he be of you, that forsaketh not all that he hath, he can not be my disciple.

37. He

37. He that loueth. Because this is very sharpe and repugnant to the sense of nature, to make them his ennemies which should be most his friendes: therefore Christ sayth now that we cannot of any other condition be his disciples. He doeth not commaunde vs to lay from vs humane affections, he doeth not forbid, but that euery man may performe due beneuolence to his friendes: but he only willeth that what mutuall loue soeuer there is amongst men, should be brought into order, that godlinesse may haue the chiefe preheminence. Therefore lette the husbande loue his wife, the father, the sonne, and again the sonne the father, so that the loue towards men doe not ouerwhelme that duetie which is due to Christe. For as amongest men themselues, some (as we are tied vnto them with a straiter bande) are more loued then others, so were it an vnworthy acte if Christ alone shoulde not be preferred before them all. And certainly we doe not sufficiently account with thankefull minde what it is to be a disciple of Christe, excepte the excellencie of this dignitie doe preuaile to bringe vnder all the affections of the flesh. Luke hathe a harder speache, Who soeuer hateth not his father, but the sense is the same. If the loue of our friendes doeth hinder vs from following Christe, it muste be mightely withstoode. As Paule sayeth to the Philip. 3. 8. that he accounted thinges losse for Christes sake, which he estemed before as aduantage to him, and that he lost all those things willingly.

38. He that taketh not vp his crosse. He proceedeth from a perticular to the general, that we might know that we cannot otherwise be accounted for his disciples, except we be prepared to beare many dangers. If it torment vs and vexe vs, that we haue discord for the cause of the Gospell, with father, or wife, or children, lette this condition come to our memorie, that Christ dedicateth all his disciples to the crosse. Yet lette vs remember this comfort, that in bearing the crosse, we become the felowes of Christe: so it shall come to passe, that all bitternesse shall easily become pleasant. The reprobate are no lesse tied to their crosse, and cannot shake it off, striue they neuer so muche: but because the crosse without Christe is accursed, there remaineth for them an vnhappy end. Wherefore lette vs learne to knit these two togither, the faithful must take vp the crosse that they may folow the master: that is, that they may conforme themselues after his example, and as faithful companions walke in his steppes.

39. He that will saue his life. Least the former doctrine (as it is very hard and troublesome to flesh) should of it selfe worke but smal effecte, Christ in this sentence confirmeth the same two waies. For he sayeth that they are too wary and prouident: when they shal with themselues thinke they haue preserued their life best, they are deceiued, and they haue loste the same: Againe, they which neglect life, shal lose nothing, because they shall saue the same. We know that al things are don & omitted for life sake: there is suche a loue of the same planted in vs: wherefore it was necessary for Christ, that he might encourage his to contemne death, so to promisse and to threaten. To finde life, signifieth in this place to possesse the same as vnder a safe custodie: for they which are too couetous of earthly life, while they keepe themselues oute of all pearils, they please themselues with a vaine truste, as if they had well prouided for themselues, but their life fenced with suche defences, shall fleete away, because at lengthe they must die, and death shall be to them destruction.

On

On the contrary part, where the faithful do offer themſelues to death, their ſoule which ſeemeth at that preſente to vaniſhe away, is reſtored to a better life. Furthermore, becauſe there are ſome founde which ſomtime doe loſe their life, either for ambition ſake, or for a furie, Chriſt expreſly declareth the cauſe why we ſhould ſuffer death. It is doubtfull whether this ſermon was made at an other time, which Luke declareth. The Lord doeth there alſo exhort his diſciples to beare the croſſe, but not in ſo long a ſermon. Alſo for the confirminge of this ſentence he addeth preſently two ſimilitudes, whereof there is no mention made in Mathewe: but for the conſent in the ſumme of the matter, I made no doubt to bring thoſe things which are found in Luke hither.

LVKE. 28. Which of you is it, minding. Leaſt it ſhould be troubleſome to any man to folow Chriſt on this condition, that he ſhoulde renounce all his deſires, there is a profitable admonition propoſed, that men ſhould meditate before hand what the profeſsion of the Goſpell doeth require. For hereof it commeth to paſſe that many do fall away, at all light temptations, becauſe they fanſied to themſelues mere wāton delites, as though they ſhoulde alwaies be in the ſhade and in idleneſſe. Therefore he ſhall neuer be a fitte ſeruaunt of Chriſt, except he prepare himſelf to the warre a long time before. Nowe for this purpoſe doe the ſimilitudes very well agree. It is a matter ful of trouble and wearineſſe to builde, & alſo ſmally welcome by reaſon of the charge: alſo no manne taketh warre vpon him, but againſte his will, becauſe it bringeth with it ſo many diſcommodities, and threatneth almoſte ruine to mankinde: and yet the profitte of dwelling allureth men that they doubt not to lay out their ſubſtance: neceſsitie alſo compelleth, ſo that they refuſe no expēces in making warres. But there remaineth a farre more excellent reward for the builders of the temple of God, and for them whiche giue their names to the warres of Chriſt. For Chriſtians doe neither labour for a tranſitorie buildinge, nor fight for a vaine triumph. But that ſaying of Chriſte. If any kinge be vnable to beare the brunt of battell, leaſt he be ouercome with ſhame, let him ſeeke peace with the enemie: cannot be applied to this preſent purpoſe, as if we might make any reconciliation with the ſpirituall enemie if richeſſe and forces doe faile vs. For it were a fonde thing to wreſt al particular clauſes in parables to the matter which is handled. But the Lorde ſimply meaneth that we ſhuld ſo be furniſhed, leaſt we being taken without iuſt defence, doe ſhamefully turne our backes. Neither is euery one of vs a king, which doeth make warre with his owne forces. And as their raſhneſſe is reproued by this doctrine, which fooliſhly leape beyond their meaſure, or make themſelues pleaſures, not thinking of bearing the croſſe: ſo we muſt beware leaſt this meditation whereto Chriſt exhorteth vs, do feare vs, or ſlack our forwardneſſe. Many, becauſe they haue not preſently taught themſelues the law of patience, euē from the priſons, they, thorough niceneſſe retourne backe from the courſe of their race: for they wil not abide to be Chriſtians of any other conditions, then that they may be free from the croſſe. Others, while they haue propoſed vnto them a condition hard and vnſauerie to the fleſh, dare not come to Chriſte. But there is no cauſe why the knowledge of our want ſhould diſcourage vs, whome the Lord doeth helpe in time. Certainly I graunt, if we accounte the charges, we are all ſo poore and weake, that we cannot lay one ſtone, or drawe the ſworde againſt the enemie. But ſith the Lord from heauē will giue vs matter, coſtes, weapons & forces, our ſluggiſhneſſe or ſlouthfulneſſe ſhall haue no pretence of the hardneſſe. Therefore the purpoſe of Chriſt is to admoniſhe his of bearing the croſſe, that they might girde themſelues with ſtrength.

33. So likewiſe who ſoeuer hee be of you, that forſaketh not. This clauſe doeth ſhewe what the accounting of the charges doeth meane, whereat Chriſte commaundeth his to beginne: namely, that they muſt meditate of this account, to forſake all things. For in vaine they doe thruſt themſelues in, to profeſſe Chriſtianitie, whiche are delighted with a ſweete and idle eſtate voide of the croſſe. Alſo vnderſtand that they muſt renounce all thinges, which doe ſo preferre Chriſte as before their life; as alſo all the deſires of the fleſh, ſo that nothing ſhall hinder them from a right courſe. For if any man ſhall preciſely vrge the letter, he ſhal deale prepoſterouſly: as though no man were the diſciple of Chriſt, but he that ſhuld throw what ſoeuer he poſſeſſeth into the ſea, and ſo ſhoulde be deuorced from his wife, and ſhould bidde his children farewell. By ſuche fanſies, foliſh men haue bene allured to monkery, that beinge willinge to come to Chriſt, haue fallen from humanity. But no man doth more truely renounce al things which he poſſeſſeth, thē he which being redy to leaue al things at euery momēt, doth imploy himſelf wholely as fre and bound vnto the Lord, & paſsing by all lettes, doeth folow his calling. So the true denial which the Lorde requireth of his, is not ſettled ſo much in the action (as they ſay) as in affection, that euery man liuing for a day, ſhould not ſette his heart vppon that which he gouerneth with his hand.

MAT. 40. He that receiueth you. This is an other comfort, that though a great part of the world be offended with the diſciples of Chriſt, ſo that they ſhould prouoke the hatreds of all men againſt them: yet the Lorde, that he might allure many to ſhewe kindneſſe to them, diſdaineth not to account it as receiued to his owne tables, what ſoeuer is giuen to them. For thereby it appeareth howe much he loueth them, while hee ſuffereth what things ſoeuer were done to them, to be imputed to himſelf. Alſo he doeth not ſpeake ſomuch of the receiuing of the doctrine as of the men. I graunt that this latter doeth depende of the former: but the purpoſe of Chriſt is to be conſidered: for his mind was to ſpeake, that which he ſaw moſt apt and fitte for the helping of their infirmitie. If any man ſhoulde receiue them louingly, and ſhoulde gently helpe them, he woulde accepte that kindneſſe as to himſelfe, as if he had ben liberally entreated in their perſon: and not ſo onely but they offered a ſacrifice of a good ſauour vnto God the father.

41. He that receiueth a Prophet. He beginneth at the Prophets, but deſcēding at the length to the loweſt degree, he comprehēdeth al his diſciples. Therefore hee commendeth without exception the true worſhippers of God, and the louers of his Goſpell. And to receiue in the name of a Prophet and of a righteous manne, ſignifieth as much as to do them good for the honour of the Goſpel, and in reſpect of godlineſſe. For thoughe God commaundeth vs to doe the dueties of charitie to all mankinde: yet for good cauſe he preferreth his aboue the reſt, that there may be an eſpecial care and regarde had of them.

The reward of a Prophet. The interpreaters do expoūd this clauſe diuerſly:

Some thinke that here is noted a mutual recompence, that is, that the Prophets of God ſhould giue ſpiritual things for earthly giftes: but if this expoſition be receiued, what ſhalbe the reward of the iuſt? Others vnderſtād that they ſhalbe partakers of the ſame reward which is laide vppe for the Prophets and the righteous, becauſe they haue ben liberal towards them. Many referre it to the communion of Sainctes, that as by our liberalitie we declare that we are one body with the ſeruaunts of Chriſt, ſo by this meanes we are made partakers of all good things, whiche Chriſte communicateth amongſt the members of his body. I do more ſimply take it for a rewarde which is fit for the worthineſſe of the perſon vpon whom the liberalitie ſhall be beſtowed. For Chriſte meaneth that this ſhall be a notable declaration, how much he eſteemeth his Prophets, and ſo euery of his diſciples: for by the large rewarde it ſhall appeare, that none of that was loſt, which was beſtowed vpon them. And he amplifieth the matter in that he promiſeth a rewarde euen for the meaneſt deedes, as that is, to giue a cup of colde water. He calleth not only them litle ones, which are the laſt and of leaſt account in the Church, but all his diſciples which are troden downe by the pride of the world.

Mathew.	Marke 6.	Luke 9.
	12. And they went oute and preached that men ſhould amende their liues.	6. And they went out, and went throughe euery towne
	13. And they caſte out many deuils: and they anoynted many that were ſicke with oyle, and healed them.	preachinge the Goſpell, and healing euery where.

12. And they went out and preached. Mathew paſſeth ouer with ſilence what the Apoſtles did: Marke & Luke do declare that they went about to exerciſe the office laid vpon them: by whoſe words that which I ſayd, doth more euidently appeare, that this office whiche Chriſte then laide vppon them, was but for a time, and that of a fewe daies. For they ſay that they went through cities and townes, & it is not to be doubted but that ſhortly after they returned to their maſter, as ſhall be ſhewed in an other place. This only needeth to be interpreated, that Marke reporteth, that they annoynted many that were ſicke with oyle. For it is demaunded, for what purpoſe they vſed oyle, ſith Chriſte hadde giuen them power of healing. Some learned men thinke that it was a kinde of medicine. And I graunt that oyle was muche vſed in thoſe countreis, but there is nothinge more vnlikely, then that the Apoſtles ſhould vſe ordinarie & natural remedies, which ſhould darken with cloudes the myracles of Chriſt. For they were not inſtructed by the Lorde in the Arte and skill of ſurgerie, but they are rather commaunded to worke myracles which ſhould ſtirre vp al Iudea. Therfore I thinke that this was a viſible ſigne of ſpiritual grace, whereby they declared that the healing proceeded of the ſecrete power of G O D, whoſe miniſters they were: for it was vſed vnder the law, by oile to figure the grace of the ſpirit. But how prepoſterouſly they imitated the apoſtles, which eſtabliſhed in the church a perpetual ceremonie of annoynting the ſicke, doth thereby appeare, that Chriſt gaue the gift of healing to the Apoſtles, not that they ſhoulde conuey the ſame by right of enheritance to their poſteritie, but that it ſhoulde be for a time a ſeale of the doctrine of the Goſpel. And at this day the ignorance of the Papiſts is too ridiculous, which chalenge filthy annoynting (whereby they bring them that are half dead to the graue), for a ſacrament.

Mathew

Mathew 11. | Marke. | Luke 7.

1. And it came to passe that whē Iesus had made an ende of commāding his twelue disciples, he departed thence to teach and preache in their cities.

2. And when Iohn hearde in the prison the workes of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and sayde vnto him:

3. Art thou he that should come, or shall we looke for an other?

4. And Iesus answearing, said vnto them: Goe and shewe Iohn, what things yee haue heard and seene.

5. The blinde receiue sight, & the halt go: the Lepers are cleansed, and the deafe hear: the dead are raised vp, and the poore receiue the gospel.

6. And blessed is he that shal not be offended in me.

18. And the disciples of Iohn shewed him of all these things.

19. So Iohn called two of his disciples, and sent them to Iesus, sayinge: Art thou he that should come, or shal we wait for another?

A little after.

21. And at that time he cured many of their sickenesse and plagues, and of euill spirites, and vnto many blinde men he gaue their sight.

22. And Iesus answeared and sayde vnto them: Goe your wayes and shewe Iohn, what thinges yee haue seene and heard: that the blinde see, the halt go, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf heare, the dead rise againe, and the poore receiue the Gospell.

23. And blessed is hee that shall not be offended in me.

1. And it came to passe. In this place Mathew sheweth nothing else, but that Christ ceased not from the course of his office, while the Apostles laboured other where. Therefore assone as he had sent them, with their commandements to go through Iudea, he applied himself to teaching in Galile. But there is waight and force in that woord commaunding: for Mathewe declareth that they had not a free embassage permitted them, but that it was prescribed and tolde to them what they should say, and how they should behaue themselues.

2. And when Iohn heard. The Euangelists doe not meane, that Iohn was moued with myracles, so that then at legth he acknowledged the mediatour: but because he saw that Christ became famous, and accounting that the ful and perfect time was come, wherein his testimonie was approued in him, he sent his disciples to him. That is too absurde, that some thinke that he sent for his own cause also, as though that he had not ben fully perswaded and plainly taught, him to be the Christ. That is also a friuolous imagination of them, which imagine that when the Baptist was neare his death, he should demand of Christ what message he should beare frō his mouth to the fathers which were dead. But it is euidēt that this holy crier of Christ, because he saw himself not to be farre distant from the ende of his race, and that his disciples remained as yet in suspence, thoughe he had bestowed much labour in teaching them, sought this last remedy to heale their infirmitie. He faithfully behaued himselfe in this (as I said) that his disciples might embrace Christe without delay. Sith by daily calling vpon, they had profited so litle, he doth not feare without a cause, least after his death they should fal away wholely: therefore by sending them to Christe, his will was to waken their slouthfulnesse throughly. Againe, the pastours of the Churche are in this place admonished of their duety, that they shoulde not endeuour to holde disciples addicte or as it were bounde to them, but to directe them to Christe, who is the only maister.

Iohn at the beginning profeſſed himſelf not to be the bridegrome. Therfore which is the part of a faithful frend of the bridegromes, he offereth a chaſt and a pure ſpouſe to Chriſt himſelfe, who is the only bridegrome of the Church. Paule 2. Cor. 11. 2. declareth that he had the ſame care: and the example of them both is propoſed to all the miniſters of the Goſpell to folowe.

3. Art thou he that should come? Iohn taketh that for graunted, which the diſciples had learned from their childehode. For it was a common leſſon of godlineſſe amongſt all the Iewes, that there ſhould come a Chriſt, the author of ſaluation & of perfecte bleſſedneſſe, wherefore he moueth no queſtion of that principle: but demandeth only whether Ieſus is that promiſed redemer. For it behoued them after they were perſwaded of the redemption promiſed in the law and the prophets, to embrace the ſame offred in the perſon of Chriſt. VVhē he addeth, shal we loke for another? In this clauſe he ſharply reproueth their ſlouthfulnes, which being taught ſo certainly before, ſhould wauer ſo long with doutful mindes. He alſo ſheweth what is the nature and force of faith: namely, that being grounded in the truth of God, it looketh not about hither or thither, nor varieth: that being content with Chriſt alone, it turneth not any other way.

Goe, and shew Iohn. As Iohn had taken the perſon of an other vpon him: ſo he cōmandeth to cary word back again to him, which ſhould rather haue bene obſerued of his diſciples. That he anſwereth not ſimply, he doeth it firſt for that purpoſe, becauſe it were better the thing it ſelfe ſhould ſpeake: then, that hee might giue his forerunner more free ſcope of teaching: yet he doth not giue him in his myracles a naked matter without fourm, but he applieth the myracles to their end out of the Oracles of the Prophets. And he noteth one place eſpecially out of the 35. chapter of Iſaiah, & an other out of the 61. that the diſciples of Iohn might know that to be fulfilled and performed, whiche the Prophet witneſſed of the kingdome of Chriſte. In the firſt place is contained a deſcription of the kingdome of Chriſt, vnder the which gouernment God promiſeth that he will be ſo liberal & bountiful, that he would help & remedy al diſeaſes. And it is no dout but that he ſpeaketh of a ſpiritual deliuerance from al euils & miſeries. But Chriſt by outward ſignes (as is ſaid before) ſheweth that he came to be a ſpiritual phiſition to cure ſoules. So it came to paſſe that the diſciples might depart without any wauering doubt, hauing a plaine anſwere without obſcure or vaine circumſtances. The laſt place is like to the firſt in this, that teaching that the treaſures of the grace of God for the world were propoſed in Chriſt, it declareth that Chriſte was peculiarly ſent to the pore & the afflicted. And he alleageth this propheſie purpoſely: partly, that he might teach all his humilitie: partly, that he mighte take away the offence which the wiſedom of fleſh might conceiue at his contemptible flocke. For as we are proud by nature, we eſteme almoſt of nothing, except it be ſette foorth with muche glory. But the Churche of Chriſte being gathered of poore menne, is furtheſt of all from that gay and gorgious ſhewe. From hence hathe the contempte of the Goſpell crepte into manye, becauſe it is not receiued of all great menne, and of menne of greate dignitie. But howe ouerthwarte and wicked thys eſtimation of the Goſpell is, CHRISTE doeth admoniſhe vs by the nature of the Goſpell it ſelfe, when as it is ſente but to the poore and abiectes, wherof it foloweth that it is no new thing, or ought that ſhoulde trouble vs,if it be deſpiſed of all the mighty, which being puffe vp with their richeſſe,doe leaue no void place for the grace of God: nay,if it be refuſed of the moſt part of men,there is no cauſe why we ſhoulde maruell,when as there is ſcarce the hundreth man, which ſwelleth not with a vain confidence. And as Chriſt defendeth his goſpel from contempt:ſo againe he declareth who they be that are fit to receiue the grace of ſaluation which is there offered: and he calling louingly miſerable ſinners to the hope of ſaluation,he raiſeth them into an aſſured hope. For it is certaine that the poore are called, whoſe condition is miſerable and vile, and whiche are nothing accounted of. Therefore as euery man is moſt abiect & meane, let not his pouertie cauſe him to deſpaire,but lette it comfort him the rather to ſeeke after Chriſt. But let vs remember that none elſe are accoũted poore, but they that thinke themſelues to be ſuch: that is,whiche lye oppreſſed with the feeling of their owne pouertie.

¶. 6. And bleſſed is he. By this clauſe it was the wil of Chriſt,to teach,that if any will remaine conſtant and firme in the faith of the Goſpel,he muſt reſiſt and ſtriue againſt offences which ſhal ariſe to the hinderance of the courſe of faith. But this is a preuention wherewith hee ſhieldeth vs againſt offences: for we ſhall neuer want occaſions to mooue vs to refuſe the ſame,vntil we lift our mindes aboue all offences. Thefore this is firſt to be noted,we muſt warre with offences, that we may ſtande faſt in the faith of Chriſt. Neither is Chriſt wrongfully called the rocke of offence, and the ſtumbling ſtone whereat many do fal. It is certaine that that cõmeth to paſſe through our fault: but he cureth this diſeaſe alſo,when he pronounceth them bleſſed which are not offended at him. VVhereby we alſo gather that the vnbelecuers haue no excuſe,though innumerable offences fall out: for what ſhould hinder them that they ſhoulde not come to Chriſt?or what ſhould offend them that they ſhould fall from Chriſt? namely,becauſe he with his croſſe appeareth as one contemned & vile, being caſt out with his croſſe to the reproches of the worlde: becauſe hee calleth vs into the ſociety of his afflictions: furthermore,becauſe his glory and maieſtie,as it is ſpirituall,is neglected of the world. Then,becauſe his doctrine is contrary to our vnderſtandinge: alſo becauſe that by the crafte of Sathan many troubles doe ariſe, whiche defame and bringe the name of Chriſte and the Goſpell into hatred. Laſtly,becauſe euery man, as of ſet purpoſe frameth to himſelf a heape of offences,becauſe that with no leſſe malice then deſire, all men withdrawe themſelues from Chriſt.

Luke 16.

16. The law & the Prophets endured vntill Iohn: and since that time the kingdome of God is preached, and euery manne preasseth vnto it.

7. And as they departed. Christ commēdeth Iohn to the people, that they might remember that which they had hearde of him, and giue credite to his testimonie: for his name was famous amongest the people, and they spake honourably of him: but his doctrine was smally esteemed, and they were but fewe which had respecte to his ministery. But Christe telleth them that they lost their labour which went foorth into the wildernesse to see him, except they woulde reuerently apply their mindes and studies to his doctrine. Therefore the meaning of the wordes is this, you went forth vnto the wildernesse, your lightnesse was fonde and to be laughed at, if your iourney had not some certaine ende. But you neither sought the pompe of the world, nor any other foolish thing, but your purpose was to heare the worde of God out of the mouth of the Prophet. Therefore that you may now shew what frute you had of your purpose, let that be well remembred which he spake vnto you.

8. They that weare softe cloathing. They are deceiued whiche thinke that courtly daintinesse is condemned by this sayinge of Christe: there are very many other places, where the pride and immoderate glory in apparell is reproued. But the simple meaning of thys place is, that there was no suche thing in the wildernesse, which should allure the people thether. For all thinges there were rude and filthie, which shoulde bring nothing but a lothsomnesse: they shoulde rather looke in kinges courtes, for fine trimming which delighteth the eyes. Thoughe he may seeme also after a sorte to reprooue the tyrannye of Herode, for that he helde Iohn in prison, because he had freely condemned his incestuous mariage. Therefore he declareth that it is but a fonde thing to esteme of Prophets according to the good will and fauour of Princes, becausse that flatterers doe raigne there there for the moſt parte.

11. Verely I ſay vnto you. In theſe words is not only the authority of Iohn confirmed, but alſo his doctrine is preferred aboue the olde propheſies, that the people might conſider the righte purpoſe of his miniſterie. For becauſe they accounted not to what purpoſe he was ſent, it came to paſſe that they profited almoſt nothing by his doctrine. Therefore Chriſt extolleth and placeth him aboue the order of Prophets, that they mighte learne and knowe that he hadde ſome peculiar and more excellent commaundement giuen vnto him. But that he in an other place doeth denie himſelf to be a Prophet, is not contrary to this title of Chriſt. For he was not a Prophete after the order of others, whome the Lorde in times paſt had ſette ouer his Churche as interpreaters of the lawe, and meſſengers of his wil: yet he was more excellent then the Prophets, becauſe he ſpake not a farre off, and darkely vnder ſhadowes: but he tolde them that the time of their redemption was at hande and before them. To the whiche purpoſe alſo appertaineth the propheſie of Malachie, which preſently foloweth: namely, that Iohn excelled in this, that he was the crier and the forerunner of Chriſte. For thoughe the olde Prophets ſpake of his kingdome, yet they were not placed as Iohn was before his face, that they ſhould ſhew him preſent. Lette the readers looke the reſt out of the firſte chapter of Luke.

There aroſe not. The Lorde proceedeth further, aſmuch as Iohn exceeded the Prophets, ſo much more excellent are the miniſters of the goſpel then he. They haue erred too ignorantly, which thought that Chriſte cõpared himſelf with Iohn, for he ſpeaketh not here of the dignity of the perſon, but the excellency of the office is commended: which doth more euidẽtly appeare by the words of Luke. Ther aroſe not a greater Prophet. For the greatneſſe is expreſly referred to the office of teaching. In ſumme, Iohn hath ſo excellent a title giuen him, to that ende that the Iewes ſhuld the more diligently obſerue the meſſage that he brought. Then the teachers whiche ſhould ſhortly after folow him, are preferred before him, that the maieſty of the goſpell mighte be preferred aboue the lawe, and alſo that meſſage which came betwene them both. And as Chriſt would prepare the Iewes to receiue the goſpell, ſo it is meete for vs to be wakened at this day, that we may reuerently heare Chriſt, ſpeaking to vs out of his high throne of his heauenly glory: leaſt that he reuenge our cõtempt with that horrible curſſe, whiche he denounceth againſte the vnfaithfull by Malachie in the ſame place. The kingdom of heauen and of God, is taken here, as in other places before, for the new eſtate of the church, becauſe that at the cõming of Chriſt ther was promiſed a reſtitutiõ of al things. That which I trãſlated the leaſt, is red in the Greke in the cõparatiue degre the leſſer. But after this maner the ſenſe is the plainer, while it appeareth that it comprehendeth all the miniſters of the goſpell. Alſo, that many being endued with a ſmal portion of faith, are farre inferiour to Iohn, this nothing letteth, but that their preachinge may be more excellent, in that it propoſeth Chriſte the conquerour of death, and the Lorde of life, whiche hath perfourmed the euerlaſting cleanſinge by his onely ſacrifice, and by takinge away the vaile, it lifteth the diſciples into the heauenly ſanctuarie.

12. From the time of Iohn. I doubt not but that Chriſt commendeth the maieſtie of the Goſpel of this, that it was ſought after with a feruent defire of many. For as God raiſed vp Iohn, that hee might be a proclaimer of the kingdome of his ſonne, ſo the ſpirite gaue effecte to his doctrine, that it might enter into the hearts of men, and mighte kindle their zeale. Therfore it appeareth that it came from God, which ſo ſtraungely & ſodenly ſpreadeth out, & raiſeth great ſturres. But in the ſecond clauſe ther is added a reſtrainte, that the violent doe take it. For becauſe the greater parte was no more moued, then as if the Prophets had neuer ſpoken of Chriſt, or as if Iohn had neuer come as a witneſſe of him, Chriſt declareth that the violence whereof he ſpeaketh, is founde but in one certaine kinde of menne. The meaninge therefore is, there is nowe a greate concourſe of men, as if that men would violently enter into the poſſeſſion of the kingdome of God. For at the opening of the mouth of one man, they doe not onely couetouſly, but with violente force they receiue the grace offered. And thoughe very many are ſlouthfull, and are no more touched, then if Iohn ſhould tell a tale in the wildernesſe, nothing appertaining to them: yet many ran with violēt zeale. And to this purpoſe tendeth the ſaying of Chriſt, that they are inexcuſable whiche contemptuouſly, as with cloaſed eyes doe paſſe by the manifeſt power of God, which ſhone as well in the teacher as in the hearers. Yet by theſe wordes we learne what is the true nature and force of faith: namely, that menne ſhould not coldly and for faſhion giue eare to God when hee doeth ſpeake, but they ſhoulde aſpire to him with an ardent affection, and breake throughe as it were wyth a violent endeuour.

LVKE. 16. The lawe and the Prophets to Iohn. Becauſe the Lord had ſayd that thoſe things which the Prophets had foretolde (of the renewinge of the church that ſhuld be) was as an entrance to the matter for the peoples ſake, now he compareth the miniſterie of Iohn with the law & the prophets, as if he ſhould haue ſayd: it is no maruel if God doth now ſo mightily worke in the myndes of men. For he doeth not ſhew himſelfe a farre off, as he did before in obſcure ſhadowes, but openly and at hande is hee preſent to eſtabliſh his kingdome. Hereof it foloweth that they haue leſſe excuſe, which doe ſtubbornely refuſe the doctrine of Iohn, then the contemners of the law and the Prophets. There is an emphaſis in the worde of Propheſying, for the lawe and the Prophetes did not ſette God before the eyes, but onelie by figures they drew out as in a ſhadow, one abſent.

Now we ſee whereto this compariſon tendeth: namely, that it is not meete that menne ſhould be now ſo cold, ſith God ſheweth himſelfe preſent vnto them, which helde the olde people in ſuſpenſe by prophecies. But there is no abſurditie in that, that Chriſt doth nowe number Iohn amongſt the miniſters of the Goſpel, whom he had firſt placed in the middeſt betweene them and the Prophets, becauſe his preaching, though it were a part of the Goſpel, yet it was but a certaine rudiment of the ſame.

MAT. 14. And if ye wil receiue it. Now he doth declare more plainly how Iohn begā to preach the kingdō of God: for this is verily that Eliah which was promiſed to be ſent before the face of God, for Chriſt would that the Iewes ſhould now ſee and know that great & terrible comming of God ſpoken of before by Malachi, ſith that Elias which is there promiſed, doth now execute the office of a forerunner. Alſo in theſe words (If ye wil receiue it): he reproueth the hardnes of their harts, that are ſo malitiouſly blinde in ſo great light. But what if he be not receiued, ſhall he not be

It is not the meaning of Christ to say that the office of Iohn doth depēd vpon theyr lykinges: but after he had sayd that he was that Eliah, he reproueth them of slouth and vnthankfulnes, if he haue not that credit, which he deserueth.

15. He that hath eares. We know that Christ vseth this sentence as oft as he entreateth of an earnest matter, which he would should be diligently & carefully noted. Yet he also declareth that the misteries, wherof he speaketh, are not receiued of all: because that many of the hearers are deafe, or else haue stopped their eares. But because that man is not onely hindered by his own incredulitie, but that diuers do also hinder others, christ here exhorteth the children of God, whose eares are opened, that they should be diligent to consider this excellēt misterie of God, and that they should not wax deaf with the vnbeleeuers.

Matth. 11.	Marke.	Luke. 7.
16. But whereunto shall I lyken this generation? It is lyke vnto litle children, which sit in the markets, and call vnto their felowes.		29. Then al the people that heard, & the Publicans, iustified God, being baptised with the baptism of Iohn.
17. And say, wee haue pyped vnto you, and ye haue not daunced, we haue mourned to you, & yee haue not lamented.		30. But the Pharises & the expounders of the law despised the counsell of God against themselues, and were not baptised of him.
18. For Iohn came neither eating nor drinking, and they saye, hee hath a deuil.		31. And the Lord saide, whereunto shal I liken the men of this generatiō? & what thing are they lyke vnto
19. The sonne of manne came eating and drinkinge, and they say, behold a glutton and a drinker of wine, a friend vnto Publicans and sinners: but wisdome is iustified of her chileren.		32. They are like vnto children sitting in the market place, and cryinge one to an other, and saying, wee haue pipedto you, and yee haue not daunced: wee haue mourned to you, and ye haue not wept.
		33. For Iohn Baptist came, neither eating bread, nor drinking wine: and yee say hee hath the deuill.
		34. The sonne of man is come, & eateth and drinketh: and ye say, behold a man which is a glutton, & a drinker of wine, a friud of Publicans and sinners. 35. But wisdome is iustified of al her children.

LV. 29. Then al the people that heard. This clause is omitted by Math. which yet bringeth great light to the text: for hereof Christ tooke occasion to reproue the Scribes, when he saw that they remained so obstinate in contempt of God. The sum of this place is this, the common people and the Publycans glorified God: but the Scribes, which gloried too much in the trust they had to their own vnderstāding, made no account of any thing that was spoken by Christ. And this at the first sight much darkned & deformed the glory of the gospel, that christ gathered not his disciples, but of the dregs & offscouring of the people: & because that they which excelled either in shewe of holinesse or of learning, refused him.

But it was the Lordes wil to ſhew this ſpectacle, as an example in the beginning, leaſt that either the men that then lyued, or the poſterity that ſhould followe after, ſhould eſteeme of the Goſpell by the auctoritie of men that allowed of it: for almoſt all men are by nature bent to this ſin. And there is nothing more prepoſterous, then that the trueth of GOD ſhould be brought in ſubiection to the iudgement of men, whoſe quicknes of witte and ſharpneſſe of vnderſtanding, is altogeather nothing but meere vanitie. Therefore, as Paule ſaieth, 1. Cor. 1. 27. God chote the weake and fooliſh thinges in the world, that he might ouerthrowe the mighty and the wiſe from theyr imagination. But it is our part to preferre this fooliſhnes of God (as the ſame Paule teacheth, 1. Cor. 1. 21.) before all the excellency of mans wiſdom.

They iuſtified God. This ſpeach is worthy to be noted, that they are ſaid to iuſtifie God, which with reuerence embracing his ſonne, doe ſubſcribe to the doctrine brought by him. Wherefore it is no meruaile, if the holy Ghoſt doe euery where adorne faith with moſt excellent titles, giueing the price vnto it in the worſhipping of God, accounting it to be moſt perfect obedience. For what holier office can be imagined, then to aſcribe vnto God his iuſtice due to him? Yet this word iuſtifying doth generally extend to al the praiſe of God: as if it ſhould be ſaid, that God was approoued and glorified of the people, whiche reſted in the doctrine which came from him. And, as faith iuſtifieth God; ſo it cannot be, but that incredulitie is blaſphemy againſt him, & ſpoileth him of his praiſe. But this phraſe teacheth vs, that men are after this maner brought rightlye to beleeue, when they haue bid the wiſdome of the fleſh farewell, accounting that nothing proceedeth from God, but that which is right & pure, not taking ſo much libertie to themſelues, as once to murmur at his word and his works.

Being baptiſed. Luke meaneth that the fruit of Baptiſme, which they had receiued, did then appeare: for it was a good preparatiue for them towardes the receiuing of the Goſpel, and this was a token of godlyneſſe that they had offered themſelues to be baptiſed. Now the Lord leadeth them from that meane beginning to higher degrees: euen as the Scribes by deſpiſing the baptiſme of Iohn, through their owne pride did ſhutte vp the gate of fayth againſt themſelues. Therfore if we deſire to aſcend to ſound perfection, we muſt firſt take heed that we deſpiſe not the leaſt of Gods callings and matters: but let vs be humbly prepared to beginne at the leaſt elementes. Secondly, we muſt do our diligence, that our faith though it haue a weak beginning, may by degrees dayly profit more and more.

30. They deſpiſed the counſel of God againſt themſelues. The counſell of God is for honours cauſe oppoſed againſt the wicked pride of the Scribes: for there is a force in this word coũſel, which deliuereth this doctrin of God from the contempt of men. But word for word Luke ſaith that they deſpiſed it againſt themſelues. Neither do I reiect that ſenſe, which others do rather allow, that they were rebellious to their own deſtruction. But becauſe the words of Luke are plaine, and that they are thus vſed ofte, I had rather tranſlate it in themſelues: as if he ſhould haue ſaide, though they withſtood it not openly and directly: yet, as they ſwelled with an inward pride inwardly, ſo they deſpiſed it in themſelues.

31. Where-

31. VVhereunto shall I lyken this generation? He meaneth not all the men that then lyued: but he speaketh properly of the Scribes and their flatterers. He vpbraideth thē, that when the Lord had attēpted diuerse waies to draw them vnto him, they most obstinately refused his grace. But he vseth a similitude which is taken, as it is supposed of a game commonlye vsed by children; neither is this coniecture vnlike, that children leading seueral dances, did so sing one to an other. And verely I think that christ purposely that he might ouerthrow the pride of the Scribes, tooke occasion to reproue them of chyldren playing together, declaringe that though they were neuer so proud, yet the song which children sing, whil they play in the market place is enough to condemne them.

33. For Iohn came. VVhen as this man liued an austere and streit life, sounded repentance & sharp reprehensions, as though he sang a mournfull song, and the Lord himselfe, as with a mery & cheerefull song applyed himselfe more pleasantly to allure them to his father: what cause should there be that neither of these wayes profited nothing amongste them, but theyr yron obstinacie or hardnesse of hearts? But this place teacheth vs why there was so great difference in outward shew of life betweene Christ and the Baptist, which yet did both apply themselues to one matter: for it was the will of the Lorde by this varietie in taking as it were vpon him diuerse persons, the more to conuince the vnbeleeuers: for that he bending and transforming himselfe to their manners, could not yet bend them. If that all excuse be taken away from the men of that age, which with obstinate malice refused both those wayes, whiche the Lord vsed to call them by, we also are in their person found guiltie: whē as the Lord omitteth no kind of cheerefull dealing, or of mourfull and sorowful musicke to draw vs vnto him, wee remaine as dead stones. As menne not well in theyr minde, or out of theyr witte, are commonlye called Lunatike: so they called Iohn, a manne possessed with a deuill.

34. The sonne of man is come. To eate and to drinke in this place signifieth to lyue after the common order of men: as Christ saieth, Iohn came neither eating nor drinking: becausse he liued not after the common order of men, for that he abstained from the common meates and common order of diet: which Luke expresseth more plainely in these words, not eating bread, neither drinking wine. Let them note this place: which thinke the estate of perfection to be in outwarde austeritie of lyfe, and they thinke him to liue an Angels life, which liueth sparingly, or pineth away himselfe with hunger. For, according to this rule, Iohn should be better then the sonne of God: but this is rather to be holden as a rule, bodylye exercise profiteth litle, but godlines is profitable vnto all thinges, 1. Tim. 4. 8. Yet vnder this pretence libertie may not be giuen to the flesh, to pamper vp it selfe in delycacie and wantonnesse: only superstition must be auoyded, least foolish men imagining perfectiō to be in these outward elementes, they neglect the spiritual worship of God. Adde this also, that Christ applyed himselfe to lyue after the common order of mans life, that he might sanctifie godly temperance, and not nourish the superfluitie of others either by any shew or example of his.

35. But wisdom is iustified. This place is diuerslye expounded by the interpreters. Some say that wisdom was iustified or acknowledged by the

Iewes

Iewes to be without fault, in that they being faultie in their own conſciences, and iudges of theyr owne infidelitie, were enforced to witneſſe that the doctrine was good & holy, which they reiected. And they take the children of wiſdom for the Iewes, who ſet out themſelues with this title. Others do thinke that it is ſpoken in ſcorne: as thus, do you in this manner approue the wiſdome of God, whoſe children you boaſte your ſelues to be? But becauſe the Greek Prepoſition here vſed, is not properly referred to the party, which is the doer, there are ſome, which expounde it thus, wiſdome is diſcharged of her children, ſo that now ſhee is not by any law bound vnto them, as if the enheritaunce were trãſlated to ſome other: as Paule ſaieth, that Chriſte was iuſtified or freed from ſinne, Rom. 6. 7. becauſe the curſſe of ſinne had no further power ouer him. Some vſing a greater libertie interprete it more hardly, as that wiſdome ſhould be eſtraunged from her children. But howſoeuer the greek Prepoſition be here interpreted, in my iudgement an other ſenſe is more apt: wiſdom though her own children do vtterly deſpiſe her, dooth yet loſe nothing of her excellencie and dignitie: but remaineth ſound. The Iewes, and eſpecially the Scribes vaunted themſelues to be the children of the wiſdome of God: yet when they trod theyr mother vnder their feet, they did not onely flatter themſelues in ſo great ſacriledge, but in theyr iudgement they would that Chriſt ſhould alſo haue fallen: on the other ſide Chriſt ſaieth, though wiſdome hath wicked and degenerate chyldren, yet ſhe remayneth ſafe, and her credit and authoritie cannot bee ought empared by their malice, which doe wickedly and malitiouſly ſlãder her. But I haue not yet ſet downe that ſenſe, which in my iudgment doth beſt agree with the place, and is moſt naturall. Firſt, in the wordes of Chriſt there is a ſecret Antitheſis, betweene naturall children and baſtardes, which vaunt of a vaine title without a cauſe: as if Chriſt ſhould ſay: let them goe on in their pride, which glorioufly boaſt themſelues to be wiſdomes children in vaine: ſhe ſhal yet haue her praiſe and her autoritie amongſt her naturall children. Therefore Luke addeth this vniuerſall note of all her children, whereby he declareth that the reſiſtaunce of the Scrybes was not ſuch a let to any, but that all the electe of God ſhoulde remayne in the fayth of the Goſpell. For the Greeke Prepoſition, it is not to be doubted but that the ſame word is ſometime diuerſly vſed. As to omitte many examples, when Chriſt ſaieth, Luke, 17. 25. The ſonne of man muſt firſt ſuffer many thinges, and be reproued of this generation. No man will deny but that there is the lyke manner of ſpeaking vſed in the Greeke, in the other clauſe. Chriſoſtome alſo, whoſe naturall language was the Greek tongue, paſſeth by this, as a matter of no waight. And beſides this, this ſentence ſhall thus better agree and anſwere to the former ſentence, where it is ſayde, that God was iuſtified of the people. Therefore though many Apoſtates doe fall away from the Churche of God: yet alwayes ſtall the faith of the Goſpel continue ſafe amongſt all the elect, which are indeede of the flock.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 10.
		1. After theſe thinges, the Lord appeynted o-ther ſeuentie alſo, & ſent them, two and two before him him into euerye citie and place, whither hee himſelfe would come.

2. And he ſaid vnto them: The harueſt is great, but the labourers are few: pray therefore the Lorde of the harueſt to ſende forth labourers into his harueſt.

3. Goe your wayes: behold I ſend you forth as lambes among wolues.

4. Beare no bag, neither ſcrip, nor shooes, & ſalute no man by the way.

5. And into whatſoeuer houſe ye enter, firſt ſay, Peace be to this houſe.

6. And if the ſonne of peace bee there, your peace ſhall reſte vppon him: if not, it ſhall turne to you againe.

7. And in that houſe tarye ſtill, eatinge and drinking ſuch thinges as by them ſhall bee ſet before you: for the labourer is worthy of his wages. Goe not from houſe to houſe.

8. But into whatſoeuer citie yee ſhall enter, if they receiue you, eate ſuch thinges as are ſette before you.

9. And heale the ſicke that are there, and ſaye vnto them, The kingdome of God is come neere vnto you.

10. But into whatſoeuer citie yee ſhall enter, if they will not receiue you, goe your wayes out into the ſtreetes of the ſame, and ſay,

11. Euen the very duſt, which cleaueth on vs of your citie, we wipe of againſt you: notwithſtandinge, know this, that the kingdom of God was come neere vnto you.

12. For I ſay to you, that it ſhalbe eaſier in that day for them of Sodom then for that citie.

1. After theſe thinges. It may be gathered by many circumſtances that the Apoſtles were returned backe againe to Chriſt, before that theſe ſeuentie were ſubſtituted in theyr roomes. For the twelue were ſente to ſtirre vp the Iewes in hope of the ſaluation at hand: after theyr returne when there was neede of more dilygent attentiuenes, there were moe ſent out as ſecond meſſengers, which ſhoulde euerye where in all places ſpread abrod the fame of the comming of Chriſt. But there was no ſpeciall ambaſſage committed to them, Chriſt onely ſent them before him, as forerunners, which might prepare the mindes of the people to receiue his doctrine.

In the number of ſeuentie he ſeemeth to folow that order wherto the people had heretofore bene accuſtomed. That muſt be remẽbred, which we ſpake of the twelue Apoſtles, that look how many trybes there were in the floriſſhing eſtat of the people, ſo many Apoſtls were there choſẽ as Patriarches, which ſhold gather the members of the torne body togeather that thence might come a perfect reſtitution of the Church. The reaſon was not vnlike in the ſeuentie. VVe know when Moſes was not able to beare the burden, he choſe vnto him ſeuentie Iudges, which ſhuld gouerne the people togeather with him, Numb. 11. But the Iewes being now returned from the captiuitie of Babylon, had a councell called Synedrion, which they through corruption called Sanedrin, which conſiſted of ſeuentie and two Iudges. But as the common ſpeach is in ſuch numbers, ſo when they ſpake of the Synedrion, they onelye called them ſeuentie Iudges, and they were choſen of the poſteritie of Dauid, as Philo witneſſeth, that there might yet remaine ſome authoritie in the kingly ſtocke. VVherefore after many miſerable murthers, this was the laſt part of theyr deſtruction, when Herod had ouerthrowne that councell, hee ſpoyled the people of their lawfull gouernment. Furthermore, becauſe their returne from Babylon, was a figure of the true and perfect redemption, the Lord now ſeemeth to chuſe theſe ſeuentie preachers of his comming, therby to promiſe after a ſort, a reſtitution of their decayed eſtate: Yet he made thē not Iudges with power, beecauſe the people was to be called backe againe to one head, but hee commaunded them onely to goe before, that he alone might rule and gouerne. In that he ſent them two togeather, it ſeemeth that he did it in conſideration of theyr weakenes: for it was to be feared, leaſt they being ſeuered alone, ſhuld haue had leſſe courage thē was neceſſarye for the through performaunce of theyr office: Therefore that ſome ſhould mutually encourage others, they are ſent two togeather.

2. The haruеſt is great. I expounded this ſentence in the 9. Chap. after Matthew: yet it was conuenient to be ſet downe here againe: becauſe it is here vttered vppon an other occaſion. For that Chriſt might therby the better ſtirre vp his Diſciples diligently to apply theyr labour, he telleth them that the haruеſt is great: whereof it followeth that their labour ſhould not be in vaine, but that they ſhould finde aboundaunce of matter, wherein they might exerciſe themſelues. After he admoniſheth them of daungers, contentions and troubles, and he commaundeth them to girde vp themſelues, that they might ſpeedely goe through all Iudea: then he rehearſeth thoſe commaundements, which he had giuen to the Apoſtles: therefore it were ſuperfluous here to load the readers with moe wordes, ſith the full expoſition of all theſe thinges may be hadde there: onely they are to be admoniſhed what this ſpeach meaneth, Salute no man by the way. It is a token of great haſte, where as if any man meete vs in the way, we goe forward, and ſpeake not to him, that might hinder vs, though it were but a litle. So 2. Re. 4. 29. when Elizeus ſent his boye to the Sunamite, he forbad him to ſalute any by the way. VVould Chriſt therefore haue his diſciples to be ſo vnkind, that he would not allowe them to ſalute any by the way? No, but he commaundeth them to make ſuch ſpeede, that they ſhould paſſe ouer all lettes. Luke alſo hath this onely, that the Diſciples ſhould eate and drinke thoſe thinges, whiche ſhoulde be ſet before them. In which words Chriſt doth not only command his to be cōtent with cōmon and meane diet; but he alſo alloweth thē to eate of other mens charges. And this is the ſimple & natural ſēſe, it ſhall be free for you to lyue of other mennes charges, ſo long as you ſhall be in this iourney: for it is meete that they, for whoſe cauſe you labour, labour, should giue you foode. Some thinke that that scruple is taken away, that the Disciples should not abhorre or refuse any kinde of meat: but Christ meant no such thing: nay, his purpose was not to geue them any thing in commandement concerning frugal diet: but only to graunt them in steade of reward to be fed in this their ambassage of their hostes that entertained them.

Math. 11.	Marke.	Luke. 10.
20. Then beganne he to vpbrayde the Cities wherein moste of his great workes were done, beecause they repented not.		13. VVoe be to thee Chorazin: woe be to thee Bethsaida: for if the miracles had bene done in Tyrus and Sidon, which haue bene done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sittinge in sackcloath and ashes.
21. VVoe be to thee, Chorazin: woe be to thee Bethsaida: for if the great workes, whiche were doone in you, had beene done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented long agoe in sackcloath and ashes.		14. Therefore it shall bee easier for Tirus and Sidon at the iudgement, then for you.
22. But I say to you, it shal be easier for Tyrus and Sidon at the day of iudgement then for you.		15. And thou Capernaum which e arte exalted to heauen, shalt be thrust downe to hel.
23. And thou Capernaum, which art lyfted vp vnto heauen, shalt bee brought down to hell: for if the great workes, which haue bene den in thee, had bene doone among them of Sodome, they had remained to this day.		16. Hee that heareth you, heareth mee: and he that despiseth you, despiseth mee: and hee that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me.
24. But I say vnto you, that it shall be easier for them of the lande of Sodome in the day of iudgement, then for you.

20. Then he beganne to vpbrayde. Luke sheweth when and wherefore Christ so inueighed against these cities: namely, when hee had sente his Disciples into diuerse partes of Iudea, to preach as they wente that the kingdom of God was at hand: he cõsidering their vnthankfulnes amõgst whom he had laboured as a prophet long time, & had wrought manye miracles, and they not profiting thereby: he brake out into these words, as if he should haue said, that the time was now come that he would goe to other cities, sith he found that the inhabitants of that coaste, where he began to preach the Gospel and to work miracles, were a stubborn and malitious people. But not speaking of his doctrine, hee vpbraideth them, that they were not drawn to repentaunce by his miracles: for it is euidẽt that the Lord shewed his power by miracles: to this end, that hee might thereby call men vnto him, and sith that by nature al men are set against him, it is necessary that they beginne at repentance. It is well known that Chorazin and Bethsaida are cities situated vpõ the shore side of the lake Genezareth.

21. If the great workes which were done in you had bene done in Tyrus and Sydon. Chriſt of purpoſe brought this compariſon of Tyrus & Sydon, becauſe they were infamous in wickednes, pride, luxurioufnes, and other ſinnes, and euen their neighbours hard by them, and that hee might pricke his countreymen, the Iewes, the rather. For there were none of theſe, which accounted not the Tyrians and Sydonians for moſte wicked contemners of God. Therefore Chriſt amplifieth his curſe the more, when hee ſaieth, that there was more hope of amendment in thoſe places (where there was no relygion) then appeared in Iuda it ſelfe. But leaſt anye ſhould moue curious queſtions of Gods ſecrete iudgementes, it is to be conſidered that the Lord applyed his woordes to the common capacitie of mans vnderſtanding, comparing the citizens of Bethſaida and theyr neyghbours with the Tirians and Sidonians, hee diſputeth not what God forſawe in ſecret counſel ſhuld become eyther of theſe, or of thoſe, but what the others would haue done, as might by outwarde appearaunce be gathered. For that thoſe cities were ſo corrupt in maners, and diſſolute in behauiour, might be imputed to theyr ignoraunce, that the word of God was neuer heard there, neither had they by miracles that calling to repentaunce: but the cities of Galyle reproued by our ſauiour, were hardened in obſtinacie, as appeareth by contemning the miracles, which they had ſeene wrought aboundantly amongſt them, without any profit. In ſumme, the wordes of Chriſte tende to this purpoſe, that Chorazin and Bethſaida excell Tyre and Sidon in malice and outragious contempt of God: and yet there is no cauſe to contend with God: for paſsing by them, in whom there was more hope, and ſhewed his power amongſt the wickedeſt, and them that were paſt hope: VVhoſoeuer he employed not his mercy vppon, he iuſtly appoynteth to deſtruction.

Now, if he withdraw his word from ſome, and ſuffer them to periſh: but that others may be more inexcuſable, and that hee ſolycite and exhort them to repentaunce, by this or by any other meanes: who canne therefore charg him of yll dealing? Therfore acknowledginge our own infirmitie, let vs learne humbly to reuerence this high miſterie. For their proud and arrogant frowardnes is not to be borne with, which cannot abyde that God ſhould be accounted righteous, further then theyr ſenſes can reach vnto: and they proudly refuſe the miſteries of God, which of duetie they ſhould reuerence: beecauſe it agreth not with theyr reaſon.

If theſe great workes had bene done. VVe ſaid, that we are by theſe woordes taught the right vſe of myracles, yet in theſe great works is alſo comprehended the doctrine. For it is not to be thought that Chriſte helde his peace, whyle he ſhewed the power of his father: nay, the myracles were annexed to the Goſpel to make them more attentiue to the words of Chriſt. 16

In ſackcloath and aſhes. Repentaunce is here deſcribed by the outwarde ſignes, which then were ſolemnlye vſed in the Church of God: not that Chriſt eſteemed theſe outward rites, but becauſe he applyed himſelf to the capacitie of the common people. VVe know that the repentance of the faythfull is not tyed to a few dayes, but they muſt daylye exercyſe themſelues in meditating thereof vnto their death. But it is not neceſſary to put on sackcloath, and to be sprinkled with ashes euery day: therefore this outward shew of repentaunce is not alwayes to be vsed, but when that from some grieuous falling away menne turne againe to GOD. And then sackcloath and ashes are shewes of guiltinesse, vsed to appease the wrath of the iudge, and do properly belong to the beginning of conuersion. And sith that menne doe testifie their sorow and their griefe by this outward ceremonie, it is necessary that the hatred of sinne, the feare of God, and the mortification of the flesh should goe before, accordinge to that saying of Ioel, 2.13. Rent your heartes, and not your garments.

Now we see why Christe, when he spake of Tyre and Sydon, ioyned sackcloath and ashes to repentaunce: whose inhabitants could not haue the Gospell preached vnto them: but he condemneth their former life, leauing them no refuge, but to flye to a sorowfull shewe of their guiltinesse, and humblye to seeke for forgiuenesse. To the same purpose also maye that woorde Sitting bee applyed: for it signifieth a lyinge prostrate vppon the grounde, whiche menne forlorne doe vse to testifie and shewe their mourninge, as appeareth in manye places of the Prophetes.

33. And thou Capernaum. Hee nameth Capernaum especially, because hee was so much conuersant there, that menne thought he hadde beene borne there. And this was an inestimable dignitie, that the sonne of God should beginne his kingdome and his priesthood there in that citie, and that hee had chosen it in steede of a palace and a sanctuarie for him. But she was so drowned in her owne filthinesse, as if no droppe of Gods grace hadde euer bene amongst them: therefore Christ pronounceth that the greater blessinges of GOD they hadde, so much the more horrible punishment remained for them. This place is dilygently to bee noted, that the prophaning of Gods giftes, because it is ioyned with sacriledge, shall neuer escape vnpunished. Therfore the hygher a manne is in dignitie, the more seuerelye he is to bee punished, if hee prophane the gyftes of GOD beestowed vppon him: and then especiallye is there a horryble vengeaunce at hande, when wee (beeinge enriched with the spyrituall gyftes of Christe) haue him and his Gospell in deryſion.

If they hadde beene doone in Sodome. It is sayde before that Christe spake after the manner of menne, and that hee did not shew, as out of a heauenly Oracle, what he foresawe shoulde haue become of the Sodomits, if a Prophet hadde bene sent vnto them. If this aunswere doe not satisfie the contentious: yet this one thing shall take awaye occasion of further quarrelling from them, though GOD had a remedie in his hande, whereby he could haue saued the Sodomites; yet he was a iust reuenger in destroying them.

LV. 16. Hee that heareth you. They are deceaued, which thinke that, that is repeated here, which we had in Matthew, 10.40. Hee that receiueth you, receiueth me. For Christ spak there of the persons, & now here of the doctrine: that receiuing pertained to the dueties of charitie: but now he cõmendeth that faith, which receiueth God in his word. This is the sum, that the godlines of men is tried by the obedience of faith: and they that refuse the gospel, though they glory that they are great worshippers of God, yet they do openly shew a wicked contempt of him. Furthermore, the purpose of Christ is to be considered: for whereas a great part of the world, prepostrously esteemeth of the gospel after the dignitie of men, and therefore despise it, when it is brought by men of a meane and base estate, Christ here meeteth with this peruerse iudgment. Also sith there is that pride almost in al men, that they wil hardly submit themselues to their equals, or to them, whom they contemne in respect of themselues: and God appointeth to gouerne his Churche by the ministerie of men, and chuseth the ministers of the worde oft times out of the dregges and offscouring of the cómon people: it was therfore necessary for him to set forth the maiestie of the Gospel, least it should become vile: because it is vttered out of the mouth of man. This therefore is a notable commendation of the outward ministerie, that Christe saieth, what honour or reuerence soeuer is giuen to the preaching of menne; so that it bee faithful, that God accepteth it as imployed to himself. VVe may profitte by this commendation two wayes: for first nothing can better encourage vs to embrace the doctrine of the Gospel, then to heare that it is a most excellent seruice of God, and a sacrifice of a sweete smelling sauour, to heare him speaking to vs by the mouth of men, and to submit our selues with that reuerence vnto his word brought by men, as if he himself should discend from heauen, or should reueale his counsel by Angels. Then this established assurednes taketh all doubt from vs, when wee heare that the testimonie of our saluatiō witnessed to vs by men, sent frō God, is so to be receiued and credited, as if his owne voice shoulde sounde from heauen. Contrariwise, to driue vs from contempt of the Gospel, he addeth a seuere sentence, affirming that they disdaine not men, but him, and God his father, whiche disdaine to heare his ministers, though they bee but meane men. And as the dignitie of those pastors, which sincerly & faithfully do execute their office is highly here extold: so the pope maketh him selfe ridiculous with his shauelings, while vnder this pretence, he would mainteine his tyranny. For it is certeine that Christe speaketh not, as if he would resigne to men that right, which he had receiued from his Father: but this is his onelye purpose, to delyuer his Gospell from contempt: VVhereof it followeth, that he transferreth not the honour due to him, to the persons of menne, but onely to seeke that it be not separated from his word. Therefore, if the Pope will bee receiued, lette him bring the word for a warrant, whereby hee maye be knowne to bee a minister of Christe: but so long as hee goeth on in his owne lykenesse, that is, as a chiefe enemie of Christes, and hauing nothinge like to the Apostles, lette him leaue deckinge him selfe with others feathers.

Math.	Marke.	Luke. 10.
		17. And the seuentie turned againe with ioy, saying, Lord, euen the deuils are subdued to vs, through thy name.
		18. And he said vnto them, I saw Sathan lyke lightning, fall downe from heauen.
		19. Behold, I giue vnto you power to treade on serpentes, and scorpions, and ouer all the power of the enemie, and nothing shall hurt you.

20. Neuer-

20. Neuertheleſſe, in this reioice not, that the ſpirits are ſubdued vnto you: but rather reioyce: becauſe your names are written in heauen.

17. And the ſeuentie turned againe. It appeareth that the ſeuentie diſciples did not at the firſt fully and perfectly beleeue Chriſtes wordes, when as they returned reioycing, as at a ſtrang matter and a thing, not to be hoped for, that they ſhould caſt out deuules by the power of Chriſte. But this auethoritie was committed to them, and they had alſo a commaundement: yet I thinke not when they went forth, but that they were perſwaded that their maiſter had ſaid nothing to them in vaine: yet after, when the ſtraungnes of the matter exceeded their opinion, they were amaſed at thoſe wonderfull ſightes. But this commonly falleth out, that the faithful do onelye conceaue a certeine taſte of the power of God by his word: then experience caryeth them into admiration. But what maner of ioy they had, ſhall more plainely appeare by Chriſtes aunſwere.

18. I ſaw Sathan. Chriſt leadeth his diſciples from one ſpecial ſort to a whole generalitie: namely, that he commanded his goſpel to be preached to this end, that he might ouerthrow the kingdome of Sathan. And becauſe the diſciples tooke that exãple, which in experience they had ſeene, without further application, Chriſt telleth them, that the force and efficacie of their doctrine ſhould reach further, and that the tyranny which Sathan exerciſed againſt al minkinde ſhould be ouerthrowne. Now, wee conceaue the meaning of the words, when Chriſt commaunded his goſpel to be preached, he did not attempte a matter, the end whereof was doubtfull, but he ſaw before that Sathan ſhould therby be ouerthrown. Now, ſith the ſonne of God cannot be deceaued, and this his foreknowledge belongeth to the continuall courſe of the Goſpel: it is not to bee doubted, but as oft as he raiſeth vp faithfull teachers, but that he wil giue like happy ſucceſſe to their labours. Vvherby we gather, that we cannot be otherwiſe deliuered from the ſeruice of Sathan, but by the goſpel, then, they profit rightly by the Goſpel, in whom the power of Sathan falleth downe, that they dying vnto ſinne, begin to liue to the righteouſneſſe of God. The ſimilitude is alſo to be noted, which hee vſeth, that Sathan fell downe as lightning at the thunder of the Goſpell: for ſo is the diuine & incredible power of the doctrine expreſſed, which ſo ſodenlye caſteth downe headlonge with violence the prince of the worlde, furniſhed with ſo great powers. Here is alſo expreſſed how miſerable the condition of men was, ouer whom Sathan triumphed, who reigned in the aire, & held the world ſubiect vnder his feet, vntil Chriſt the delyuerer came.

19. Behold, I giue vnto you power. This is ſpoken by waye of a graunte. Chriſt denieth not, but that it is an excellent gift, wherin they reioice: but he ſpecially warneth them to looke ſomwhat deeper into the matter, & not to ſtay at the outward miracles. Therefore, as their ioy was not cõceaued of nothing, ſo he doth not altogether condemne it, but ſheweth that it is not ſuch as it ought to be: becauſe they pleaſed themſelues too much in theſe outward ſhewes, & did not lift vp their minds into heauẽ. And almoſt al the godly are ſick of this diſeaſe: for though they conſider the goodnes of gods benefits with thãks giueing: yet they go not ſo far with thẽ, as they ought, as with ladders to be holpe by thẽ to clime into heauen.

Therefore they haue neede to be rayſed vp by the Lord, as with an out-ſtretched arme, to be holden, that they fall not downe vpon the ground, but that they ſhould aſpyre to a heauenly newneſſe of lyfe. He calleth al daungers the power of the enemie: becauſe the deuill throweth vpon vs whatſoeuer he knoweth may make againſt vs: not that hee hath in his power thoſe thinges, which can hurte men: but becauſe that he being armed with the curſe of God, he endeuoreth to turne al his ſcourges to our deſtruction, and taketh them as weapons to wound vs with.

20. Your names are written. Chriſt purpoſing to withdraw his diſciples from a vaine ioy, to glory and to ioy in eternal lyfe, he leadeth them to the head ſpring and fountaine of the ſame: namely, that they are choſen of God and adopted to be ſonnes. He might haue commaunded them to reioyce, for that they are regenerate by the ſpirit of God, to be new creatures in Chriſt, that they are lightened in hope of ſaluation, and haue the ſeale of the ſame giuen vnto them: But his will was to ſet down vnto them the head, from whence all theſe good thinges doe come: that is, the free election of God, leaſt they ſhould aſcribe anye thing to themſelues. The benefites of God, which we feele in our ſelues, do giue vs occaſion to praiſe God: but the eternall election, which is without vs, doth ſhew more plainely, that the meere goodneſſe of God is the foundation of our ſaluation. Further, he ſaith metaphorically that their names are written in heauen, meaning they are accounted beefore God, as ſonnes and heires, as if they were written in a Catalogue.

Math. 11.	Marke.	Luke. 10.
25. At that time Ieſus anſwered, and ſayd, I giue thee thankes, O father, Lord of heauen and earth: becauſe thou haſt hidde theſe thinges from the wiſe, and men of vnderſtãding, and haſte opened them vnto babes.		21. That ſame houre reioyced Ieſus in the ſpirit, and ſaid: I confeſſe to thee father, Lorde of heauen and earth, that thou haſte hidde theſe thinges from the wiſe and learned, and haſte reuealed them to babes, euen ſo father, becauſe it pleaſed thee.
26. It is ſo, O father: becauſe thy good pleaſure was ſuch.
27. All things are giuen vnto me of my father: and no man knoweth the ſonne, but the father: neither knoweth any man the father, but the ſonne, and he to whom the ſonne will reueale him.		22. Then hee turned to his diſciples and ſayd, All things are giuen to me of my father: and no man knoweth whoe the ſonne is, but the father: neither who the father is, ſaue the ſonne, and hee to whom the ſonne will reueale him.
28. Come vnto mee, all yee that are wearye and laden, and I wil eaſe you.
29. Take my yoake on you, and learne of me, that I am meeke and lowly in heart: and yee ſhall find reſt vnto your ſoules.
30. For my yoake is eaſie, and my burden is light.

25. Iesus answered. Though the Hebrewes doe commonly vse this word answering, euen in the beginning of a matter or speach, yet I think that in this place there is a greater Emphasis, and that Christ took occasion of the present matter to speake thus: and Lukes wordes doe more plainely confirme it, in that he saieth, that Christ the same houre reioyced in the spirit. But whereof should this reioycing proceede: but that Christ esteemed the Church gathered of meane and contemptible men, as deare & as pretious to him, as if al the nobilitie and excellencie of the world had bene gathered with their glorious shewes into the same? And the wordes, which he speaketh to his father, haue more vehemécy in thē, then those which he speaketh to his disciples. Though it is certeine that in respecte of them, and for their cause hee gaue thankes to the Father, least any should be offended with the meane and base estate of the Church. For we doe alwayes seeke after glorious shewes, and nothing seemeth more vnlikely to vs, then that the heauenlye kingdome of the Sonne of god, whose bewtie is so gloriouslye described by the Prophets, should consist of the dregges and offscouring of the people. And surelye woonderfull is the counsell of the Lorde in this, that hee hauinge the whole worlde in his hande, hadde rather chuse a peculier people to himselfe out of the meane despised common people then from amongst the mightie men of the world, which might haue the better bewtified and adorned the name of Christe with their nobilitie. But Christe here withdraweth his disciples from a proud and disdainfull iudgement, least they shoulde be so bolde as to despise the meane and base estate of the Church, wherin he himselfe delyghteth and reioyceth. But, that he may with more force ouerthrow and ouerwhelme the curiositie, which hereof aryseth in the mindes of men, he lifteth vp himselfe aboue the world, and reuerenceth the secrete iudgementes of God, that hee might drawe others with him to haue the same in admiration. And truely, though this order of God farre differeth from our iudgement, yet too mad, arrogant and blind are we, if we once murmurre when Christe our head doth reuerently accept and account of the same. But now it is conuenient to weigh the wordes, I giue thee thankes, O father. In these wordes hee declareth that he setleth himselfe in that decree of his father, which differeth so much from the iudgement of the world. There is also contayned vnder these wordes a secrete opposition betweene this praise, which he giueth to his father, & the malitious slaunders, or froward barkings of the world.

Now it is to be considered, wherefore he thanketh his father: namely, because that hee being Lord of the whole world, preferred the babes & simple ones before the menne of vnderstanding. For in respecte of the circumstaunce of the argument, it is of no small force, that hee calleth his father, Lorde of heauen and earth. For in these woordes he sheweth that this difference onely dependeth of the will of GOD, that the wise are blind, and that the rude and vnlearned do vnderstand the misteries of the Gospell. There are manye other like places, wherein the Lord sheweth that they are all freely chosen by him, which attaine to saluation: because that he is the maker and creator of the world, and that all nations are his. Further, we learne by this sentence two things: first, that it is not for want of power in GOD, that all doe not obey the Goſpell: for hee is able to ſubdue all creatures to his power. Secondlye, it is onely by the woorke of his free election, that ſome become faythfull, and others remayne ignoraunt and obſtinate: for he drawing ſome, and paſſinge by other ſome, dooth onely make the difference betweene men: whoſe eſtate by nature is one and equall: Yet in that he choſe the ſimple rather then the wiſe, he had conſideration of his owne glory.

For, as fleſhe is alwayes too proud; ſo if wiſe and learned men ſhould goe before, this opinion would preſently take place, that menne obtayned faith by dexteritie, or by wiſdome, or by learning. Wherefore the mercy of God could not otherwiſe be ſo manifeſt, as it deſerueth: but by making ſuch a choyce, as might plainely declare, that whatſoeuer men bring of themſelues is nothing worth. Therfore it is meete that the wiſdome of man ſhould be ouerthrowne, leaſt it ſhould obſcure the praiſe of Gods grace. Yet it is further demaunded, whom Chriſt calleth men of vnderſtanding, and whom he calleth litle ones. For experience teacheth vs, that all the rude and ſimple haue not faith, nor all the wiſe and learned are left in their blindnes. Therfore they are accounted the wiſe and men of vnderſtanding, which being lyft vp with a diueliſh pride cannot abyde to heare Chriſt ſpeaking from heauen. And that this is not a generall rule, that all they are forſaken of God, which in pryde delyght in theſelues more then they ought, we are taught by the example of Paul whoſe pride Chriſt tamed: yea, if we deſcende to the rude common people, as the greater part of them appeare to be full of deadly malice, ſo we ſee them lefte togeather with the great and mightie menne to theyr owne deſtruction. I graunt that al vnbeleeuers are puft vp with a vaine truſt of themſelues, whether they apply themſelues to be accounted wiſe, honeſt, honourable, or rich: yet I doe thinke that Chriſt dooth here ſimply comprehend all that doe excell in wiſdome and learning, without noting of the faulte: as againe hee accounteth them not in reſpect of vertues to be litle ones: for though Chriſte is mayſter of the lowlye, and that this is the firſte rudiment of fayth, that no manne ſhoulde be wiſe in his owne conceate: yet hee ſpeaketh not here of wilfull wickedneſſe: but Chriſt by this reaſon amplifieth the louing mercy of the father, who diſdayned not to deſcend to the loweſt and vyleſt places, that he might rayſe the poore out of the myre. But here aryſeth a queſtion, ſith that wiſdome is a gift of GOD, how commeth it to paſſe that it ſhould hinder vs from ſeeing the light of God, which ſhineth in the Goſpell. That muſt bee remembred, which I ſaide euen nowe, that the vnfaithfull doe defile whatſoeuer vnderſtanding is giuen them: and therefore excellent wittes are often hindered, that they cannot ſubmitte themſelues to be taught.

But, concerning this preſent place, I aunſwere, though wiſdome be no light to the wiſe, yet they may bee depriued of the light of the Goſpell. For, ſith that al menne were in one the ſame, and lyke condition, why ſhoulde not GOD at his pleaſure take theſe or thoſe? And why hee choſe not the wiſe and mightie, Paule teacheth vs, 1. Corin. 1. 27. namely, that hee choſe the weake and fooliſh thinges of the world, that he might confound the glorious pride of fleſh. But, we do note againe, that Chriſtes ſpeach was not generall, where hee ſayd, that the miſteries of the Goſpell were hidde from the wiſe. For, if of fiue menne of vnderſtanding foure refuſe the Goſpell, one receiue it, of ſo many ſimple menne, two or three become the Diſciples of Chriſte, this ſentence is fulfilled: which is alſo confirmed by that place of Paule, which I euen now rehearſed: for hee baniſheth not all that are wiſe, noble and mighty out of the kingdome of God, but onely ſheweth that not many of them ſhal be ſaued.

Now is the queſtion aunſwered, that wiſdome is not here condemned, as it is the gyfte of GOD, but Chriſte onely ſaieth, that it is of no value to the obtaining of fayth, as againe he commendeth not fooliſhneſſe, as though menne were thereby reconciled to God: but hee denyeth it to be any hinderaunce to his mercie: but that notwithſtanding he might lighten the rude and ſimple menne with heauenly wiſdom. Now it remayneth to declare, what to reueale, and to keepe ſecrete meaneth. That Chriſte ſpeaketh not of outwarde preaching may be gathered by this, that hee offereth himſelfe generallye a teacher to all menne, and gaue the ſame commaundement to his Apoſtles. VVherfore this is the meaninge; no manne can attaine fayth by his owne wiſdome, but onelye by the ſecrete lightning of the ſpirit of God.

26. It is ſo, O Father. This ſentence taketh from vs the occaſion of vaine and wanton inquiringe, which ofte prouoketh and ſtirreth vs. For God requireth no harder a matter of vs, then that wee ſhoulde account his will for a perfect reaſon and righteouſneſſe. He doth ofte rehearſe that his iudgementes are as a great bottomleſſe deapth: yet wil we runne headlonge with violence into that depth: and if wee finde oughte that pleaſe vs not, wee grudge and murmurre againſt him: and many breake out into open blaſphemies. But the Lorde hath preſcribed this rule vnto vs, that wee ſhould account that to be right, which pleaſeth GOD. And this is to be wiſe, as wee ought to bee, to eſteeme of the one good pleaſure of God, as of a thouſande reaſons. Chriſte coulde haue alleaged the cauſes of this dyfference, if there hadde bene any: but beeing ſatiſfied with the good pleaſure of GOD, hee enquireth no further why hee called the little ones to ſaluation rather then others, and framed his kyngdome of the obſcure common people. VVhereby it appeareth that they rage againſt Chriſte, which grudge when they heare that ſome are choſen freelye of the good wyll of GOD, and that other ſome are forſaken: for it greeueth them to gyue place vnto God.

27. All thynges are giuen to mee of my Father. The interpreters doe yll applye this ſentence with the former, which thinke that the onely purpoſe of it is, that Chriſte ſhoulde encourage his Diſciples with greater boldneſſe to the preaching of the Goſpell. But I think that Chriſt ſpake it for an other cauſe, and to an other ende. For, as he ſayde before, that the Church came out of the ſecrete fountaine of Gods free election: ſo nowe hee ſheweth how that grace of ſaluation commeth vnto men. For manye, when they heare that none other are heires of eternall lyfe, but thoſe whom GOD choſe before the world was made, they doe curiouſly enquire how they may bee certeine of Gods ſecrete counſell: and ſo they caſte themſelues into a labyrinth, out of the whiche they canne finde no paſſage. But Chriſte commaundeth to come preſently to him, that the certeintie of ſaluation maye bee fetched from thence. The meaning therefore is, that life is reuealed to vs in Chriſt himſelfe: and therefore that no man can be partaker of the ſame, but he that entreth in by the gate of faith.

Now wee ſee how he ioyneth faith with the eternall predeſtination of God, which fooliſh men doe ſo peeuiſhly compare togeather, as if they were contraries. For though our ſaluation be alwayes hidde with God: yet Chriſt is the conduit pipe whereby it commeth to vs, and is by faith receiued of vs, that it may be confirmed & ratified in our hearts. Wherfore it is not lawfull to ſtrinke from Chriſte, except we will refuſe the ſaluation prepared for vs. No manne knoweth the ſonne. Hee ſpeaketh this for this cauſe, leaſt his maieſtie ſhould vainely be eſteemed of, after the iudgment of menne. The meaning therefore is, that if wee will know what Chriſt is, we muſt credit the teſtimonie of the father, whoe onelye canne tell vs truely and rightly what he hath giuen vnto vs in him. And certeinely by imagining him to be ſuch a one, as our minde in the imagination thereof conceaueth, we ſpoyle him of a great parte of his power: therefore he is not knowne rightlye, but by the fathers voyce; though the onely voyce ſufficeth not without the direction of the ſpirite: for the power of Chriſt is ſo deepe and ſecrete, that menne cannot reach vnto the ſame, vntill they be lightened of the father. Note therefore that the father knoweth him not for himſelfe, but for vs, that he might reueale him vnto vs: yet the ſentence ſeemeth not to be ful: becauſe the two partes of it agree not together.

It is ſayd of the ſonne, that no man knoweth the father but he, and he to whom he will reueale him: but of the father this onely is ſayde, that he onely knoweth the Sonne: but there is no mention made that hee ſhould reueale. I aunſweare, it ſtould haue beene in vaine to haue rehearſed that, which he had ſpoke but now. For what dooth the former thankes giuing containe, but that the father hath reuealed the Sonne, to whom he hath thought good. Therefore that which foloweth nowe, that no man knew the ſonne, but the father, is as a reaſon rendred of that hee hadde ſpoke: for this imagination might haue ryſen; what neede was it that the father ſhould reueale the ſonne, who hath ſhewed himſelfe to be ſeene openly? Now, that we vnderſtand wherefore it is ſayde that the ſonne was knowne of the father alone: it remaineth that we ſhuld conſider the latter parte of the ſentence: That no manne knew the father, but the ſonne. Alſo this knowledge differeth from the former: for it is not ſayde, that the ſonne knewe the father, becauſe hee ſhould reueale him by his ſpirite: but in that hee was the lyuelye image of the father, hee ſheweth him viſiblye after a ſorte in his owne perſon. Yet I exclude not the ſpirite, but I referre the reuealing, whereof Chriſte nowe ſpeaketh, to the manner of the knowledge; and ſo the text agreeth well togeather: For Chriſte confirmeth that, whiche hee ſayde beefore, that all thinges were giuen vnto him of the father, that we might knowe that the fulneſſe of the Godhead dwelte in him. This is the ſumme, it is the gift of the Father, that the Sonne is knowne: for hee openeth the eyes of our mindes by his ſpyrite, wherein wee ſee the glorye of Chriſte, which otherwiſe was hidden from vs: but the father who dwelleth in light, whercto no man can reache, and is incomprehenſible in himſelfe, is reuealed vnto vs by the ſonne, who is his liuely image, ſo that he is ſought elſe where in vaine.

28. Come vnto me all yee. Now he doeth louingly cal vnto him them, that he acknowledgeth to be fitte to be his diſciples. For though he be ready to reueal his father to all, yet the moſt part neglecteth to come, becauſe they are not touched with the feeling of their wants. Hypocrites care not for Chriſt, becauſe they being drunke with their own righteouſneſſe, neither hunger nor thirſt for his grace. They that are giuen to the worlde, make no account of the heauenly life: therefore Chriſte ſhoulde call thoſe two ſortes of people to him in vaine: he turneth therefore himſelfe to the miſerable and to the afflicted. Alſo he calleth them that labour and mourne vnder the burden: neither doeth he generally meane all them that are oppreſſed with ſorowe and griefes, but them whiche being confounded in their owne ſinnes, and ſtriken with the feare of Gods wrath, are ready to fal downe vnder ſo great a burden. God humbleth his elect diuers waies: but becauſe the moſt part of men oppreſſed with miſeries, doe yet remain ſtubborne and vntamed, Chriſt meaneth by men wery and loaden, them that haue their conſciences afflicted with the guiltineſſe of eternal death, and are prickt ſo inwardly with their owne miſeries that they fainte: for this feblneſſe maketh vs apt to receiue his grace. For it is as if he ſhoulde haue ſayde, that his grace is therefore contemned of the moſte parte, becauſe fewe doe feele their owne wante: yet there is no cauſe why their pride or obſtinacie, ſhould hinder afflicted conſciences which ſigh for remedy. VVherefore lette vs leaue all them which are bewitched with the ſleights of Sathan, and do either perſwade themſelues to haue righteouſneſſe without Chriſte, or elſe do imagine themſelues to be bleſſed in this world. Our miſeries driue vs to ſeeke after Chriſt. And becauſe Chriſte admitteth none to the enioying of his reſt, but them that fainte vnder the burden, let vs learn that there is not a more deadly poyſon, then that ſluggiſhneſſe whiche planteth in vs a falſe and deceitfull opinion either of an earthly felicitie, or of righteouſneſſe and vertue: therefore lette euery one of vs daily ſtirre vp our ſelues, and firſt let vs buſie our ſelues to ſhake off the delightes of the world: then let vs emptie our ſelues of all vaine truſt in our ſelues. But though this preparation to receiue the grace of Chriſte doeth diſcourage men: yet it is to be noted that it is the gifte of the holy Ghoſt: becauſe it is the beginning of repentance, whereto no man can attaine of himſelfe. Neither is it the purpoſe of Chriſte to teache what man can doe of himſelfe, but only how they ought to be affected which come vnto him. They whiche reſtraine this burden and this labour to the ceremonies of the lawe, doe tie the ſentence of Chriſt too ſhort. I graunt that the burden of the lawe is intollerable, and that it woulde ouerwhelme ſoules: but that muſt be remembered which I ſayd, that Chriſte reacheth out his hand to all that be afflicted, that he mighte make a difference betweene diſciples and contemners of the Goſpell. But that general ſpeache of Chriſte is to be noted: for Chriſte doeth therefore without exception comprehende all that labour, and are laden, leaſt any man through faithleſſe doubting, ſhould ſhut vp the way againſt himſelfe. And yet all they are but fewe in number: becauſe that of that innumerable companie of them that are about to periſh, few feele themſelues going to deſtruction.

The refreſſing which Chriſt promiſeth, conſiſteth in the fre forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, which only eaſeth vs.

29. Take my yoake on you. Becauſe we ſee that many doe abuſe the grace of Chriſt, while they turne it to ſerue the wantonneſſe of the fleſh: therefore after Chriſte hath promiſed ioyfull reſt to the miſerable afflicted conſciences, hee alſo warneth them that he is a deliuerer vpon this condition, that they ſhould take his yoake on them: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, that he did not therefore free them from ſinnes, that they hauing God mercifull to them, ſhuld therby take a libertie to ſinne: but that they being comforted by his grace, ſhoulde take on them a yoake, and that they being freed in conſcience, they night keepe in bondage the wantonneſſe of the fleſh. And heereof is gathered a definition of that reſt whereof he ſpake: that is: it freeth not the diſciples of Chriſt from the warfare of the croſſe, that they ſhould liue pleaſantly, but it exerciſeth them vnder the burden of diſcipline, and containeth them vnder the yoake. Learne of me. They are, in my iudgement, deceiued, which think that Chriſt ſpake here of his meekeneſſe, leaſt his diſciples (as the comming of mighty menne is woont to be feared full) becauſe of his diuine glory, ſhoulde flie from him. For he rather frameth vs to folowe him, becauſe that by reaſon of the ſtubbornneſſe of the fleſh, we flie the yoake as a ſharpe and a hard thing. A little after he ſayeth that his yoake is ſweete: but howe can it be that any man ſhoulde ſubmitte his necke willingly and ioyfully, except he being cloathed with meekeneſſe, he becommeth like to Chriſte? Further, it appeareth that this is the meaning: Chriſt exhorting his diſciples to beare his yoake, leaſt the difficultie ſhould terrifie them, he addeth preſently after, learne ye of me, ſignifying that that yoake ſhoulde not be grieuous vnto vs, when we are by his owne example taught and framed to meekeneſſe and humilitie. That alſo pertaineth to the ſame purpoſe, that hee addeth, yee ſhall finde reſt. So long as the fleſh is at liberty wee murmur: but they whiche refuſe the yoake of Chriſt, and endeuor to pleaſe God an other way, they do weary and tire themſelues in vaine: As we ſee the Papiſts do vexe themſelues miſerably, and they beare a cruell tyrannie, vnder the which they are tormented, yet with ſilence they paſſe it ouer, leaſt they ſhould become ſubiecte to the croſſe of Chriſt.

of God, and ate the shewe breade which was not lawful for him to eate, neither for them that were with him, but only for the prieſt?
5. Or haue yee not redde in the lawe, howe that on the Sabboth dayes, the Prieſtes in the Temple breake the Sabboth, and are blameleſſe?
6. But I ſay vnto you, that here is one greater then the Temple.
7. VVherefore if ye knewe what this is, I will haue mercy and not ſacrifice, yee would not haue condemned the innocents.
8. For the Sonne of manne is Lord, euen of the Sabboth.

26. Howe hee went into the houſe of God, in the dayes of Abiathar the hie prieſte, and did eate the shewe breade, which was not lawfull to eat: but for the prieſtes, and gaue alſo to them which were with him?
27. And hee ſayde to them: the Sabboth was made for manne, and not manne for the Sabboth.
28. VVherefore the Sonne of manne is Lorde, euen of the Sabboth.

not red this, that Dauid did when he himſelfe was an hungred, & they which were with him,
4. Howe he went into the houſe of God, & toke and ate the shewe bread, and gaue alſo to them whiche were with him, which was not lawfull to eate, but for the Prieſtes onely.
5. And hee ſayde vnto them: the Sonne of man is Lorde alſo of the Sabboth day.

1. Ieſus went on a Sabboth. The purpoſe of the Euangeliſts in this hiſtory was to ſhew, partly howe malitious the Phariſies were, and partly howe ſuperſtitiouſly they were addicted to outwarde rites of ſmal importance, in ſo much that they ſet all their holineſſe in them. For they accuſe the diſciples of Chriſt, becauſe that they being an hungred in their iourney, did pul eares on the Sabboth day: as if they had ſo broken the Sabboth. The obſeruation of the Sabboth was an holy exerciſe, but not as they imagined it, that one could ſcarce moue his finger, but with a trembling conſcience. Hypocriſie made them ſo ſcrupulous in ſo light maters, whē as they beare with themſelues in groſſe ſuperſtitions: as Chriſt in an other place vpbraideth them, that they tithed Mintes and Aneſſeedes, but contemned the greater matters of the law. And this is alwayes the cuſtome of hypocrites, to take liberty to themſelues in great matters, and to be diligent in obſeruing of ceremonies. And this is the matter why they are ſo ſtraighte in loking to the obſeruing of outward rites, becauſe they thinke that god is only pleaſed with a carnall worſhip. But this reprehenſion came rather of malice and enuie, then of ſuperſtition: for they were not ſo captious againſt others. And it is meete that we ſhoulde conſider howe they were affected, leaſt it ſhould amaze any man to ſee that Chriſt had the doctors of the lawe ſo much his ennemies.

L V. 1. On the ſecond Sabboth, after the firſt. It is not to be douted but that this ſabboth belonged to ſome one of the feaſt daies, which the lawe cōmanded to be celebrated once euery yeare: therefore ſome thoughte that the feaſts continued for the ſpace of 2. daies: but becauſe that after the captiuity of Babylon, the Iewes ſo deuided their feaſts, that there was alwayes a day betweene, that opinion is confuted. They ſpeake more probably which ſay that it was the laſte daye of the ſolemnization, whiche was as much eſtemed as the firſt. Yet I like their iudgement better, which take it to be the ſecond feaſt of the yere: & the name agreeth very wel to be called the ſecond ſabboth after the firſt, becauſe that in order of time it was the ſecond of thoſe high & yerely feaſts. The firſt was the Paſſeouer, therfore it is probable that this was the feaſt of firſt fruites.

Mar. 24. VVhy do they on the ſabeth day. The Phariſies reproue not the diſciples of of Chriſte, for pulling eares of corne in an other mannes fielde, but becauſe they breake the Sabboth. As thoughe the Sabboth had bene ordained to this ende, that hungry men ſhould pearish, rather then they ſhould relieue their hunger. But this was the onely cauſe of the Sabboth, that the people ſanctifying themſelues to God, ſhoulde exerciſe themſelues in true and ſpirituall worſhip: then that they being freed from all worldly buſineſſe, might the better frequent the holy aſſemblies. VVherfore the lawfull obſeruation of it muſt be referred to this purpoſe: for the interpretation of the lawe muſt be fetched from the minde of the lawgiuer. But heereby appeareth howe malitious and obſtinate ſuperſtition is: eſpecially you may ſee how diſdainfully and cruelly hypocrites doe liſte vppe themſelues, where ambition and hatred of the perſon do meete togither: for not only the affecting of fained holineſſe, as I ſayde before, made the Phariſies ſo ſharpe and ſo cruell: But ſith that of purpoſe they deſired to carpe at all the wordes and deedes of Chriſte, it cannot be but that they ſhould drawe thoſe things into the yl parte, wherein there was no fault, as all malitious interpreaters doe. There is no contrarietie in that, that Mathew and Mark ſay, that the fault was laid vpon the Lord, and Luke, vpon the diſciples. For it is probable that the diſciples were ſo troubled, that the accuſation was broughte againſte the maiſter himſelfe. Alſo, it may be that the quarell being firſt laid againſt the diſciples, came at legth to Chriſte himſelfe, and that the Phariſies prouoked by malice, laide the fault vpon him, that he did ſuffer his diſciples to breake the Sabboth, and he yet helde his peace at it.

MAT. 3. Haue yee not red what Dauid did. Chriſt confuteth their cauill by fiue arguments. Firſt hee excuſeth his diſciples by the example of Dauid, 1. Sam. 21. 6. for Dauid flying the wrath of Saule, when he asked vitailes of Ahimelech the prieſt, who had no common breade, hee obtained this fauour, that the ſhew bread was giuen him. If neceſsitie freed Dauid from fault, the ſame reaſon may be of force for others. VVhereof it followeth that the ceremonies of the lawe are not defiled, ſo that godlineſſe be not hurt. Chriſt taketh it as graunted, that Dauid was without fault: becauſe the prieſt which gaue him leaue to take that ſhew bread, is commended by the holy Ghoſt. VVhen he ſayeth that it was not lawfull but for the prieſts only, Exod. 29. 32. to eate that bread: the meaning is by the common law: for if Dauid hadde in this attempted any thing vnlawfull, Chriſt had brought foorth his example in vaine, but neceſsity made that lawfull, which was forbidden for a certaine ende.

5. Howe the prieſtes on the Sabboth daies. The ſeconde argument whereby Chriſte prooueth that the breache of the Sabboth whereof the Phariſies complained, is voide of offence, is this: becauſe it is lawfull on the Sabboth dayes to kill ſacrifices, to circumciſe infants, and to doe all other thinges that pertaine to the worſhip of god. VVherof it foloweth that the works of godlineſſe cannot be contrary one to the other: for if the temple doeth ſanctifie the handye labours emploide about the ſacrifices and the other outward worſhippings: the holineſſe of the true and ſpirituall Temple is greater, to purge their worſhippers from all fault, while they applye the workes of godlineſſe. Alſo the diſciples applied themſelues to offer vppe their ſoules conſecrated to God by the Goſpell. Mathewe onely toucheth this argument. Nowe that he ſayeth that the Sabboth was broken by the prieſtes,is an vnproper maner of ſpeach which Chriſt vſeth,that he may frame himſelfe to the hearers.For when the lawe commaundeth men to abſtaine from their werkes, it doth not forbid men from religious exerciſes:for Chriſt graunteth that to be true,whiche mighte but ſeeme to be ſo to the common people,hauing enoughe that the workes of the temple offend not God.

7. If yee knewe what this is. Mathew onely maketh mention of the third argument. Chriſt reproueth the Phariſies, becauſe they conſidered not for what purpoſe the ceremonies were commaunded, nor to what ende they belong. And truely this hath bene a common fault almoſt in all ages: and therefore the Prophet Oſeah.6.7. reproueth the menne of his age,for that they beinge addicte to ceremonies,made no accounte of the woorkes of charitie,but God telleth them otherwiſe,that hee accounteth more of mercy then of ſacrifices : By the worde Mercie, are noted by a figure all the workes of charitie,euen as vnder ſacrifices is al the outward worſhip of the law comprehended. Chriſt applieth the ſame ſentence to his time,and accuſeth the Phariſies, for that they did wickedly wreſt the law of God into a contrary ſence,in that they neglecting the ſecond table,did apply themſelues wholely to ceremonies. Yet here ariſeth a queſtion,why God ſayeth that he regardeth not ſacrifices, ſith he commaunded in the law that they ſhould be ſtraightly obſerued.This may be readily anſweared: outward rites in reſpecte of themſelues are not eſteemed nor required of God, but in reſpecte of the ende whereto they are directed. Againe, God doeth not ſimplie refuſe them, but comparinge them with the woorkes of charitie,he ſheweth that hee doeth leſſe eſteeme of them then of the other. Yet notwithſtandinge this, in the perfection of righteouſneſſe,the worſhip of God hath the chiefeſt place: then ſecondly come thoſe dueties which belong to men.For though godlineſſe of right is ſo much more accounted,of then charity,as God excelleth and is aboue men:yet becauſe the faithfull by maintaining mutuall charitie amongeſt themſelues,doe geue teſtimonie that they worſhip God effectually: God doeth not without cauſe call the hypocrites to this,for they faine a godlineſſe in outward ſignes, and they doe wonderfully peruert the ſame by reſting only in a carnall and outward worſhip. Furthermore, Chriſt gathereth effectually by the teſtimonie of the Prophet, that his diſciples are guiltleſſe:for god exerciſing his people in the rudiments of the law,minded nothing leſſe then to kil men by famine.

8. For the Sonne of man is Lorde. Some ioyne this ſentence with the former,there was one greater then the Temple: but I thinke them to be diuers.For Chriſt firſt alluding to the temple,affirmed that to be no breach of the law,that was annexed to the holy ſeruice of the ſame. But he ſayeth heere,that he hath power giuen him,to ſet his diſciples free from the neceſsitie of obſeruing the Sabboth.The Sonne of man(ſayeth he)can of his owne power moderate the obſeruing of the Sabboth, as he doeth the other ceremonies of the law. And certainly,without Chriſt the bondage of the lawe is miſerable,from the which he onely freeth them whome he enricheth with the free ſpirite of adoption.

MAR. 27. The Sabboth was made for man. This fift argument is reported by Marke onely. And this is the ſumme,that they doe wickedly whiche conuert the Sabboth to mans deſtruction, whiche God inſtituted for his

ſake. The Phariſies ſawe the diſciples of Chriſt occupied in holy worke, they ſaw them weary with the labour of the iourney, and alſo oppreſſed with hunger: yet they grudge that the hungry men ſhoulde comfort their wearied body with a fewe cornes of wheate. Is not the purpoſe of God wickedly peruerted in this maner, if the obſeruation of the Sabboth be required with the loſſe of men, for whoſe commoditie the Lord inſtituted it? But in my iudgement they are deceiued whiche doe thinke that the Sabboth is altogether taken away: for Chriſte doeth only teach the right vſe of the ſame. For though he ſayd a little before, that he was Lorde alſo of the Sabboth: yet the full time of abrogating the ſame was not come, becauſe the vaile of the temple was not yet rent.

Math. 12.	Marke 3.	Luke 6.
9. And he departed thẽce, and went into their ſinagogue.	1. And hee entred againe into the Synagogue, & there was a man whiche had a withered hande.	6. It came to paſſe alſo on an other ſabboth, that he entred into the Synagogue and taught, and there was a man whoſe right hãd was dried vp.
10. And behold, there was a manne which had his hande dried vppe. And they asked him, ſayinge: Is it lawfull to heale vpon a ſabboth day, that they might accuſe him.	2. And they watched him whether he woulde heale him on the ſabboth day, that they might accuſe him.	7. And the Scribes & Phariſies watched him, whether he would heale on the Sabbothday, that they might find an accuſation againſt him.
11. And he ſayd vnto them: what manne ſhall there be amonge you, that ſhall haue a sheepe, and if it fal on a Sabboth day into a pitte, will not he take it and lyft it out?	3. Then he ſayde vnto the man which had the withered hand: ariſe, ſtande foorth in the middes.	8. But he knew their thoughts and ſayd to the manne which had the withered hand: ariſe and ſtande vp in the middes, and he aroſe and ſtoode vp.
12. Howe muche more then is a man better then a shepe? Therefore it is lawfull to doe well on a Sabboth day.	4. And he ſayd to them: Is it lawful to do a good dede on the Sabboth day, or to doe euill? to ſaue the life, or to kill? but they held their peace	9. Then ſaid Ieſus vnto thẽ, I wil aske you a queſtion, whether is it lawfull on the ſabboth daies to do good, or to do euil? to ſaue life or to deſtroy it?
13. Then ſayde hee to the manne: Stretche foorth thine hande. And hee ſtretched it foorth, and it was made whole as the other.	5. Then he loked round about on them angerly, mourninge alſo for the hardnes of their hearts, & ſayde to the man: ſtretch forth thine hand, and hee ſtretched it out, and hys hand was reſtored as hole as the other.	10. And he beheld them al in compaſſe, and ſayd vnto the man: Stretch forth thine hande, and hee did ſo, and his hand was reſtored againe.

5. And he departed thence. This hyſtorie and the former, tende both to one end: which is, that the Scribes were maliciouſly bent to carpe and caſull at euery thing that Chriſte did, and therefore it is no maruell, if they whoſe mindes were ſo poyſoned with frowardneſſe, continued obſtinate enemies againſt him. Yet we ſee that this is a common matter with hypocrites, onely to folow a ſhadowe of the righteouſneſſe of the lawe: and as they ſay commonly, rather to be in ſhew then in ſubſtance. Firſt therfore lette vs learne to bringe with vs, when wee are to giue iudgement of any thing, pure minds free from al malitious affection. For if hatred or pride, or any ſuch like thing raigne in vs, we ſhal not only be iniurious to men, but with contempt of God himſelfe, we will turne light into darkeneſſe.

No

No man voide of malice woulde haue denied this to haue bene a godly worke,which theſe good doctours dout not to condemne.From whence cõmeth this madneſſe,but that all their ſenſes were fraught with vile hatred of Chriſt,ſo that they would not ſee in the bright ſun ſhine? VVe are alſo warned to take heede, leaſt by giuing to Ceremonies more then is meete,we omit thoſe thinges which are of greater account before God, and which Chriſt Matth.23.23.calleth the weightier matters of the law. For we are ſo bent to outward Ceremonies, that wee can neuer keepe a meane in that behalfe,except we remember that whatſoeuer is commanded of the worſhip of God ought firſt to be ſpiritual,then,to be meaſured and guided by that rule which is here preſcribed by Chriſt.

10. They asked him, saying. Marke & Luke do only ſay that they watched what the Lord wold do:but Mat.ſetteth it down more plainly,that they tẽpted him alſo in words. And it is likely that he had healed ſome others on the Sabboths before: hauing therefore taken occaſion of that,they demand of him whether he think it lawful for him to do again,that he had done before.But they ſhuld haue conſidered with them ſelues whether it had ben the worke of God or of mã,to heale a dried hand, only by touching it,or with a word.For God who inſtituted the Sabboth,laid not a law vpon him ſelfe,neither did he bring himſelfe into any bondage,but that he might labour on the Sabboths, as he ſhoulde thinke meete as vpon other dayes.Therfore it was a poynt of too great madneſſe,by mouing this queſtion to driue God himſelfe into order, and to abridge him of his free courſe in his workes.

11. VVhat man shall there be among you,that shal haue a shepe. Chriſt ſheweth again,which is the true and right obſeruation of the ſabboth,& alſo he reproueth them for their malitious dealing, becauſe they cauild at him,for that which was an vſual maner amõgſt them all.For if any mans ſhepe fel into a pit,no man did forbid the pulling of it out:and how much more a man is worth then a beaſt,ſo much more lawful is it to help him.Therefore it appeareth that if any do help the neceſsity of the brethren,that he breaketh not the reſt commanded by the Lord.Marke & Luke haue not this ſimilitude:they only ſay that Chriſt demanded whether it was lawful to do a good dede on the ſabboth day,or to do euil?for he that loſeth the life of a man,is guilty of an offence: yea he litle differeth from a mãſlaier which hath no regard to help him that hath nede.Therfore Chriſt reproueth them,that vnder the pretence of a holy reſt,they wold enforce them to doe euill:for not only he doth ſin,as it is ſaid,that doth any thing againſt the lawe,but he alſo which neglecteth his duety.Heereby we alſo perceiue that chriſt did not alwaies vſe the ſame reaſõs,to ouerthrow this cauil with:for he diſputeth not here of his Godhead as he doeth in Iohn, neither was it nedeful, for this one defence was ſufficient to cõuince the Phariſies, for theſe two cannot agree that he ſhould be accounted a breaker of the Sabboth,who ſhould follow God.

LVKE.8. But he knew their thoughts. If Mathew ſay true,they did openly bewray with their ſpeache, what they had in their minde. Therefore Chriſt anſweareth not to their ſecrete thoughts but to their opẽ wordes. But both may ſtande, that they ſpake openly, and that Chriſte iudged of their ſecrete thoughtes. Neither did they vtter what they meant,as Mathewe declareth,that their demaunde was captious; therefore Luke meaneth meaneth nothing elſe, but that Chriſt knewe their deceites, thoughe they pretended an other matter in wordes. Marke addeth that Chriſt looked vppon them angerly: for he mighte well be angry at their wicked obſtinacie. And that we might know that his anger was iuſt and holy, he ſayeth that it ſprang of this, that he mourned for the hardnes of their harts. Firſt therefore Chriſte is ſorowfull that menne exerciſed in the lawe of God, ſhould be in ſuche groſſe ignorance. But becauſe that malice blinded them, he alſo conceiueth anger with his ſorowe. This is a right moderation of zeale, when we mourne for the deſtruction of wicked men, and are angry at their vngodlineſſe. And as this place declareth that Chriſte was not free from humane affections: ſo we doe heereof gather that the paſſions themſelues are not ſinfull, ſo that a temperate meane be kepte. VVe cannot holde the meane by reaſon of our corrupt nature, we are neuer angry, no not for iuſt cauſes without ſinne: theſe thinges were not to be founde in Chriſte, for not onely integritie of nature did beare rule in him, but in him there alſo ſhoane a perfecte example of righteouſneſſe. Therefore wee muſte pray that the ſpirite of God may be giuen vs from heauen to correct and bridle our imperfections.

Math. 12.	Marke 3.	Luke 6.
14. Then the Phariſies went oute, and conſulted againſt him, how they might deſtroy him. 15. But when Ieſus knew it, he departed thence, and great multitudes folowed him, & he healed them al, 16. And charged them that they ſhould not make him knowen. 17. That it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by Eſaias the Prophet, ſaying: 18. Beholde my ſeruaunt whome I haue choſen, my beloued in whome my ſoule delighteth: I will putte my ſpirite on him, and heee ſhall shewe iudgement to the Gentiles. 19. He ſhal not ſtriue nor crie, neither ſhall any man heare his voyce in the ſtretes. 20. A bruſed reede ſhall hee not breake, and ſmoking flaxe ſhall hee not quenche, till hee bringe forth the iudgement into victorie. 21. And in his name ſhal the Gẽtiles truſt.	6. And the Phariſies departed, & ſtraight way gathered acouncel with the Herodians againſt him, that they might deſtroy him. 7. But Ieſus auoided with his diſciples to the ſea: and a great multitude folowed him from Galile, and from Iudea, 8. And from Ieruſalem, and from Idumea, and beyond Iordan, & they that dwelt about Tyrus and Sydon, when they had hearde what greate thinges hee did, came vnto him in great number. 9. And he commaunded his diſciples, that a ſhip ſhuld wait for him, becauſe of the multitude, leaſt they ſhould throng him. 10. And when the vncleane ſpirits ſaw him, they fel downe before him, and cried, ſaying: Thou art the ſonne of God. 12. And he ſharpely charged them, to the ende they ſhuld not vtter him.	11. Then they were filled full of madneſſe, and communed one with another, what they might doe to Ieſus.

14. Then

14. Then the Phariſtes. See whether obſtinate fury carieth the reprobate, in reſiſting and ſtriuing againſt God: for they being vanquiſhed with his answeres, do yet powre out their poyſon more and more. This certainly is a deteſtable monſter, that the chiefe doctors of the lawe, which had the gouernment of the Church, ſhould as theues ſeeke after murthers. But it is neceſſary it ſhoulde ſo come to paſſe, ſo oft as they deſire to haue ouerthrowne what ſoeuer is againſt their pleaſure, though it be from GOD himſelfe. It is not to be imputed to feare, that Chriſte eſcapeth away by flight, for he was not any thing more couragious after, then nowe: but he was ledde by the ſtrength of the ſame ſpirite when he fledde, wherewith he was endued after, when hee willingly offered himſelfe to death. And this was a portion of his humbling which Paule commendeth, Phil. 2. 7. that when he could by a myracle haue readily defended his life, he hadde rather by flying take vppon him our infirmity. Alſo he did not deferre to die for any other cauſe, then becauſe that a time conuenient, appoynted by the father was not yet come. Yet it is euident that he was preſerued rather by a heauenly power then by flight: for it had bene no hard matter for his enemies to haue broken into that place whether he went: for he drawing ſuch company after him, and making that place famous by his myracles, hid not himſelfe in the darke, but onely he withdrew himſelfe out of their ſight, leaſt he ſhoulde make them more madde. Marke addeth that they tooke counſell with the Herodians, whom they yet hated moſt deadly. For when they would ſeme to be kepers and defenders of the publike liberty, it was neceſſary that they ſhould profeſſe theſelues to haue a deadly hatred againſt the tyrantes officers: yet their madde hatred againſt Chriſt ſo farre preuailed, that they not onely conſpired with ſtraungers, but familiarly they inſinuated themſelues into their fauour, whoſe company they otherwiſe abhord? For when vngodlineſſe by carying men hether and thether, driueth them into diuers debates and controuerſies, yet it knitteth them togither with one conſent to ſtriue againſt the Lord. So no hatreds nor enemities doe let, but that the extremeſt enemies doe ioyne hands togither to ouerthrow the truth of God.

16. And he charged them. Marke ſetteth downe an other more ſpeciall matter, that he put the vncleane ſpirites to ſilence, which cried out that he was the ſonne of God. VVee haue in an other place ſhewed the cauſe why he woulde not admitte any ſuche witneſſes. Neither is it to be doubted but that this confeſſion was wreſted out of the deuilles by the power of God, but after that Chriſte had ſhewed that they were ſubiecte to his power, he alſo not without cauſe refuſed their teſtimony. But that extendeth farther which Mathewe ſayeth: that is, that Chriſte commaunded that the fame of the myracles which he wrought, ſhould not be ſpred abroade: not that he would haue it vtterly ſuppreſſed: but that the roote being ſetled, it might bring foorth fruite aboundantly in due ſeaſon. For we knowe that Chriſte plaied not with his myracles, but had prouided this ende, that he might proue himſelfe to be the ſonne of God, and a Redeemer giuen vnto the world. But he ſhewed himſelfe by a litle & a litle, euen by certaine degrees: neither was he otherwaies reuealed what he was, then the time ordained by the father, allowed. Yet it is a matter worthy to be noted, while the wicked doe moſt endeuour to ouerwhelm the glory of God, they are ſo farre from obtaining that which they hope for, that God applieth all their wicked endeuours rather to the contrary: for though Chriſte was gone out of that famous place, yet his glory ceaſeth not to ſhine euen in ſecrete corners, yea, and breaketh out notably into his excellent brightneſſe.

17. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken. Mathew meaneth not that the propheſie was altogither fulfilled in this, that chriſt charged that rumors of his power ſhould not be much vttered: but herein is alſo ſhewed a token of his humilitie, which Iſaias deſcribeth in the perſon of the Meſsiah. The myracles which Chriſt wrought amongſt a few, & which he would not ſhoulde be muche boaſted off, were able to ſhake the heauen and the earth. Therfore he doeth plainly ſhew howe farre he was from the vaine glory and pompe of the world. Yet it is conuenient to ſift the purpoſe of Mathew more narrowly: for he would declare by this circumſtance, that the glory of the Godhead of Chriſt ought not to be the leſſe eſtemed, becauſe it appeared not in a glorious ſhewe. And certainly the holy Ghoſt directed the eyes of the Prophet to this purpoſe. For as fleſh doth alwaies deſire an outward glorious ſhew, leaſt the faithful ſhoulde ſeeke for it in the Meſsiah, the ſpirite of God doeth declare, that he ſhall be farre vnlike to earthly kinges, which make great ſtirres and noyſes, and fill the cities and townes with tumult, that they may be had in admiration where ſoeuer they come. Now we ſee howe aptly Mathew applieth the ſaying of the Prophet to the preſent cauſe: for becauſe god hath laid ſo humble and ſo abiecte a perſon vpon his ſonne, leaſt the ſimple ſhould take offence at his ſo contemptible and obſcure eſtate, as wel the Prophet as Mathew do meete in one, & they ſay that it was not don without cõſideratiõ, but by a celeſtiall decree, that he ſhould come in that eſtate. VVhereof it followeth that all they doe wickedly which deſpiſe Chriſt, becauſe his outward condition aunſweareth not their fleſhly affections. Neither is it lawfull for vs to deuiſe a Chriſt, which ſhall be like to our imagination: but it is ſimply neceſſary for vs to embrace him as he is offered vnto vs by the father. Therefore he is vnworthy of ſaluation, in whoſe eyes the humilitie of Chriſt ſeemeth vile, in the which the Lord declareth that he is delited. Now I wil enter into the wordes of the prophet Iſaiah, 42. 1.

18. Behold my ſeruaunt whome I haue choſen. That God may tie vs to waite vpon his wil, he ſheweth as it wer with a finger, him whõ he would ſend, and for this cauſe is this note of demonſtration (Behold) vſed. There is the like reaſon alſo in the Epithites which folow, that he nameth him his ſeruant, and his choſen wherein his minde deliteth. For how ſhould it come to paſſe that men ſhould be ſo bolde as to meaſure Chriſt by their owne imagination, except it be becauſe they weigh not that their ſaluatiõ doth depend vpõ the mere fauor of God? And this is too wicked a liberty, whẽ God offereth vs an incomparable treaſure, that men ſhoulde eſteeme of it according to our fleſhly deſires. And he is called ſeruant, not as one of the common people, but in reſpecte of dignitie, for that God hath laide vpon him the office of the redemption of his church. And becauſe that no man taketh honour to himſelfe, but he which is called, is ſo worthely to be eſtemed: God ſayeth that he choſe in his owne counſell, that he ſhoulde come in this order: whereof it followeth, that it is not lawfull for men to refuſe him, becauſe that ſo they ſhould be cõtumelious againſt God. And certainly it is too abſurde, that the holy and inuiolcable calling of God

ſhould be made of none effecte, through our pleaſure or pride. Yet that whiche God addeth by the Prophet, that his ſoule deliteth in Chriſt, hath a further meaning. For though the calling of euery one of vs commeth from the free grace of God, as from the only fountaine: yet this is an eſpeciall delite in Chriſt, for that in his perſon God the father comprehendeth and embraceth the whole Church in his loue. For when we were all by nature the enemies of God, his loue coulde neuer haue come to vs, except he had firſt begon at the head, as it is ſayd before, and ſhalbe ſeene againe in the 17. chapter.

He ſhall ſhewe iudgement to the Gentiles. The Prophet doeth heere deſcribe briefly the office of Chriſt, when he foretelleth, that it ſhal come to paſſe, that he ſhal ſhew iudgement to the Gentiles. The Iewes do comprehend vnder this word iudgement, a ſtate rightly and orderly eſtabliſhed, wherin equitie and vpright dealing flouriſheth. Therfore it is as much as if the Prophet ſhoulde haue ſayd, that one ſhoulde come, which ſhoulde reſtore righteouſneſſe decaied: and that he ſhould be the gouernour not onely of people, but that he ſhould bring the Gentiles alſo vnder the gouernment of God, amongſt whom there had raigned heretofore nothing but confuſion. And this is the ſignification of this word ſhew, or to bring forth, which the Prophet vſeth: for it was the office of Chriſt to ſpread the kingdome of God through all the world, which was then ſhut vp in a corner of Iudea, as it is ſaid in the Pſalme, 120. 2. the Lorde ſhall ſende the Scepter of thy power out of Sion. There is alſo expreſſed the maner of bringing forth of this iudgement: namely, that God will powre his ſpirite vppon Chriſt. It is true that ther was neuer any thing done rightly in the world, which proceeded not frō the ſpirit of god, & was ſet forward by the heauenly power of the ſame: as alſo there was neuer any of the kings, which could erecte or defend any lawfull order, but as he was inſtructed by the ſame ſpirit: But Chriſt in bringing forth iudgement, doth far excell all others, for he receiued the ſpirit from the father, which he imparteth to all his diſciples: and he doeth not only declare by word or by wryting what is right, but by the power of his ſpirite he doth inwardly frame the hearts of men to the obſeruing of the rule of righteouſneſſe.

19. He ſhal not ſtriue nor crie. The ſumme is, as I ſaid euen now, that the cōming of Chriſt ſhuld not be troubleſom, becauſe he ſhall want that kingly furniture & pompe: yet preſently it is ſaid, that it is ſo, for mans ſaluation, that this humility may be brought into fauour, which is euery where deſpiſed in the world. And certainly the foliſhnes of mē is wōderful, that they ſhould eſteme of Chriſt the worſe, becauſe he doth louingly & hūbly ſubmit himſelf to their capacity. If Chriſt ſhuld appear in his glory, what thing ſhould come to paſſe, but that we all ſhoulde be ouerwhelmed with the ſame? VVhat froward wickednes then is this, that is vnwilling to receiue him, who for our cauſe deſcended from the height of his glory? Therfore, that the gentleneſſe of Chriſt might get him reuerence amōgſt the faithfull, the Prophet Iſaiah doeth admoniſh vs howe profitable and neceſſary it was. Euery one of vs knoweth his owne frailty, and thereby it behoueth vs to conſider, how conuenient it is for all menne to be louingly and gentlely receiued and chearifhed by Chriſt?

I ſpeake not of the vnbeleuers, which are as yet without any ſparke of Gods grace: but they which are now called of the Lord, vntil the light be more fully kindled in them, & that their ſtrength become more perfect. Are they not all like to a Reede halfe broken, and to a ſmoking matche? Therfore lette vs learne to embrace this great goodneſſe of Chriſt, who frameth himſelf ſo to our infirmity. Yet in the meane while lette no man flatter himſelfe in his ſinnes: but let euery man endeuour to profit better in our ſelues, leaſt we wander all our life long, or bend & turne at euery blaſt, like vnto Reedes: but lette vs growe on to be perfect men, that we may ſtand faſt againſt the ſundry aſſaults of ſathan. Let not our faith be like a few ſmal ſparkes hidden in a darke ſmoke: but let it ſhewe foorth bright ſhining beames. Nowe by the example of Chriſt, all his miniſters haue preſcribed vnto them, how they ought to behaue themſelues. But becauſe that vnder pretence of this place, ſome do falſly & foliſhly pretend, that mildneſſe is generally to be vſed towards all men: that difference is to be noted, which the Prophet expreſly maketh betwene the weake and the obſtinate. For there are ſome that are too ſtrong, whoſe hardneſſe it were meete ſhould be broken with the violence of a beetle: which either endeuour to bring darkneſſe ouer al places, or elſe are firebrands to kindle conſuming fires euery where, & it is neceſſary that their ſmoke ſhuld be ſcattered, and that their heat ſhoulde be quenched. Therefore as the faithfull miniſters of the word, muſt diligently apply themſelues, that by ſparing the weake, they may encreaſe & nouriſh the grace of God, which as yet is but ſmall in them: ſo they muſt in wiſedom take good hede that they nouriſh not the malitious obſtinate, whiche are nothing like to the ſmoking flaxe or to the bruſed Reede.

20. Til he bring forth iudgement into victory. The wordes of the Prophet are ſomwhat otherwiſe: namely, that he ſtal bring forth or lead forth iudgement in truth. Yet the ſpeach which Mat. vſeth, is full of great importãce: that we may knowe that righteouſneſſe cannot be placed in the worlde without great ſtrife and labour. For the deuill caſteth in what lettes and hinderances he may, that righteouſneſſe ſhoulde not ſhewe foorth but by great wreſtling: and that is confirmed by that woorde victory, which is not obtained but by fighting. For that which preſently foloweth, the Prophet hath, the yles ſhall waite for his lawe. And thoughe Mathewe hath changed the wordes, yet he agreeth in ſenſe, that the grace of Chriſt ſhall be common to the Gentiles.

Math. 12.	Marke 3.	Luke 11.
22. Then was brought to hym one, poſſeſſed with a deuill, both blinde and dãmme, and he healed him, ſo that hee whiche was blinde and dumme, bothe ſpake and ſawe.	19. And they came home.	14. Then he caſt out a deuill which was dume and when the deuil was gone out, the dumme ſpake, and the people wondered.

24. But when the Phariſies heard it, they ſayd: this man caſteth deuilles no otherwiſe out, but through Belzebub the prince of deuils.	21. And when his kinſfolkes heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him, for they thought he had bene beſide himſelfe.	15. But ſome of them ſayde: Hee caſteth out deuils through Beelzebub, the chiefe of the deuils.
	22. And the Scribes whiche came from Ieruſalem, ſayde: He hath Beelzebub, and through the prince of deuilles he caſteth out deuils.

It

It is not to be doubted but that Marke meaneth ſome certaine ſpace of time long enough, when he deſcendeth from the myracles to that wicked conſpiracie, which Chriſtes kinſmen made amongſt themſelues, that they might binde him as a madde man. In Mathew and Luke there is expreſſe mention made of one only myracle, by the which the Phariſies tooke occaſion of quarrelling. But becauſe that they all three agree togither in this latter ſentence, therefore I thought good heere to ſet downe that whiche Marke reporteth. And it is wonder that there was ſuch frowardneſſe in Chriſtes kinſmen, which ſhoulde haue bene the chiefe helpers in furthering the kingdome of God. VVhen they ſee that he hath gotten him any name, ambition pricketh them ſo, that they deſire to become famous at Ieruſalem: for they exhorted him that he would goe vppe thither, that he might the better aduance himſelf. Now that they ſee that he is partly hated of the rulers, partly ſubiecte to many euill ſpeaches, and alſo deſpiſed of the moſt part: leaſt any daunger or enuie, or reproache ſhould come to the whole ſtocke or kinred, they deuiſe to lay handes vppon him, and to binde him at home, as a man out of his wittes: and that they were ſo perſwaded, it appeareth by the wordes of the Euangeliſt. VVhereby we doe firſt learne howe blinde mans vnderſtanding is, that iudgeth ſo peruerſly of the manifeſt glory of God. Certainly, the power of the holy Ghoſt did ſhine moſt excellently in all Chriſtes wordes & deedes, ſo that if it had bene obſcure to others, howe coulde it be hid from his kinſmen, they being ſo familiarly acquainted? But becauſe the maner of life which Chriſt ledde pleaſed not the world, and ſo gat him no fauour, but rather procured him many mens hatred, they faine him to be a madde man. Secondly, let vs learne that the light of faith commeth not of fleſh & bloud, but of heauenly grace, leaſt any mã ſhuld glory in any other birth, but in the new birth of the ſpirite, as Paul warneth vs, 2. Cor. 5. 17. If any man will be eſteemed in Chriſt, let him be a new creature.

22. Then was brought to him. Luke calleth the deuill, (by whome the man was poſſeſſed) dumme, becauſe of the effect: yet Mathew ſayeth that there was a double plague laid vpon the man. It is certain that many are blind and dumme of naturall diſeaſes: but it appeareth that this man was blind in his eyes, and depriued of his ſpeach, though ther was no want in thoſe partes pertaining to the ſight, or in the proportion of the tongue: Alſo it is no meruaile that Sathan hath ſo much libertie as to corrupt the ſenſes of the body, when as by the iuſt iudgement of God he corrupteth and peruerteth all the powers of the ſoule.

23. And all the people were amaſed. Heereby we gather that the power of God was manifeſt to be ſeene, whiche caried the common people whiche was cleare and free from all malitious affection, to haue him in admiration. For how ſhould it come to paſſe that al the people ſhould be ſo amaſed and wonder, but becauſe the matter ſo compelled them? And certainly there is none of vs which may not behold in this hyſtorie as in a glas, the wonderfull power of God: whereby it is to be gathered that the Scribes had their minds infected with diueliſh poyſon, which were not afraid to cauil at this ſo excellent a worke of God. But the frute of the myracle is to be noted: that they which ſaw it were amaſed, and enquired amõgſt themſelues, whether Ieſus were the Chriſt. For the power of God being knowen, they are led as by the hand, to faith, not that they profite at the firſt, ſo much as they ſhuld (for they ſpeake doutfully) but this is no ſmall frute, that they ſtirre vp themſelues more diligently to conſider the glory of Chriſt. Some take it to be a ful affirmation; but the woordes ſound no ſuche thinge, and the matter it ſelfe ſheweth, that they being amaſed at a thing vnloked for, coulde not giue a perfect iudgement, but onely that it came into their mindes, that it might be that he ſhould be the Chriſt.

24. But the Phariſies ſayd. Becauſe they cannot deny a matter ſo euident and ſo plaine, yet they doe malitiouſly ſlaunder that which Chriſt did by the power of God, neither doe they onely obſcure the praiſe of the myracle, but they endeuour to bring it into ſlaunder, as thoughe it had beene wrought by ſome magicall Exorciſme: and that worke which could not be attributed to man, they attribute to the deuill, as to the author therof. Of the woord Beelzebub, I haue ſpoken in the 10. chapter. And we haue ſpoken in the 9. chapter of the gouernment amongſt deuils. For it is not an opinion gathered of the errour or ſuperſtition of the common people, that the Scribes held that there was one that was princely ruler amongſt the wicked ſpirites, but of a receiued opinion amongeſt the godly, that as Chriſt is the head of the church, ſo the reprobate ſhould haue their head.

25. But Ieſus knew their thoghts. Though Chriſt knew wel enogh, & had oft tried that the Scribes vſed of malice to wreſt whatſoeuer he did, to the worſt part: yet it is euident that Math. and Luke doe meane that Chriſte knew their harts. And it ſemeth that they ſpake openly to Chriſt, that he might heare their cauils: but Chriſt by his diuine ſpirit knew of what mind they cauild. For it commeth oft to paſſe, that men iudge prepoſterouſly which fal through ignorance, & do not impugne the truth of purpoſe, nor nouriſh any ſecret or hidden poyſon in the, but are only caried hedlong with raſhneſſe. Therefore the meaning of this text is, that Chriſte did ſo much the more vehemently enuey againſt them, becauſe he was witnes & iudge of the malice which they had conceiued inwardly. Euery kingdom. He firſt confuteth the cauil obiected againſt him by a common prouerb. Yet that confutation ſeemeth not to be ſo ful: for we know with what ſleights ſathan ſometimes deludeth men, making a ſhewe of variance, that he may therby ſnare the minds of men in ſuperſtitions. For the Exorciſmes in poperie, are nothing elſe but deuiſed and fained conflictes of ſathan againſt himſelf. But there can be no ſuch ſuſpition in Chriſt: for he ſo caſteth out deuils, that he maketh them hole and ſound to God. As oft as the deuill hath this conflict with himſelfe, he ſo ſuffreth himſelf to be bound in ieſt, that he himſelfe yet hath the victorie and triumpheth. But Chriſt aſſaulteth the deuill with open defiance, ſo that he caſteth him cleane out, and leaueth him not any place to reſt in. Hee ouerthroweth him not on the one ſide, that he may be ſtrõger on the other: but he vtterly ouerthroweth all his deuices. Therefore Chriſt reaſoneth aptly, that he hath no felowſhip with him: for this father of deceit hath no other purpoſe but to vpholde and maintaine his kingdom. If any Obiecte that the deuils are oft caried with a wilde giddineſſe and a blind madneſſe, to ouerthrow themſelues: the anſwer is ready. The meaning of Chriſtes words is, that there is nothing more abſurd, then that the deuil ſhould willingly ouerthrowe that power that he hath ouer men, who endeuoreth and applieth all the meanes he can to haue them in his bondage. Furthermore Chriſt ſo vſeth the cõmon prouerbs, as probable coniectures, and not as ſound & perfect proofs. Laſtly, he ſpeaking of a matter knowen & wel proued, he vrgeth it the les againſt his enemies cõſciences. No mã was ignorãt but that chriſt came to thruſt ſathan out of his poſſeſſion, and there was nothing more manifeſt then that all his myracles tẽded to this end. VVherby it was eaſie to iudge that his power which was ſo contrary to ſathan, was of God.

27. By whõ do your children caſt thẽ out? He accuſeth thẽ of wicked & malicious iudgmẽt, that they iudged not a like of one & the ſame matter, but as they wer affected towards the perſõs. But this inequality ſhewed that equity & right preuailed not, but that they wer ouer ruled either with blind loue or hatred. And this was a ſigne of wicked ſelfeloue & of enuy, to condemne that in Chriſt, which they accoũted praiſe worthy in their owne children. Some take their children for the children of all the nation. Some thinke that the apoſtles were ſo called, becauſe they were accoũted as children, where they accoũted Chriſt as a ſtrãger. Others refer it to the old prophets. But I am perſwaded that he meaneth the Exorciſts, of which ſort there were manye then amongeſt the Iewes, as it appeareth in the Actes, 19. 13, for it is likely that they thought no better of the diſciples of Chriſt, then they did of the maiſter. And it is too muche wreaſted to drawe it to the dead Prophets, when as the wordes doe plainly ſet downe a compariſon of the ſame time. The Iewes had no Exorciſtes by the preſcript order of the law: but we know that God, that he might kepe them in faith and in ſyncere worſhip of him, teſtified his preſence amõgſt them by many myracles. And ſo it might be, that by calling on the name of God the diuels fled. And the people hauing experiẽce of that great power of God, therof raſhly made themſelues an ordinarie office. The Papiſtes alſo afterward, leaſt their eſtate ſhould be any thing inferiour to them, counterfaited thẽ in creating Exorciſtes, and ſo were Apes of Apes. Furthermore, it was not needefull that Chriſte ſhoulde in condemning their malice, approue thoſe Exorciſmes which they held as holy adorned with the name of God, and yet they made Chriſt a ſeruãt of Beelzebub: for the obiection is directed (according to the common phraſe) to the perſon. That which foloweth preſently after, that their children ſhoulde be their iudges: this is vnproperly ſpoken, you neede not to ſeeke farre for your condemnation: the myracles whiche I worke, you apply to Beelzebub, & you praiſe the ſame in your children. Therfore you haue inough at home to condemne your ſelues. If that any had rather take it otherwiſe, to wit, that hee vpbraideth them of the grace of God, which was ſomtime ſhewed amongſt them by the Exorciſtes, I do not greatly gainſtand it. For though they were degenerate, yet the Lorde woulde not altogether depriue them of his power, but that he would adorne the prieſthode, and the ſeruice of the Temple, with ſome generall teſtimonie. For it was very neceſſary that they ſhould be diſtinguiſhed by ſome euident notes from the ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles. But the firſt interpretation ſeemeth in my iudgement to be moſte naturall.

28. But if I caſt out deuils by the ſpirite of God. Luke Metaphorically calleth it the Finger, for the ſpirite. For becauſe that God woorketh and ſheweth his power by his ſpirite, the name of a finger is aptly giuen it. And this ſpeach was cõmon amongſt the Iewes, as Moſes reporteth, that Pharaohs enchãters ſayd, Ex. 8. 19. This is the finger of God. But Chriſt gathereth of thoſe former wordes, that the Scribes were vnthankfull to God, which would not that he ſhoulde raigne ouer them. Hetherto he hath anſweared their friuolous Obiection: now he giueth charge as vnto menne conuicte, that they ſhould not oppoſe themſelues wickedly againſt the kingdome of God. And he holdeth not himſelfe within the compaſſe of this one myracle: but by occaſion thereof he ſpeaketh of the cauſe of his comming, declaring to them that they ſhould not onely conſider this one peculiare facte of his, but ſome thing farre more excellent then this: namely, that God by reuealinge the Meſsias, woulde repaire their decayed eſtate, and reſtore his kingdome amongeſt them. Therefore we ſee Chriſt complaineth of their vnthankefulneſſe: becauſe that they furiouſly reiected and caſt from amongeſt them the incomparable grace of God. For this woorde Come is very forcible: to witte, that God appeared willingly to them as a redeemer: but they as much as they coulde, driue him from amongeſt them, and would giue no place to him that was come, ready and prepared for their ſaluation.

29. Hee

29. How can a man enter into a ſtrong mans houſe? Though the Euangeliſts do differ ſomwhat in wordes, yet they agree notably for the ſumme of the matter: for Chriſt proſecuteth that, which he touched a litle before of the kingdome of God: and he ſaieth, that it is neceſſary that Sathan ſhuld be thrown forth by violence, that God may haue his kingdom amongſt men: ſo that this ſentence is but a confirmation of that, which wente before. But that we may more certeinly vnderſtād the meaning of Chriſt, it behoueth vs to remember that Analogy, which Matthew reheaſed before betweene the viſible and ſpirituall graces of Chriſt. For whatſoeuer he did to our bodies, his will was it ſhoulde be applyed to the ſoules; ſo that when he deliuered the corporall ſenſes of men from the tyranny of the deuill, he declared that he was ſent from God, a champion that ſhuld ouerthrow his ſpirituall tyrannie ouer ſoules. Nowe I returne to his wordes: he affirmeth that a ſtrong and mighty tyrant cannot be dryuen out of his kingdom, vntill he be ſpoyled of his weapons: becauſe that except an other mightier power be ſet againſt him, he will neuer willingly giue place. To what purpoſe is this ſpoken? Firſt, wee know that the deuill is called in diuerſe places, the prince of the world. And the tyrannous gouernment, which he holdeth is fortified on euery ſide with ſtrōg defences. For there are many ſnares to entrappe men with, and hee holdeth them that are now ſubiect vnto him in ſuch bandes, ſo that they rather nouriſh that ſeruitude, wherein they are bound, rather then by anye meanes aſpyre to lybertie. Alſo there are innumerable ſortes of daungers, by the which he holdeth them miſerably ouerwhelmed vnder his feete. To be ſhort, there is nothing to the contrary, but that he may without reſiſtaunce rule as a tyrant in the world, not that he canne doe anye thing without the will of the maker: but becauſe that Adam by eſtranging himſelfe from the power of God, brought himſelfe and his poſteritie vnder this ſtraunge and miſerable ſeruitude. But though the deuill reigneth againſte nature, and that by the iuſt iudgement of God, menne are ſubiect to his tyranny for their ſinne: yet he holdeth that kingdome in quiet poſſeſsion; ſo that hee triumpheth ouer vs without reſiſtaunce, vntill a ſtronger then he ſhall aryſe. But there is not a ſtronger to bee found on earth: for there is no power in men to helpe themſelues: therfore a redeemer was promyſed from heauen. Now Chriſt ſheweth that this manner of redemption is neceſſary, that he ſhould by ſtrong hande wreſt from the deuill that, which hee wil neuer let goe, except he be enforced. By which wordes he declareth, that menne do hope in vaine for deliueraunce, vntill that Sathan bee brought vnder by violent aſſaultes. And though he purpoſely reproueth the ignoraunt folly of the Scribes, becauſe they vnderſtoode not the beginninges of the kingdom of God: yet this reproofe toucheth almoſte all men, ſith they are ouerwhelmed almoſt with the ſame folly. There is no manne, which will not make a bragge in wordes, that he deſires the kingdome of God: yet we wil not, as neceſsitie requireth, ſuffer Chriſt to fight valiantly, that he may deliuer vs out of the hand of our tyrant: which is, as if a ſicke manne ſhoulde craue the helpe of a Phiſition, and ſhould abhorre and abſtaine from all remedies.

Now we vnderſtand for what purpoſe Chriſte brought this parable: namely, that hee might ſhew that the Scribes were enemies to the kingdome of GOD, whoſe beginninges they ſo malitiouſly withſtoode. Yet becauſe we are al ſubiect to the bondage of Sathan, let vs learn, that God doth not begin his kingdom in vs otherwiſe: but when by the ſtrong & mighty hand of Chriſt, he ſetteth vs at libertie from that miſerable and hard bondage.

30. Hee that is not with mee This place is expounded two wayes. Some ſo gather it, as that it ſhuld be an argument of repugnancies: as if Chriſt ſhould haue ſayde, I cannot reigne, except the deuill be ouerthrowne: for al his endeuours are bent vppon this, to ſcatter whatſoeuer I gather. And certeinely we ſee how the enemie doth too boldly apply himſelfe to ouerthrow the kingdome of Chriſt. Yet I do rather yeelde to their opinion, which interprete the Scribes to be double enemies of the kingdom of God: becauſe that of ſette purpoſe they hinder the proceedinges of the ſame. The meaning therefore is this; it were your part to helpe me, and to ſet your hand to the buylding of the kingdome of God. For, whoſoeuer doth not helpe, ſetteth himſelfe after a ſorte againſt the ſame, or at leaſte is worthy to be accounted amongſt the enemies. Then what are you, that are carryed by a madde fury, openly to ſtriue againſt the ſame? Alſo it appeareth plainely by their former dealinges, how truely Chriſt nowe ſpeaketh this, whoſoeuer gather not with him, ſcatter abroade: when as the readines of our nature to euill is ſuche, ſo that there is no place for the righteouſnes of God, but in them which doe earneſtly apply them to the ſame. This doctrine alſo reacheth further: to witte, that they are vnworthy to be accounted of the flock of Chriſt, which applye not theyr endeuours for the furtherance of the ſame: and it commeth to paſſe through their ſlouth, that the kingdome of God decayeth and falleth to ruine: for the buylding wherof we all are called.

31. VVherefore I ſay vnto you. This concluſion may not be reſtrained to the laſt ſentence, but it dependeth of the whole text before. For after Chriſt hath taught that the Scribes could not reproue him for caſting out deuils, but that they ſet theſelues againſt the kingdom of God, at length he concludeth that it was no light ſaying, nor to be tollerated, but a hainous offence, that wittingly and willingly they blaſphemed the ſpirit of God. For we ſaide before that Chriſt ſpake not this of their bare words, but of their vngodly and wicked thoughtes.

Euery ſinne and blaſphemy. Becauſe the Lord pronounceth blaſphemy againſt the ſpirit to be the moſt hainous of all ſinnes, it is worth the labor to enquire what he meaneth by this ſaying. They which interprete it to be vnrepentaunce may eaſily be confuted: for vainely and fondly ſhould Chriſt haue denied, that it could not be forgiuen in this world. Alſo the word blaſpemy cannot generally be applyed to all kindes of ſinnes. But by the compariſon, which Chriſte bringeth, the meaning ſhall the more eaſily appeare vnto vs. VVhy is he ſaide to ſinne more hainouſly, which ſpeaketh blaſphemy againſt the ſpirit, then againſt Chriſt? Is it, becauſe the maieſtie of the ſpirit is more excellent, that it ſhould be more ſharply reuenged? Certeinly, there is ſome other cauſe: for, when as the fulneſſe of the godhead was in Chriſte, whoſoeuer was reproachfull againſte Chriſte, ouerthrew and abolyſhed the whole glory of God, as muche as in him lay. Now, how ſhall Chriſt be ſeparated from his ſpirite; ſo that they which are contumelious againſt the ſpirit, leaue not him vntouched and vnhurte. Heere wee beginne to gather now the meaning, that blaſphemy againſt the ſpirit exceedeth not other ſinnes, becauſe the ſpirite is aboue Chriſt: but beecauſe that whoſoeuer doe kicke againſt the power of God reuealed, they are not to be excuſed vnder the pretence of ignoraunce.

Further, it is to be noted, that that, which is here ſpoken of blaſphemy, is not ſimply referred to the eſſence of the ſpirit, but to the grace wherwith we are endued. For they which haue not the light of the ſpirite, though they ſpeake euill of the glory of the ſpirit, they are not yet guiltie of this ſinne. Now we perceiue that they blaſpheme the ſpirit of God, which with a determinate malice oppoſe themſelues againſt his grace and power: and further, that ſacrileadge is not committed, but that while the ſpirit dwelling in vs, we doe wittinglye endeuor our ſelues to extinguiſh the ſame. And this is the reaſon why the ſpirit is ſayde to be blaſphemed, rather then either the ſonne, or the father himſelfe: becauſe that by blaſpheming the grace and power of God, wee ſtrike ſtreight at the ſpirite, from whom proceedeth, and by whom the graces of God appeare in vs. If any that beleeue not, blaſpheme God, hee is as if a blinde man ſhould ſtrike againſt a wall: But no man blaſphemeth the ſpirit, but he, which being firſt lightned by the ſame, doth after againſt his own knowledge, wittingly giue himſelfe to wicked rebellion. Alſo that diſtinction is not in vaine, that al other blaſphemies ſhal be forgiuē, except that one, which is againſt the holy Ghoſt. If any man ſimply blaſphemieth GOD, there is hope of forgiuenes for him: but it is ſayd that God will neuer be mercifull to them, that ſpeake blaſpheny againſt the ſpirite: and whye ſhould this be ſo? But, becauſe they, which blaſpheme againſt the ſpirite, doe againſt the knowledge of their own ſoule, they oppugne and ſlaunder the gifts and power of the ſpirit. That alſo appertaineth to this purpoſe, which Marke ſaieth: that Chriſt threatned the Phariſes ſo hardly, becauſe they ſaide, that he had an vnclean ſpirit: becauſe that in ſo ſaying, they purpoſely, wittingly and malitiouſly, turned light into darkneſſe. And this is after the manner of Gyantes (as the prouerb ſaieth) to bidde battell againſt God. Yet here ariſeth a queſtion, whether menne wyll breake out into ſuch madneſſe, as that they will not doubt, but wittingly and willingly to ſtrike at God: for this ſeemeth to be a ſtraung monſter, not to be beleeued. I aunſwere, this boldneſſe proceedeth of a frantike blindeneſſe, wherein malice and poyſonfull fury getteth the victorie. And it is not without cauſe, that Paul ſaith, 1. Tim. 1. 13. Though he was a blaſphemer, yet he receiued mercy, becauſe he did it ignorantly thorow vnbelieſe: for by theſe wordes he diſtinguiſeth his ſinne from wilfull blaſphemy. Alſo in this place is confuted theyr errour, whiche ymagine that euerye wilfull ſinne, whiche is committed, the conſcience withſtanding it, to be vnpardonable. But Paule dooth expreſly tie that ſinne to the firſte table of the lawe: and the Lorde dooth by the name of blaſphemy poynt out one kinde of ſinne, and hee alſo ſheweth that it directly fighteth with the glory of God.

But of all theſe I gather, that they ſinne and blaſpheme againſte the holye Ghoſte, whiche turne the graces and gyftes of GOD reuealed vnto them by the ſpirite (by the whiche they ſhoulde ſette forth his glorye) to the hynderaunce and ſlaunder of the ſame.

And

And with Sathan their captaine they are profeſſed enemies to the glory of God. VVherefore it is no meruaile if Chriſte cutte away all hope of forgiueneſſe frō ſuch ſacrilledge: for they are paſte hope, which turne the onely medicine of their ſauing health into deadly poyſon. This ſeemeth to ſome to be too hard: and therfore they flye to a childiſh cauill, ſaying, that it is ſayde to be vnpardonable: becauſe the forgiuenes of the ſame is rare & hard to be obtained. But Chriſt ſpeketh more expreſly, ſo that his wordes cannot ſo childiſhly be ſhifted. They do alſo reaſon too fondly, that God ſhould be cruell, if he ſhould neuer forgiue the ſinne; and that his crueltie would make vs all amaſed: but they doe not conſider howe haynous the offence is, not onely to prophane the holy name of God of ſet purpoſe, but alſo to ſpitte in his face, while hee ſhineth vppon them with his gratious and fauourable countenaunce. The exception, whiche other take is as fond: namely, that the meaning ſhould bee, that no man ſhould obtayne forgiuenes, without repentaunce. For, it is certeine, that blaſphemy againſt the holy Ghoſt is a ſigne of reprobation: whereof it followeth, that all they that fall into the ſame, are giuen ouer into a reprobate ſenſe. For, as we hold it to be vnpoſsible, that he that is truely regenerate by the ſpirit, ſhould throw himſelfe headlong into ſo horryble ſinne: ſo againe is it to be holden, that they which fall into the ſame, can neuer riſe againe: and that God in this ſorte reuengeth the contempte of his grace, in that he hardeneth the heartes of the reprobate, that they can neuer attaine to repentaunce.

32. Neither in this life. Marke dooth briefly ſet downe the meaning of theſe wordes, ſaying, that they which ſpeake againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall be ſubiect to eternall damnation. VVe aske of God forgiuenes of ſinnes dayly, and he reconcileth vs vnto himſelfe: at length, al ſinnes being aboliſhed, in death he ſheweth himſelfe merciful vnto vs, and the fruit of this mercy ſhall ſhew it ſelfe in the latter day. Therfore the ſenſe is, that there is no hope, that they which blaſpheme againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſhould obtaine forgiuenes in this life, or in the latter iudgement. The cauil, which the Papiſtes gather hereof, that ſinnes may be forgiuen men after theyr death, is eaſily confuted. Firſt, they are fooliſh in wreſting the worde of the world to come to a middle time, when as it is euident to all men that it ſignifieth the laſt day: but herein alſo is their wickednes laid open: becauſe that the cauill, which they pretende, is contrary to their owne doctrine. Their deſtinction is knowen, that the ſinnes are freely forgiuen in reſpect of the offence: but they are required in the ſatiſfaction of the puniſhmentes. Now they graunt that there is no hope of ſaluation, except the ſinnes be forgiuen before the death. Therefore there remaineth to the dead onely forgiuenes of the puniſhment: but they dare not denie, but that this ſentence is here ſpoken of the ſinne. Now, let them go, and of this cold ſubſtance let them kindle their Purgatory fire, if flames can be gotten out of cold ice.

Matth. 12.	Mark.	Luke.
33. Either make the tree good, and his fruit good: or els make the tree euill, and his fruit euill: for the tree is knowne by his fruit.
34. O generation of Vipers, how can yee ſpeake good good thinges, when yee are euil? For of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh.

35. A good man, out of the good treasure of his heart, bringeth forth good thinges: and an euill man out of an euill treasure, bringeth forth euill thinges.

36. But I say vnto you, that of euery idle worde that men shal speake, they shal giue an account therof at the day of iudgement.

37. For by thy wordes thou shalt be iustified, & by thy wordes thou shalt be condemned.

33. Eyther make the tree good. It may seeme to be absurd, that the choice is giuen to men to be either good or euill. But if we consider what kind of men Christ speaketh to, it shall be easily answered. We know what opinion or estimation there was of the Pharises: for the mindes of the common people were so daseled with the feigned shewe of their holynesse, that no man durst call their lewde dealinges into question. Christe meaning to take away this viserd, commaundeth them to be either good or euill: as if he should haue sayde there is nothinge more contrarye to honestie then hypocrisie, and they doe challenge to themselues the tytle of righteousnesse in vaine, which are not sincere and vpright. So he putteth nothing in their choise, neither doth he giue them the bridle at libertie: but onely admonisheth them that they shall profit nothing by theyr vaine disguisinges, so long as they continue so duble; for that it is necessary for men to be either good or euill. That he saieth, Make the tree, some do gather fondly thereof, that it is in euery mans owne hande, to frame his owne lyfe and maners. For it is an vpbrayding kind of speach, wherwith Christ scattereth the hypocrisie of Scribes as smoake, calling them to a perfect and pure vprightnesse. After, he setteth downe the manner and the way, whereby they may shewe themselues to bee good or euill trees: to witte, if they bring forth good or euil fruit. So now there is no ambiguitie in the sense. The life of the Scribes was infamous amongste men, through their grosse sinnes, & they bewrayed the poyson of pride, ambition, and enuie, thorow their owne ouerthwart cauillinges: but because the simple people saw not this, Christ brought this great mischief out of the corners into the light. If any obiect that it cannot bee in this corruption of our nature, that any man shoulde be found perfect in euery respect, and pure from all sinne: the aunswere is ready: Christ requyreth not an exact perfection, wherein is no want, but onely a simple affection without dissimulation, from the which the Pharises, to whome Christ spake were far wide. For as the scripture calleth them euill and wicked, which are wholly giuen to Sathan: so the sincere worshippers of God, though that through the infirmitie of their flesshe, they be compassed about with many sinnes, and do grone vnder the burden, are yet called good; and this is the free mercy of God, which vouchsafeth so honourable a title to them, which aspire to goodnes.

34. O generation of Vipers. In this place Christ applyeth the similitude of the tree and the fruit to his present speach, that he might thereby discouer the inward and secrete malice of the Scribes, and this is the cause why he standeth so much in this one kind of sinne. Therefore Christ inueighed bitterly againſt them, becauſe they bewraied by their falſe ſlanders, that which was not ſo euident in the reſt of their life. It is, ſaith he, no merueile, if you vomit out euil words, ſeeing that your heart is ful of malice, let not any think the reproofe to be too hard, for truely he could not haue dealt more mildly with them. Other ſinnes deſerue ſharp reprehenſion, but where vnconſtant men do depraue that, which is right, or ſeeke to colour thoſe thinges that are naught, this is a wickednesſe, againſte the which the Lorde of right ſhoulde thunder more vehementlye, then againſte other ſinnes. But the purpoſe of Chriſte was as occaſion ſerued, to condemne their wicked ſophiſtrie, whiche turned light into darkeneſſe. This place therefore teacheth howe precious trueth is to the Lorde, whereof hee is ſo ſharpe a defender & reuenger. And I would with that this were more diligētly conſidered of thē, which haue a wit too ready and prompt to defend al cauſes, and ſet their tong on ſale, to vtter al forged ſubtil ſhifts. But Chriſt eſpecially inueigheth againſt them, whom either ambition or enuy, or other wicked deſire enforceth to ſpeak euil, and where there is nothing that their conſciēce miſliketh. Chriſt alſo was after his maner ſharper againſt the Phariſes: becauſe they were ſo bewitched with a falſe perſwaſion of righteouſnes, that a milde admonition ſhould haue profited but litle. And certeinelye, except hypocrites be ſharply pricked, they do diſdainfully deſpiſe whatſoeuer is ſaid. How can ye ſpeake good things. I haue ſaid before that prouerbial ſentenſes may not be alwaies drawn to a general rule; becauſe they only ſhew what commeth to paſſe for the moſt part. And ſometimes it commeth to paſſe, that he which is cruel with ſweete alluring words ſhal deceiue the ſimple, and that the ſubtil ſhal circumuent vnder the cloake of ſimplicitie, and that he, which imagineth moſt wickedlye, ſhal in tongue pretend an angellike puritie: yet the cōmon vſe proueth that to be true, which Chriſt here ſaith, of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaketh. As alſo in an old prouerb the tongue is called the Character of the mind. And certeinly, though the heart of man hath ſecrete and hidden corners, and euery man diſſembleth his faultes with wonderfull ſhifts: yet the Lorde wreſteth out of al mē ſome cōfeſsiō, ſo that they bewray with their tong their deſire and inward affections. Alſo it is to be noted to what ende Chriſte vſeth theſe parables: for hee vpbraideth the Phariſes, for that they vtter in wordes the malice, which they had cōceiued inwardly. Further, he knowing them to be ſworne and obſtinate enemies, he took occaſion of this one cauill to laye open al their life, and to diſcredite them with the people: for their credit and authoritie was too great, to deceaue and to hurt. Alſo though good ſpeaches doe not alwaies proceede from the inward affection of the heart, but only grow (as men ſay) on the outſide of the lips: yet this is alwaies true; euil words are witneſſes of an euil heart.

36. Of euery idle word they ſhal giue an accowt. The argument is from the leſſe to the greater. For, if euery idle word is to be called to an accounte, how ſhall God ſpare their open blaſphemies and ſacrilegious reproches, which they vtter againſt the glory of God? An idle word is here takē for vnprofitable, which bringeth neither edifying nor fruit. This ſeemeth too hard to many: but if we conſider to what vſe our tongues are made, we wil graunt that they are worthy to be condemned, which raſhly addicte and apply them to ſuch friuolous trifles. Neither is it any ſmal offence to abuſe the time in waſtinge it about vaine matters, which Paul cõmaundeth vs, Col. 4. 5. carefully to redeeme. And ſith there is no man ſo ſpare in ſpeaking, that can ſo wiſely moderate himſelfe, but that he ſhall breake out into ſome idle ſpeaches, ſo that if God ſhould deale with vs al according to the extremitie of the law, there remained nothing for vs but deſpaire. But becauſe the hope of our ſaluation is grounded vpon this, that God will not enter into iudgment with vs, and that of his free mercy he wil forget our ſinnes, which deſerue innumerable deathes: we doubt not but that he blotting out the guiltines of all our life, will alſo pardon the offence of vaine ſpeach. For the ſcripture ſpeaking of the iudgement of God, doth not ouerthrow the forgiuues of ſinnes: yet let no man flatter himſelf hereby: but let euery man diligẽtly endeuor to bridle his tongue. Firſt, that we may ſpeake of the holy miſteries of God reuerently & ſoberly: then, that we may abſtain from ſcurrilitie & vaine ieſtings, and eſpecially from enuious euill ſpeaking: and laſtly we muſt giue our diligence that our ſpeach may be ſeaſoned with ſalt, Col. 4. 6.

37. By thy wordes thou ſhalt be iuſtified. He applyeth the common prouerb to the preſent cauſe. For, I doubt not but that this ſaying was common in the mouthes of the people, that euery man ſhoulde either be condemned or abſolued by his own confeſsion. And Chriſt applieth it to a ſẽſe ſomwhat differing: namely, that the wicked ſpeach, as it is a ſhew of hidden malice, ſo it ſuffiſeth to condemne a man. And the obiection, which the Papiſtes gather, by wreſting this to ouerthrow the righteouſneſſe of fayth, is a childiſh fancie. Man is iuſtified by his owne words, not that the ſpeach is the cauſe of righteouſnes: for by faith we obtaine the fauour of God, that he ſhould account vs for righteous: but the pure ſpeach purgeth vs, frõ being found wicked in our tongue. Is it not fooliſhly inferred of this, that men ſhould deſerue a part of righteouſnes before God? But this place rather ſtrengthneth our doctrine. For though Chriſt entreateth not of the cauſe of our righteouſnes, yet the contrarietie betweene the two words declareth what this word, to iuſtifie ſignifieth: It ſeemeth abſurd to the Papiſtes, that we ſay that man is iuſtified by faith: for they expound it to be made and to be righteous in deede: and we vnderſtand it to be accounted righteous, and to be cleared before the iudgmente of God, as it plainly appeareth by many teſtimonies of the ſcripture. And doth not Chriſt confirme the ſame, when hee oppoſeth to iuſtifie and to condemne one againſt an other?

43. Now, when the vncleane ſpirit is gone out of a man, he walketh throghout dry places, ſeeking reſt, & findeth none. 44. Then he ſaith, I will returne into mine houſe, from whence I came, and when he is come, hee findeth it emptie, ſwept & garniſhed. 45. Thẽ he goeth, and taketh vnto him ſeauen other ſpirits worſe then himſelf, and they enter in and dwel there, and the end of that man is worſe then the beginning. Euẽ ſo ſhal it be with this wicked generation.		24. When the vncleane ſpirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, ſeking reſt, and when he findeth none, he ſaith, I will returne vnto mine houſe, whence I came out. 25. And when he commeth, he findeth it ſwept and garniſhed. 26. Then goeth he, and taketh to him ſeuen other ſpirits worſe then himſelfe and they enter in and dwell there, ſo the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe thẽ the firſt.

43. When

43. VVhen the vncleane spirit. Hee pronounceth againſt the Scribes and ſuch hypocrites, which deſpiſe the grace of God, and conſpire with the deuill, ſuch a iudgement as their vnthankfulneſſe deſerueth. Yet that the fruit of the doctrine may more largely appeare, hee generally declareth what iudgement they procure to themſelues, which by deſpiiinge grace offered, do againe open a dore to the deuil. But, becauſe there is greate waight almoſte in euery ſeuerall clauſe, ſome thinges muſt bee noted in order, before we handle the ſumme of the parable. VVhen Chriſt ſpeaketh of the going out of the deuill, he commendeth vnto vs: the force and effecte of the grace of God, ſo ofte as it commeth vnto vs: but eſpecially when God draweth neere vnto vs in the perſon of his ſonne: the end is, that we being delyuered from the tyrannie of the deuill, hee might take vs to himſelfe, and that did Chriſt plainly declare in the former myracle. Therefore, ſith it is his peculier office to driue away euyll ſpirites, that they ſhould not reigne any more in men, it is well ſaid, that the deuill goeth out of thoſe men, to whom Chriſt offereth himſelfe a redeemer. And though the preſence of Chriſt is not effectuall to al, becauſe the vnbeleeuers make it to be of none effect to them: yet he would haue vs to note to vvhat end he viſiteth vs, what his comming auayleth of it ſelfe, and laſtly what the euyll ſpirites doe feele. For, he neuer woorketh in men, but that the deuilles being brought into the conflicte, doe giue place vnto his power. Therefore it is to bee noted, that the deuill is caſt out of vs ſo ofte as Chriſt ſhineth vppon vs, and ſheweth by ſome teſtimonie his fauour towardes vs. Alſo, the miſerable condition of all mankind is here deſcribed vnto vs: for it followeth that the deuill hath a dwelling place in men: becauſe he is driuen out from thence by the ſon of God. And he ſpeaketh not of one or other perticular man, but of all the offspring of Adam. This therefore is the glory of our nature, that the deuill hath his ſeate in vs; ſo that hee dwelleth aſwell in our body, as in our ſoule. VVhereby we alſo ſee a ſpectacle of the moſt excellent mercye of God, in that of filthy ſtables of the deuill, hee maketh vs temples for himſelfe, and conſecrateth vs for a dwelling place for his ſpirit. Thirdly, he painteth out vnto vs the practiſe of Sathan: to wit, that he neuer ceaſeth from endaungering vs, but applyeth it dayly, and turneth himſelfe euery way: and to be ſhort, he bendeth all his endeuors to work our deſtruction: but eſpecially where he is vanquiſhed, and putte to flight by Chriſte, hee enrageth and deſireth to hurt the more. For, beefore that Chriſt maketh vs partakers of his power, the enemie reigneth in vs, as it were in play and ſport. But being driuen out, hee ſoroweth the loſſe of his pray, he gathereth new forces, and ſtirreth al the powers he hath, that he may ouerthrow vs againe. Therefore it is ſayd metaphoricallye, that he walketh through drye places: for his baniſhment is grieuous to him; and his dwelling out of men is like to a filthy deſert. In the ſame ſenſe alſo he ſaieth, that he ſeeketh reſt ſo long as he is out of menne: becauſe that then he fretteth and tormenteth himſelfe, and he ceaſeth not to try euery way, vntill he recouer that he hath loſt. VVherefore let vs learne, aſſoone as Chriſt calleth vs, there is a hotte and a ſharpe combat prepared for vs. For though he attempteth to deſtroy all menne, and that ſaying of Peter appertaineth to al, without exception, that he goeth aboute like a roaring lyon, ſeeking whom he may deuoure, 1. Pet. 5. 18. Yet we are plainely taught by theſe words of Chriſt, that he burneth with greater ter hatred, and is caryed with more enuious force, againſt thē which are taken out of his ſnares. But this admonition ought not to make vs afrayde, but to ſtirre vs vp, to make vs diligent in keeping our watches, and that beeing armed with ſpirituall armors, wee may bee ſtrong to reſiſt him.

44. Hee ſindeth it emptie. Chriſt without doubt meaneth them, which being voyde of the ſpirit of God, are ready to receiue the deuill. For, the faythfull, in whom the ſpirit of God doth dwel perfectly, are ſo fenced on euery ſide, that there is no hole or ginne left open for Sathan. That he calleth it a houſe ſwept and garniſhed, is a ſimilitude borowed of the vſe of men, which are delighted with cleanneſſe and neatneſſe in their lodginges. For deformitie is onely bewtiful to Sathan, and nothing ſauoreth well to him, but ſtinch and filthineſſe. But the meaning is, that ſathan can neuer haue a more conuenient place in vs, then when we byd Chriſt farewel, and admit him in for a gueſt. Therefore his greateſt delightes are in that emptineſſe, which foloweth after the neglecte of the grace of God.

45. Hee taketh to him ſeuen other. The number of ſeuen is taken here indefinitely, as it is oft in other places. Alſo Chriſt teacheth in theſe words, that if we fall from his grace, we are duble endaungered to Sathan, ſo that he vſeth a greater libertie ouer vs then before, and this is a iuſte puniſhment of our ſlouthfulnes. VVherefore let vs not thinke that the deuill is ouercome in one battell, when he is once throwne out of vs: let vs rather remember, ſith hee hath dwelt in vs of old, euer ſince wee were borne, he hath found and by experience known al thoſe waies, by which he may enter into vs: if the common paſſage be not open to him, he wāteth no ſubtiltie to creepe in ſecretely by priuy mines and ſecrete ginnes. Therefore we muſt labour diligently, that Chriſt ruling and reigning in vs, may ſhut vp all paſſages againſt his enemie. For although the aſſaultes of Sathan are ſharpe and daungerous, there is no cauſe why they ſhould weaken the children of God: for the inuincible power of the holy Ghoſt keepeth them in ſafetie. And we know that this plague is onely pronoñced againſt the deſpiſers of the grace of God, which menne become profane by choaking vp the light of faith, and by ſuppreſsinge the ſtudie of godlineſſe.

21. But hee anſwered and ſayde vnto them, my mother and my brethren are theſe, which heare the word of God, and doe it.

LV. 27. Bleſſed is the wombe. The meaning of the woman was in this order to ſet forth the excellēcie of Chriſt: for ſhe had no reſpect to Mary, whom peraduenture ſhe neuer ſaw: but this doth not a litle ſet forth the glory of Chriſt, for that he ennobled and made bleſſed the womb wherin he was borne. And this bleſsing of God is no abſurd nor ſtrang matter, but is ſpoken after the maner of the ſcripture: for we know that the child, which is eſpecially adorned with notable graces, is preferred aboue al other as a ſinguler gift of God. And it cannot be denied, but that God chuſing and appoynting Marye to be the mother of his ſonne, gaue her great honor therby. Yet Chriſtes anſwer yeeldeth not ſo to the womans words, but is rather a ſharp reproofe. Nay, ſaith he, bleſſed are they which heare the word of God. VVe ſee that Chriſt made almoſt no account of that, which the womā only extold. And certeinly that which ſhe thought had bene Maries greateſt glory, was far inferiour to her other giftes of grace: for it was much more dignitie to be regenerate by the ſpirite of Chriſt, then to conceiue the fleſh of his Chriſte in her wombe: to haue Chriſt ſpiritually liuing in her, then to giue him ſuck with her breaſtes. To be ſhort, the holy virgins greateſt felicitie & glory was in this, to be a mēber of her ſonne, & that he accounted her amongſte the new creatures of the heauenly father. Yet I think that the womans ſpeach was reproued for an other cauſe, and to an other end: namely, becauſe men cōmonly neglect the gifts of God, which in a maſe they wonder at, and ſounde with ful mouthes. For this womā in praiſing Chriſt, omitted that, which was the chief, that in him there was ſaluation offered to al menne. That therfore was but a cold cōmendation, wherin there was no mentiō of his grace & power, which extendeth vnto al men. VVherefore Chriſt doth rightly chaleng vnto himſelf an other kind of praiſe, that his mother only ſhuld not be accoūted bleſſed, & that in reſpect of the fleſh: but becauſe he beſtoweth vpon vs al perfect & eternal bleſſednes. Therfore the dignitie of Chriſt is then eſteemed of as it ought to be, when we conſider to what end Chriſt was giuen vs of the father, and that we fele what benefits he hath brought vnto vs, that we in him may be made bleſſed, which are in our ſelues miſerable. But why ſpeaketh he nothing of himſelf, and maketh mention onely of the word of God? becauſe that by this meanes he openeth vnto vs al his treaſures, & he doth not any thing with vs, nor we againe with him without his word. Sith therfore he communicateth himſelf vnto vs by the word, rightly & properly he calleth vs to heare & keepe the ſame, that he by faith may become ours. Nowe, we ſee what Chriſtes anſwere differeth from the commendation of the woman: for he offereth her bleſſednes liberally to al, which ſhe had after a ſort tyed to one houſe, alſo he teacheth that he muſt not be accoũted of in a cõmon ſort or order, becauſe that he hath al the treaſures of heauenly life, bleſſednes and glory hidden in him, which he diſpenſeth by his worde, that they which imbrace the worde, may by faith bee made partakers of the ſame. For the free adoption of God, which we learne out of his word is the key of the kingdom of heauen. And this ioyning them together is to be noted, that firſt we muſt heare, and then obſerue and keepe: for faith commeth by hearing, Ro. 10. 17. and here ariſeth the fountaine & beginning of the ſpiritual life. But beecauſe that ſimple hearing is as a vaine looking into a glaſſe, as Iames declareth, 1. 23. The keeping of the word is alſo added, which is as much as an effectual receiuing, where it taketh liuely rootes in the hearts, that it may bring forth the fruit. So the vaine hearer, who hath only his eares beaten with the outward doctrine getteth nothing. And whoſoeuer boaſte that they are ſatiſfied with a ſecrete inſpiration, and vnder this pretence neglect the outward preaching, are excluded out of the heauenly life. Therefore thoſe things, which the ſonne of God hath ioyned, let not men of a ſacrilegious rathnes put a ſunder. The blockiſh folly of the Papiſts is to be wondred at, that they would ſing theſe wordes in the honor of Mary, which do ſo plainly cõfute their ſuperſtition: but in their thanks giuing, they cul out the womãs words, omitting the words of Chriſt which reprooueth. But ſo it was meete that they ſhould be by all meanes bewitched, which endeuour thẽ ſelues to prophane the holy word of God after their own pleaſure.

L V. 19. Then came to him, There ſeemeth to be ſome difference between Luke & the other two Euangeliſts: for they in ſetting down their hiſtorie ſay, that the mother & kinſfolks of Chriſt came, when he had ſpoken of the vncleane ſpirit: and Luke referreth it to an other time, and onely ſetteth down the exclamation of the woman, which we expounded euẽ now. But, becauſe it is wel known that the Euãgeliſts were not very curious in obſeruing the courſe of times, nor in proſecuting all perticular deedes & ſayings, the anſwer is not ſo hard. For Luke ſetteth not down what time Chriſtes mother came: but that which the other two ſet before the parable of ſowing, he ſetteth after. And that he ſaieth, a certeine woman of the cõpany cried, is ſomwhat like to this hiſtory: for it may be that of an vnaduiſed zeale ſhe extold that to the higheſt degree, which ſhe thought Chriſt made too ſmal account of: they doe al agree in this, that Chriſts brethrẽ & mother came whil he was ſpeaking in the middeſt of the company: & without doubt it was either becauſe they wer careful of him, or becauſe they deſired to learn: for they laboured not to cõe to him in vaine: neither is it likly that they were vnbeleeuers, which accõpanied the holy mother. There is no colour that Ambroſe & Chriſoſtõ do imagine that Mary did it of ambition. For what nead this imagination, whẽ as the ſpirit doth euery where teſtifie to her commendation of her great godlines & modeſtie? It may be, that the greatnes of their carnal affectiõ made thẽ more buſie then needed: I deny not this: but I iudge that they came of a godly deſire to ioyne thẽſelues to his cõpany. That Mat. reporteth that the meſſage of their cõming was brought to him by one certein man, and that Mar. & Lu. do attribute it to mo, hath no abſurditie in it. But (as it commonly commeth to paſſe) the commaundement, which the mother gaue of calling him forth, was receiued, and ſo paſſed amongſte many, vntil at length it was brought vnto himſelf.

MAT. 48. VVho is my mother? It is not to be doubted, but that Maries importunitie is reproued in theſe wordes: and certeinly ſhe dealt very prepoſterouſly to attempt to hinder the courſe of his doctrine. But yet this ſetting light by the kindred of fleſh and bloud, dooth deliuer a verye profitable doctrine, while he receiueth all his diſciples and faithful ones into the ſame degree of honour, as if they had beene chiefe amonge his kinſfolkes. But this ſentence dependeth of the office of Chriſt, for he declareth hereby that hee is not giuen to a certeine ſmal number, but to al the godly, which by faith ſhould grow into one body with him. Then, that there is not a more excellent bond of kindred, then the ſpirituall: becauſe he ought not to be accounted of after the fleſhe, but of the power of his ſpirit, wherewith he was enriched by the father to renew menne, that they which by nature were a filthy and curſed ſeede of Adam, ſhuld by grace begin to be holy and heauēlye children of God. Therfore Paul, 2. Cor. 5. 16. ſaieth that Chriſte cannot be known truly after the fleſh: becauſe the new repairing of the world is rather to be conſidered, which exceedeth farre aboue mans power, while he reformeth vs by his ſpirite to the image of God. VVherefore this is in ſumme the purpoſe, that we ſhould learne to looke vpon Chriſt with the eies of faith: alſo we muſt know, that euery one that is regenerated by the ſpirite, giueth himſelfe wholy to God in true righteouſnes to be throughly ioyned to Chriſte, and ſo to be made one with him. Further, he meaneth that they doe the will of the father, not which exactlye fulfill all the righteouſnes of the law (for ſo this name of brother, which Chriſt giueth to his diſciples ſhuld agree to no man) but he eſpecially commendeth faith, which is the fountaine and beginning of holy obedience: it alſo couereth the wants and offences of the fleſh, that they be not imputed. For the ſaying of Chriſt is wel known, this is the will of my father, that euery man, which ſeeth the ſonne, and beleeueth in him, ſhould not periſh, but haue euerlaſting life, Ioh. 6. 40. And though Chriſt ſeemeth here to haue no reſpect of bloud, yet we know that he did in deede ſanctifie mankind with worſhip, and perfourmed the lawfull dueties towardes parentes: but hee teacheth vs that in reſpect of the ſpirituall kinred, the kinred of the fleſh is of none or of ſmal eſtimation. Let therfore this compariſon ſo far preuaile with vs, that we may pay that which is due to nature, but let vs not be too much tied to fleſh and bloud. But ſith Chriſte vouchſafeth that incomparable honour to the diſciples of his Goſpell, that hee accounteth them for brethren: our vnthankfulnes is to be deteſted, if we reiect not all the deſires of the fleſh, and bend all our endeuours hether.

38. Then anſwered certeine of the Scribes and of the Phariſes, ſaying, maiſter, we would ſee a ſign of thee.		16. And others tempted him, ſeeking of him a ſigne from heauen.
39. But he anſwered & ſaide vnto them, an euil & adulterous generation ſeek a ſigne, but no ſigne ſhalbe giuen vnto it, ſaue the ſigne of the Prophet Ionas.		A little after. 29. And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to ſaye, this is a wicked generation: they ſeek a ſigne, and there ſhal no ſigne be giuen them, but the ſigne of Ionas the Prophet.
40. For as Ionas was three daies and		30. For and three nightes in the whales belly: so shall the sonne of man be three daies and three nightes in the heart of the earth.

41. The men of Niniuie shal rise in iudgment with this generation, and condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Ionas: and behold a greater then Ionas is here.

42. The Queene of the South shal rise in iudgment with this generation, and shall condemne it: for shee came from the vtmeste parts of the earth, to heare the wisdom of Solomon: and behold, a greater then Solomon is here.

30. For as Ionas was a signe to the Niniuites, so shall the sonne of man be to this generation.

31. The Queene of the south shall rise in iudgemente with the men of this generation, and shall condemne them: for she came from the vtmeste partes of the earth, to heare the wisdome of Solomon, and behold, a greater then Solomon is here.

32. The men of Niniuie shal rise in iudgment with this generation, and shal condemne it: for they repented at the preaching of Ionas, and behold a greater then Ionas is here.

38. Certeine of the Scribes. Matthew reporteth somwhat the like againe in the sixteene chapter, and Marke in the eight chapter. Whereby it appeareth that Christ was often questioned with of this matter: so that their wickednes had no end, which once were determined to resiste the trueth. It is euident that they demaunde a signe, that their vnbelief might haue some faire show: namely, that the calling of Christ was not lawfully confirmed. Neither were they so easie & apt to be taught, as that they would giue place to three or foure miracles, much lesse woulde one suffice them. But as I touched it euen now, they excused themselues by this colour, that they beleeued not the Gospel, because Christ shewed no seale of the same from heauen. Hee had now wrought miracles enough in number, and euident before their eies: but as if they were of no force for the confirmation of the doctrine, they would haue some signe from heauen, wherein God after a sort should visibly appeare. They for manner sake doe salute him by the name of master: because that then they so called all the Scribes and Interpreters of the law: but they do not acknowledge him to be a Prophet of God, vntil he do bring some testimonie frō heauen. The meaning therefore is, sith thou professest thy selfe to be a teacher & a master, if thou wilt haue vs to be thy disciples, bring it to passe, that God from heauen may testifie, that he is the author of thy mastership, and confirm thy calling by a miracle.

39. Euill generation. He doth not onely accuse the malice of that age, but hee accuseth the Iewes for a wicked nation: or the Scribes and such like: signifiing that this disease of obstinate stubbornnes came vnto them as it were by enheritaunce. For the word here vsed is sometime taken for one age, sometime for a countrey or nation. And he calleth them adulterous, for corrupt people, begotten in adultry, or bastardes, beecause they were degenerate from theyr holye fathers: as the Prophetes doe also reproue the vnbeleeuers of theyr age, not to be the offspringe of Abraham, but a prophane seede of Chanaan.

Now it is demaunded whether Christ did so sharply reproue thē, because they desired to haue a signe giuen them. For in the booke of Iud. 6. 17. God sheweth that he was not so much displeased with these things. Gedeon demandeth a signe: God is not angry, but graunteth his requeste, and though he proceedeth importunately, yet God yeeldeth to his infirmitie, God offered willingly a ſigne to Ezechiah, who demanded it not, Iſa. 38. 22. And Achas was ſharply reproued, becauſe he refuſed to demaund a ſigne, as he was commaunded by the Prophet, Iſa. 7. 11. Therfore Chriſt doth not ſimply reproue the Scribes, becauſe they demaund a ſigne: but for that they being vnthankfull to God, hauing malitiouſly refuſed ſo many of his graces and powers, take this as a ſhift, leaſt they ſhould obey his word. For I doe not onely ſay that it was their ſlouth, but their malice, which kept their eyes ſhut at ſo many miracles. Therefore they were troubled in vaine: for their deuiſe was to no other purpoſe, but that they might freely reiect Chriſte. Paule condemneth the ſame fault in their poſteritie, 1. Cor. 1. 22. VVhen he ſaith, that the Iewes ſeeke for ſignes.

No ſignes ſhalbe giuen vnto it. They were after conuicte by ſundry miracles: and Chriſt ceaſed not to ſhewe his power amongſt them, that hee might thereby take al excuſe from them. But he onely meaneth that one ſigne, which ſhould be vnto them in ſteade of all: becauſe they were vnworthy to haue their wicked deſire ſatiſfied. Let them be content, ſaieth he, with this ſigne, that as Ionas brought out of the bottome of the ſea preached to the Niniuites, ſo they ſhoulde heare the voice of a Prophete rayſed to life againe. I knowe that manye haue interpreted this place more ſubtilly: but ſith the ſimilitude betweene Chriſte and Ionas holde not in all the perticular poyntes of the ſame, it is to bee ſeene how farre Chriſt compareth himſelf to Ionah. But I omitting the ſpeculations of other men, do think this one thing meete to be noted, which I touched euen now, that he ſhould become a prophet vnto them after his reſurrection: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, you contemne the ſonne of God, whiche deſcended to you from heauen: Therfore it remaineth that I being dead ſhould riſe from the graue, and being reſtored to life againe, I wil ſpeake vnto you, as Ionas came out of the bottom of the ſea. Therfore the Lord ſo cut away al occaſions from their wicked deſires, that he ſaith, that after his reſurrection he would become a Prophet to them, ſeeinge they would not receiue him cloathed in mortal fleſh. In Luke he ſaith, that he would be a ſigne vnto them, as Ionas was vnto the Niniuites. The word ſigne is vnproperly vſed, not that it ſhoulde foreſhewe any thing, but that it is remoued far from the common order of nature: as the ſending of Ionah was wonderful, when he was brought out of the belly of the fiſh, as out of a graue, that he might call the Niniuites to repentaunce. In this phraſe of three nightes is a figuratiue ſpeach, as it is well knowne. For becauſe the night is adioyned to the day, or becauſe the daye conſiſteth of two partes: light, and darkenes: of which two Chriſt noteth one day, and putteth one whole day for a halfe.

41. The men of Niniuie ſhal riſe in iudgement. Becauſe he had ſpoken of the Niniuites, Chriſt tooke hereof occaſion to ſhewe that the Scribes and others, which refuſe his doctrine to be much worſe then they were. The prophane men, ſaith he, which neuer heard word of the true God, repented at the voice of this new & ſtraung gueſt: this kingdom, which is the library of the heauenly doctrine, wil not heare the ſonne of God and the promiſed redeemer. For in this ſimilitude there is this Antitheſis. It is known what the Niniuits were: namely, that they were not accuſtomed to haue Prophets, but were without true doctrin. Ionas came not amõgſt them them with any glorious title, but a ſtraunger might eaſily haue benereeiected. The Iewes boaſted that the worde of God had a ſeate and dwelling place amongſt them, if they had lookedvpon Chriſt with clear eies, they ſhould not onely haue knowne that he was a teacher ſente from heauen, but alſo the Meſsias and auctiour of ſaluation promiſed them.

But if the miſerable wickednes of that people was therfore condemned, becauſe they deſpiſed Chriſt ſpeaking vpon earth: we excell the vnbelee-uers of al times, if we obey not the holy and heauenly voice of the ſonne of God, now ſitting in heauen. Furthermore, I wil not now entreat whither the Niniuits were truely and perfectly conuerted to God: becauſe it ſuffiſeth that they were ſo moued at the doctrin of Ionah, that they gaue their mind to repentaunce.

Mat. 12. The Queene of the ſouth. Becauſe that Athiopia lieth ſouthward in reſpect of Iudea, I doe eaſily aſſent to Ioſephus & others, which ſaye that this was queene of Aethiopia: and that ſhe is called in the ſcriptures the queene of Saba, it may not be vnderſtood of the country of Sabea, which lieth more eaſtward, but of a citie in the yle of Meroes ſituated vpō Nilus, which was the chiefe citie of the kingdome. Here alſo is it good to weigh the compariſons: a woman, which was neuer brought vp in Gods ſchoole, for a deſire ſhe had to learne, came out of a far countrey, to Solomon an earthly king. The Iewes ſtudents of the law of God, doe refuſe their chiefe and only teacher, and prince of al the prophetes. Alſo the phraſe of iudging is not here ſo much referred to the perſons, as to the example of the thing it ſelfe.

9. Hee that hath eares to heare, let him heare.
10. Then the disciples came and said vnto him, why speakest thou to them in parables?
11. And he answered, & said vnto them, because it is giuen vnto you to know the secretes of the kingdom of heauen, but to them it is not giuen.
12. For whosoeuer hath, to him shalbe giuen, and he shal haue aboundance: but whosoeuer hath not, from him shall bee taken away, euē that he hath.
13. Therfore speake I to thē in parables, because they seeing, doe not see: and hearing, they heare not, neither vnderstand.
14. So in them is fulfilled the prophesie of Isaias, whiche prophesie saith, by hearing, ye shall heare, and shal not vnderstand, and seeing, yee shall see, and shal not perceine.
15. For this peoples heart is waxed fat, & their eares are dul of hearing, and with their eies they haue winked, leaste they should see with their eies, and heare with their eares, & should vnderstand with their heartes, and shoulde returne, that I might heale them.
16. But blessed are your eies, for they see: and your eares, for they heare.

8. Some againe fell in good ground, and did yeeld fruite, that sprang vp, and grewe, and it brought forth, some thirtie fold, some sixtie fold, & some an hundred fold.
9. Then he said vnto them, he that hath eares to heare, let him heare.
10. And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelue, asked him of the parable.
11. And he said vnto them, to you it is giuen to know the misterie of the kingdome of God: but vnto them that are without, al things be done in parables.
12. That they seeing, may see, and not discerne, and they hearing, maye heare, and not vnderstand, leaste at any time they should turn, & their sins should be forgiuen them.

Somwhat after.

24. And he said vnto them, take heede what yee heare. VVith what measur ye meat, it shal be measured vnto you: and vnto you that here shal more be giuen.
25. For vnto him that hath, shal it be giuen, and from him that hath not, shalbe taken away, euen that he hath.
6. And some fell on the stones, & when it was sprōg vp, it withered away, because it lacked moystnes.
7. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns sprōg vp with it, and choked it.
8. And some fell on good ground, and sprang vp, and bare fruit, an hundred fold. And as he said these things, he cried, he that hath eares to heare, let him heare.
9. Then his disciples asked him, demaunding what parable that was.
10. And he said, vnto you it is giuen to know the secretes of the kingdome of God, but to other in parables, that whē they see, they should not see, and when they heare, they should not vnderstand.

Somwhat after.

18. Take heede therefore how ye heare: for whosoeuer hath, to him shalbe giuen, & whosoeuer hath not, frō him shalbe taken euē that, which it seemeth that he hath.

Luke. 10.

23. And he returned to his disciples, and said secretly, blessed are the eyes, whiche see that yee see.
24. For I tel you that many prophets and kings haue desired to see those thinges which yee see: and haue not seene them: and to heare those things, which ye hear, and haue not heard them.

Theſe things which I haue here wrytten downe out of Luke, do peraduenture belong to ſome other time: but no reaſon ſeemeth to compell me to ſeparate thoſe thinges which he hath ioyned together in one texte. Firſt he ſayth that the 12. Apoſtles preached the kingdome of God with Chriſt. VVhereof we gather, that though the ordinarie office of teaching was not as yet laide vpon them, yet they were continuall helpers to make the people attentiue hearers of their maſter. So though their eſtate was farre inferiour, yet they are accounted as helpers of Chriſt. Alſo he addeth that Chriſt had certaine women in his company, which were healed and deliuered from euill ſpirites and other infirmities, as Marie Magdalene was, who had bene tormented of ſeuen deuils. The hauing of this company might ſeeme to be ſmall for his honour: for what was more vndecent for the Sonne of God, then to leade women about with him, noted with infamie? But by this we do the better perceiue that the ſinnes wherwith we were loden before we beleeued, are ſo farre from hindering the glory of Chriſt, that they doe rather amplifie and ſet forth the ſame. And it is not ſayd that he found the Church which he choſe, without ſpotte or wrinckle, but that he waſhed & cleanſed it with his bloud, that he might make it pure and beautiful. VVherfore the miſerable and ſhameful eſtate of theſe women, after they were deliuered from the ſame, made greatly for the glory of Chriſte, for they were enſignes and tokens of his power and of his grace. Luke alſo commendeth their thankfulneſſe, in that they deſpiſing the ſhame of the world, followed their deliuerer. It is not to be doubted but that they were poynted at with the finger euery where, and the company and preſence of Chriſte was vnto them as a Theatre to ſet them foorth to the ſhew: but they refuſe not to ſet their ſhamefaſtneſſe openly a broache, rather then that the grace of Chriſte being ſuppreſſed, ſhould be hid: but that the beholding of Chriſte might be the more notable, they doe willingly ſuffer themſelues thus to be humbled. Alſo, ſingular and wonderfull was the ſhewe of the great goodneſſe of Chriſte towardes Marie, in that ſhe being a woman poſſeſſed by ſeuen diuils, and as a moſte vile bondſlaue of ſathan, he did not onely vouchſafe her the honour of a diſciple, but tooke her alſo to his company. Luke addeth the ſurname of Magdalene, that he may make a difference betweene her and Marthaes ſiſter and other Maries, of whome there is mention in other places.

LVKE. 3. Iohanna the wife of Chuſa. It is not knowen whether Luke would that that which he ſpake of Marie, ſhould be vnderſtode of theſe women alſo. In my opinion it ſeemeth probable, that ſhe was firſt placed in order, in whome Chriſt had ſhewed his great power. And that Chuſas wife, and Suſanna, honeſt matrons of good name and fame, were added after, onely becauſe they were healed of ſome common diſeaſes. And their godly endeuor deſerueth ſo much the more praiſe, becauſe that they being riche and noble matrones, miniſtred vnto Chriſte of their owne ſubſtance. And not content with this labour, they leauing all the affaires of their owne houſes, had rather to followe him with enuie and many diſcommodities, through ſtraunge and vncertaine lodging places, then to enioy delicate quietneſſe in their owne houſes. And it may be that Chuſa, Herodes ſtewarde, was too like his maiſter, and much contrary to his wifes minde: but the godly woman throughe feruencie of her zeale and ſtancie ouercame this lette.

MATH. 2. Great multitudes reſorted vnto him. It is not in vaine that the Euangeliſts doe ſpeake of the great concourſe of the people, becauſe that Chriſt at the beholding of them, tooke occaſion to compare his doctrine to ſede. The multitude was come togither out of many places, they ſtode doubtfull what to doe, they hadde all like greedy delire to heare, but they had not like affection to profite. This was the occaſion of the Parable, to teache that the ſeede of the doctrine is not fruteful euery where, though it bee ſowed farre and wide. For it alwayes findeth not a fruitfull and well appoynted earth. Chriſte therefore profeſſeth himſelfe in that, to be like to a Husbandmanne, which goeth foorth to ſowe: but that many of his hearers are like to harde and drie earth: others like thornie grounde, ſo that both labour and ſeede are loſt. But I will leaue of further entreatinge of the meaninge of this Parable, vntill we come to the expoſition which the Lorde himſelfe maketh a little after. Onely for this preſent the readers are to be admoniſhed of this, if they be founde like to vnprofitable and barren earth, which out of farre places come as menne ſtarued to Chriſt: it is no maruell if the Goſpell do not at this day bring forth frute in many, whereof ſome are ſlacke and ſlowe, others heare negligently, and others are ſcarce drawne to heare.

9. He that hath eares. Chriſte doeth by theſe wordes declare, partly that all are not endued with true vnderſtandinge to conceiue that which hee ſpeaketh: and partly he ſtirreth vppe his diſciples, that they ſhoulde more diligently conſider that the doctrine is neither eaſie nor meete for euery man. And he ſo diſtinguiſheth betweene hearers, as if ſome coulde heare, and others were deafe. Nowe, if it be demaunded whereof it commeth, that the former haue eares to heare: the ſcripture teſtifieth in Pſal. 40. 6. that no man can make and frame himſelfe eares of his owne induſtrie, but that they are prepared of the Lord.

10. Then the diſciples came, and ſayde vnto him. It appeareth by Mathewes woordes, that the Diſciples had not onely reſpecte of themſelues, but had alſo a care and regarde of others. When they perceiued not the meaning of the Parable, they knewe that it was much harder to the people: therefore they complaine that Chriſte had ſpoken ſuch wordes, as the hearers reaped no profite by. Alſo, though ſimilitudes doe commonly make that matter plaine which is in hand, yet they which containe a continuall Metaphore, are very obſcure and harde. Therefore Chriſt propounding this ſimilitude, couered that vnder an Allegorie, which he could haue ſpoken more plainly and fully without a figure. But now, where he expoundeth it, the figuratiue ſpeache is more plaine and more pithy, then that whiche is ſimply ſpoken without a figure: that is, it is not onely more effectuall to mooue the mindes, but alſo plainer. It is good therefore to conſider, howe and in what order euery thing is ſpoken.

11. It is giuen to you, to knowe the myſteries. By this anſweare of Chriſt, we doe gather that God propoſeth the doctrine of ſaluation to men for diuers endes. For Chriſt declareth that he ſpake ſo darkely of purpoſe, that his woordes might ſeeme harde vnto many, and ſhoulde onely beat their eares with a confuſed and doubtfull ſounde. If any man ſhall obiecte to the contrary, that ſaying of Iſai. 45. 19. I haue not ſpoken in ſecrete, neyther ther in a darke corner: I saye de not in vaine to the seede of Iacob: seke you me: or those commendations whiche Dauid doeth giue of the lawe, Psalme 119.19. that it is a lanterne to the feete, and giueth wisedome to the simple: the aunsweare is ready and easie, the woorde by the owne nature is alwayes light, but the light of it is dimmed with the darkenesse of men. For though the lawe was couered as with a vaile, yet the trueth of God was euident to be seene in the same, if the eyes of many had not bene blinde. Paule witnesseth truely of the Gospell, 2. Cor. 4.4. that it is not hid but from the reprobate, & them that are ordained to destruction, whose mindes Sathan hath blinded. Also this is to be knowen, that the force of lightning whereof Dauid maketh mention, & the familiar kinde of teaching which Isai speaketh of, is properly referred to the chose people. Yet this alwaies remaineth certaine and sure that the worde of God is not obscure, but as the worlde with her owne blindnesse darkeneth it: but yet the Lord reserueth his mysteries, so that the reprobate cānot come to the vnderstanding of them. And he depriueth them of the light of his doctrine two wayes, for sometime he speaketh that in Parables, whiche might haue bene spoken more plainly: sometime he opening his minde plainly without darke speaches and figures, he dulleth their sēses, and amaseth them, so that they cannot see in the midde day. To this purpose pertaine those horrible threats in Isai, 28.11. where he threatneth that he woulde be a straunger to the people, and that hee woulde speake with a straunge and vnknowen language: that the visions of the Prophetes, should be to the learned as a booke shutte and sealed, wherin they could not read, Isa. 29.11. and where the booke should be opened, they shoulde be all as idyotes, and stay as menne amased that cannot reade. Nowe sith Christ so dispensed his doctrine of purpose, that it should profit onely a fewe, in whose mindes it should be throughly setteled: and that it should holde other some in suspence and in doubt: it followeth that the doctrine of saluation was not deliuered by God to menne for one ende and purpose, but it is so ordered by his wonderfull counsell, that it shoulde bee to the reprobate a sauour of deathe to deathe, as to the electe a liuely sauour to life. And least any manne shoulde be so bolde as to murmur against it, Paule answeareth in these wordes, what soeuer the effecte of the Gospell be, yet the sauour of it, thoughe it be deadly, doeth alwayes smell swetely before God. But that the meaning of this present place may be the better vnderstode, it behoueth vs to sift more narowly the purpose of Christ, for what cause & to what end he spake this. First, the comparison vndoubtedly tendeth to this ende, that Christ might amplifie & set forth the grace and fauour which he shewed to his disciples: because that was specially giuen to them, which was not generally allowed to all. If any man shoulde demaunde from whence the Apostles had this dignitie and priuiledge: certainly the cause shall not be founde in them, and Christe by saying that it was giuen them, excludeth all merite and desart. Christe affirmeth them to be appoynted and chosen menne, whome God hathe especially vouchsafed this honour, that he woulde reueale his secretes vnto them, and that others should be voide and without this grace. There is no other cause of this difference to be found, but that God calleth vnto him, them that he hath freely chosen.

2. For who ſoeuer hath. Chriſt proſecuteth that which I ſpake euen nowe: for he admoniſheth his diſciples, howe liberally God dealeth with them, that they might make ſo much the more accounte of this grace, and acknowledge themſelues the more bounde, for that they hadde receiued a greater benefite then other. He rehearſeth theſe ſame wordes in an other place, but in an other ſenſe, for there hee ſpeaketh of the lawfull vſe of giftes: but nowhe ſimply teacheth, that there is more beſtowed vpon the Apoſtles, then vpon the common ſorte of men, becauſe that the heauenly father would in this ſort aboundantly heape vp his bountifull kindneſſe towardes them: for becauſe that he neuer forſaketh the woorkes of his owne hands, as it is ſayde in the Pſalme, 138.8. whom he once beginneth to make, he beautifieth daily more and more, vntill at length he bringeth them into great perfection. For this cauſe doeth there flowe ſo manifolde graces from him to vs: hereof come ſo ioyfull proceedings, becauſe the beholding the God of their deliuerance, prouoketh a continuall courſe of bountifulneſſe. And as his richeſſe are innumerable, ſo he is neuer weary of enriching his children. Therefore as oft as he lifteth vs vp higher, we ought to remember that what benefits ſoeuer we receiue daily, they come out of that fountaine, that he would performe that worke of our ſalnation begon in vs. But on the contrary part, Chriſte affirmeth that the reprobate doe alwaies become worſe, vntill they beinge altogither come to naught, doe faint in their owne weakeneſſe. This ſeemeth to be a harde ſpeach, that there ſhould be taken from the wicked, that which they haue not: but Luke mitigateth the hardneſſe, and taketh away the ambiguitie, by altering the wordes ſomewhat: ſaying, that thoſe things ſhall be taken away, which they ſeemed to haue. And certainly, it falleth commonly out that the reprobate doe excell in many excellent gifts, and in ſhew are like to the children of God. But there is no ſoundneſſe in them, becauſe the minde is voide of godlineſſe, and there appeareth onely a vaine ſhewe. VVherefore Mathew doeth rightly ſay that they haue nothing, becauſe it is accounted as nothing before God, and in their conſcience it is vaine & vnfrutefull. Luke doeth aptly declare that the giftes wherwith they were endued, were prophaned by them, ſo that they onely made a ſhew in the eyes of men, elſe they had nothing but a pompe and vaineglorious brag. Heereby we alſo learne to ſeeke to profite euery day of our life, becauſe that God hath of this condition giuen vs the taſte of his heauenly doctrine, that we might daily be more aboundantly fed with the ſame, vntil we come to a perfecte fulneſſe. Marke ſetteth downe this ſentence ſomewhat more confuſely: Take heede, ſayeth the Lorde, what is ſayde vnto you. Then if they haue profited well, he putteth them in hope of greater grace, to you (ſayeth he) that heare, ſhall more be giuen. Then followeth a clauſe which agreeth with Mathewes woordes, but in the midſt is there a ſentence which I expounded before in the ſeuenth chapter of Mathew, becauſe it is not likely to be placed here in his owne order. For the Euangeliſts (as it is ſayd other where) were not curious in ſetting downe Chriſtes ſermons, but heaped oft diuers of his ſentenſes togither. But Luke ſetteth downe the ſame ſentence in diuers places with other wordes whiche Chriſte ſpake, and alſo noteth the diuers cauſes why Chriſte ſo ſpake the ſame: namely, to make them attentiue to his doctrine, leaſt the woorde of life ſhould paſſe foorth in vaine, which oughte to be receiued, and to take roctes in our mindes,as if he ſhoulde haue ſayde: Take heede leaſt that be taken from you,which was giuen you,if it fructifie not.

13. Therefore ſpeake I to them in Parables. He ſayeth that he ſpake obſcurely to the multitude, becauſe they coulde not be partakers of the true lighte. Yet when he ſayeth,that there is a vaile drawne ouer the blind, that they might remaine in their blindneſſe, he aſcribeth the faulte of this to them: but thereby he the more commendeth the grace giuen to the Apoſtles, which was not in ſuch ſorte giuen commonly to all. And other cauſe he aſſigneth none,but the ſecreat coũſell of God,the reaſon wherof,though it be hid from vs, yet it was apparant to him, as we ſhall heereafter more plainly perceiue. And though parables haue an other ende, then to containe darke ſpeaches, which God would not that they ſhoulde be plainly made knowen:yet we ſayd that this which we haue now in hand,was ſo propoſed by Chriſte, that by the continuance of the Allegorie,it was as a doutfull riddle.

14. So in them is fulfilled the Propheſie. He confirmeth and prooueth out of the propheſie of Iſai, that it is no newe thing, if many profite nothing by the word of God,becauſe that in times paſt the olde people were founde in ſuch great blindneſſe. But this place of the Prophet is diuerſly cited in the newe Teſtament. For Paule Actes 28.26. vpbraiding the Iewes for their obſtinate malice, ſayeth that they were therefore blinded, that they could not ſee the light of the Goſpell,becauſe they were bitter and rebellious againſt God. So he ſet down the neareſt cauſe which was to be ſene openly in the men. But in the Epiſtle to the Rom. 11.7. he ſetteth downe the cauſe out of a higher & a more ſecreat fountain: for he teacheth that the remnants ſhould be ſaued according to the grace of election: and that the reſt were blinded,according as it is ſaid by Iſaias,&c. the oppoſition there vſed is to be noted, for if the onely free election of God ſaueth a remnant of the people: it foloweth that all other doe peariſh by the ſecreat iudgemẽt of God,but yet righteous. For who are thoſe other which Paule oppoſeth to the remnantes whiche were choſen, but they whome God woulde not ſhoulde be ſaued? There is the like reaſon alſo in Iohn 12.38. For he ſayeth that there were many which beleeued not,becauſe that no man beleeueth, but they to whom the arme of the Lord is reueiled. And preſently after,he addeth,that they could not beleeue, becauſe it is wrytten againe, Iſa.6.9. he hath blinded their eyes,and hardned their heart. Chriſt alſo had regard vnto this,when he referreth it to the ſecrete counſell of God, that the truthe of the Goſpell was not generally reueiled to all, but ſet foorth a farre eff vnder darke ſpeaches, ſo that nothing was powred into the peoples minds but groſſer blindneſſe. I doe alwaies graunt that whom ſoeuer God doeth blinde,they are found woorthy of this plague: but becauſe the next cauſe doeth not appeare in the perſones of the men,let this principle remaine alwayes certaine and ſure,that they are lightened of God to ſaluation,and that by a ſingular gift,whom God hath freely choſen: but all the reprobate are depriued of the light of life, whether God withdraweth his woorde from them, or elſe holdeth their eyes and eares faſt cloſed,that they ſhould not heare nor ſee. Now we ſee howe Chriſte applieth the propheſie of the Prophet to the preſent cauſe. Hearinge, yee ſhall heare. The woordes of the Prophet are not recited,neither was it needefull: for it was ſufficient for Chriſt to ſhewe that it was no new nor ſtrange example, if many be aſtoniſhed at the word of God. The ſaying of the Prophet was this: Go, blind their mindes, and harden their hearts. Mathewe referreth it to the hearers, that the faulte of their blindneſſe and hardneſſe might be laide vppon themſelues: for the one of them cannot be ſeparated from the other, becauſe that as many as are caſt off into a reprobate ſenſe, do willingly and of a conceiued malice blinde and harden themſelues. Neither can it be otherwiſe, where as the ſpirit of God raigneth not, wherby the electe are onely ruled. VVherefore let this which is added be noted, that all they are out of their minde, whiche God lighteneth not with the ſpirite of adoption: and therfore they are rather blinded by the word of God, & yet the fault remaineth in them, becauſe they are willingly blinded. But the miniſters of the woorde may by this comfort themſelues, if they haue not alwaies ſuch ſucceſſe of their labours as they deſire: yea, if that many be ſo far from profiting by their doctrine, that they rather become the worſe thereby. Namely, that the ſame thing befalleth vnto them, that the Prophet whom they doe not excell, had experience of. It were to be wiſhed that all were brought to obey God, and it becommeth them to apply and to labour to bring this to paſſe: yet lette them not wonder, that the iudgement which was exerciſed in times paſt by the miniſterie of his Prophet, be alſo fulfilled at this day. But we muſt diligently take hede, leſt the frute of the goſpel periſh throgh our defalt.

MAR. 12. That they ſeeing, may not diſcerne. It ſufficeth to note here briefly, that which is more largely entreated of other where, that the doctrine is not properly, nor by it ſelfe, nor of the owne nature the cauſe of the blindneſſe, but by an accidental meanes. For, as when the purblinde come foorth into the Sunne, their eyes are more blinded, and that fault is not to be imputed to the Sunne, but to their eyes: ſo the woorde of God blindeth and hardeneth the reprobate: becauſe it cõmeth through their owne wickednes it is proper & naturall to thẽſelues, & accidental to the word.

Leaſt at any time they ſhoulde tourne. This clauſe ſheweth what profite we ſhould haue by hearing and vnderſtanding: namely, that men being turned to God, may by him be receiued againe into grace, and by enioyinge his mercy, they may liue well and happely. Therefore the Lorde woulde that his worde ſhould be preached eſpecially for this ende, that by renewing the mindes and hearts of menne, he might reconcile them to himſelf. But on the contrary ſide, Iſai heere ſayeth of the reprobate, that a ſtonie hardneſſe remaineth in them, leaſt they ſhoulde obtaine mercy, and that the effecte of the woorde was taken away from them, leaſt their heartes ſhoulde tourne to repentaunce. Vnder this woorde healinge, Mathewe comprehendeth the deliuerance from al euilles, as the Prophet alſo doth: for they doe Metaphorically compare a people afflicted by the hande of God, to a ſicke man. And when the Lorde releaſeth his puniſhments, they ſay that he healeth. But becauſe this health dependeth vppon forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, Marke doeth aptly and wel ſet downe the cauſe and fountaine. For whence proceedeth the mitigation of puniſhments, but becauſe the Lorde being well pleaſed with vs, beſtoweth his bleſsing vppon vs? And though that ſometime after he hath forgiuen our ſinne, he yet ceaſeth not to puniſh vs, either that we may the more be humbled, or that we may be the more wary heereafter: yet becauſe he ſheweth ſome tokens of his fauour, hee quickeneth and reſtoreth vs, then, becauſe that for the moſte parte the puniſhmentes are taken awaye with the ſinne: the healinge is rightly ioyned with forgiueneſſe. But it cannot be gathered of this, that repentaunce is the cauſe of forgiueneſſe, as thoughe GOD ſhoulde receiue the repentante into fauour, becauſe they deſerued it: (for euen the conuerſion it ſelfe, is a token of the free mercye and fauour of God) but it onely noteth the order of thinges followinge the fauour of God: for God forgiueth ſinnes onely in thoſe menne whiche are diſpleaſed with themſelues.

MAT. 16. But bleſſed are your eyes. Luke ſeemeth to referre this ſaying to an other time, yet it is eaſily anſwered, for he heapeth there many ſentences togither, not obſeruing the courſe of the times. VVe wil therefore follow the courſe which Mathew holdeth, who ſetteth downe more plainly the occaſion why he ſpake it. For as of the ſingular grace beſtowed vpon them, they were before admoniſhed that the Lorde exempting them from the common ſorte, did familiarly admit them to the myſteries of his kingdome: ſo nowe the ſame grace is extolled by an other compariſon: to witte, that they are preferd before the olde Prophets and the holy kings. And this is much more excellent then to be preferred before the vnbeleeuing multitude. Alſo Chriſt meaneth not euery hearing, nor ſimple ſeing of the fleſh: but he ſaith that their eies are bleſſed, becauſe they ſee the glory due to the only begotten ſonne of God, ſo that they acknowledge him to be the redeemer, becauſe the liuely image of God appeared to them, whereby they ſhould receiue ſaluation and perfect bleſſedneſſe. Then, becauſe that which was ſaid by the Prophets was fulfilled in thē, that they ſhould not learne euery man of his neighbor, but that they ſhuld be fully and perfectly taught of God. So is that obiection alſo anſweared, whiche might be gathered of an other ſaying of Chriſt, Iohn 20.29. wher he called them bleſſed which ſawe not, and yet beleeued: for there is noted an other maner of ſeeing: namely, ſuche a ſeeing as Thomas deſired, to ſerue his groſſe affection. But the ſpeach wherof Chriſt now ſpeaketh, is common with the apoſtles to the faithfull of all ages. For we not ſeeing, and not hearing, do hear and do ſee Chriſt: becauſe that in the goſpel, as Paul ſayeth, 2. Cor. 3.18. he appeareth vnto vs face to face, that we might be chaunged into his image: and the perfection of wiſedome, righteouſneſſe, and of life, which was once giuen in him, ſhineth therein daily.

LV. 24. And kings haue deſired to ſee. The preſent eſtate of the Church may wel be accoūted better, then the eſtate of the holy fathers which liued vnder the law: to whō that was ſhewed, but vnder ſhadows & clouds, which now appeareth plainly in the open face of Chriſt, For the vaile of the tēple being rente, wee doe enter by faithe into the heauenly Sanctuarie, and therby we haue a fre acceſſe to God. For though the fathers content with their lot, nouriſhed a bleſſed peace in their mindes, yet this hindered them not, but that they were caried further in their deſires. So Abraham ſawe, Iohn 8.56. the day of Chriſt a farre off, and he reioyced: yet he deſired to haue a nearer ſight, but hee obtained not his deſire. For Simeon ſpake according to the deſire of them all, when he ſayd, Luk. 2.29. Now let thy ſeruāt depart in peace. And it could not otherwiſe be, when vnder the burden of the curſe, wherby mankind was oppreſſed, they were al enflamed with a deſire of the promiſed deliueräce. Therfore we know that as famiſhed people they hungred after Chriſte, and yet they had a ſtayed faith, that they grudged not againſt God, but patiently ſuſpended their deſires vntill the full time of his reueaſing.

Math. 13.

18. Heare ye therfore the Parable of the ſower.
19. VVhen ſo euer a man heareth the word of the king dome, and vnderſtandeth it not, the euill one commeth, & catcheth away that which was ſowen in his heart, and this is hee which hath receiued the ſede by the way ſide.
20. And he that receiued ſeede in a ſtonie grounde, is he which heareth the worde, and incontinently wyth ioye receiueth it:
21. Yet hath hee no roote in himſelfe, and dureth but a ſeaſon: for aſſoone as tribulation or perſecution cõmeth, becauſe of the worde, by and by he is offended.
22. And he that receiueth the ſeede amonge thornes, is hee that heareth the woorde, but the care of this worlde, and the deceitfulneſſe of richeſſe choake the worde, and he is made vnfrutefull.
23. But he that receiueth the ſeede in the good ground, is he that heareth the worde, and vnderſtandeth it, whiche alſo beareth fruite, and bringeth forth, ſome an hundreth folde, ſome ſixtie folde, and ſome thirtie folde.

Marke 4.

13. Againe he ſayd vnto thẽ, perceiue yee not this parable? how then ſhoulde ye vnderſtãd all other parables?
14. the ſower ſoweth the word.
15. And theſe are they that receiue the ſeede by the way ſide, in whome the woorde is ſowen: but when they haue heard it, Sathan commeth immediately & taketh away the word, that was ſowen in their hearts.
16. And likewiſe they that receiue the ſeede in ſtony ground, are they which whẽ they haue heard the woorde, ſtraightway receiue it with gladneſſe.
17. Yet haue they no roote in themſelues, and endure but a time: for when trouble & perſecution ariſeth for the woord, immediately they be offended.
18. Alſo, they that receiue the ſeede amonge the thornes, are ſuch as heare the woorde.
19. But the cares of this world, and the deceitfulneſſe of richeſſe, and the luſtes of other things enter in, and choake the worde, and it is vnfrutefull.
20. But they that haue receiued ſeede in good grounde, are they that heare the woord, and receiue it, & bring forth frute one corne thirty, another ſixty, and ſome an hundreth.

Luke 8.

11. The Parable is this, the ſeede is the woorde of God.
12. And they that are beſide the way, are they that heare: afterwarde commeth the deuell, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, leaſt they ſhould beleeue and be ſaued.
13. But they that are on the ſtones, are they, whiche when they haue hearde, receiue the woorde with ioye: but they haue no rotes, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of temptation goe away.
14. And that which fell among thornes, are they which haue hearde, and after their departure are choaked with cares and with richeſſe and voluptuous liuing, and bring foorth no fruite.
15. But that whiche fell in good grounde, are they which with an honeſt & good hart, heare the woorde and keepe it, and bring forth frute with patience.

MATHEVV and Luke doe ſette downe the expoſition of the Parable, as if that Chriſte hadde ſimply expounded it to his diſciples without reprooving them: but in Marke he doeth ſharply reprooue their ſlackneſſe, becauſe that they which ſhould become teachers of others, did not profite more then others. But the ſumme is, that the doctrine of the Goſpell being ſcattered abroade as ſeede, doeth not bring foorth fruite euery where, becauſe it doeth not alwayes fall vppon frutefull and good ground grounde. He rehearſeth foure ſortes of hearers, of whiche the firſt receiue no ſeede. The ſeconde ſort ſeeme to receiue ſeede, but ſo, that it taketh no roote to liue by: in the third ſort the corne is choaked: ſo there remaineth a fourth part which bringeth foorth fruit. Not that of foure hearers one, or tenne of fortie, do embrace the doctrine, and bring foorth fruite: for it was not the purpoſe of Chriſt to appoynt a certain definite number: nor to deuide them of whom he ſpake, into equall portions: but that there is not alwaies one and the ſame encreaſe of faith where the word is ſowed, but ſometime in more aboundance, ſometime in leſſe: he onely teacheth them that through diuers faultes the ſeede of life periſheth in many, in whome it either preſently corrupteth or wythereth, or by little and little degenerateth. But that we may profite the better by this admonition, it is to be noted that he maketh no mention of the deſpiſers, which doe openly withſtand the word: but they only are noted here, in whom there ſeemeth to be ſome aptneſſe to be taught. But if the greater part of theſe doeth vaniſhe away, what ſhall become of the reſt of the worlde, from whome the doctrine of ſaluation is openly debarred? Nowe I wil come to the perticular poyntes.

19. VVhen ſoeuer a manne heareth the woorde of the kingdome, and vnderſtandeth it not. Firſt he maketh mention of barren and hard grounde, which receiue not the ſede inwardly, becauſe their hearts are not prepared. Such he cõpareth to hard and dry earth, which is in the common hie way, which by continuall treading vppon, becommeth hard as pauement. I woulde we had not ſo many of this ſort at this day as we haue, which thoughe they offer themſelues to heare, yet they ſtande as menne amaſed, and feele no taſte of it at all, and to ſpeake in fewe woordes, they differ little from blockes or ſtones, wherefore it is no maruell if they vaniſhe altogether away. Chriſte ſayeth that the woorde was ſowen in their hearts, whiche though it be an improper ſpeache, yet is it not without reaſon, for the ſinne and wickedneſſe of menne taketh not away the nature from the woorde, but it retaineth ſtill the force of ſeede. And that is diligently to be noted, leaſt we ſhould thinke that the graces of God loſt their forces, though they be not effectuall in vs. For in reſpecte of God, the woorde is ſowed in their hearts, but the hearts of all doe not receiue with meekeneſſe that which is grafted in them, as Iames exhorteth, 1.21. The Goſpell therefore is alwayes in power a frutefull ſeede, but not in deede. In Luke it is added, that the deuill taketh away the ſede out of their hearts, leaſt they beleeuing ſhoulde be ſaued. VVhereby we gather, that as hungry birdes behaue themſelues in ſeedes time, ſo aſſoone as the doctrine is deliuered, this enemie of our ſaluation is preſent, and laboureth by violence to take the ſame away, before it canne take moyſture and bringe foorth fruite. This alſo is no ſmall praiſe of faith, in that it is called the cauſe of our ſaluation.

20. Hee that receiued ſeede in the ſtonie grounde. This ſorte differeth from the former, for the temporall faith, or faith for a ſeaſon, as a conceiuing of ſeede, promiſeth ſome fruite at the beginning: but their hearts are not ſo well and throughly brought in order, as may ſuffice to giue continuall nouriſhment to the ſame.

Of this ſorte of menne alſo we ſee too many at this day, whiche doe

greedely embrace the Goſpel, which ſhortly after doe waxe faint, becauſe there is no liuely affection in them to ſtrengthen and continue them in conſtancie. Wherefore let euery man examine himſelfe throughly, leaſt his haſtineſſe, which giueth a great ſhew, ſpeedily vaniſh (as men ſay) as a flame of ſtubble. For except the woorde doe throughly pearce the whole heart, and take deepe rootes in the ſame, the faith cannot haue continuall moyſture to maintaine the ſame to continue. This readineſſe is worthy to be praiſed, in that they receiue the woorde of God aſſoone as it is vttered, and that without delay and with ioy: yet we muſt know that it is to no purpoſe, vntil that faith ſhall gather a perfect ſtrength, leaſt it wither in the firſt ſpringing. As for example, Chriſt ſayeth: that they which are ſuch, are offended with the trouble of perſecution. And certainly, as the barrennеſſe of the grounde, is tried by the heat of the ſunne: ſo perſecution and affliction diſcouereth their vanitie, which are lightly touched, I know not with what affection, and are not well endued with an earneſt deſire of godlineſſe. Such are called by Mathew and Marke temporiſers, not onely becauſe they profeſsing theſelues to be Chriſtes diſciples for a time, and after fall away into temptation, but becauſe they ſeeme alſo to themſelues to haue a true faith, and therefore in Luke Chriſt ſayth that they beleeue for a time: becauſe that honour which they giue to the goſpell, is like to faith. Yet notwithſtandinge it is to be noted that they are not truely regenerate with incorruptible ſeede, whiche neuer fadeth, as Peter teacheth, 1. Pet. 1. 4. for that ſaying of Iſaias 40. 8. The word of our God ſhall ſtande for euer, is fulfilled in the hearts of the faithfull, in whom the trueth of God once ſetled, neuer fadeth away, but flouriſheth euen to the ende. Yet they which doe louingly and with ſome reuerence receiue the woord of God, they do beleue after a ſort: becauſe they differ from the vnbeleeuers, which either will not giue credite to God when he ſpeaketh, or deſpiſe his worde. Onely let vs knowe that none are partakers of true faith, but they which being ſealed with the ſpirit of adoption, doe call God father from their heart. Alſo, as that ſpirite is neuer extinguiſhed: ſo it is impoſsible that the faith which it hath once engraued in the hearts of the godly, ſhould vaniſh away and periſh.

22. He that receiueth the ſeede among thornes. In the thirde place he reherſeth them which were inwardly apt to nouriſh the ſeede ſowen, if they ſuffered not the ſame otherwiſe to bee corrupted and ſpoyled. Chriſte compareth the pleaſures of the worlde as euill deſires, couetouſneſſe and other affections of the fleſh, to thornes. Though Mathew onely mentioneth the cares of the worlde with couetouſneſſe: but the meaning is all one, for vnder this word is comprehended the baites of pleaſures (whereof Luke maketh mention) and all kinde of euill deſire. For as thornes and other noyſome weedes doe choake vppe the corne, which woulde otherwiſe proſper and growe vppe: ſo the wicked affections of the fleſhe preuaile in the hearts of menne, and ouergrowe the faith, ſo that they ouerwhelme the force of the heauenly doctrine, which is not yet ripe. And though the euill deſires doe poſſeſſe the heart of man, before the woorde of the Lorde make any ſhewe there, yet they ſeeme not to beare any rule at the firſt. But after the corne groweth, and promiſeth to yeelde fruite, then growe they vppe aloſt. Therefore all menne muſt diligently applie themſelues, to roote vppe the thornes out of their hearts, leaſt the worde of God be choaked: for there is no man which is not filled with great aboundance of thornes, as with a thicke woode. And certainly we see very fewe come to ripenesse, because scarce the tenth man applieth himselfe to roote them vppe, no, nor to loppe or cutte them. And the great aboundance whiche shoulde mooue menne to be more diligent, causeth many to be more careleſſe. Christe vseth the phrase of deceitfulnesse of richesse for couetousnesse. And he purposely calleth richesse, begulfull or deceitfull, that men might thereby learne the rather to take heede and to beware of their snares. But let vs remember that as many affectiõs as there be of our flesh, the abundance & varietie whereof is innumerable, so many lettes and hinderances there are to corrupt the seede of life.

23. Hee that receiueth the seede in the good grounde. Christe compareth them onely to good and frutefull grounde in whome the woorde of God not onely taketh rootes, and those deepe and sound, but which doe also ouercome all lettes, least they should hinder the frute of the same. If any man obiecte, that there cannot any be found, voide and free from thornes, the answeare is easie, Christe speaketh not heere of perfection of faith, but onely sheweth in whome the worde doth fructifie. Therefore though the frute be but small, yet who soeuer degenerateth not frõ the sincere worship of God is counted good and frutefull grounde. It behooueth vs to be diligent in rooting vppe of thornes, but because that we shall neuer bring to passe, no not by our daily labour, but that some remnantes will alwaies remaine, yet lette euery one of vs endeuour to mortifie and to kill them, least they hinder the frute of the woorde. That which followeth next, where Christ teacheth that al bring not forth frute in like measure, confirmeth this sentence. For though the frutefulnes of that ground which bringeth foorth frute in thirtie folde, is but small in comparison of a hundred folde, yet we see that Christ ioyneth all those groundes together, which doe not altogither deceiue the labour and hope of the husband man. And we are heereby taught not to despise them, which growe not to great excellencie, when the householder himselfe, thoughe he preferre some one aboue the rest in respecte of his high estate, yet he vouchsafeth the common sheewe of his fauourable goodnesse, also towardes the inferiours. But Hierome wresteth very fondly these three degrees to virgines, widowes and wiues, as though the frute which the Lorde requireth of vs, were onely tied to virginitie, and that the godlinesse of the maried were not oft more plentifull in bringing foorth all frute of righteousnesse. This is also to be noted by the way, that Christ speaketh not hyperbolically of encrease of a hundred folde, for there were diuers regions at that time so frutefull, as it appeareth by many Hystoriographers, which were eye witnesses of the same.

Mathewe 13.	Marke.	Luke.
24. An other Parable put he forth vnto them, saying: The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a man, which sowed good seede in his fielde.
25. But while men slept, there came his enemie, and sowed Tares among the Wheat, and went his way.

26. And when the blade was ſprong vp, and brought foorth fruite, then appeared the Tares alſo.
27. Then came the ſeruauntes of the houſholder, and ſayd vnto him: maſter, ſowedſt not thou good ſeede in thy fielde? from whence then hath it Tares?
28. And he ſayde vnto them: The enuious man hath done this. Then the ſeruants ſayd vnto him: wilt thou then that we goe and gather them vp?
29. But he ſayd: nay, leaſt while yee goe about to gather the Tares, ye pluck vp alſo with them the wheat.
30. Let both growe together vntil the harueſt, and in time of harueſt, I will ſay to the reapers: Gather ye firſt the Tares, and binde them in sheaues to burne them: but gather the wheat into my barne.

Somewhat after.

36. Then ſent Ieſus the multitude away, & went into the houſe. And his diſciples came vnto him, ſaying: declare to vs the parable of the Tares of the field.
37. Then anſwearred he, and ſayde to them: he that ſoweth the good ſeede, is the ſonne of man,
38. And the fielde is the worlde, and the good ſeede, they are the children of the kingdome, and the tares are the children of the wicked.
39. And the enemie that ſoweth them, is the deuil, and the harueſt is the ende of the world, and the reapers be the Angels.
40. As then the Tares are gathered and burned in the fire, ſo ſhall it be in the ende of the world.
41. The ſoune of man ſhall ſend forth his Angels, & they ſhall gather out of his kingdome all things that offend, and them which doe iniquitie.
42. And ſhall caſt them into a furnace of fire: there ſhalbe wailing and gnaſhing of teeth.
43. Then ſhall the iuſt menne ſhine as the ſunne in the kingdome of their father. He that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

That we may profite by this parable, it is worth the labour to conſider to what purpoſe Chriſt applieth it. Some thinke, leaſt the confuſed multitude ſhould flatter themſelues in the outward profeſsion of the goſpel, that he ſayd, that in his field there is oftē mixed bad ſeede with the good, but that a day ſhould come, wherein the Tares ſhould be ſeparated from the wheat. And therefore they ioyne this parable with the laſt, as if they both had one cauſe and one ende. But to me it ſeemeth otherwiſe: for he doth therfore make mentiō of the ſeparation, leaſt the minds of the godly ſhould waxe faint with wearineſſe, in beholding a confuſed mixture of the good with the euill: for though Chriſt hath cleanſed his church with his bloude, that it ſhoulde be without wrinkle and ſpotte: yet he ſuffereth many faultes to remaine.

I ſpeake not of the remnantes of the infirmities of the fleſhe, to which all the faithfull are ſubiect, after they are regenerate by the ſpirit of God.

But

But aſſoone as Chriſte hath gathered a little flocke vnto himſelfe, many hypocrites inſinuate themſelues, peruerſe men creepe in, and many wicked men thruſt themſelues in: and ſo it commeth to paſſe, that the holy company which Chriſt had ſeparated vnto himſelfe, is polluted with many filthy pollutions. Alſo this ſeemeth to be very abſurde vnto many, that either vngodly or prophane, or wicked menne ſhould be nouriſhed in the boſome of the Church. Furthermore, there are many which vnder pretence of zeale are more frowarde then neede, if all things be not ordered according to their deſire: becauſe there doeth not appeare an abſolute puritie, they doe either tumultuouſly depart from the Churche, or elſe they ouerthrowe and deſtroy the ſame throughe their outragious rigour. VVherefore in my iudgement this is the ſimple meaning of the Parable. So long as the Churche wandereth in this worlde, there ſhall hypocrites and wicked men be mixt with the good and ſyncere in the ſame, that the children of God might arme themſelues with patience, and holde their faith ſtrong and ſure, amongeſt the offences with which they might be troubled. And it is a moſte apte compariſon when the Lorde calleth the Churche his fielde, becauſe the faithfull are the ſeede of the ſame. And though that Chriſte doeth ſay afterwarde that the field is the worlde, yet without doubt he properly applied this name to his Church, whereof he began his ſpeache. But becauſe he was to drawe his ploughe through all the coaſtes of the world, and till fields for himſelfe in the whole worlde, and ſowe the ſeede of life in the ſame, he applied that by a figure to the world, which rather agreed to a part of the ſame. Nowe it is to be noted what is meant by wheat, and what by the Tares. This cannot be vnderſtoode of the doctrine, as if he ſhould haue ſayd, where ſoeuer the Goſpel is preached, it is preſently corrupted and defiled with wicked inuentions: for Chriſt would neuer haue forbid them to labour ſtrongly in purging ſuch a corruption. Neither was it lawfull for them to deale in this, as in the maners of men, to tollerate thoſe vices which they coulde not puniſh: for ſo it ſhoulde be lawfull to beare with wicked errours, whiche ouerthrowe the purity of faith. Then Chriſt taketh away the doubt, when he doeth by name call the tares, the children of the wicked. Yet againe it is to be noted, that this cannot be ſimply vnderſtode of the perſons of men, as if God in the creation had ſowed good men, and the deuill euill men. VVhich thing I do therfore giue warning of, becauſe the Maniches haue abuſed this place, that they might caſt a colour vppon their fained deuice of two beginnings. But we knowe that what ſoeuer corruption is in the deuill, or in men, the ſame is nothing elſe but a corruption of ſound and pure nature. Therefore as God maketh not his electe (which are infected with originall ſinne) good ſede by creation, but regenerateth them by the grace of his ſpirite: ſo the deuil createth not euil men, but depraueth them that were created of God, and thruſteth into the fielde of the Lorde, to defile the pure ſeede.

36. He that ſoweth good ſeede. He had ſayde before, that the kingdome of heauen was like to a ſower, but vnproperly. Yet the ſenſe is euident, that the ſame doeth oft befall in the preaching of the Goſpel, as in the ſowing of the fieldes, that the Tare ouer groweth the VVheate. But hee ſetteth downe one ſpeciall thinge: ſaying, that the fielde was ſowed wyth Tares by the deceit of the ennemie: that we might know that this came not by chaunce nor naturally, that many wicked menne ſhould mixe themſelues amongeſt the faithfull, as if they were all one corne: but lette vs learne to impute the faulte of this miſchiefe to the Deuill, not that the condemning of him ſhoulde deliuer menne from guiltineſſe, but firſte that we lay no fault vppon God for thys offence befalling to his Church: then that we wonder not that Tares doe growe vp in the Lordes fielde, ſith Sathan doeth alwayes watche to annoy it. Alſo, it is not without reaſon that Chriſte ſayeth not that the Miniſters of the woorde doe ſowe, but himſelfe onely. For though it be not conuenient that this be reſtrained to his perſon, yet becauſe hee vſeth our helpe, and applieth vs as inſtruments in tillinge of his fielde, ſo that hee alone woorketh by vs and in vs, hee doeth rightly chalenge that to himſelfe, whiche after a ſorte is common vnto his Miniſters. Therefore lette vs remember that the Goſpell is not onely preached by the commaundement of Chriſte, but by his directions and guiding, that we ſhoulde be as his handes, and he as the onely author of the woorke.

39. The harueſt is the ende of the worlde. This is a very troubleſome eſtate, that the Churche ſhould be loaden with the reprobate to the ende of the worlde: yet Chriſte doeth therefore preſcribe vs this time to prepare vs to patience, leaſt wee ſhoulde feede our ſelues wyth vaine hope. It behoueth the paſtours diligently to applie themſelues to the purging of the Churche, and in this behalfe all good menne are to helpe them ſo farre as their calling will ſuffer. But when all menne haue generally putte to their helping handes, yet they ſhall not profite ſo much as vtterly to purge away all filth from the Churche. Therefore we muſt note that the purpoſe of Chriſte was nothinge leſſe, then by ſufferance to nouriſhe ſinnes: His onely purpoſe is to exhorte the faithfull that they ſhoulde not fainte becauſe they are compelled to haue the wicked amongeſt them: Then it doeth alſo ſerue to bridle and to moderate their zeale, whiche thinke it not lawfull to keepe companie but with pure Angelles. The Anabaptiſtes alſo and ſuche like, haue wickedly abuſed this Texte, that they mighte driue away the vſe of the ſworde from the Churche. But the anſweare is ealily made: for ſith they themſelues do admit excommunication, which rooteth out the wicked and reprobate for a time, why ſhould not the godly Magiſtrates exerciſe the ſword againſt the wicked, ſo oft as neede ſhall require? They take exception againſt this, ſaying: that in the one there is ſpace giuen for repentaunce, whiche is not where the puniſhment of death is. As thoughe the theefe founde not comfort of ſaluation vppon the croſſe. But lette this anſweare ſuffice, Chriſte ſpeaketh heere, neither of the office of Paſtours nor of Magiſtrates: but applieth hymſelfe to take away the offence wherewith the weake are troubled, while they ſee the Churche gathered, not onely of the electe, but of the filthy dregges of the wicked.

The reapers be the Angelles. Thys woorde may be applied to thys preſent purpoſe. The reapers in the fourth Chapiter of Iohn, and the eighte and thirtie verſe, are ſayde to be the Apoſtles, in reſpecte of the Prophets, becauſe they entered into their labours. And the commaundement is enioyned and giuen to all the Miniſters of the woorde, that they ſhoulde bring foorth frute to the Lorde, whiche ſhoulde alwayes remaine, Iohn 15. 16. To the whiche that alſo appertaineth, that the corne waxeth white, Iohn

4. 35.

4.35. and requireth the reapers: Also the harueſt is great, but the labourers are fewe, Mathewe 9.37. But heere is an other cauſe of this compariſon: for they are ſayde to be planted in the fielde of the Lorde, whiche occupie a rowme in the Churche. Neither is that any Obiection, that Chriſte in the thirde Chapiter of Mathewe, and the twelfth verſe, is ſayd (aſſone as he commeth forth with his Goſpell) to haue a Fanne in hand, wherwith he wold purge his floure. For there is deſcribed the beginning of the purging of the ſame, which he ſayeth cannot be broughte to paſſe before the laſt day: for then it ſhalbe throughly performed in all poynts. But though he will then at laſt putte his hande to purge the Church by Angelles, yet he beginneth nowe to doe the ſame by godly teachers. Furthermore, he attributeth theſe thinges to the Angelles, becauſe they ſhall not ſtande idle at his tribunall ſeat, but they ſhall offer themſelues to execute his commaundements. They therefore which doe haſten prepoſterouſly to ouertourne what ſoeuer doeth diſpleaſe them, doe preuent the iudgement of Chriſte, as muche as it lieth in them, and by takinge away the office from the Aungelles, they doe raſhly vſurpe it themſelues.

41. They shall gather out of his kingdome. That which followeth of al them which doe iniquitie, is not any thinge diuers, but as an expoſition of the former woordes, as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde, that the time will then be ripe and ready, wherein all thinges ſhall be reſtored into their lawful order, and ſo the wicked ſhall be taken away, which are now the offences. And they are ſo called becauſe they do not onely liue wickedly to themſelues, but they weaken the faith of many, others they hinder from a right courſe, ſome they doe vtterly ouerthrowe, others they caſt downe headlonge. By this we may take a profitable admonition, leaſt we being compaſſed about with ſo many offences, ſhoulde goe forwarde ſlouthfully and careleſly, but that wee ſhoulde earneſtly and diligently bende our ſelues to take heede. Their niceneſſe is heere alſo reprooued, whiche are ſo daintie, that they tourne backe from their courſe, for euery ſmall offence. It is harde for them I graunt, whiche are conuerſant amongeſt many offences, not to ſtumble at the ſame, yea, and ſometime to fall, but their mindes muſt be ſtrengthened and comforted with hope: becauſe it is not to be doubted but that the Sonne of God, who commaundeth his to goe throughe the middeſt of offences, will alſo giue ſtrength to ouercome them all.

He alſo pronoũceth a horrible iudgement againſt all hypocrites & reprobate, which ſeeme now to be chiefe Citizens in the Church, leaſt they ſhoulde lay them downe in reſt, in their vainglorious boaſtinge. That phraſe of a fiery fornace, is a Metaphoricall ſpeache. For as the excellencie of the glory whiche is laide vppe for the children of GOD, doeth exceede further beyonde all our ſenſes, then canne bee expreſſed wyth any woordes: ſo the iudgement and puniſhment whiche remaineth for the reprobate, becauſe it is incomprehenſible, it is ſette foorth by a ſhadowe, according to the meaſure of our capacitie: the ignorance whereof, made the Sophiſters turmoile themſelues in vaine, in diſputations of no weight, as we haue already touched otherwhere.

I know that ſome haue proſecuted more ſubtilly euery perticular clauſe of the ſame: but becauſe it is to be feared leaſt ſuche ſubtleties whiche are not of any ſounde foundation, ſhould leade vs to follies, I had rather deale more ſparingly in ſuche thinges, being content with the ſimple and plaine meaning. If they that are ſo muche delighted with ſuche curioſitie, ſhoulde be demaunded howe the deuill ſhoulde ſowe Tares amongſt the good ſeede, while Chriſte ſlepte and knewe it not, they haue not any thing to anſweare to it: yet I haue endeuoured my ſelfe to be ſparing in theſe matters, ſo that I woulde not omitte any thing woorthy and profitable to be knowen.

43. Then ſhall the iuſt men ſhine. A notable comfort, that the children of God which nowe lie either ouerwhelmed with filthe, or are hid as people of no reputation, or are aſſaulted with reproofes and ſlaunders, ſhall then (as in a cleare ſkie, when all cloudes are ſcattered away) once ſhine clearly and freſſly to be beholden. And the Aduerbe of time, Then is very forcible, for it containeth a ſecreate oppoſition of the preſent ſtate, and of the laſt day, in hope whereof Chriſte comforteth all hys faithful ones. The meaning therefore is, though many wicked ones doe nowe flouriſh alofte in the Churche, yet we muſt certainly hope for that happie daye wherein the Sonne of GOD will extoll his children, and will wipe away all filthe, wherewith their beautie is nowe ouerwhelmed. It is true that the glory to come is promiſed to none, but them in whome the Image of GOD nowe ſhineth, and whiche through continuall degrees of glory are transformed into the ſame: but becauſe the life of the godly is nowe hid, and their ſaluation is inuiſible, becauſe it conſiſteth in hope: Chriſte doeth woorthely call them backe into heauen, that the faithfull may enioy the glory promiſed them. And it is not to be doubted, but that he had reſpecte to the place of Daniell, that hee might thereby the rather touche his hearers to the quicke. As if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde, whereas the Prophet preacheth of the excellent brightneſſe to come, hee noteth withall a temporall darkeneſſe: and therefore that this Propheſie may haue place, the mixture which wrappeth and encloſeth the elect of God with the reprobate for a time muſt be borne with patience. Hee maketh not an equalitie in comparing this glorie of the ſunne to the light. For as Chriſte doeth nowe diſtribute his giftes diuerſly amongeſt the faithfull, ſo will he alſo crowne the ſame in the laſt day. But that muſt be remembred, that I ſayde, that the reſtoring or renewing whiche is deferde to the latter comming of Chriſte, is onely campared with the miſtie and cloudie eſtate of the worlde. The kingdome of the father as the enheritance of the godly is oppoſed againſt the earth, that they might remember that they are pilgrimes in the ſame, and ſo that they might aſpire to heauen. For though the kingdome of God is ſayde otherwhere to be in vs, yet we ſhall not fully enioy the ſame, vntill God be all in all.

Mathewe 13.	Marke 4.	Luke 13.
31. An other Parable he put forth vnto them, ſaying: The kingdō of heauen is like vnto	26. Alſo he ſayde, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man ſhould caſt ſeede in the grouud. 27. And	18. Then ſayde he, what is the kingdome of God like? or wherto ſhall I compare it: 19. It vnto a graine of mustard seede which a man taketh and soweth in his field.

32. Which indeede is the least of all seedes: but when it is growne, it is the greatest among herbes, & it is a tree, so that the birdes of heauen come and build in the braunches thereof.

33. An other parable spake he to them, The kingdome of heauen is like to leauen, which a woman taketh, and hideth in three pecks of meale, till all be leuened.

34. All these thinges spake Iesus vnto the multitude in parables, and without parables spake he not to them,

35. That it might be fulfilled, which was spoken by the Prophet, saying, I wil open my mouth in parables, and wyll vtter the thinges, which haue beene kepte secrete from the foundation of the world.

27. And should sleepe, and rise vp night and day, and the seede should spring and grow vppe, he knoweth not how.

28. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of her selfe: first, the blade, then the eares, after that full corne in the eares.

29. And as soone as the fruit sheweth it selfe, anon he putteth in the sickle: because the harueste is come.

30. He said moreouer, whereunto shal we liken the kingdome of God? or with what comparison shal we compare it?

31. It is like a graine of musterd seede, which when it is sowen in the earth, is the least of all seeds that be in the earth:

32. But after that it is sowne it groweth vp, and is the greatest of all herbes, and beareth greate braunches: so that the fowles of heauen may build vnder the shadow of it.

33. And with many such parables hee preached the word vnto them, as they were able to heare it.

34. And without parables spake he nothing vnto them, but he expounded all thinges to his disciples apart.

19. It is like a graine of musterd seede, which a man tooke and sowed in his garden, and it grewe, and waxed a great tree, and the fowls of the heauen made neastes in the braunches therof.

20. And againe hee said, Whereunto shal I liken the kingdom of god?

21. It is like leauen, which a woman tooke & hidde in three peckes of floure, till all was leauened.

22. And hee went through all cities and townes, teaching & iourneying towardes Ierusalem.

By these parables Christ encourageth his Disciples, least they beeinge offended with the small and base beginninges of the Gospel should giue backe. We see how proudly prophane men doe despise and scorne the Gospel, because it is brought by meane and simple ministers: beecause it is not receiued with the lyking of the whole worlde, but hath a few disciples, and them for the most part men of no estimation nor reputatiō, euen of the common people. Whereby it commeth to passe, that the weake doe despayre of successe, which they measure by the beginninges. But the Lord beginneth his kingdome purposely of meane and contemptible beginnings: so that the proceedings being such, as were not to be hoped for, doe the better set forth his power. Therefore the kingdome of God is compared to a grain of musterd seede, which is the least amongst seedes: yet it encreaseth into such a height, that it becōmeth a tree, wherein birdes doe buyld their neastes. It is also compared to leauen, whiche though it be but smal, doth yet so spread the force of the same; so that a greet heape of meale be leaueued therewith. If therefore the ſhew of the kingdome of Chriſte bee contemptible to the eies of fleſhe and bloud, let vs learne to lift vp our mindes to the great and ineſtimable power of God, which as it once created all things of nothing, ſo it dooth daylye rayſe vp thoſe thinges, which are not aboue the meaſure of mans vnderſtanding: and let vs let alone the proud mē, with their doggiſh ſcornings, vntill the Lord amaſe them before they looke for it. In the meane ſeaſon let not vs be faint harted, but let vs ariſe by faith againſt the pride of the world, vntil the Lord ſhew forth the woonderfull teſtimonie of his power, wherof he ſpeaketh here. The word leaueu is ſomtime taken in the worſt parte, as when Chriſt warneth to take heede of the leauen of the Scribes: in like manner, when Paul teacheth, 1. Cor. 5. 6. that a litle leauen ſowreth a whole lumpe. But here is ſimply to be noted the applying of it to the preſent cauſe. Of the kingdome of God, and of the kingdom of heauen we haue ſpoken otherwhere.

MAR. 26. So is the kingdome of God. Though this ſimilitude tendeth to the ſame purpoſe, that the two former do, yet Chriſt ſeemeth earneſtly to apply his ſpeach to the miniſters of the word, leaſt they ſhould wax cold in theyr office: becauſe the fruite of theyr labour doth not preſently appeare. Therfore he ſetteth before them the husbandmenne to follow, which in hope of a time to reape, doe caſt the ſeede into the earth, and are not vexed with greedines, which neuer is at quiet, but they goe to reſt, and ariſe againe: that is, they do ordinarily apply theyr daily labour, and refreſh themſelues with their nightly reſt, vntill the corne waxe ripe at length in the due time. Therefore, though the ſeede of the word lye hidde for a tyme, as if it were choaked or drowned, yet Chriſt commandeth the godly teachers to be of good comfort, leaſt diſtruſt ſhuld abate their diligence.

MAT. 34. All theſe thinges ſpake he vnto them. Although Mark ſaieth expreſly that Chriſt ſpake vnto them, as they were able to heare: yet it ſeemeth probable to me, that he vſed not theſe continuall parables ſo much for inſtruction ſake, as to make the hearers attentiue and more apt for an other time. For why did hee expound the ſame familiarly to his diſciples aparte from the people? Was it becauſe they were more ignoraunt then the common people? Nay verely: for his will was familyarly to deliuer his meaning and his mind vnto them, but he left others in ſuſpence, vntil they ſhuld become more apt and ripe for the ſame. For theſe were but only certeine entraunces into the goſpel, the fuller and plainer ſhew and declaration of the ſame he differd vnto a time more fit for the ſame. But the ſhew of repugnācie, which ſeemeth to be betweene this ſaing of Math. & the propheſie of Iſaiah, which was alleaged a litle before, is eaſily anſwered. For though he kept back the light of the doctrin from the reprobate, yet notwithſtanding this, he ſo applied himſelfe to their capacitie, that he thereby made them inexcuſable. Therefore he followed that kinde of teaching, which hee knew to be apt and agreeable for his hearers, whom hee knew to bee not yet ſufficiently prepared to learne.

35. That it might be fulfilled. Matthew meaneth not that the Pſalme which he citeth, is a peculyar propheſie of Chriſt; but as the maieſtie of the the spirit stone in the wordes of the Prophet; euen so was the force of the same set forth in the words of Christ. The Prophet beginninge to speake there of the couenaunt of God, whereby he adopted the seede of Abraham, of his daily benefits towards that people, and of the whol gouernment of the Church, he beginneth with great maiestie the Psalme 78.2. I wil open my mouth in parables: that is, I wil not speake of lyght tryfles, but I will speake wisely of most earnest matters. Hee meaneth the same also by hard sentenses: for this repetition is commonly vsed in the Psalme. The word heere first vsed by the Hebrewes, signifieth comparisons or resemblances; then they refer this woord to graue sentenses, because that similytudes for the moste part doe adorne and sette foorth the wordes: the second word there vsed, they doe call sometimes ryddles or hard speaches, sometimes apothegmes. And though Matthewe seemeth to allude to that word parable, yet is it not to be doubted, but that hee meaneth that Christ spake figuratiuelye, that the phrase of his speach beeing more notable then the common speache of the common sorte, might giue some dignitie and weight to the same. And he saieth, that that was fulfilled, which was written in the Psalme: for hee saieth, that he entreated of the secrete misteries of GOD in Allegories and figures, least the doctrine should waxe vile. VVee doe also gather hereby, that there is no absurditie, that Christ spake more darkely to the people for diuerse endes. For though his will was to conceale that, which he spake from the reprobate, yet he applyed so his speach, that his woordes were full of heauenly and diuine maiestie, that men astonished, myght perceiue the same.

LV. 22. Iourneying towards Hierusalem. It is doubtefull whether Luke spake of one onely iourney, or whether he meaneth, when Christ hadde walked through Iudea, and had gone through the coastes thereof, teaching, that he was wont at the feastes to goe vp to Hierusalem. And in the former part of the sentence he seemeth to note what was the continual trade of Christes life after that he entred into the office inioyned him by the father. VVherefore, that the latter part may agree therwith, the meaning must be, that as oft as the feast dayes came, hee frequented the holy assemblies with others.

Matth. 13.	Mark.	Luke.
44. Againe, the kingdome of heauen is like vnto a treasure hidde in the field, which when a man hath found, he hideth it, and for ioy therof departeth, and selleth al that he hath, and buyeth that field.
45. Againe, the kingdome of heauen is like to a merchaunt man, that seeketh good pearles,
46. VVho hauing founde a pearle of great price, went and sold al that he had, and bought it.
47. Againe, the kingdome of heauen is like vnto a draw nette, cast into the sea, that gathereth of all kindes of thinges.
48. VVhich, when it is ful, men draw to land, & sit and gather the good into vessels, and cast the bad away.
49. So

49. So shall it be at the ende of the worlde, the Aungelles shall goe forth, and seuer the bad from amongst the iuste.

50. And shall caste them into a furnace of fire: there shalbe wayling and gnashing of teeth.

51. Iesus said vnto them, vnderstand yee all these things? They said vnto him, yea, Lord.

52. Then sayde hee vnto them, therefore euerye Scribe, which is taught vnto the kingdome of heauen, is lyke vnto an housholder, whiche bryngeth foorth out of his treasure thinges both newe and olde.

The two former similitudes tend to this end, to teach the faithfull to preferre the kingdome of heauen before the whole world, and therefore to renounce themselues and all the desires of the flesh, least they shoulde be any way hindered from the obtaining of so great good. Also this admonition is very necessary for vs: for we are so enchaunted with the deceiteful alluremẽtes of the world, that the heauenly life is not remembred: and because that we are carnall, the spiritual graces of God are the lesse esteemed of vs. Therfore doth Christ rightly extol so much the excellencie of the eternal lyfe, that it should not grieue vs to leaue for that, whatsoeuer otherwise we esteemed to be most deare vnto vs. Firste, hee saieth, that the kingdome of heauen is lyke to a hidden treasure. For as for the moste parte we sette much by these thinges, which are apparant: and so the new and spiritual lyfe, which is proposed in the Gospel is not regarded: because it lyeth hidde shut vp vnder hope. This therefore is a most apt comparison of treasure, whole value decayeth not, though it lye vnder the earth hydde and whelmed from the eies of menne. By which woordes wee are taught that the riches of the spirituall grace of God are not to be accounted of by the viewe of our flesh, or by the outward shew of the same: but as a treasure, though it be hidde, is yet to bee preferred aboue most gorgeous riches. The other similitude dooth likewise expresse the same. One pearle, though it be but small, is yet so much esteemed, that a skilfull merchaunte doubteth not to sell his landes and houses, to buye the same. Therefore though the wisdome of the flesh apprehendeth not the excellencie of the heauenly life: yet wee doe not consider of it, as the dignitie thereof requireth, except wee be readie for that to denie those thinges, which shew gloriously before our eyes. Now, we vnderstand the summe of both the parables: namely, that they are then apt to receiue the grace of the Gospell, which not regarding any other delightes, do wholy addict themselues and their studies to the obtaining of the same.

It is to be noted that Christe saieth, not that the hidden treasure or pearle is so much esteemed of all menne, that they would sel al that they haue for it: but that the price is set of the treasure, after it is founde and knowne: and that the skilfull marchaunte hath this estimation of the pearle. For in these wordes is the knowledge of fayth noted: as if Christ should haue said, the common sort make no account of the kingdom of heauen: because they are men without vnderstandinge, and cannot see ſufficiently how incomparable a treaſure the Lord offereth in his goſpel. Yet it is demaunded whether it be neceſſary to renounce all other good thinges for the enioying of eternall life. I anſwere briefly, this is the ſimple meaning of the wordes, the Goſpel hath not the honour due to it, except we preferre it aboue all the riches, delightes, honours and commodities of the world: and that we being ſo farre ſatiſfied with the ſpiritual graces, which it promiſeth, that we ſhould neglect what things ſoeuer do withdraw vs from the ſame. For it behoueth them to be loſed frō al hinderances, which aſpire into heauen. Therfore Chriſt doth not exhort his faithful ones, but to the denial of thoſe things, which are lets to pietie: yet he graunteth them ſo to vſe and to enioy the temporal benefits of God, as if we vſed them not.

46. And he bought it. Chriſt meaneth not by the word buying, that men ſhould bring any recompence, whereby they might purchaſe to thēſelues the heauenly life: for we know vppon what condition the Lorde calleth his faithful people in Iſa. 55.1. Come & buy without ſiluer, &c. But though the heauenly life, and whatſoeuer pertaine to the ſame bee the free gift of God: yet we are ſaid to buye the ſame, when wee doe wyllingly bridle the deſires of the fleſh, that we be not thereby hindered from the obtaining of the ſame; as Paul ſaith, Philip. 3.8. that al thinges were to him as loſſe and dongue, that he might winne Chriſte.

47. It is like vnto a draw nette. Chriſt teacheth here no new thing, but confirmeth by an other ſimilitude that which wee had before, that the Church of God is mixed with good and euil, ſo long as it is conuerſant vpon the earth. Yet it may be, that the end of this parable is to an other purpoſe: to witte, that Chriſte not onely remedyeth the offence, which troubleth many weakelinges, becauſe that puritie is not founde in the world, which were to be wiſhed: but alſo that he might keepe his diſciples in feare and modeſtie, leaſt they ſhuld contente themſelues with a vaine title of faith, or with a naked profeſsion. I doe willingly allowe both theſe endes, that Chriſt teacheth that the mixture of good and euill muſt be patiently borne, vntill the end of the world: becauſe the true & perfect reſtitution of the Church ſhall not be before that time. Then that he admoniſheth that it ſufficeth not, nay, it is to no purpoſe for vs to be gathered into the ſheepfold, except we be peculyar & choſen ſheepe: to which purpoſe belongeth that ſaying of Paule, 2. Tim. 2.19. The lord knoweth who are his: therefore let euery one that calleth on the name of the Lord departe from iniquitie. Alſo he compareth the preaching of the Goſpel very aptly to a nette drawne vnder the water, that wee might know that the preſent ſtate of the church is as a thing cōfuſed. For though our God, as he is the God of order, and not of confuſion, commendeth diſcipline vnto vs: yet for a time he graunteth the hypocrites a place amongſt the faythfull, vntill he at the laſt day doe bring his kingdome into perfect order. Therefore as much as in vs lyeth, let vs endeuour to correct vices, & let filthines be feuerely purged: yet ſhal not the Church be free from wrinckles and ſpots, before that Chriſt ſhal ſeparate the lambes from the goates.

51. Vnderſtand yee all theſe thinges? That muſt be remembred, which wee ſaw before, that all the parables were expounded priuately to the diſciples. But now after the Lorde hath familyarly and ſo louinglye inſtru-cted them, he alſo admoniſheth them, that he hath not only employed his labour in teaching them, that might only be wiſe for themſelues, but that they ſhould impart vnto others that, which was committed to thē. And by this meanes he ſharpneth them & prouoketh them the more to endeuour to learne. Therfore he ſaieth, that teachers are like to houſholders, which are not only careful, for that they ſhal liue by themſelues, but they haue alſo prouiſion laid vp in ſtore for the nouriſhment of others. Then they liue not careleſly for a day: but they prouide for a much longer time to come. And the meaning is, that the teachers of the Church ought to be inſtructed by long ſtudy, that as neede ſhal require they may miniſter to the Church abundance of doctrine out of the word of God, as out of a ſtorehouſe. That many of the old writers, by new & old do vnderſtād the law & the goſpel, ſeemeth in my iudgment to be wreſted. I therfore do take it more ſimply for the diuerſe & manifold wayes of diſpenſing the miſteries, which they do aptly & wiſely apply to euery mās capacity.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 7.
		36. And one of the Phariſes deſired him that he would eate with him: and hee went into the Phariſes houſe, and ſate downe at table.
		37. And behold, a woman in the citie, which was a ſinner, when ſhee knew that Ieſus ſate at table in the Phariſes houſe, ſhee brought a boxe of ointemente.
		38. And ſhee ſtoode at his feete behind him, weeping, and beganne to waſh his feete with teares, and did wipe them with the haieres of her head, and kiſſed his feete, and annoynted them with the ointment.
		39. Now, when the Phariſe, which had him, ſaw it, hee ſpake within himſelfe, ſaying, If this man were a Prophet, hee woulde ſurely haue knowne, whoe, and what manner of woman this is, which toucheth him: for ſhe is a ſinner.
		40. And Ieſus anſwered, and ſaid vnto him, Simon, I haue ſomwhat to ſay vnto thee, and he ſayde, maiſter ſay on.
		41. There was a certeine lender, which hadde two debters: the one ought fiue hundred pence, and the other fiftie.
		42. VVhen they had nothing to pay, hee forgaue them both. VVhich of them therefore, tel me, will loue him moſt?
		43. Simon anſwered, and ſaid, I ſuppoſe that he, to whom he forgaue moſt. And he ſaid vnto him, thou haſt trnely iudged.
		44. Then hee turned to the woman, and ſaid vnto Simon, Seeſt thou this woman? I entred into thyne houſe, and thou gaueſt me no water to my feete: but ſhe hath waſhed my feete with teares, and wiped them with the hayres of her head.
		45. Thou

45. Thou gauest mee no kisse, but shee sines the time I came in, hathnot ceased to kisse my feete.

46. Myne head with oyle thou diest not anneint: but she hath annoynted my feete with oyntment.

47. Wherefore I say vnto thee, many sinnes are forgiuen her: for shee loued much. To whom a litle is forgiuen the same doth loue a litle.

48. And hee sayde vnto her, Thy sinnes are forgiuen thee.

49. And they that sate at table with him, beeganne to say within themselues, who is this that euen forgiueth sinnes?

50. And he said to the woman, thy faith hath saued thee, goe thy way.

36. And one of the Pharises desired him. This history declareth how ouerthwart all they are, which know not the office of Christe, in conceiuing, yea, & in seeking & taking offences. A Pharisee inuiteth Christ: wherby we gather, that he was one, neither of the enuious and violent enemies of his doctrine, neither of the proud contemners: but though hee was meeke, he was presently offended, when he sawe a woman gentlye admitted by Christ, who in his opinion should haue beene driuen from his company and speach: and therefore he denieth him to be a Prophet, because he knew not the Mediatour, whose peculiar office it should bee, to reduce miserable sinners into fauour with God. This truely was somwhat to vouchsafe Christ the honour of a Prophet: but he ought also to haue enquired to what end he should be sent, what he should bring, and to be short, what was enioyned him of the father, because hee neglected the grace of reconciliation, which is specially to bee taken holde of in Christe, hee thought him not to be a Prophet. And certeinely this woman ought to haue bene reiected, if she had not by the grace of Christe her sinnes being abolyshed, obteined a new righteousnesse. Simon is deceiued onely in this, because not considering that Christ came to saue that was lost, he coniectureth rashly that hee could not discerne the worthye from the vnworthy. Further, least any such disdainefulnes should ouerwhelme vs, let vs know first, that Christ was giuen as a deliuerer of miserable and lost men, to restore them from death to life. Then let euery man examine himselfe and his life: so it shall come to passe that we shall not wonder that others are receiued with vs, because no man shall be so bold as to preferre himselfe aboue others. For hypocrisie onely puffeth men vp into securitie, so that they despise al others.

37. A woman in the citie, which was a sinner. It is so word for word, as I haue trãslated it: Erasmus thought best to vse the preterplusect tence of the verb, least any should think her then as yet to haue bene a sinner. But he leaueth the very meaning of the words. For Luke woulde note what the behauiour of the woman was, and what all men thought of her. For though her sodeine chaunge hadde made her an other womanne before GOD, then shee was before, yet the infamy of her former life was not as yet extinguished amongst men.

Therefore

Therfore by common iudgemente ſhee was a ſinner, that is, of a wicked and ſhametull life. VVhereuppon Simon dooth euill interre that Chriſt had not the ſpirite of diſcretion, who knewe not that infamy ſo commonly knowne.

40. Ieſus anſwered. Chriſt declareth by this aunſwere how muche Simon was deceaued. For he reuealing and ſetting forth his ſilente and ſecrete thought, prooueth that hee hath ſome greater excellencie then the prophets. For, he anſwereth not his words, but he refuteth that, which he kept ſecrete within. And that not for Simons ſake onely, but that we all may thereby learne that it is not to be feared, that hee ſhoulde reiect any ſinners from him, who is ready no leſſe lyberallye, as with outſtretched armes to receiue all, then gentlye and loungly e to call them to him.

41. Two debters. The ſumme of this parable is, that Simon erred in condemning the woman, which the heauenly Iudge hath cleared. And he prooueth that ſhe is righteous, not becauſe ſhe hath ſatiſfied God: but becauſe ſinnes are forgiuen her: for otherwiſe the ſimilitude ſhould not agree, where Chriſt ſaieth, the debtes were freely forgiuen the debters, becauſe they were not able to pay. Therefore it is maruaile that ſo many interpreters were ſo grolly deceaued, as though this woman ſhoulde obtaine forgiueneſſe by teares, annoynting and kiſsing of his feete. For the argument, which Chriſt vſeth is not taken of the cauſe, but of the effect: for this in order is firſt to receiue the benefit, then to giue thanks: and free forgiueneſſe is heere noted to be the cauſe of this mutuall loue. In ſumme, the argument, wherby Chriſt prooueth that this woman is reconciled to God, is gathered of the fruites or the latter effectes.

44. Hee turned to the woman. The Lord ſeemeth ſo to compare Simon with the woman, that he maketh him bound onelye for ſmall offences. But the manner of his graunting is, as if he ſhould haue ſaid, Simon, imagine that thy guiltineſſe were but ſmall, from the which the Lorde hath deliuered thee: and that this woman was ouerwhelmed with many and moſt grieuous ſinnes: yet thou ſeeſt that ſhe is forgiuen, and ſhe now doth teſtifie the ſame in deede. For what meane theſe teares thus abundantly ſhedde, what the continual waſhing of my feete, what the precious ointment, but that ſhe confeſseth her ſelfe to haue bene ouerwhelmed with a wonderfull weight of damnation? And now ſhe embraceth the mercie of God ſo much more earneſtly, by how much ſhee acknowledgeth her ſelfe to haue greater neede of the ſame. Therfore by Chriſtes words it can not be gathered, whether Simons debt was ſmall, and whether hee was deliuered from the guiltines of the ſame. It is rather to be beleeued, that he was a blind hypocrite, and then was yet drowned in the filthines of his ſinnes. But Chriſt reſted vpon this one thing, though ſhe had bene a wicked woman, yet theſe are manifeſt ſignes of her righteouſnes, that to teſtifie her thankfulnes, ſhe omitted no kinde of duetie, and ſhe declared by al meanes ſhe could how much ſhe was bound to God: yet Chriſt admoniſheth Simon that there is no cauſe why hee ſhoulde flatter himſelfe, as though he were free from al fault: for he alſo had neede of mercie. Then, if he himſelfe do not pleaſe God without forgiuenes, hee ought by theſe ſignes of repentaunce and thankfulnes to conſider, that whatſoeuer this woman had ſinned, was forgiuen her. The wordes are to be noted noted wherein this woman is preferred aboue Simon: namely, that ſhee waſhed Chriſtes feete with her teares, and wiped them with her hayres, when he had not commaunded to giue him ſo much as common water: that ſhee ceaſed not to kiſſe his feete, when he had not vouchſafed to receiue Chriſt with a kiſſe of ſalutation for a gueſt: that ſhe had powred pretious ointment vpon his feete, and he had not annoynted his head with oyle. Alſo this was the cauſe why the Lorde, who was a ſingular example of a ſparing and moderate life, ſuffered the coſt of this oyntment to be beeſtowed vppon him: beecauſe the miſerable ſinner ſhoulde by this meanes teſtifie that ſhee ought all to him. For he deſired not delightes, nor was allured with pleaſaunt ſauour, nor allowed glorious decking, but looked onely for an earneſt teſtimonie of repentaunce: which is alſo ſette forth by Luke, as an example to vs: for the teares are witneſſes of her ſorow, which is the beginning of repentaunce. She came behynde Chriſt, and there threw her ſelfe downe at his feete, in which appeared her ſhamefaſtnes and humilitie: ſhe brought her oyntment, and offered her ſelfe and all ſhee had in ſacrifice to Chriſt. All theſe things are for vs to follow: but the ſheading of the oyntement was a perticular action, which ſhould be yll drawne into a general rule.

47 Her ſinnes are forgiuen her. Some thinking the verbe to haue bene of the moode of exhorting, doe gather this ſenſe, ſith this woman ſheweth by theſe notable deedes, that ſhe wholly burneth with the loue of Chriſt, it is not meete that the Church ſhould be more ſharpe or harde againſt her, but that ſhe ſhould rather be gently entreated, though ſhee had grieuouſlye offended. But the maner of placing of the Greeke word being wel conſidered, that ſubtill expoſition may be reiected, which the texte refuſeth. For a litle after Chriſt ſpeaking to the woman rehearſeth the ſame, where the maner of exhorting could not agree. And the contrary clauſe followeth this ſentence, leſſe is forgiuen to him that loueth leſſe. Though the verbe of the preſent tence may be reſolued into the preter tence. For ſith ſhe endeuored to perfourme carefully al the dueties of pietie, Chriſt hereof inferreth, that though ſhe was couered with many ſinnes, yet the mercy of God was greater then that ſhe ſhould be accounted a ſinner any more. But this loue is not ſayde to be the cauſe of forgiueneſſe, but a ſigne following after, as I ſayde before. For this is the meaning of the wordes. They which ſee ſo great deſire of pietie in a womanne are peruerſe Iudges, except they iudge thereby that God hath already bene mercifull vnto her, ſo that free forgiueneſſe hath in order gone before. For Chriſt doth not diſpute by what price men ſhould obtaine the grace of God, but he proueth that God hath now forgiuen this miſerable ſinner, and that mortall man ſhould not be ſo hard againſt her.

48. Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee. It may bee demaunded to what ende Chriſt promiſeth her againe that forgiueneſſe, which ſhe had obtayned, and whereof ſhee was aſſured. Some ſay that this was ſpoken not ſo much for her ſake, as for others. But in my iudgement he had eſpeciall regarde of her: as ſhall more euidently appeare by thoſe thinges, which follow.

It is no meruaile that ſhee ſhoulde againe bee abſolued by Chriſtes wordes, which hadde taſted his grace before: and who was perſwaded that hee was the onely ſanctuary of her ſaluation. So it is neceſſary that fayth ſhould alwayes goe before, when we aske of the Lorde, that hee would forgiue our ſinnes. Neyther do we make this prayer in vaine, as a thing needleſſe, but that the heauenly Iudge would more and more ſcale his mercy in our hearts, and by this meanes quiet our conſciences. Therefore though this woman had conceaued faith by this faith which ſhe had obtained, yet this promiſe was not ſuperfluous: for it much auailed to the confirmation of that faith.

49. They which ſate at the table with him beganne to ſay. Heere we perceiue againe, that menne not knowing the office of Chriſte, doe thereof gather to themſelues new offences. And this is the roote of euil, that no manne ſearcheth his owne miſeries, which without doubt would prouoke all menne to ſeeke remedy. But it is no meruaile, if the hypocrites, which ſleepe in their own ſinnes ſhould murmur at this, as at a ſtraunge and wonderfull matter, that Chriſt ſhould forgiue ſinnes.

50. Thy fayth hath ſaued thee. Chriſt, to appeaſe the murmurers, and withal to comfort the womanne, prayſeth her fayth: as if he ſhould haue ſayde, howſoeuer theſe do grudge, eſtabliſhe thou thy ſelfe conſtantly in that fayth, which hath brought thee aſſured ſaluation. Yet Chriſte reſerueth vnto himſelfe that right giuen him of the father: for as the power of healing was in him, the fayth is rightly directed to him. And it declareth that the woman was not lead by raſhnes, or by ignorauncе to come vnto him, but by the direction of the ſpirit ſhee held the right waye of fayth. Whereof it followeth, that we cannot beleeue in any other, then in the ſonne of God: but that we ſhould make him the Iudge of life and death. For, if we ought to beleeue in Chriſt, becauſe the heauenly father hath giuen him power to forgiue ſinnes, aſſoone as faith is applyed to any other, this his honour is of neceſsitie taken from him. By this ſaying alſo is their errour confuted, which thinke that ſinnes are redeemed by charitie: for Chriſt ſetteth here downe a farre other meanes, in that we embrace the mercy offered by fayth. In the laſt clauſe is noted the incomparable fruite of fayth, which the ſcripture ſo oft commendeth, to witte, that it bringeth peace and ioy to the conſciences, leaſt through diſquietneſſe and trouble they ſhould be toſſed hyther and thither.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 10.
		38. Now it came to paſſe as they went, that he entred into a certeine towne, and a certeine womanne, named Martha, receiued him into her houſe.
		39. And ſhee had a ſiſter called Mary, whiche alſo ſate at Ieſus feete, and heard his preaching.
		40. But Martha was cumbred about much ſeruing, and came to him, and ſaide, maiſter, doeſt thou not care that my ſiſter hath left mee to ſerue alone? bid her therefore that ſhe helpe me.
		41. And Ieſus anſwered, and ſayde vnto her, Martha, Martha, thou careſt, and art troubled about many things.

42. But

42. But one thing is needefull: Marye hath chosen the better part, which shal not bee taken awaye from her.

38. That he entred. This hyſtorie declareth that whether ſoeuer Chriſt went, he was not giuen priuatelye to himſelfe, nor to ſeeke his owne commodities or delightes: but this was his onely deſire, to profit others, and that he might perfourme the office enioyned him of his father. For Luke declareth, that when he was friendly entertained of Martha, aſſoone as he was entred into the houſe, he applyed himſelfe to teachinge and to exhorting. But becauſe that this place is vilely wreſted to the praiſe of the life contemplatiue, as they call it, wee muſt ſeeke out the naturall meaning, whereby it ſhall appeare that the purpoſe of Chriſte was nothing leſſe then to appoynt his diſciples to liue in ydleneſſe and in colde ſpeculations.

It is an olde errour, that they which withdraw themſelues from buſineſſe, and apply themſelues wholly to contemplations, doe lyue an Angelles life. And the Sorboniſtes doe ſeeme to haue drawne their triſling about this matter out of Ariſtotle, who placeth his chiefeſt good thinge, and the laſt end of mans lyfe in contemplation, which, according to his iudgement, is the enioying of vertue. And whē ambition had caried ſome to withdraw themſelues from the common trade of life, or that froward men had giuen themſelues to ſolytarines and idlenes, this pride alſo followed, that by doing nothing they imagined thēſelues to be like to Angels: for the trauelling life was ſo much diſdained of them, as if it ſhould withdraw vs from heauen. But we know that men were created to this end, that they ſhould labour, and no ſacrifices doe pleaſe God better, then that euery man ſhould labour in his calling, and apply himſelfe to lyue profitably for the common wealth. But how ignorantly they haue abuſed the wordes of Chriſt to proue their deuice, ſhall eaſily appeare out of the plaine ſenſe.

Luke ſaieth that Mary was at Ieſus feete: doth he meane that ſhe did nothing elſe al her lyfe time? But the Lord rather commandeth that the times ſhould ſo be deuided, that he which ſtudieth to profit in GOD his ſchoole, ſhould not be an ydle and a negligent hearer: but that he ſhould put in practiſe that which he learned: for there is a time of hearing, and a tyme of labouring. Therefore the Monkes doe very fondly wreſt this place, as though Chriſt ſhould compare the contemplatiue life with the labouring life: when as Chriſt doth ſimply ſhew to what end, and how he would be receiued. For though the hoſpitalitie of Martha is worthye of cōmendation, as it is praiſed: yet Chriſt noteth two faults in the ſame. The firſt is, that Martha exceeded meaſure in buſiyng her ſelf. For Chriſt had rather to be enterteined ſparingly, and with ſmall charg, thē that the holy matrō ſhuld take ſo much paine. The ſecond fault was that Martha withdrawing her ſelf, & being occupied in ſuperfluous labors, made the cōming of Chriſt vnprofitable to her. For L. noteth her exceſſe, in that he mētioneth her much ſeruing, when Chriſt was content with a litle. For this was aſmuch as if a man receiuing a prophet, ſhuld haue no regard to hear him, but ſhuld rather bury al the doctrine with great & ſuperfluous preparatiō. But the lawful receiuing of the prophets is, whē the profit is ceiued, which God appoynteth and offreth to vs by them. Now, wee ſee that the diligence of Martha worthy of cõmendation, yet was not without faultes. Alſo it had this fault more, that Martha pleaſing herſelfe in theſe troubleſome labours, deſpiſed the godly deſire that her ſiſter hadde to learne. By which example we are warned to take heede alwayes, leaſt any in weldoing preferre themſelues aboue others.

42. One is needefull. Some expound it too coldly, that one kind of meat is ſufficient. Others diſpute more ſubtilly, but beſides the purpoſe of an vnitie. But Chriſt bent himſelfe an other way: namely, that whatſoeuer the faythful ſhould take in hand to doe, and whereto ſoeuer they apply themſelues, yet there is one end, to the which it is meete þ al things ſhuld be referred. The ſumme therefore is that we wander about in vaine, if we direct not al our actions to a certeine end. Therefore the hoſpitalitie of Martha was faultie, becauſe that the principal matter was neglected, and ſhe was wholly caryed away in taking care about her buſines. Yet the meaning of Chriſt is not that al other thinges are nothing this onely excepted, but order muſt be wiſely holden, leaſt the acceſſary, as they cal it be more eſteemed then the principal. Mary hath choſen the good parte. Here is no compariſon, as fooliſh and abſurd interpreters doe dream: but Chriſt onely ſaieth, that Mary is occupyed in a holy and profitable exerciſe, frõ which ſhe ought not to be drawn: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, thou mighteſt wel here haue reproued thy ſiſter, if ſhe following idleneſſe, or being occupied in vaine cares, or deſiring any other thing not meete for her calling, ſhould haue layde the whole burden of prouidinge for the houſe vpon thee. But now when ſhe applyeth her ſelfe well, and profitably to hearing, it were not well to draw her from it: for ſuch opportunitie is not had alwayes. Though others doe take the latter part otherwiſe, as if Chriſt had ſayd that Mary had therfore choſen the better part, becauſe the fruit of the heauenly doctrine neuer falleth away; the which iudgement, though I do not reiect, yet I haue followed that, which I think dothe moſt aptly agree to the meaning of Chriſt.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 12.
		13. And one of the company ſayd vnto him, maiſter, bid my brother deuyde the enheritance with me.
		14. And he ſaid vnto him, man, who made mee a iudge, or a deuider ouer you?
		15. VVherefore he ſaid vnto them, take heede, and beware of couetouſnes: for though a man haue abundaunce, yet his lyfe ſtandeth not in hu riches.
		16. And he put forth a parable vnto them, ſaying, The ground of a certeine rich manne brought foorth fruites plenteouſly.
		17. Therefore hee thought with himſelfe, ſayinge, what ſhal I doe, becauſe I haue no rowme, where I may lay vp my fruits?
		18. And hee ſayd, this will I do, I wil pull downe my barnes, and build greater, and therein will I gather al my fruits and my goodes.
		19. And

19. And I will say to my soule, soule, thou haste much goods laid up for many yeeres: liue at ease, eat, drinke, and take thy pastime.
20. But God said vnto him, O foole, this night will they fetch thy soule from thee: then whose shal those things be, which thou hast prouided?
21. So is hee that gathereth riches to himself, and is not rich in God.

13. Bid my brother deuide. The Lord being required to giue iudgment for the deuision of enheritaunce, refused to doe it. Sith this made for the nourishment of brotherly concorde, and the office of Christe was not onely to reconcile men to God, but to bring them to mutuall consent: it is demaunded what the cause should be, why he would not end the strife betweene two brethren. And it appeareth that there were two causes especially why he abstained from the office of a Iudge. First, sith the Iews imagined the kingdom of the Messiah to be earthly, his will was to take heede, least he should by any example nourish that errour: for if they had seene him deuide the enheritaunces, the rumour of that decde shoulde presently haue bene spread abroad. So many hoped for a carnall redemption, and gaped too greedily after the same: the wicked gloried that hee should bring new matters to passe, and that hee should ouerthrowe the state of the Romane empyre. VVherefore there could not a better aunsweare haue bene giuen then this, whereby all menne might vnderstand that the kingdome of Christ was spirituall. Therefore let vs learne to gouern our selues soberly, nor to attept any thing, which may be drawne into the worst part. Secondly, it was also the Lordes wil to make a difference betweene the polytike Empyres of this worlde, and the gouernment of his Church: for he was created Doctor by the father, who should by the sword of the word cut downe thoughtes and affections, and should pearce into the soules of men: but he was not a magistrate to deuide enheritaunces. So the theft of the Pope and his Priests is here condemned, which pretending themselues to be Pastors of the Church, yet are so bolde as to inuade the earthly and prophane iurisdiction, which nothing pertaineth to their office. For there is somewhat, which is of it selfe lawfull, which yet belongeth not to euery man. Also in my iudgment there is a third perticular reason: that is, because Christe saw this man leauing the doctrine, and prouiding for his own houshold commodities. And this disease is too comō, so that many professing the gospel, doubt not to abuse the pretence of the same for the encreasing of their wealth, and to pretend the authoritie of Christ for their owne gaines.

This may be readily gathered by the circumstaunce of the exhortation: for except that man had abused the title of the Gospell to his owne gaine, there had not bene occasion giuen to Christ to condemne his couetousnesse. Therefore the text doth sufficiently declare that this manne was but a faigned disciple, whose mind was drowned in fieldes or money bagges. Furthermore, the Anabaptistes doe too foolishlye inferre of this aunswere, that it is not lawfull for a Christian man to deuide enheritaunces, to thrust himself in, to deale with worldlye affayres, or to execute any ciuill office. For Christe argueth not of the matter it selfe, but of his owne calling: beecauſe hee was ordayned of his father to an other ende, hee ſaith, that hee is no iudge, becauſe hee hath no ſuch commaundement. Therfore let this rule be of force amongſte vs, that euery man keepe himſelfe within the bands of the calling, wherein the Lorde hath ſet him.

15. Take heede and beware. Firſt, he calleth his diſciples backe from couetouſnes, then, that he might purge the mindes throughly from this diſeaſe, he affirmeth that our lyfe conſiſteth not in aboundance: By which wordes is noted the fountaine and inward beginning, whence this mad deſire of hauing ariſeth. For the people doe commonly iudge, that the more a man poſſeſſeth, the happier his life is, and they imagine riches to be the cauſe of a bleſſed lyfe. Hence commeth that intemperatate deſire of hauing, which as a burning furnace ſendeth out his heate, and yet ceaſeth not to burne within. If that we were perſwaded that ryches and all aboundaunce of goodes, be helps of this preſent life, which the Lord giueth vnto vs with his own hand, and bleſſeth the vſe thereof, this one thought would eaſily appeaſe all wicked deſires: and that do the faythfull finde true by theyr owne experience. For whereof commeth it to paſſe, that with ſtayed mindes they ſhould depend of God alone: but becauſe they binde not their life, nor make it ſubiecte to aboundaunce of riches, but they reſt in the prouidence of God, who onely both ſuſtayneth vs by his power, and giueth vs as much as is meete?

16. Hee put forth a ſimilytude. This ſimilytude propoſeth vnto vs, as in a glaſſe, a lyuely ſhew of that ſentence, that menne lyue not by the abundaunce of their riches. For ſith the richeſt doe alſo loſe their lyfe in a moment, what helpeth it to gather vppe great heapes of riches? Al men graunt this to be true, ſo that Chriſte ſpeaketh nothing, but that which is vſuall and common, and which is in al mens tongues: but in the meane ſeaſon how doth euery man apply and giue his minde? Doe not all men rather ſo frame theyr lyues, and ſo mixe their counſelles and theyr reaſons, that they may depart furtheſt of from God, placeing their lyfe in the preſent aboundaunce of theyr riches? Therefore all menne haue neede to waken themſelues, leaſt they imagining themſelues to be bleſſed by reaſon of their riches, ſhould entangle themſelues in the ſnares of couetouſneſſe. Alſo in this parable is ſette forth vnto vs the vncerteine ſhortnes of this life. Further, how riches do profit nothing for the lengthening of the life. There is a third thing to bee added, which is not expreſſed, but may be eaſily gathered out of the former, that this is a notable helpe to the faythful, that ſeeking their daily bread from the Lord whether they be rich or poore, their only reſt is in his prouidence.

17. What ſhall I doe? The wicked are therefore doubtfull in theyr counſelles, becauſe they knowe not the lawefull vſe of their riches: then becauſe they being dronken in theyr peruerſe hope, doe forgette themſelues. So this rich manne ſetting the hope of his lyfe in his great aboundaunce, ſhaketh the remembraunce of death farre away. And yet is dyſtruſt annexed to this pride: for couetouſnes, which neuer is filled, doth yet neuertheleſſe vexe theſe rich menne, as this rich manne enlargeth his barnes, as though his belly being ſtuffed with his former barnes, had not yet enough. Yet Chriſt doth not expreſly condemne this, that hee dooth the parte of a diligent and careſull houſholder in laying vp prouiſion:

but because that as a bottomlesse deepe he would swallowe vp and deuoure many barnes in his greedy couetousnes: whereof it foloweth that hee knewe not the true vse of plentifull prouision. Nowe, when he exhorteth himselfe to eating and to drinking, he remembreth himself no longer to be a manne, but beecommeth proud in his aboundaunce. And wee doe dayly see euident examples of this insolencie in prophane men, which set the heap of their riches, as brasen fortresses against death. When he saith, my soule, eate and be mery: in this speach there is great force after the phrase of the Hebrewes: for he so speaketh vnto himself, that yet he would declare that he hath aboundance to fil the desire of his minde and all his senses.

20. O foole, this night will they fetch away thy soule from thee. There is an allusion in this word soule. The rich man spake first to his soule, as the seat of al his affections: but now it is spoken of the life it selfe, or of the vital spirit. The verbe they wil fetch, though it be the plural number, yet, because it is indefinite, it signifieth nothing else, then that the life is in the power of an other, which the rich manne accounted to be in his owne hande: which I doe therefore giue warning of, because that some doe without cause imagine this to be spoken of the Aungelles. And in this is the rich manne reproued of follye, that hee knew not that his lyfe depended of an other.

21. So is hee that gathereth riches to himselfe. Sith it appeareth that there is here a comparison, the exposition of one parte of the sentence muste be gathered out of the other. Let vs therefore define what the meaning of this is, to be rich in God, or toward God, or in respecte of God. They which are but meanely exercised in the scripture doe knowe that the Greekes doe vse ofte one of these prepositions for an other. But it is no matter, which of the two wayes soeuer be taken: for this is the sum, they are rich toward God, which truste not in earthly thinges, but depende of his onely prouidence. Neyther is it of anye waight, whether they haue aboundaunce, or be in wante: so that both sortes doe sincerelye aske theyr daily bread from the Lord. For that which is opposed against it, to gather riches to himselfe, signifieth as much, as to neglecte the blessing of God, and carefully to heape vp great aboundance, as if theyr hope were shutte vppe in their barnes. Of this may the end of the parable be gathered, that vayne are their counselles, and ridiculous are theyr labours, which trusting to the aboundaunce of their riches, do not repose themselues in God alone, nor are not content with his measure ready to beare both estates, and at length they shal beare the iudgement of theyr owne vanity.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 13.
		1. There were certeine men present at the same season, that shewed him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their owne sacrifices. 2. And Iesus answered and saide vnto them, suppose yee, that these Galileans were greater sinners then al the other Galileās, because they haue suffered such things?

3. I tell you nay: but except yee amend your liues, yee shall al likewise perish.
4. Or think you that those eighteene, vpon whome the tower in Siloam fell, and slew thē, were sinners aboue al men that dwell in Hierusalem?
5. I tell you nay: but except you amend your liues, yee al shal likewise perish.
6. He spake also this parable, A certeine manne had a figtree planted in his vineyarde, and hee came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.
7. Then said he to the dresser of his vineyard, behold, this three yeares I haue come and sought fruite of this figtree, and finde none, cut it downe: why keepeth it also the ground barren?
8. And he answered, and saide vnto him, Lorde, let it alone this yeare also, till I digge rounde about it, and doung it.
9. And if it beare fruit, wel: if not, then after shalt thou cut it downe.

2. Suppose yee that these? This place is veryc profitable euen for this cause, for that this disease is engrafted almost in vs all, that beeing too sharpe & seuere Iudges against others, we flatter our selues in our own sinnes. So it falleth out, that we doe not onely exaggerate the sinnes of our brethren more sharply then is meete: but also if any aduersitie come vnto them, we condemne them as wicked men and reprobates. In the meane while, whosoeuer is not touched with the hand of God, sleepeth carelesly in his owne sinnes, as if he had God fauourable and mercifull: wherein there is a double fault. For as oft as God chastiseth any man in our sight he admonisheth vs of his iudgementes, that euery one shoulde learne to examine themselues, and to consider what they haue deserued. And that he spareth vs for a time, it is of his benignitie and mercy, wherby he calleth vs to repentaunce, and it ought to be farre from vs from taking occasion thereby of sluggishnes. That Christ therefore might correct that wicked iudgement, wherein we become enemies to them that are in miseries & in afflictions, and that hee might withall shake away those pleasures, wherein euery man flattereth himselfe: first, he teacheth that they are not the worst, which are hardest handled of al others: because God so executeth his iudgementes in that order and maner as hee shal think good, so that some are presently punished, others do rest long in idlenes and pleasures. Then he saith, that as many calamities as befall in the world, ar so many testimonies of the wrath of God. Wherby we gather what destruction there remaineth for vs, except we amend. The there aryseth occasion of exhortation of this, that some brought worde that Pylate mingled mannes bloud with sacrifices: to witte, that sacrifises by such an haynous deede might come into detestation. And because it is likelye that this reproach was done to the Samaritanes, which were fallen from the pure worshippe of the lawe, it was an easie and a readye matter for the Iewes by condemning the Samaritans to iustifie themselues: but the Lord turneth them an other way.

And

And becauſe the wickedneſſe of that whole nation was odious and infamous vnto them, he demãdeth of them whether they thinke that thoſe wretches which were ſlaine by Pilate, were worſe then all others: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, it is not vnknown vnto you, that that land is ful of wicked men, and that there remaine many yet aliue, which were worthy of the ſame puniſhment. A blinde therefore and a wicked iudge is he, which meaſureth the ſinnes of men by the preſent puniſhments. For the worſte man is not firſt puniſhed: but out of many the Lord chuſeth a fewe to be puniſhed, in whoſe perſon he teacheth the reſt that he is an auenger, that all might feare him. But after he had ſpoken of the Samaritanes, he came nearer to the Iewes themſelues: for in thoſe dayes when eightene menne were ſlaine with the fall of a tower of Hieruſalem, he affirmeth that they were not the wickedſt, but in the deſtruction of them, he ſayth that there was an example of terrour ſette foorth vnto all menne: for if God hath ſhewed a token of his iudgement vppon them, others ſhall nothinge the rather eſcape his hand, though they be borne with for a time. And Chriſt forbiddeth not, but that the faithfull ſhoulde be diligent in conſidering the iudgements of God: but he appoynteth this order to be holden, that they ſhould begin at their owne ſinnes. For hereof ſhal great profit come, ſo that they ſhall with voluntarie repentance preuent the iudgements of God. To the which purpoſe that exhortation of Paule doeth alſo pertaine, Epheſ. 5. 6. Let no man deceiue you with vaine words, for, for theſe things commeth the wrath of God vpon the children of diſobedience.

6. Hee ſpake alſo this Parable. The ſumme tendeth to this purpoſe, that many which are worthy of deſtruction, are tollerated for a time: yet they ſhall gaine nothing by the delay, if they goe forwarde in their obſtinacy. For hence commeth a wicked flatterie, wherein the hypocrites doe harden themſelues, and become more obſtinate, becauſe they conſider not their owne miſeries, except they be enforced: and therefore ſo long as the Lord winketh, and ſuſpendeth his corrections, they imagine with themſelues that they are well agreed with him. So they nouriſh vppe themſelues in ſecuritie, as if they had made a couenaunt with death, and with the graue, as Iſaias ſayeth, 28. 15. Therefore doeth Paule enuey againſt them ſo vehemently to the Romanes, 2. 5. becauſe they heape vp for them ſelues, the wrath of God againſt the latter day. And we knowe that trees are ſomtimes preſerued, not becauſe they are alwaies profitable & frutefull to their owners: but becauſe the carefull and wiſe husbandman attempteth and trieth euery way before he will ſtocke vppe his field or his vineyarde. But we are heereby taught, that the Lorde hath great reaſon of his forbearing, when he doeth not preſently reuenge himſelfe vppon the wicked, but deferreth their puniſhments. VVhereby mannes raſhneſſe is put to ſilence: leaſt any ſhuld be ſo bold as to murmure againſt the chief iudge of all menne, if he doe not alwayes execute his iudgements in like ſorte. But the compariſon is heere made betweene the Lorde and the ſteward, not becauſe the miniſters of God doe exceede him in mercy and meekeneſſe, but becauſe the Lord doeth not onely prolong the life of ſinners, but hee alſo husbandeth them diuers wayes, that hee might gather better frute.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 13.
		10. And hee taught in one of the Synagogues on the Sabboth day.
		11. And behold, there was a woman which had a ſpirit of infirmity 18. yeres, and was bowed together, and could not lift vp her ſelfe in any wiſe.
		12. VVhen Ieſus ſawe her, he called her to him, and ſaid to her, woman, thou art loſed from thy diſeaſe.
		13. And he laid his handes on her, and immediately she was made ſtraight againe, and glorified God.
		14. And the ruler of the Synagogue anſwearing with indignation, becauſe that Ieſus healed on the Sabboth day, and ſayd vnto the people: There are ſixe dayes in whiche men ought to worke: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the ſabboth day.
		15. Then anſwearied him the Lord, and ſayde: Hypocrite, doeth not eache one of you on the ſabboth day, loſe his oxe or his aſſe from the ſtall, and leade him away to the waters?
		16. And ought not this daughter of Abraham, whom Sathan had bounde, loe 18. yeares, be loſed from this bond on the Sabboth day?
		17. And when he had ſayde theſe things, all his aduerſaries were aſhamed: but all the people reioyced at all the excellent things that were done by him.

I haue determined to gather togither into this one place, thoſe thinges which are red in diuers places, ſet down by Luke alone, without expreſſe noting of the time, as we haue ſayde other where, that the Euangeliſtes were nothing curious in this behalfe. Our returne ſhall after be the better to the common Harmonie. Heere is report made of a myracle in healing of a woman, and the Iewes maliciouſly conceiued an offence, becauſe the Lord healed her on the Sabboth day. Luke ſayeth that the woman was holden with a ſpirite of infirmitie, ſo that the body was ſhrunke vp with the ſhrinking vp of the ſynewes. But becauſe he doth not otherwiſe deſcribe what kinde of diſeaſe it was, it ſeemeth not to be any common diſeaſe, nor any ſuch as the Phyſitions knew: therfore he calleth it a ſpirite of infirmitie. For we knowe that the deuil applieth himſelfe to plague men with ſtrange & vnwonted diſeaſes. VVherin the diuine power of Chriſt ſhewed it ſelf more euidently in triumphing ouer ſathan: not that ſathan ruleth ouer men at his owne pleaſure, but as he hath power giuen him of the Lorde to hurt. But as the Lorde being the onely authour of all good things, yet he doeth chiefly ſhew his glory in eſpeciall and extraordinarie benefites: ſo alſo he would haue the power and tyrannie of ſathan eſpecially knowen in extraordinarie ſcourges, though he alſo vſeth his hand in light chaſtiſements, with which he doeth daily chaſtiſe vs.

12. VVoman thou art loſed. Chriſt in this myracle as in others, giueth a teſtimony both of his power & of his grace. For he ſaith that he came for that cauſe that he might helpe them in miſery. The power is expreſſed in theſe words: womã thou art loſed: for of his authority he ſaith that he had the deliuedeliuerance in his hand. Yet he addeth an outward ſigne, of the vſe, wher-of we haue entreated other where. That the people glorifieth God, it teſtifieth to vs that this heauenly benefite was euident. For it was no obſcure woorke whiche might by diſputation be applied either way, but it was ſuch as gaue great and certaine occaſion of praiſing God. VVhereby the wickedneſſe of the maſter of the ſynagogue is reuealed.

14. There are ſixe dayes. This controller dareth not condemne Chriſte openly, but he turneth the poyſon of his frowardneſſe an other way, condemning Chriſt ouerthwartly in the perſon of the common people. And he was growen in malice to a madnes without reaſon: he warneth them that there are ſixe daies appoynted for labour: but how wickedly and foliſhly defineth he that labor which is not permitted but for thoſe 6. daies? VVhy doth he not alſo forbid thē entring into the ſynagogue, leaſt they ſhoulde breake the Sabboth? VVhy doeth he not commaund them to abſtaine from the exerciſes of godlineſſe? If that men are only reſtrained frō their owne works on the ſabboth day, how wicked is it then to tie or reſtraine the ſpirit of God? He commandeth them to come to be healed on other daies: as though the power of God ſhould lie and ſlepe on the ſabboth, and ſhoulde not rather that day more exerciſe the ſame for the ſaluation of his people. For to what purpoſe are the holy aſſemblies, but that the faithful ſhould ſeeke and craue the aid and helpe of God? Therfore this wicked hypocrite ſpeaketh, as if the lawfull obſeruation of the ſabboth, ſhould hinder the courſe of Gods benefites, ſhoulde exclude men from calling vpon him, and ſhould depriue them of his grace.

15. Eache one of you on the Sabboth day. VVhen it was an eaſie matter to refel ſo groſſe malice with diuers arguments, Chriſt was content with this one: if it be lawfull to ſhewe kindneſſe on the ſabboth day to beaſtes, they faine a very prepoſterous worſhippe, if on that day the children of GOD ſhould not be holpen. But there is a double compariſon in the woordes of Chriſte: of the beaſt with the daughter of Abraham, and of the haltar wherwith the aſſe or oxe is tied to the manger, with the bandes of ſathan wherin he holdeth men bound to their deſtruction. You (ſayth he) which are ſo ſcrupulous obſeruers of the ſabboth, dare loſe your oxen and aſſes, that they may be led to the water, why ſhall it not then be lawful for me to performe the like duety to the electe people of God, eſpecially where greater neceſsity requireth it? namely, when any manne is to be deliuered from the ſnares of ſathan? And though this wicked reprehender held his peace for ſhame, yet we ſee that Chriſt wrought not any myracle ſo notable which the wicked did not cauil at. Neither is it any maruell if Sathan applied all his ſtudy and endeuour to this purpoſe, that hee mighte peruert the glory of Chriſte, who ceaſeth not daily to ſcatter his cloudes, that he might by them obſcure the holy woorkes of the faithfull. It is to be noted that Chriſte calleth her the daughter of Abraham, whoſe body had bene 18. yeres enthralled to ſathan: and he called her ſo, not onely in reſpecte of the ſtocke, as all the Iewes generally were proude of this title, but becauſe ſhe was one of the true and naturall members of the church. VVherein we do alſo behold that which Paule teacheth, 1. Cor. 5. 5. that ſome are deliuered to ſathan for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit might be ſaued in the day of the Lord. And the continuance of that time teacheth vs not to deſpaire though the Lorde doeth not preſently heale our miſeries.

Mathew

Mathewe. | Marke. | Luke 13.

31. The ſame day there came certaine Phariſies, and ſayde vnto him: Depart and goe hence: for Herode ſeeketh to kill thee.

32. Then ſayde he vnto them: Goe yee and tell that Foxe: Beholde I caſt out deuils, and will heale ſtill to day, and to morowe, and the thirde day I ſhall be perfited.

33. Neuertheleſſe, I muſt walke to day, and to morowe, and the day following: for it cannot be, that a Prophet ſhould pearish out of Ieruſalem.

Alſo, it cannot be certainly coniectured when this befell, but that it is euident that Chriſt was then in Galile, as in all the courſe of his trauaile, he was more there then other where. For they which would ſeeme to be his friendes, perſwade him to be out of Herodes iuriſdiction, if that hee would be ſafe. Now, it is vnknowen how they were affected which gaue this counſell: but I rather coniecture, when they ſawe the moſte parte of the people there giuen to Chriſt, ſo that the doctrine of the Goſpell was euery where receiued, they aſſaied to driue him to ſome other place. It is to be noted who theſe warners were. Luke ſayeth that they were ſome of the Phariſies, but we know that ſecte was not ſo mercifull to Chriſte, that it ſhould be probable that they were carefull of his life. What then? certainly their purpoſe was by caſting a feare before him, to driue him away into ſome corners: for ſo they hoped that it ſhoulde come to paſſe, that in ſhorte time his authority ſhoulde decay, and his whole doctrine ſhould vaniſh away. But yet we muſt conſider the purpoſe of Sathan, the chief maſter and framer of this deuiſe: for as by fearing the ſonne of God, he ſought then to hinder the courſe of the Goſpell, ſo he nowe inuenteth and frameth newe terrours, wherwith he might diſcourage the miniſters of Chriſt, and enforce them to leaue their courſe.

32. Tell that Foxe: beholde I caſt out deuils. It is certaine that hee ſpeaketh of Herode Antipas. And though he had the maners of a Foxe, and a diſpoſition no leſſe ſeruile then crafty, yet I do not thinke that he comprehendeth the ſubtelty of his whole life vnder this name of Foxe: but his ſecreat deceits where he attempted to vndermine the doctrine of the Goſpell, when with open warre he durſt not ſette vppon it. For Chriſte declareth, that though he was crafty, that yet he ſhoulde preuaile nothing by hys deuices. I ſayeth he, what guiles ſoeuer he deuiſeth, will to day & to morowe, doe the office laide vpon me of God: and when I come to the ende of the race, then ſhall I be offered vppe in ſacrifice. Yet, that the meaning of the woordes may be more plainly ſette downe vnto vs, in the firſt part of the ſentence Chriſte graunteth, that the third day after, that is, ſhortly after, he ſhould die: and thus he declareth that he can by no fear of death be driuen from doing his duetie, to the whiche with a ſetteled purpoſe of the minde he goeth without feare. Then he addeth that it is a vaine ſhew of feare which is obiected by thoſe falſe fained warners, becauſe there is no daunger of death other where, then at Ieruſalem. But in the ſeconde parte he reproueth the Phariſies ſharply, doe you, who I ſee ſhall be my butchers butchers, warne me to take heede of Herode? Though the vpbraidinge goeth further: for he not only sayeth, that he is ready to die at Ierusalem, but that it also is a denne of theeues, where almost all the Prophets were slaine. It is true that many were slaine otherwhere, and especially at that time, when the cruell rage of Iesabel was hotte against them: but because that continually the Prophets were not in any other place more cruelly dealt with. Christ layeth woorthely this reproofe vppon the wicked inhabitants of the holy Citie. And for the most part it befell the Prophets to be slaine there: for sith the wickednesse came from thence, wherewyth Iudea was filled, that also was the fielde wherein God exercised his Prophets. For we knowe that the more the doctrine of the Gospell shineth, and the nearer it commeth to the wicked, the madder they become. Yet this is a horrible example, that the place which was chosen to be the sanctuary of the worship of God, and to be the house of the lawe, and of the heauenly wisedome, should be defiled not with one or two murders, but with the ordinarie slaughter of the Prophets. And heereby it appeareth howe obstinate the vnthankfulnesse of the world was in refusing sound doctrine. Thoughe the exclamation which followeth presently after in Luke, seemeth so to be ioyned to this, as if Christ heereof taking occasion, did then enuey against Ierusalem: yet I rather thinke, when Luke had sayd before that Ierusalem was embrued with Prophets bloude, yea, and that it was by continuall course of many ages the cruell and sacrilegious slaughter house, occupied in murthering the Prophets, presently according to his maner he addeth a sentence whiche agreed with that speache. For we see in diuers places before, that it was no vnwõted thing in him, to gather into one place, sayings of Christ vttered at sondry times.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 11.
		37. And as he spake, a certain Pharisie besought him to dine with him: and hee went in, and sate downe at the table.
		38. And when the Pharisie sawe it, hee marueiled that he had not first washed before dinner.
		39. And the Lord sayd vnto him, in deede ye Pharisies make cleane the out side of the cuppe, and of the platter: but the inwarde parte is full of rauening & wickednesse.
		40. Yee fooles, did not he which made that which is without, make that which is within also?
		41. Therefore giue almes of those thinges which are within, and beholde all things shalbe cleane vnto you.

This heere sette downe, agreeth in parte, but not wholely wyth that doctrine in the fiftene chapter of Mat. that Christ of purpose neglected those outwarde rites inuented by men, (in obseruing whereof, the Iewes were to too carefull) that hee might correcte the superstition of the people, and especially of the Scribes. God had commaunded some certaine washings in his lawe, in the whiche hee profitably exercised his people in the meditation of true puritie. The Iewes not being content with thys mediocritie, mediocritie, added many other waſſinges, ſpecially that no man ſhoulde eat, except he had waſhed, as Mark declareth more plainly in his 7. chapter, and alſo appeareth in the 2. of Iohn. Alſo to this fault was added a wicked confidence, becauſe they hauing no regard of the ſpirituall worſhip of God, thought they had wel diſcharged themſelues, if they had ſet vp a figure in the place of God. And Chriſte not being ignorant that the contempt of this ceremony woulde be offenſiuely taken, yet omitted the ſame, that he might ſhewe that God made ſmall account of the outwarde cleanneſſe of the fleſh, but required the ſpirituall righteouſnes of the hart.

39. In deede yee Phariſies. Chriſte doeth not reproue the Phariſies in this place, as he doth in Mathew and Mark, becauſe they prepoſterouſly worſhipped God with mens inuentions, and brake the lawe of God through their owne traditions: but he only e toucheth their groſſe hypocriſie, becauſe they deſired puritie but in the eyes of men, as if they had nothing to do with God. And this reproofe lighteth vpon all hypocrites, which eſtabliſh a righteouſneſſe in the ceremonies commanded by God. And therfore Chriſte concludeth more then if he ſhoulde haue ſayde that God is worſhipped in vaine with the commandements of men: for he generally condemneth that errour, that God ſhoulde be worſhipped with ceremonies and not with faith & a pure affection of the heart. And though the Prophets alwayes hadde a great controuerſie about this matter wyth the Iewes: yet the diſpoſitions of men are ſo prone to hypocriſie, that proud errour preuailed, that God ſhould be pleaſed with outward worſhippings voide of faith. But chiefly they were ſo aſtonied in Chriſtes time, that religion then only ſtode in mere trifles. Therefore he enueyeth againſt the Phariſies, which are buſily occupied in waſhing the cuppes, & nouriſh inwardly in their harts moſt filthy ſpots of rauening & wickednes. And he cõdemneth their folly by this reaſon, that God which created the inward ſoule of man, as well as the body, could not be pleaſed only with an outward ſhew. For this chiefly deceiueth men, that either they doe not conſider that they haue to doe with God: or elſe they transforme him according to the vanitie of their imagination, as if he differed nothing from a mortall man.

41. But of thoſe thinges which are within. Chriſt after his maner calleth the Phariſies backe from ceremonies to charitie, affirming that men, as wel as meats, are not cleſed with water but with loue. Yet he wold not in thoſe woords leſſen the grace of God, nor reiecte the rites of the lawe as vaine and vnprofitable: for he directeth his ſpeach againſt them, which carelesly mocke at God with naked ſignes: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, it is onely the lawfull vſe which ſanctifieth the meates. And they onely doe vſe the meates rightly and iuſtly, which helpe the want of the poore with their aboundance. Therefore it were better to giue almes of that abundance which we haue, then by ſcrupulous waſhing of hands and cuppes, to neglect the poore. That which the Papiſts doe gather heereof, that almes are ſatisfactions by the which we are purged from ſinnes, is ſo fonde, that it needeth no long confutation. For Chriſt diſputeth not heere, with what price it behooueth vs to obtaine forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: but that they doe eate their bread rightly, which beſtow part vpon the poore. For I do take the Greke word here vſed, ſignifieth that which is preſently had, and not as the old interpreater and Eraſmus do tranſlate it, for that which remaineth.

neth. It is beſt to reſerue thoſe reproſes which doe preſently folow for an other place. For I doe not thinke that Chriſte then preſently at the table did ſo enuey againſt the Scribes & the Phariſies: but Luke ſet that downe here which was ſpoken at an other time: as we haue often ſayde that the Euangeliſts regarded not the order of the time.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 14.
		1. And it came to paſſe, that when he was entred into the houſe of one of the chiefe Phariſies, on the ſabboth day, to eate bread, they watched him.
		2. And beholde, there was a certaine manne before him, which had the dropſie.
		3. Then Ieſus anſwearinge, ſpake vnto the expounders of the lawe, and Phariſies, ſaying: Is it lawfull to heale on the Sabboth day?
		4. And they helde their peace. Then he tooke him, and healed him, and let him goe,
		5. And anſweared them, ſaying: which of you ſhall haue an Aſſe, or an Oxe falne into a pit, and wil not ſtraight way pull him out on the Sabboth day?
		6. And they could not anſwer him to thoſe things.

This hyſtorie containeth nothing elſe but a myracle wrought by Chriſt, whereby he reproued the ſuperſtitious obſeruation of the Sabboth. Neither was his purpoſe as ſome imagine, ſimply to abrogate the Sabboth: but only to ſhew that neither the worke of God, nor the dueties of charity do violate the holy reſt which is commanded in the law. Alſo it is vncertaine whether the man which had the dropſie was purpoſely brought thither by their appoyntment: for certainly he could not come to the table by aduenture, nor enter into a priuate houſe without the leaue & will of the Lord of the ſame. Wherefore it is likely that he was brought thither craftely to tempt Chriſte, which yet was no leſſe fooliſhly then wickedly done of them: becauſe they had experience before, what Chriſt was accuſtomed to doe, as oft as like occaſion was offered.

3. Is it lawfull to heale on the Sabboth day? The meaning of the queſtion is this, whether the healing of a man ought to be accounted amongſt thoſe workes which doe breake the Sabboth. If they ſhould haue ſayd that the obſeruation of the Sabboth ſhoulde be broken by this meanes, there was an exception ready, that it is the worke of God. And the law of the Sabboth containeth nothing elſe, but that men ſhoulde reſt from their owne labours. And Chriſt firſt asketh the queſtion of them, that he might therby preuent the offence. Therfore the cauſe was not in him that they were not pleaſed, but in their obſtinate malice. Not that hee alwayes bounde himſelf to this condition (for oft times not regarding the offence, he performed that whiche was enioyned him of his father): but his wil was to teache by this example, that he wrought not his myracles on the Sabboth dayes raſhly, but that he was ready to giue an accoũt of that he did. But they do declare by their ſilẽce, that they had rather take occaſion to reprehẽd him, then to be moued by the ſtudy of the law. Therfore Chriſt hath not to regarde, what they iudge of his doing, becauſe it is euident that they would willingly take occaſion of offence.

5. Which of you ſhall haue an Aſſe. Though they were vnworthy that Chriſte ſhould endeuour to mitigate their diſpleaſures, yet hee declareth that he hath done nothing againſt the obſeruation of the Sabboth. All be it he doeth this not ſo muche of purpoſe to teach them, as that he might thereby deliuer himſelfe from their ſlaunders, for he knew that they ſhewed themſelues rather to bee blinded with poyſonfull hatred, then to yeelde themſelues to be taughte by reaſon: but his will was to triumphe ouer their malice, while he enforced them for ſhame to hold their peace. For if it be lawfull to helpe brute beaſtes on the Sabboth day, it were too vile a thing, not to do the ſame duety to man framed and made after the image of God.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 14.
		7. Hee ſpake alſo a Parable to the gueſtes, when hee marked howe they choſe oute the chiefe roumes, and ſayde vnto them.
		8. When thou ſhalt be bidden of any man to a wedding, ſet not thy ſelf downe in the chiefeſt place, leaſt a more honourable man then thou, be bidden of him.
		9. And hee that badde both him and thee: come, and ſay to thee: Giue this man roume, and thou then begin with ſhame to take the loweſt roume.
		10. But when thou art bidden, goe and ſitte downe in the loweſt roume, that when hee that badde thee commeth, he may ſay vnto thee: Friend, ſitte vp hier, then ſhalt thou haue worſhip in the preſence of them that ſitte at table with thee.
		11. For who ſoeuer exalteth himſelfe, ſhalbe brought lowe, and hee that humbleth himſelfe, ſhalbe exalted.
		12. Then ſayde he alſo to him that had bidden him, when thou makeſt a dinner or a ſupper, call not thy frendes nor thy brethren, neither thy kinſmen, nor the rich neighbours, leaſt they alſo bidde thee againe, and a recompence be made thee.
		13. But when thou makeſt a feaſt, call the poore, the maimed, the lame, and the blinde.
		14. And thou ſhalt be bleſſed, becauſe they can not recompence thee: for thou ſhalt be recompenced at the reſurrection of the iuſt.

7. He ſpake to the gueſtes. VVe know how greatly ambition raigned in all the Phariſies and the Scribes. That as they proudly deſired to raigne ouer all men, there was alſo a contention mutually amongſt themſelues, which ſhould be the chiefeſt. For men deſirous of vaine glory haue thys affection, that euery one of them doeth enuie eache other, while euery one of them deſireth to drawe that to himſelfe, whiche others thinke to be due to them. So the Phariſies and Scribes, when they chalenge that the people people ſhould giue vnto them the title of the holy order, now they ſtriue amongſt themſelues for the degree of honour, becauſe euery of them chalenge to himſelfe the chiefe place. Chriſt aptly derideth this their ambition with a fitte ſimilitude. For if any man occupy the chiefe roume at an other mannes table, and then be enforced to giue place to a better, hee ſhall be ſette lower by the maſter of the feaſt, not without ſhame & ignominie. And it is neceſſary that the ſame ſhoulde befall to all them that proudly lift vppe themſelues to rule ouer others, for God ſhall caſt them downe with ſhame. For it is to be noted, that Chriſt preacheth not heere of the outwarde and ciuill modeſtie: for we ſee the proudeſt menne, oft times excell in this behalfe, and for ciuilitie, as they ſay, they pretende the greateſt modeſtie. But by a ſimilitude taken from the vſe of men, he teacheth vs what we ſhould be inwardly before God: as if he ſhould ſay: If it befal vnto a gueſt, which fooliſhly choſe the higheſt roume, to be thruſt downe into the loweſt, and with ſhame hee deſire that he had neuer climed thither: therefore, leaſt God put the ſame thing in practiſe amongſt you, ſo that your arrogancie be ſtained with extreme ignominie, willingly ſubmit your ſelues to humilitie and modeſtie.

11. Who ſoeuer exalteth him ſelfe. This clauſe declareth that Chriſt ſpake of ambition: for he ſheweth not what vſeth to befall in the common life of menne: but heere he maketh God our iudge, who reſiſteth the proud, and pulleth downe their proude lookes, but giueth grace to the humble. The ſcripture is full of ſuche places, that God wil be enemie to al them, whiche deſire to lifte vppe themſelues, ſo that of neceſsity they muſt haue battell with God, which doe arrogate any thing to themſelues. For this is the pride, ſo to glory in the giftes of God, as if there were any worthineſſe in vs, which of our owne deſeruing ſhould extoll vs: as againe, only a fained caſting downe, ought not to be accounted humility, but the true humbling, that is, whē we rightly acknowleging in our own ſelues our owne infirmity, not lifting vp our ſelues, knowing that we excell by the onely grace of God.

12. VVhen thou makeſt a dinner. They which thinke that thoſe feaſtes are heere ſimply condemned, whiche kinſfolkes and friendes doe make amongſt them ſelues, doe take away that part of humanity from amongſt menne. For this were rather barbarous then auſtere, to ſhutte thy kinſfolkes from thy table, and onely to giue place to ſtraungers. Neither was it the purpoſe of Chriſte to driue vs from all neighbourhoode, but onely to ſhew that charitie was litle vſed in the ordinary dealings of the world: for as it is no liberality to beſtowe any thinge vppon the riche menne in hope of gaine, from whome we hope to receiue the like, but a kinde of vſurie: ſo thoſe woorkes for rewarde are not accounted of before God, nor are woorthy of the name of charitie. If I bidde my kinſfolkes or rich friendes to ſupper, it is humanitie not of it ſelfe to be condemned, but it ſmally auaileth to prooue charitie: for oft times we ſee them whiche are wholely addicted to themſelues, to beſtowe great charges in receiuinge their friendes moſt delicately. VVhat then? thou mayeſt furniſh thy table with riche menne, ſo that in the meane ſeaſon thou neglecteſt not the poore: ſo it is lawfull to feaſt with thy friendes and kinſfolkes, ſo that thou recieueſt not ſtraungers, if that they be poore, and thou haſt habilitie to helpe their neede. The ſumme is, they which are liberall to their kinſfolkes and friendes, but are harde to the poore, are worthy of no praiſe: becauſe they exerciſe no charitie, but prouide onely for their owne gaine and ambition. But Chriſt ſpeaketh to his hoaſt by name, whome he ſawe was giuen too muche to ſumptuouſneſſe and to dainties, and ſo to gette praiſe and fauour of riche men, ſo that he ſmally regarded the poore. So vnder the perſon of this one man, are all they reproued, which ambitiouſly ſpende thoſe things they haue, either for their owne glory, or to gette like recompence: and yet they will beſtow nothing vppon the poore, as if they were afraid, that what ſoeuer they beſtowed freely, were loſt. Therfore Chriſte ſayeth that they are bleſſed, which are liberall without hope of earthly rewarde: for it is euident that they haue regarde to God. But there is no cauſe why they ſette the regarde of profite before their eyes, or which deſire the praiſe of the people, ſhoulde looke for any rewarde from God.

Mathewe 22.

1. Then Ieſus anſweared, and ſpake vnto them again in Parables, ſaying:
2. The kingdō of heauen is like vnto a certaine king, which maried his ſon,
3. And ſent foorth his ſeruaunts, to call them that were bidden to the wedding, but they would not come.
4. Again, he ſent forth other ſeruāts, ſaying, tel thē which are biddē: beholde, I haue prepared my dinner, mine oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all thinges are ready: come vnto the mariage.
5. But they made light of it, and went their wayes, one to his Farme, and another about his marchandiſe.
6. And the remnant tooke his ſeruaunts, and intreated them sharply, and ſlewe them.
7. But when the king heard it, he was wroth, and ſent forth his warriours, & deſtroied thoſe murtherers, and burnt vp their citie.
8. Then ſaid he to his ſeruants. Truely the wedding is prepared: but they which were bidden, were not worthy.
9. Go ye therefore out into the high wayes, and as many as yee finde, bidde them to the mariage.
10. So thoſe ſeruaunts went out into the high wayes, and gathered togither all that euer they founde, both good & badde: ſo the weddinge was furnished with gueſtes.
11. Then

Marke.

Luke 14.

15. Now, when one of them that ſate at table, heard theſe things, he ſaid vnto him: Bleſſed is he that eateth bread in the kingdom of God.
16. Then ſayd he to him: a certaine man made a great ſupper, and bade many.
17. And ſent his ſeruant at ſupper time to ſay to them that were bidden, Come: for all thinges are now ready.
18. But they al with one conſent began to make excuſe: The firſte ſayde vnto him, I haue bought a Farme, and I muſte go out and ſee it: I pray thee haue me excuſed.
19. And an other ſayde, I haue bought fiue yoake of oxen, and I goe to prooue them, I pray thee haue me excuſed.
20. And another ſayde, I haue maried a wife, and therefore I can not come.
21. So that ſeruaunt retourned, and ſhewed his maſter theſe thinges. Then was the good manne of the houſe angrie, and ſayde to his ſeruaunt: Goe out quickly into the places and ſtreetes of the citie, and bring in hither the poore and the maimed, and the halte, and the blinde.
22. And

11. Then the king came in, to ſee the gueſts, and ſaw there a man, which had not on a wedding garment.
12. And he ſaide vnto him: Friend, how cameſt thou in hither, & haſt not on a weddinge garment? And hee was ſpeachleſſe.
13. Then ſaid the king to the ſeruãts: Binde him hand & foote: take him away, and caſt him into vtter darkenes: there ſhalbe weeping and gnaſhing of teethe.
14. For many are called, but fewe are choſen.

22. And the ſeruant ſayd: Lord it is done as thou haſt commaunded, and yet there is roume.
23. Then the maiſter ſayd to the ſeruaunt: Goe out into the high wayes and hedges, and compell them to come in, that my houſe may be filled.
24. For I ſay vnto you, that none of thoſe men which were bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper.

1. Then Ieſus anſweared. Though Mathew rehearſeth this parable amongſt other ſermõs made by Chriſt about the laſt Paſſeouer: yet becauſe he appoynteth no time, & that Luke expreſly affirmeth that he ſpake this whẽ he ſate at the Phariſies table, it ſeemeth beſt to follow this order. Alſo, becauſe the purpoſe of Math. was to ſhew for what cauſes the Scribes were kindled with extreme madneſſe amongſt other his odious ſermons he ſet downe this alſo, and brought it into that courſe, neglecting the order of the time. The hyſtorie ſet downe by Luke, is to be noted, that when one of the gueſts had ſaide, that they are bleſſed which eat bread in the kingdom of God, Chriſt toke occaſion therby to reproue the vnthankfulneſſe of the Iewes. And though it be ſcarce credible that the Phariſies gueſt and frend ſhuld breake out into theſe words, of an earneſt affection of godlineſſe: yet it ſeemeth not to me to be ſpoken in ſcorne or ieſt: but as menne touched with a ſmall faith, and not openly wicked, doe without regarde ſpeake amongſt their cuppes, of eternal life: ſo I thinke that this man caſt out this ſpeache of the bleſſednеſſe to come, that he againe might gather ſomewhat from Chriſte. And his woordes doe declare that he as yet ſauoured nothing, but that which was groſſe and earthly. For he vſeth not the phraſe, to eate bread Metaphorically, for the enioying of the eternall glory: but he ſeemeth to dreame I knowe not of what ſtate repleniſhed with proſperous abundance of all things. Yet the meaning is, that they are happy which eate the breade of God, after he hath gathered his children into his kingdome.

2. The kingdome of heauen is like. As that Spartane ſayd in times paſt, that the Athenians knew what things were right, but would not do them: ſo Chriſt heere reproueth the Iewes, that they coulde ſpeake many notable words of the kingdom of God: but when God calleth them louingly & gently vnto him, they contemptuouſly refuſe his grace. And it is not to be douted but that he pincheth the Iewes by name, as ſhall better appeare ſomewhat after. But Mathew differeth from Luke in this, that he ſetteth downe many circumſtances, when the other doeth ſummarily only propoſe the matter it ſelfe. So Mathew ſayth that a king prepared a mariage ſupper for his ſonne. Luke doth ſimply make mention of a feaſt. He maketh mention of many ſeruants, this ſpeaketh not but of one. He noteth many ſendings, this but onely one. He ſayeth that ſome of the ſeruauntes were beaten or ſlaine, this ſpeaketh onely of the contempt.

Laſtly, he reporteth that he was caſt out, which came into the feaſt without his mariage garment, of whom there is no mention in Luke. But we haue other where noted alſo the like difference, when as Mathewe hath bene more plentifull and large in entreating the ſame matter. But in the ſumme they agree very well, that when God had vouchſafed a peculiar honour to the Iewes, preparing as it were a banketting boarde for them, they deſpiſed the honour offered them. That many interpreaters doe apply the mariage of the kings ſonne to this, that Chriſt was the end of the lawe, and that God had not regarde to any other purpoſe, in his couenāt, then that he might ſette him ouer his people, and might ioyne his Church to him in a holy bande of a ſpirituall mariage, I doe willingly embrace & allowe. And that he ſayeth that his ſeruaunts were ſent out to call them that were bidden, in theſe woordes he noteth a double grace of God: to witte, that he preferred the Iewes before other nations, then that he reuealed vnto them their adoption by his Prophets. For he alludeth to the vſuall maner of men, which making mariage feaſtes, doe wryte downe a catalogue of them, whome they woulde haue for their gueſtes: then they bid them by their ſeruaunts. So God choſe the Iewes before all others, as though they ſhoulde be his familiar friendes: then he calleth them by hys Prophets, that they might be pertakers of the promiſed redēption, which was to be feaſted at the mariage. And though they which were firſt called, liued not vnto the comming of Chriſt: yet we knowe that the ſaluation was propoſed in common to all, wherof they were depriued by their vnthankefulneſſe and malice: for that people wickedly deſpiſed the calling of God from the beginning.

4. Againe, hee ſent foorth others. Hee ſpeaketh ſo, as if they were the ſame menne, becauſe it was one body of the people. But the meaning is, when that happie and ioyfull day of redemption drewe neare, they were warned that they might be ready in time: for the time was appoynted them long before. And nowe Chriſt ſayeth that they were called at the very poynte of the time, that they might haſte to come. For the firſt callinge whereof he maketh mention, comprehendeth al the former Propheſies to the preaching of the Goſpell. And though that people had raged againſt the Prophets, yet he accuſeth the olde people onely of pride & contempt, becauſe their fury encreaſed with the time, whiche at length was powred with all violence vppon Chriſte and the Apoſtles. But he ſayeth that the ſeruaunts which were ſent laſt, euen at ſupper time, were ſharply entreated and ſlaine: ſo when as outragious cruelty was ioyned to the proude reiecting of the grace, that people brake out into the extreemeſt ſinnes. Yet he layeth not this offence vpon them all togither: for in the laſt calling which was by the Goſpell, the grace of God was partly reiected by careleſſe contemners, and partly reiected furiouſly by hypocrites. And ſo commeth commonly to paſſe, that the more GOD calleth the wicked to ſaluation, the more they breake out againſt him. Nowe that part of doctrine is to be entreated which is both in Mathew and Luke: to wit, that one went to his farme, another to his husbandrie: or as Luke reporteth, one excuſed himſelfe that he hadde maried a wife, an other had boughte a Farme, an other had bought fiue yoake of oxen. By theſe words Chriſt declareth that the Iewes were ſo giuen to the world and earthly things, ỳ none of thē had leiſure to come to god. As while the cares of the world

doe holde vs bound, they are ſo many allurements to withdraw vs from the kingdome of heauen. But it is a vile and a ſhamefull matter, that men created for the heauenly life, ſhuld as beaſts be caried to tranſitory things: but this diſeaſe is ſpred euery where, ſo that one ſcarce of a hundred, preferreth the kingdome of God before vaine richeſſe, or other commodities. And though all haue not the ſame diſeaſe, yet euery one is caryed by his owne couetouſneſſe into a contrary courſe: ſo it commeth to paſſe that men run out of order hither or thither. Furthermore, it is to be noted that prophane men make ſhewe of honeſt pretences, for the refuſinge of the grace of God, as though their ſlouthe were to be excuſed, which applying themſelues to the affaires of this preſent life, doe little eſteeme the heauenly enheritāce. But we ſee that Chriſt, that he might draw vs from ſuche delites, teacheth, that no manne ſhould thinke with himſelfe that he hath profited any thing, while they entāgle themſelues with theſe earthly hinderāces: Nay, the fault of men is doubled, while they hinder themſelues with things which are otherwiſe lawfull, by the which they ought rather to be holpen. For to what ende doth God graunt vs the commodities of this preſent life, but that he might allure vs vnto him? but euery man is ſo farre from being holpe ſo by the benefits of God, that he ſhould aſpire to heauen, that the holy mariages, the fields, and the other richeſſe, are ſo many ſnares which doe holde men bound to the earth.

7. But when the king heard it. Mathew onely maketh mention of this puniſhment. For in Luke there is no woorde ſpoken of iniurie done to the ſeruants. They both ſay this, that they were excluded and depriued from the honour of the feaſt, which came not at the time appoynted. And thys doctrine is alſo common to vs, for the ſame deſtruction whiche Chriſte pronouceth againſt the Iewes, remaineth for all thoſe wicked ones, which doe violently riſe againſt the miniſters of the Goſpell. And they whiche are withdrawne with earthly cares, ſo that they regarde not the callinge of God, all theſe as famiſhed men, ſhall at length miſerably waſte away for want. Therefore ſo ofte as he calleth vs, lette vs be ready and glad to followe.

9. Goe yee therefore out into the hie wayes. After he hath ſhewed them to be vnworthy of the grace of God, which doe proudly refuſe the ſame offered vnto them, nowe he ſayeth others ſhall be placed in their roome, and euen the moſt baſe and contemptible of the common people. And here is the calling of the Gentiles deſcribed, which ſhould prouoke the Iewes to ielouſie, as it is ſayd in the ſong of Moſes, Deut. 32.21. They haue moued me to ielouſie with thoſe which are no Gods: and I againe will mooue them to iealouſie, with thoſe which are no people, I will prouoke them to anger with a fooliſh nation. Becauſe they were firſt choſen, they imagined that his grace was ſo tied to them, as if God coulde not be wythout them, and it is knowen howe proudly they deſpiſed all others. Therefore vppon a graunt he compareth the Gentiles to beggers, blinde and lame. And he ſayeth they are called out of the hedges and hie wayes as forenners and ſtraungers: and yet he affirmeth that they ſhoulde be placed in the rounie deſpiſed by the friendes and neighbours. So that whiche was more darkely foreſpoken of by the Prophets, of erecting a new Church, he ſetteth downe more plainly. And certainly this reproſe was the heape of the vengeance of God, Romanes 11.17. that GOD cutting them off, hath grafted the wilde branches into the roote of the Oliue, & by caſting them out, he receiueth the polluted & filthy Gentiles into his own houſe. If that he ſpared not the natural branches then, the ſame vengeãce ſhal fal on vs now, if we anſwer not our calling. And the ſupper ſhall not be loſt, which was prepared for vs, but God will procure himſelfe other gueſtes.

LVK. 23. Compell them to come in. This is as much as if the houſholder ſhuld command to bring in the beggers with hard words, & to leaue out none of the worſt of them. In which wordes Chriſt declareth, that God wil rather gather togither all the officourings of the world, then that he would admit thoſe vnthankful men to his table. Yet he ſeemeth to allude to the maner of the calling of the goſpel, becauſe the grace of God is not ſimply propoſed vnto vs, but to the doctrine, there are alſo added ſpurres of exhortations, in which the wonderful goodnes of God is ſeene, who whē he ſeeth vs that are called to him, to be ſlouthfull, he ſolliciteth vs importunately from ſlouthfulneſſe: and he doth not onely ſtirre vs with exhortations, but alſo he compelleth vs by threates to come to him. Yet I do not diſallow that Auguſtine vſed this teſtimonie very often againſte the Donatiſts, that he might proue that the diſobedient and rebellious might be lawfully compelled by the Edictes of godly princes, to the worſhip of the true God, and to the vnitie of faith: for though faith is voluntarie, yet we ſee their ſtubberneſſe may well be tamed by theſe meanes, which obey not except they be compelled.

MAT. 11. Then the king came in to ſee the gueſts. Now Chriſt doth not here reproue the Iewes, for deſpiſing wickedly the grace & calling of God: but he forewarneth them betime, which were to be placed in their roume, leſt when God ſhould vouchſafe to make them partakers of his owne table, they ſhuld defile the holy mariages with their filthines. Threfore he hath taught hitherto that the Iewes for their wicked contēpt, ſhould be depriued of that ſpecial priuiledge of honor: and that he wold call of the prophane & reiected Gentiles, which ſhuld ſucceede in their place. And now he declareth that of this number alſo they ſhalbe caſt out, which do defile the church: for when God calleth all men generally by the goſpell, many vncleane and filthy men thruſt in, which though they occupie a place for a time amongſt others, when God ouerſeeth his gueſts, they are caſt out of doores, and throwne to puniſhment. The ſumme is. Not all they which ſhall once enter into the church, ſhall be partakers of the heauenly life, but they which ſhalbe found attired fit for the heauenly palace. Alſo there is a contention in vain about the mariage garment, whether it ſhuld be faith, or a holy and godly life: for neither faith can be ſeperated from good works, and good works do not proceede but from faith. But this only was the meaning of Chriſt, that we are called of the Lorde of this condition, that we might be renued in ſpirit according to his image, and that we ſhuld therfore alwaies remaine at his houſe, that the old mā with his pollutions ſhuld be put off, and that we ſhuld meditate a new life, that the apparel might anſwer to ſo holy a calling. But it is demaunded how it ſhuld agree that the begger ſhuld be puniſhed with ſo ſeuere a puniſhment, becauſe he brought not a mariage garmēt: as though it were a new thing for thoſe wretches which ſeeke their liuing in the highe waies to be torne and deformed? I anſwer, here is not declared whence that garment ſhould haue ben had; for whom ſoeuer the Lord calleth, he alſo apparel-

leth, and fulfilleth all things in vs, as is ſaid by Ezechiel, 16.7. when God found nothing in vs but miſerable nakedneſſe, and filthy ſpottes, he hath cloathed vs with excellent ornaments. VVe know alſo that the image of God is not otherwiſe repaired in vs, but when we put on Chriſt. Therefore Chriſt doth not ſay, that thoſe pore men ſhalbe caſt out, which bring not a precious garment fetched out of their owne cheſt, but they which are found in their ſinnes, whē God ſhall come to examine his gueſts. And the concluſion doth ſhewe the end of the parable, there are fewe choſen, though many are called. VVherby we gather that all the perticular clauſes of the ſame are not to be ſearched ſubtilly: for Chriſt ſayd not before, that the greater part ſhuld be caſt out, but only maketh mētiō of one: but here we hear, that of a great nūber few are retained. And certainly, though at this day moe are gathered into the church by the voyce of the Goſpel, then were in times paſt by the law, yet very few approoue their faith by newneſſe of life. VVherfore let vs not flatter our ſelues with a vaine title of faith, but let euery mā diligētly examine himſelf, that in the laſt choiſe, he may be accounted amongſt the lawfull gueſts. For as Paule admoniſheth, 2. Tim. 2. 19. 20. the veſſels in the houſe of the Lorde, are not all of one ſort, therefore let euery one that calleth on the name of the Lord depart from iniquitie. I do not here diſpute further of the eternall election of God, becauſe the words of Chriſt tend not to any other purpoſe, then that the outwarde profeſsion of faith ſufficeth not, that God ſhoulde acknoledge for his, who ſoeuer ſeme to haue giuē their name to his calling.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 16.
		1. And he ſaid alſo vnto his diſciples: There was a certaine rich manne, which had a ſteward, and he was accuſed vnto him, that he waſted his goodes.
		2. And he called him, and ſaid thus vnto him: How is it that I heare this of thee? Giue an account of thy ſtewardſhip, for thou maieſt be no longer ſteward.
		3. Then the ſteward ſaid within himſelf: what ſhal I do: for my maſter will take away frō me the ſtewardſhip? I can not dig, and to beg I am aſhamed.
		4. I know what I wil do, that whē I am put out of the ſtewardſhip, they may receiue me into their houſes.
		5. Thē cald he euery one of his maſters detters, & ſaid vnto the firſt, How much oweſt thou vnto my maſter?
		6. And he ſaid, an 100. meſures of oyle: & he ſaid to him: take thy wryting, & ſit down quickly, & write 50.
		7. Then ſaide he to another. Howe much oweſt thou? And he ſayd an 100. meaſures of wheat: Then he ſaid to him. Take thy wryting, and wryte fourſcore.
		8. And the Lord commended the vniuſt ſteward, becauſe he had done wiſely: wherfore the childrē of this world, are in their generation, wiſer then the children of light.
		9. And I ſay vnto you, make you friendes of the richeſſe of iniquitie, that when yee ſhall want, they may receiue you into euerlaſting habitations.
		10. He that is faithfull in the leaſt, he is alſo faith-full in muche: and he that is vniuſt in the leaſt, is vniuſt alſo in much.

11. If then yee haue not bene faithfull in the wicked richeſſe, who will truſt you in the true treaſure?

12. And if yee haue not beene faithfull in an other mans goods, who will giue you that which is yours?

Somewhat after.

14. All theſe things heard the Phariſies alſo whiche were couetous, and they mocked him.

15. Then he ſayd vnto them, yee are they which iuſtifie your ſelues before menne: but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly eſteemed among men, is abhomination in the ſight of God.

The ſumme of this Parable is, that we ſhould deale louingly & kindly with our neighbours, that whē we ſhal come to the tribunal ſeat of God, the frute of our liberality may return vpon vs. And though the ſimilitude ſemeth to be hard & far fetched: Yet the end ſheweth that Chriſt had no other purpoſe in it. And hereby we perceiue that they apply thēſelues too fondly, which in parables do ſcrupulouſly ſift out all perticular poyntes. For Chriſt cōmandeth not here by liberal giftes to redeme, deceits, thefts, prodigall ſpending & other offences of an euill ſtewardſhip: but when as God hath made vs ſtewards to beſtow all thoſe goodes which he giueth vnto vs: heere is a meane preſcribed to vs, which in time when the counte day ſhal come, ſhal eaſe ſome from extreme rigor. For they which imagin that almes ſhal make a recōpence for a luxurious & diſſolute life, doe not ſufficiently conſider, that this is firſt enioyned to vs, that we ſhoulde liue ſoberly & temperately: then that waters ſhuld flow vnto vs out of a pure fountain. It is certain that no man is ſo thrifty, which ſhall not ſometime loſe the goods laid vp with him: and therfore euen they which apply thēſelues to the greateſt ſparing, are not altogither fre from euil beſtowing. Adde alſo, that ther are manifold abuſes of the gifts of God, ſo that ſome commit offence an other way, and I deny not, but as we finde our ſelues guilty of euil beſtowing: ſo this ſhuld the rather ſtirre vs vp to the dueties of charitie. But we ought to ſet an other end before vs, then that we ſhuld by paying the price of redemption eſcape the iudgement of God: to wit, that liberality being well and holily beſtowed, ſhould only bridle & correct ſuperfluous expences: then, that our kindneſſe towards the brethren, might prouoke the mercy of God towardes vs. VVherfore the lord doth not heere ſhew his diſciples a way to eſcape, whereby they might deliues themſelues from guiltineſſe, when the heauenly iudge ſhall aske an account of them: but he warneth them to take hede betime, leaſt they bear the puniſhment of their cruelty, if they be taken waſtfully ſpoyling the bleſsings of God, no way applying them to good vſe. For that is alwaies to be holden: VVhat meaſure any man meateth to others, it ſhalbe meaſured to him againe, Math. 7. 2.

3. The Lord commended. It is here alſo eaſie to ſee that he ſhal do very fondly, that ſhall ſtande vppon eache perticular poynts. For ſith, that to giue of an other mannes goodes, is nothing praiſe worthy, who would beare it with a patient minde to be ſpoyled by a wicked varlet, that at his pleaſure ſhoulde releaſe his dettes?

This

This certeinely were a token of too groſſe blockiſhnes, that any man ſhould ſee part of his ſubſtance ſpoyled, and to allow that the reſt ſhould be ſtolne from him, and giuen to others. But this was the onely purpoſe of Chriſt, which he addeth preſently after, that men prophane and giue to the worlde are wiſer and warier in looking to the accountes of this tranſitorie lyfe, then the children of God are careful of the heauenly and eternal lyfe, or bent to the ſtudy and meditation of the ſame. For, by this compariſon he vpbraideth vs of our ſlouthfulnes beyond al reaſon, that at leaſt we haue not like care to prouide for that to come, whiche prophane men haue in prouiding for themſelues in this worlde. For how vile a thing is it, that the children of light, in whom God ſhyneth by his ſpirit and his word, ſhould ſlow and neglect the hope of eternal bleſſednes offred them, when as worldly men are ſo greedily caried to their cõmodities, and are ſo prouident and wiſe aboute the ſame? Heereby wee gather that the wiſdome of the ſpirite and of the fleſhe are not compared togeather (which could not be without the reproofe of God himſelfe) but that the faithfull are onely ſtirred vppe more diligently to conſider thoſe things, which apperteine to the life to come, and that they ſhould not ſhut their eies at the light of the Goſpel, when they ſee blynd men to ſee better in the darke then they. And truely it behooueth them to be the more affected, when they ſee the children of the worlde to foreſee longe before for this life, which is tranſitory, and which paſſeth away in a moment.

9. Make you frendes. As Chriſte commaunded not heretofore to offer ſacrifices to God of thinges ſtolne: ſo now he meaneth not, that eyther excuſers or patrones ſhould be ſought for, which ſhould hide & defend vs vnder their defence: but he teacheth that by beſtowing louingly, that the fauour of God is obtained, who promiſeth that hee likewiſe wil be mercifull to them that are mercifull and kinde. But very fondlye and abſurdly doe they reaſon, which doe gather of this, that we are holpen by the praiers and ſuites of them that are dead: for, ſo whatſoeuer is beſtowed vpon the vnworthy, ſhould be loſt. But the wickednes of the men hynder not, but that the Lord writeth vp in his tables whatſoeuer we beſtow vpon the poore. Therefore the Lorde hath not regard to the perſons, but to the worke it ſelfe, ſo that our louing kindnes ſhal anſwere vs before God, yea, though it fall vppon vnthankfull men. But ſo it ſeemeth to ſignifie, that eternal lyfe is giuen as a recompence to our deſerts. I aunſwere, it appeareth plainely enough by the text, that he ſpeaketh after the maner of men, to wit, as he which is exalted by fauour & riches, if he get himſelfe friendes in his proſperous eſtate, hee hath when he falleth into aduerſitie, by whom he ſhalbe ſuſtayned: ſo our kindnes ſhalbe to vs as a conueniẽt refuge: becauſe whatſoeuer any man ſhal beſtow liberaly vpon his neighbours, the Lord acknowledgeth the ſame, as beſtowed vppon himſelf.

When yee ſhall want. By this word he noteth the time of death, and hee warneth vs that the time of our ſtewardſhippe ſhal be but ſhorte. For whereof commeth it to paſſe, that the greater parte ſleepe in their riches, many waſt that they haue in prodigall expenſes, others by hoardinge it doe malitiouſly defraud themſelues and others, but becauſe they beeing deceiued with a falſe imagination of a long lyfe, doe flatter themſelues in ſecuritie? He calleth them the riches of iniquity, that hee might make vs to ſuſpect riches, becauſe that for the moſt part they entangle theyr owners in iniquitie. For though they are not euill of themſelues: yet becauſe they are ſeldome gotten without deceite or violence, or other vnlawfull meanes, and are alſo rarely poſſeſſed and kept without pride or luxurioufnes, or ſome other wicked affection, Chriſt cauſeth vs worthily to ſuſpect them, as in an other place he alſo called them thornes. Mat. 13 22. Yet here ſeemeth to be vnderſtoode an oppoſition, as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayd, riches which otherwiſe defile the owners through the wicked abuſe, and are almoſt the ſnares of ſinnes, muſt be turned to a contrary end, that they might get vs fauour. Furthermore, that muſt bee remembred, which I ſaid before, that God deſireth not a ſacrifice of a pray vniuſtly gotten, as if he ſhould be a companion of theeues: and therfore it is rather an admonition to the faithful, that they ſhould preſerue them ſelues free from iniquity.

10. He that is faythfull in the leaſt. They are prouerbial ſentenſes gathered of the common vſe and experience: and therefore it ſufficeth that they bee true for the moſt parte. For it ſhall befall ſomtimes, that the deceiuer not accounting of a ſmal gaine, ſhal ſhew forth his wickednes in a great matter: yea, and many in ſmall matters vnder pretence of ſimplicity do hunt after great gaine: as Liuy ſayth, fraud getteth credit in ſmal matters, that when it is worthy the labour, it may deceiue for a great reward. Yet notwithſtanding the ſaying of Chriſt is not falſe: becauſe in prouerbes, as I ſayd, we follow that which is moſt commonly vſed. Chriſt therefore exhorteth his diſciples, that by dealing faithfully in ſmall matters, they might accuſtome themſelues to be faithfull in the greateſt matters. The he applyeth this doctrine to the right diſpeſing of ſpiritual graces, which though the world eſteeme not according to the value: yet it is certeine that they farre excell the tranſitory riches of the world. And he teacheth that they are vnmeete, that God ſhoulde commit the incomparable treaſure of his Goſpell, and of lyke giftes to them, which deale naughtily and vnfaythfully in matters of leſſe value, as are the fleeting riches of the world. Therefore there is included in theſe wordes a ſecrete threatning, that it is to be feared, leaſt for the abuſe of the earthlye ſtewardſhyppe, wee ſhould be depriued of the heauenlye gyftes. In which ſenſe the heauenlye bleſſednes is oppoſed againſt riches, but as a perfecte and perpetuall good thing againſt a ſhadowe and a tranſitorie matter.

12. If yee be not faithfull in an other mans goodes. Hee calleth that an other mannes, which is without manne: for God doth not giue vs riches of this condition, that we ſhould be tied vnto them: but ſo he made vs ſtewards of them, leaſt they ſhould holde vs bound in their bandes. And it cannot be, that mindes free and at lybertie ſhould dwel in heauen, excepte they account whatſoeuer is in the world to belonge to others. And hee maketh the ſpirituall riches, which belong to the lyfe to come to be ours: becauſe the enioying of them is eternall. But now hee vſeth an other ſimilitude, it is not to be hoped that wee ſhould vſe our owne goodes well and moderately, if wee deale yll and vnfaythfully with other mens. For menne vſe more careleſly to abuſe theyr owne, and they graunt themſelues more lybertie in looſing them; becauſe they are not afrayde that any manne shoulde reproue them. But they are more warye and more fearefull of that, which is layde vppe with them, or committed to them or lent them, of which thinges there must an account be giuen againe.

Therefore we vnderstand the meaning of Christe, that they will be but euyll keepers of spirituall gyftes, whiche doe dispose the earthlye goodes euyll. After there is a sentence sette downe, that no manne can serue GOD and riches, which I haue expounded in the sixt Chapter of Matthe. And lette the readers see there what this word Mammon signifieth.

14. All these thinges heard the Pharises. They which thinke that the Pharises scorned Christ, because he taught in common and rude speach, and gloried not in swelling words, do not sufficiently consider Lukes words. I graunt that the doctrine of the Gospell seemeth very contemptible to proud and disdainful men. But Luke expresly declareth that Christ was therefore scorned of them, because they were couetous. For they being throughly perswaded and setled in this, that they were blessed, whiche were rich, and therfore that there was not a better thing, then to encrease their substaunce by any meanes, and couetously to hold those gotten goodes: what soeuer Christ should say to the contrary, they reiected as absurd paradoxes. And certēly, whosoeuer speaketh of dispising riches or giuing to the poore, seemeth to the couetous to mean deceit. That saying of Horace is wel known, the people hisseth me, but I reioyce to my self. If that they which are condēned in the iudgmēt of al men, do yet please thē selues, how much more shal they scorne as at a fable, this wisdō of Christ which is so far from the minde of the common sort? Yet I doubt not but that the Pharises pretended some other colour, that they might merilye iest at his doctrine against their sinne. Yet it is to be noted what moued them to it: for this disease reigned almost alwayes in the world, that the greater part of men apply themselues to scorne that which agreeth not to their manners. Hereof commeth it, that the word of God is in daunger of so many reproofes, taunts, and furious scornes: because euery man striueth for the defence of their own sinnes, and they thinke with their own iesting speaches, as with a cloud to couer & hide their own offēce.

15. Ye are they which iustifie your selues. VVe see that Christe giueth no place to their pride, but constantly defendeth the authoritie of his doctrine against their scornes: which all ministers of the Gospell must also do, by setting the terrible iudgment of God against wicked contemners. And he affirmeth that the coloured deceite, wherewith they deceiue the eies of men, shal not profit them any thing in the iudgment of God: they would not be thought in their scornings, that they defended their couetousnes: but Christ teacheth that this venom brake out of theyr hydden byle. As if any man should say to the horned Byshoppes at this day, that they are not such enemies to the Gospell: because their odious dealinges are too sharply pricked. And he saieth, that they think it enough, if they appeare honest to men, and that they may set thēselues out with a feigned holynes: but from God, who is the searcher of the hearts, they cannot hyde those sinnes, which they hyde from the world. VVhere is also to be noted the difference between the iudgments of God and of men: for where men are pleased with outward shews, nothing is approued at the iudgment seat of God, but a sincere heart.

There

There followeth anotable ſentence, what ſoeuer is rightly eſteemed amonge menne, is abhominatiō in the ſight of God: not that God refuſeth the vertues, whoſe praiſe he hath imprinted in the hearts of menne: but becauſe God abhorreth whatſoeuer man extolleth of his own iudgment, whereby it appeareth how much all faigned worſhippings are to be accounted of, which the world hath framed of her owne deuice. For though they pleaſe the inuenters, Chriſte ſaieth, they are not onelye vaine, and not to bee accounted of beefore GOD, but alſo abhominable.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 16.
		19. There was a certeine rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared wel and delicately euery day:
		20. Alſo there was a certeine begger, named Lazarus, which was layde at his gate ful of ſores.
		21. And deſired to be refreshed with the crownes that fell from the rich mans table: yea, and the dogs came and licked his ſores.
		22. And it was ſo, that the begger died, and was caried by the angels into Abrahams boſom. The rich man alſo dyed, and was buryed:
		23. And being in hell in torments, hee lyfte vp his eyes, and ſaw Abraham a far off, and Lazarus in his boſome.
		24. Then hee eryed, and ſayde, Father Abraham, haue mercy on me, and ſend Lazarus, that hee maye dippe the typpe of his finger in water, and coole my tongue: for I am tormented in this flame.
		25. But Abraham ſayde, Sonne, remember that thou in thy life time receiueđſt thy pleaſures, and likewiſe Lazarus paines: now therfore is he comforted, and thou art tormented.
		26. Beſides al this, betweene you and vs there is a great gulfe fet, ſo that they which woulde goe from hence to you, cannot, neither can they come from thence to vs.
		27. Then he ſayd, I pray thee therfore father, that thou wouldeſt ſend him to my fathers houſe,
		28. (For I haue fiue brethren) that hee may teſtifie vnto them, leaſt they alſo come vnto this place of torment.
		29. Abraham ſaid vnto him, they haue Moſes and the Prophets: let them heare them.
		30. And he ſaid, nay, father Abraham: but if one come from the dead, they would amend their liues.
		31. Then he ſaid vnto him, if they heare not Moſes and the Prophets, neither wil they be perſwaded, though one ſhould riſe from the dead againe.

Though

Though Luke hath ſet downe ſome other thinges betweene, yet it is not to be doubted, but that he confirmeth the former ſermon by this example. For he ſheweth what portion remaineth for them, which hauing no regard of the poore, do wholly waſte themſelues in deintie delicates: which being giuen to ſurfettings and pleaſures, do ſuffer their neighbors to be in miſerable hunger: yea, they famiſh them cruelly, whom they hauing abilitie ought to helpe. And though it ſeemeth to ſome to be but a ſimple parable: yet, becaute the name of Lazarus is ſet downe, I rather thinke it to be the report of a matter done. But in that matter there is ſmall importaunce, ſo that the readers doe holde the ſumme of the doctrine. Firſt, the rich man is brought in, cladde with purple and fine linen, and filling himſelf with pleaſaunt deinties euery day. In which wordes is noted the delicate life, filled with pleaſure and with pompes. Not that al finenes and gorgeouſnes of apparel of it ſelf diſpleaſeth God, or that all delicacie of meates were damnable; but becauſe it ſeldom falleth out, that temperaunce is kept in theſe thinges. For he which deſireth gorgeouſnes in new garments, ſhal as with prouocations encreaſe luſt: and it can ſcarſly be otherwiſe, but that he ſhould throw himſelf into intemperancy, which delighteth in deinties, and in tables delicately filled. Yet his crueltie is eſpecially condemned, in that he ſuffered Lazarus poore, and full of ſores to lye without at his gate. For Chriſte ſette togeather theſe contraries amongſt themſelues: that the rich manne giuen to belly cheere and pompes, as a gulfe not to be filled, ſhoulde deuoure within great heapes: but he was not touched with the want and miſeries of Lazarus, but wittingly and willingly ſuffered him to ſtarue with hunger, coulde, and ſtinch of ſores. And in this maner doth Ezech. 16. 49. accuſe Sodom, that in fulneſſe of bread and wine, ſhe ſtretched not foorth her hand to the poore. It is well knowne that the inhabitantes of the Eaſte were woont to vſe a moſt fine lynen for gorgeouſnes and pomp: which maner the ſacrificinge Papiſtes counterfeted in their garmentes, which they call ſurpluſes.

21. And the dogges came. The hard and yron crueltie of the rich man was ſufficiently condemned before, in that ſo miſerable a ſpectacle could not moue him to compaſsion. For, if there had bene any droppe of humanitie in him, he ſhould haue commaunded at the leaſte, that ſome of the fragmentes of his kitchen ſhould haue bene giuen to the man in that miſery. But here was a heape of wicked and more then beaſtly crueltie, now not to learne mercy of the dogges. Neither is there any doubte, but that theſe dogges were directed by the ſecrete counſel of GOD, to condemne him by their example. And Chriſt here alleadgeth them as a teſtimonie to reproue the curſed hardnes of the man. For, what is more woonderfull, then that dogges ſhoulde haue care of a man, which is neglected by his neighbour? nay, he would not giue the crummes of his bread to this hungry man, to whom the dogs lent their tongues to helpe to heale him. Therefore as oft as either ſtraungers or bruit beaſtes doe take our roumes, and doe that which we ſhould rather haue done, let vs know that there are ſo many witneſſes and iudges appoynted by GOD againſt vs, which ſhall the more diſcouer our faulte.

22. And it was ſo, that the begger died. Chriſt declareth here howe much the eſtate of them both was chaunged by death. Death was common to them both: but for the dead to be caryed by the Aungelles into Abrahams boſome, is a felicitie more to be deſired then all kingdomes. And to be condemned to eternall torments, is a horrible thing, and to be redeemed with a hundred lyues, if it were poſsible. And in the perſon of Lazarus there is a notable inſtruction giuen vs, that we ſhould not think them to be curſed before God, which do painfully lead a lyfe filled with troubles through continuall ſorowes. For the grace of God was ſo hid in him, and oppreſſed with the deformity of the croſſe, and reproues, that the wiſdome of the fleſhe could apprehend nothing but the curſe: but we ſee how pretious a ſoule lay hidde in a filthy and rotten bodye, which is caryed by the Aungelles into a bleſſed lyfe. VVherefore it hurt him nothing: as one forſaken and deſpyſed to be without all helpe and comfort of man, vppon whom departing out of the priſon of the fleſh, the heauenly ſpirites vouchſafed to be ready preſent to helpe. Agayne, in the rich man is ſeene, as in a notable glaſſe, how that tẽporal felicity, which endeth with eternall deſtruction is not to be deſired. Yet it is to be noted that Chriſte maketh expreſſe mention of the buryall of the rich manne, what became of Lazarus he concealeth: not that his bodye laye in the open fieldes, as caſt out to wilde beaſtes: but beecauſe it was without regarde and honour caſte into a pitte (for this may eaſily be gathered by the reſte, that they would beſtow no more labour about him being dead, then they did coſt of him being alyue) on the other part the rich manne was ſumptuouſly buryed according to his riches, hee hath yet a remnaunt of his former pride. For in this behalfe we ſee prophane menne ſtryuing after a ſorte againſt nature, in that in the glory of their buryall and funerall ſolemnityes, they deſire to haue ſhewes remayning of theyr eſtate: but how fooliſh & ridiculous this their ambition is, their ſoules in hell canne witneſſe. That he ſaieth Lazarus was caryed, it is a figuratiue ſpeach: for beecauſe the ſoule is the better part of manne, it dooth well challenge to it ſelfe the name of the whole. And Chriſte aſsigneth this office to the Aungelles not in vaine, which we knowe are giuen as miniſters to the faithfull, to employ theyr ſtudies and labours for their ſaluation.

Into Abrahams boſome. To reporte how diuerſly manye interpreters of the ſcripture haue defined of the boſome of Abraham, it is not needeful, nor in my iudgement profitable. It ſhall ſuffice to holde that whiche the readers well exerciſed in the ſcriptures doe acknowledge to bee the naturall meaning. For, as Abraham is therefore called the father of the faythfull: becauſe the couenaunt of eternall lyfe was firſt layde vp with him, that being kept in faythfull cuſtodye, hee ſhould delyuer it firſt to his ſonnes, then by hande to all the Gentyles, and whoſoeuer are heires of the ſame promiſe, are called the ſonnes of Abraham: ſo after death they are ſayde to be gathered into his boſome: becauſe they receyue the fruit of the ſame faith with him.

It is a Metaphor taken of a Father, into whoſe boſome, as it were, the chyldren doe come togeather, when they come home at the euening from theyr dayly labours. Therefore, ſith the children of GOD doe trauayle as Pylgrimes ſcattered in this worlde, as in this preſent race they followe the fayth of Abraham theyr father, ſo departing they goe into into that bleſſed reſte, wherein he looketh for them. Neyther is it neceſſarye to imagine anye certeine place: but that gathering of the Saints togeather is onely noted, that the faythful might know indeede that they warre not in vaine vnder the conduct of the faith of Abraham: for they enioy the ſame place in heauen.

If it be demaunded whether the godly at this day doe after death enioy the ſame eſtate, or whether Chriſt by his reſurrection ſhould open his owne boſome, wherein aſwell Abraham himſelfe, as all the other godlye ſhould reſt: I aunſwere briefly, as the grace of God ſhone more clearly vnto vs by the Goſpell, and Chriſte the verye Sonne of righteouſneſſe by his comming brought vs ſaluation, which was graunted to the fathers in tymes paſt, to beholde a farre off vnder darke ſhadowes: ſo it is not to be doubted, but that the dead came neerer to the full fruition of the heauenly lyfe. Yet it is to be noted, that the glory of immortalytie is dyfferd vnto the laſt day of the reſurrection. In reſpecte of the name, that quiet hauen, which receyueth the faythfull out of the nauigation of this preſent lyfe, may be called aſwell the boſome of Abraham, as of Chriſt. But becauſe we are growne hygher then the fathers vnder the law, this diſtinction is the aptlyer noted: if we the members of Chriſt ſhould be ſayd to be gathered to theyr head: and as the light of the ſunne at his ryſing darkeneth all the ſtars, ſo the metaphor of Abrahams boſome ſhould then ceaſe. Yet by this phraſe of ſpeach, which Chriſt vſeth, it may be gathered, that the fathers vnder the law embraced by faith (while they liued) the enheritance of the heauenly life wherinto they were receiued at their death.

23. And being in hell in tormentes, he lyft vp his eyes. Although Chriſt telleth a hyſtorie, yet he deſcribeth ſpirituall thinges by figures, whiche hee knew to be fit for our capacitie. For ſoules neither haue fingers nor eies, neither are thirſty: neyther haue they mutuall ſpeach amongſt thēſelues, as is here deſcribed betweene Abraham and the glutton. But the Lorde here paynteth out a table, which repreſenteth the eſtate of the life to come, according to the meaſure of our vnderſtanding. But the ſumme is, that the ſoules of the faithfull, when they doe goe out of the body, doe lead a ioyful and a bleſſed life out of the world: and that there are horrible torments prepared for the reprobate, which can no more be conceaued in our minds, then can the great glory of the heauens. For, as we only in very ſmall meaſure, to wit, as we are lightened by the ſpirit of God, do taſte by hope the glory promiſed to vs, which far exceedeth al our ſēſes: ſo let it ſuffice that the incōprehenſible vengeance of God, which remaineth for the wicked, be known darkly of vs; euen ſo as it is meet to ſtrik a terrour into vs. So the words of Chriſt do giue a taſte & a ſmal knowledge of theſe thinges, and yet ſuch as may ſuffice to bridle curioſitie: to wit, that the wicked are cruely tormented with the feeling of their own miſery, that they ſhould deſire ſome refreſhing, yet al hope being taken away, they feele double torment: yea, and they are the more tormented, while they are enforced to remember their own ſinnes, and to compare the preſent bleſſednes of the faithful with their owne miſerable & damnable eſtate.

This was the purpoſe and ende of the deſcription of this talke, as if this ſhuld haue paſſed betweene thē, which haue no feloyſhip betweene them.

themſelues. In that alſo that the rich man calleth Abraham father, there is expreſſed an other torment of his, that now too late he feeleth himſelf reiected out of the number of the children of Abraham.

25. Sonne, remember. The name of ſonne ſeemeth to be ſet downe in deriſion, that it might be a ſharpe reproofe for to pinch the rich manne, who gloried falſly in his life, that he was one of the childrē of Abrahā. For his mind is wounded as with the blow of a burning hot yron, while his hypocriſie and deceitfull truſt is obiected to him, and ſet before his eyes. And that he is ſaid to be tormented in hell, becauſe he receiued his pleaſure in this world, may not ſo be taken, as if eternall deſtruction remayned for al them, which liue wel and proſperouſly in the world: nay, as Auguſtine noted verye wiſely, the poore Lazarus is therefore caryed into the boſome of rich Abraham, that we myght know that riches ſhut the gate of the kingdome of heauen againſt no manne: but that it is generally open to all, which doe eyther vſe theyr riches ſoberly, or doe beare theyr wantes patiently. The onely meaning is, becauſe hee beeing droonke with the enticementes of this lyfe, drowned himſelfe in earthly delightes, and deſpiſed God and his kingdome, he now ſuffereth the puniſhmentes of his careleſſe dealyng. Therefore the pronoune thy, is verye forcible: as if Abraham ſhould haue ſayde, when thou wert created to immortall lyfe, and the law of God ſhould haue lyfte thee vp to meditate the heauenly lyfe, thou being forgetfull of ſo excellent a lotte, hadſt rather be lyke a ſwine or a dog: therefore thou receiueſt iuſt reward for thy brutiſh pleaſures. Againe, when it is ſayd of Lazarus, that he receyued comfort, becauſe he bore many miſeries in the world, he ſhoulde do very fondly, that ſhould draw this to all menne in miſery, whiche haue receyued ſo litle profit by afflictions, that they ſhall rather ende in extreame puniſhment: but the bearing of the croſſe is prayſed in Lazarus, which alwayes commeth of faith, and of a ſincere feare of God. For hee which obſtinately reſiſteth euilles, and continueth as one vntamed in his wildneſſe, deſerueth not any prayſe of patience, ſo that God ſhoulde recompence any comfort to him for his affliction. The ſumme therefore tendeth to this purpoſe, they which patiently e beare the burden of affliction layde vppon them, and doe not ſtubbornely ſtriue againſt the yoke and ſcourges of God, but through continuall troubles ſhall aſpyre to the hope of a better lyfe, for them there is a quiet ioy layd vp in heauen after the tyme of theyr warfare is expired: but on the other ſide, for prophane deſpiſers of God, which gorge themſelues in the pleaſures of the fleſh, & doe choake vppe all ſtudy of godlyneſſe with a certeine ſurfetinge of the minde, tormentes are prepared preſentlye after death for them, whiche may ſhake away their vaine delights. Further, it is to be remembred, that this comfort, which the children of God enioy, ſtandeth in that, that beholding the crowne of glory prepared for them, they reſt in a ioyful waiting for the ſame. As again the feeling of the iudgement to come, which they ſee ready for them, tormenteth the wicked.

26. Beſides all this. In theſe wordes is noted a perpetuitie in the ſtate of the lyfe to come: as if it ſhould haue bene ſayd, the bondes, which diſtinguiſhe the reprobate from the elect, can neuer be broken. And ſo we are warned to returne ſpeedily into the way, while it is time, leaſt we runne headlong into that deepe gulfe, whence we cannot ryſe. But this is ſpoken vnproperly, that the paſſage is ſhut, if any man would deſcend from heauen to hell: for it is certeine that ſuch deſire neuer commeth in any of the godly.

27. I pray thee therefore father. That he might the better apply the hyſtory to our vſe, he propoſeth the deſire of the rich man, & Lazarus might go warne his brethren yet alyue. The Papiſts do reaſon here very fondly, while they would proue hence that the dead haue care of the liuing: then the which cauill nothing is more abſurd. For by the ſame colour I will gather that the ſoules of the faythfull not content with their eſtate, haue a deſire to go to hell, if the great ſpace hyndered them not. If no man receiueth this madde fancy, there is no cauſe why the Papiſtes ſhuld pleaſe thẽſẽlues verye much in that other deuiſe. Neither is it yet my purpoſe contentiouſly to diſpute this matter eyther this way or that waye: but I thought to note by the way with what vaine argumentes they are lead, to imagine the dead to be interceſſors to God for vs. Now I returne to the ſimple and plaine meaning of this place: Chriſt vnder the perſõs of the rich man and Abraham, admoniſheth vs, that where there is a certeine rule delyuered vs to lyue by, not to waite and looke when the dead ſhould aryſe to teach and to warne vs. For Moſes and the Prophetes, when they yet lyued, were ſo perfect teachers to the men of their age, that out of their writinges, the ſame fruit may come to the poſterities. VVhen it was Gods will to teach vs by this meanes to lyue well, there is no cauſe why the dead ſhould be ſent to be witneſſes of the rewardes or of the puniſhments of the lyfe to come. Neyther ſhall their negligence be excuſed, which flatter themſelues vnder this pretence: becauſe they know not what is done out of this world. VVee know that this wicked ſpeach, or rather hoggiſh grunting dooth paſſe amongſt prophane men, that they are fooles, which vexe themſelues with a doubtfull care: becauſe no meſſenger returned at any time from hell. Chriſte minding to take away ſuch bewitchinges of Sathan, calleth vs backe to the lawe and the Prophetes: according to that teſtimonie of Moſes, Deut. 30. 12. Thou ſhalt not ſay after this, who ſhall aſcende into heauen? or who ſhall deſcend into the deepe? or, who ſhal paſſe ouer the ſea? The word is neere vnto thee, in thy mouth, and in thine hearte. They therefore which doe deride as fables thoſe thinges, which the ſcripture teſtifieth of the iudgement to come, ſhall in tyme to come feele how intollerable this wickednes is, to diſcredite the holy Oracles of God. But Chriſte wakeneth his from this ſlouthful diſeaſe, leaſt they beeing deceiued with hope to eſcape puniſhment, ſhoulde let eſcape the time of repentaunce. And to this tendeth Abrahams aunſwere: becauſe God had ſufficiently and throughly delyuered to his people the doctrine of ſaluation by Moſes and the Prophetes, there wanteth not any thing elſe, but that al men ſhould reſt in the ſame. The wiſdome of manne is altogeather infected with the wicked diſeaſe of curioſitie: ſo the greater part alwayes gapeth after reuelations. Now, becauſe that nothing more diſpleaſeth God, thẽ that men ſhould ſo deſirouſly wander beyond their boundes to ſeeke the trueth of Magitians and Sothſayers, and to ſeeke after feigned Oracles after the manner of the Gentiles, which is forbydden, for the ſtaying of which ytching, hee alſo promyſeth to giue vnto them Prophetes, of whom the people ſhoulde learne whatſoeuer ſhoulde bee profitable for theyr ſaluation, Deut. 18. 10. 18. If that the Prophetes are ſente to this ende, that God myght keepe the people vnder the brydle of the worde. He which is not ſatiſfied with this reaſon of doctrine, hath no deſire to learne, but is moued with a wicked wantonneſſe: and therefore GOD complayneth that he is iniuried, when he alone is not heard from the lyuing to the dead, Iſa. 8. 19. This diuiſion, which Abraham maketh of the word into the law and the Prophetes, is referred to the tyme of the olde Teſtament. Now, when there is added a more full interpretation of the Goſpell, if we be caried hither and thither with loathing of that doctrine, and briefly, if we ſuffer not our ſelues to be ruled by the word, our impietie is not to be borne with. Heereof it may be alſo gathered what aſſurance there is of Purgatory, and of ſuch trifles of the Papiſtes, which hath no other ground but vpon dreames and viſions.

30. Nay father Abraham. This is Proſopopæia, as we haue ſaid, which is rather ſette downe for the vnderſtanding of them that liue, then for the care of the dead. For the doctrine of the lawe waxeth colde in the worlde, the propheſies lye not regarded, and no man abydeth to heare God ſpeake after his owne order. Some deſire that Aungelles ſhoulde deſcend from heauen, others that the dead ſhoulde come out of theyr graues: others would haue whatſoeuer they heare ſanctified with newe myracles, others would haue voyces ſpeake out of the ayre. But if God ſhould yeelde to all theyr prepoſterous deſires, they would profite nothing thereby: for God ſetteth downe in his word whatſoeuer is profitable for vs to knowe, and the authority of this worde is teſtified and confirmed vnto vs by lawful ſignes. Then fayth dependeth not vppon myracles, nor vppon all ſortes of myracles: but it is the peculyar gift of the ſpirte, and is grounded of the worde of God. To conclude, it is the proper gyft of God to draw vs vnto him, whoſe will it is to worke effectualy by his word. Wherfore there is no hope that thoſe meanes ſhuld profit vs, which do draw vs from the obedience of the word. I graunte that fleſh is not apter nor readyer to any thing, then to hearken to vaine reuelations: and we ſee how they, which do loath the ſcripture, do earneſtly throw themſelues into the ſnares of Sathan. Heereof ſprang Necromacy and ſuch like deceites, which the worlde dooth not onely receyue with greedineſſe: but alſo with a madde violence ſhee draweth the ſame vnto her. But Chriſt only declareth here, that they which are deafe and obſtinate at the doctrine of the law, cannot be amended or brought to a better mind by the dead.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 17.
		7. Who is it alſo of you that hauing a ſeruaunte plowing or feeding cattell, would ſay vnto him by & by, when he were come from the field, Goe, and ſitte downe at table?
		8. And would not rather ſay to him, dreſſe wherwith I may ſuppe, and girde thy ſelfe, and ſerue me, till I haue eaten and dronke, and afterward eat thou and drinke thou.

9. Doth

9. Doth he thanke that ſeruaunt, becauſe hee did that which was commaunded vnto him? I trow not.
10. So lykewiſe yee, when yee haue done all thoſe thinges, which are commaunded you, ſay, we are vnprofitable ſeruauntes: we haue done that, which was our duetie to do.

The ende of this parable is this, when as God chalengeth all that we haue to himſelfe, as his owne proper right, and holdeth vs in bondage & ſeruice, whatſoeuer labour we endeuour to employ in his ſeruice, yet he is not bound to vs by any deſert: for ſith we are his, he cannot owe vs any thing againe. Therefore hee propoſeth the ſimilitude of a ſeruaunte, who, after he hath paſſed ouer the whole daye in diligent and painefull labour, returning home in the euening, continueth his labours vntill hee hath done his duetie according to the pleaſure of his maſter. But Chriſt doth not ſpeake of hyred ſeruauntes, which ſerue vs at this day, but of thoſe olde bondmen, whoſe eſtate and condition of lyfe was ſuche, that they ſhould get nothing for themſelues: but ſhould be giuen to their maſters with all theyr labour, ſtudy, and endeuour euen vnto bloud. Chriſt teacheth that we are boũd & tyed to God with no leſſe bond of ſeruice: whereby he gathereth that hee is no way bound vnto vs. And the argument is from the leſſe to the greater. For if that mortall man hath ſuche power graunted him ouer man, ſo that hee may driue them night and day to continuall obedience, and yet can craue no meanes of mutuall recompence, as if he ſhould be his debter: how much more ſhall it be lawfull for God to require all the dueties of our lyfe, ſo farre as our power can reach, ſo that yet he ſhall owe vs nothing at all? Therfore we ſee all them condemned of wicked arrogancy, which feigne themſelues to deſerue any thing at Gods handes, ſo that they ſhould binde him to them: for there is no man, which would not willinglye call God to accounte. Whereof the imagination of merites preuailed almoſte in all ages. But the ſaying of Chriſte is to be noted, that we yeelde nothing to GOD of free wyll: for we are ſubiect to his power of this condition, that whatſoeuer is in vs, ſhould be due to him. And there are two things to be noted in this ſentẽce, that our lyfe, to the end of the race of the ſame, is wholy bound to God: ſo that if any man ſhould employ a part of the ſame in the ſeruice of God, it is not lawfull for him to couenaunt to liue idlelye the reſte of his time: as many after the ſeruice of tenne yeares would gladly be ſette free. Then followeth that other, which we touched euen nowe, that God is bound by no workes of ours to paye vs any rewarde. Therefore let euery man remember that he is therefore created that hee ſhould labour, and ſhoulde exerciſe himſelfe dilygently in his office and calling: and that not for a certeine time, but to death it ſelfe; ſo that hee ſhoulde no leſſe dye then lyue to God. But in reſpect of the merite, that knot, which ſtayeth and hindreth many muſt be louſed. For the ſcripture oft promiſing reward for works, ſeemeth to attribute ſome merit to thẽ. The anſwer is eaſie, ỹ the reward not due as a debt, is not otherwiſe promiſed thẽ of the meere good wil of god. For they are far deceiued, which do cople a reward ỹ deſert in mutual relatiõ together: for god is moued giue them rewardes not by the dignitie of their workes, but of his free mercie. I graunt that in the couenaunt of the law GOD is bound vnto menne, if they perfectly perfourmed all that is required of them: but becauſe this band is voluntary, this remaineth ſure, that man can demaund nothing of God, as if he had deſerued any thing. So therefore the arrogancy of the fleſh falleth downe: for, if any man ſhould fulfill the lawe, yet he can beſtow nothing of God: becauſe he only rendreth that which he was endebted. And in this ſenſe he calleth vs vnprofitable ſeruaunts, becauſe that God receyueth of vs nothing more then due: but onely gathereth the due and lawfull fruites of his ſouereine lordſhip. Therefore theſe two thinges are to be noted, that God naturally oweth vs nothing, neither doe any of our workes deſerue or merite the worth of a hayre: Then by the couenaunt of the lawe, workes haue a rewarde promiſed not for the dignitie of the ſame, but that GOD might bee a free debter. And this vnthankfulnes is not to be borne, if any man ſhal vnder this pretence proudly lyft vp himſelfe. For the more lyberally that God doth deale with vs, ſo much the more he maketh vs bound vnto him: ſo that he is farre from giuing vs lybertie to lyfte vp our ſelues in a vaine confidence. As oft therefore as we ſee or remember this worde merit, let vs know that this is the abundance of the goodnes of God towards vs, that when he hath vs wholly in his debt, doth yet deſcend to make a couenaunt with vs. VVherfore the deuice of the Sophiſters is ſo much the more deteſtable, which dare be ſo bold as to frame a merit worthily deſeruing. Now, the word merit is of it ſelfe prophane, and ſtraung from the rule of pietie: but this is farre worſe to make men dronke with a diueliſh pride, as if they could deſerue any thing of their worthines.

10. VVe haue done that, which was our duety to doe. That is, we haue brought nothing of our owne, but we haue onely doone the workes due to the law. Chriſt ſpeaketh here of the perfect obſeruation of the law, which is not found any where: for he which is the perfecteſt of all, is yet farre from the ryghteouſneſſe, which the law requireth. That queſtion then is not entreated here, whether we be iuſtified by workes, but whether the obſeruation of the law deſerueth any reward with God. This latter is denyed: becauſe God hath vs bound to himſelfe, ſo that whatſoeuer can proceede from vs, he accounteth as his owne by right. But though that were true, that the reward were due in reſpect of deſert to the obſeruation of the law: yet it ſhall not follow thereof, that any man ſhall be iuſtified by deſerts of workes: for wee fall all, and our obedience is not onely maymed, but no part of it doth exactly aunſwere to the iudgment of God.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 18.
		1. And he ſpake alſo a parable vnto them, to this ende, that they ought alwayes to pray, and not to waxe faint.
		2. Saying, There was a iudge in a certeine citie, which feared not God, neither reuerenced man.
		3. And there was a widow in the citie, whiche came vnto him, ſaying, Doe me iuſtice againſt myne aduerſary.

And

4. And he would not for a time: but afterward he ſaid with himſelfe, though I feare not God, nor reuerence man:

5. Yet becauſe this widowe troubleth me, I wil do her right, leaſt at the laſt ſhe make me weary.

6. And the Lord ſaide, heare what the vnrighteous iudge ſaith.

7. Now ſhal not God auenge his elect, which crye day and night vnto him, yea, though hee ſuffer longe for them?

8. I tell you hee will auenge them quickely: but when the Sonne of man commeth, ſhal he find faith on the earth?

VVee know how rare and hard a vertue, dilygence in prayer is: and in this our infidelytie bewrayeth it ſelfe, that except he graunt our firſte requeſtes, preſently togeather with our exerciſe we caſte away alſo our hope. But this is a notable tryall of our fayth, if any manne receiue not his deſire, hee do not yet diſtruſt, nor yet caſt away hys hope. VVherfore Chriſte dooth not now without cauſe commende perſeueraunce in prayer to his diſciples. Alſo, though he vſeth a hard ſimilytude in ſhew, yet moſt apt, whyle hee teacheth his diſciples earneſtly to attend vppon God the father, vntyll they obtaine at length as it were by force, that which otherwiſe he ſeemeth not to giue wyllingly. Not that God being ouercome with our prayers, doth hardly yeelde to mercy: but becauſe he dooth not preſently teſtifie indeede that hee giueth eare to our prayers. And that Chriſt propoſeth vnto vs a parable of a widow, which obtayned that which ſhe would of the vnrighteous and cruell Iudge, becauſe ſhe ceaſed not to ſollicite the cauſe dayly: the ſumme is this, God dooth not helpe his preſently, becauſe he would be called vppon with praiers. But though they, which pray vnto him are miſerable and deſpiſed: yet if they faint not from the continuall courſe of praying, hee will at length looke vppon them, ſo that he will helpe theyr neceſsities. He compareth not equals togeather, for there is great difference beetweene a wicked and a cruell manne, and God, who bendeth himſelfe to mercye. But Chriſt would teach the faithful not to feare, leaſt they ſhoulde not by daily prayer entreate the father of mercy, when as through theyr importunitie they compell men giuen to crueltie. The wicked and cruel iudge could not beare the ſuites of the widow: therefore how ſhould the prayers of the faythful be without fruit, ſo that they be continual. Therefore if we wax weary, if we ſtay when wee haue prayed a while, or that our zeale to prayer waxeth cold, becauſe GOD ſeemeth to be deafe: yet let vs account that we ſhal certeinely receiue profit by it, though it dooth not yet appeare. And with this perſwaſion let vs ſtriue with our impatience, ſo that a longer delay may not hinder the courſe of praier.

7. Shall not God auenge his elect. That Iudge, which Chriſt deſcribeth to vs to be altogeather without mercy, as one which had not only hardned himſelfe in the ſight of God: but hauing caſte of all ſhame, had no care of his fame, opened his eyes at length to the miſeries of the widow: it is not to be doubted but that the faythfull ſhall feele at the leaſt the ſame commodity, ſo that they ceaſe not to be inſtant with God. But it is to be noted, while Chriſt applieth the ſimilitude to his purpoſe, he maketh not GOD lyke to the wicked and vnkinde iudge, but he noteth a farre diuerſe cauſe, why he differreth his faithfull ones, and delaieth them for a long ſeaſon, and doth not indeede reach his hand preſentlye vnto them: to witte, becauſe he is long ſuffering. VVherfore if God wincketh at our iniuries longer then he would, let vs know that hee doth it of his fatherly wiſdome, that he might exerciſe vs to patience: and a delaying of puniſhment for a time, is not a ſetting of ſinnes free for euer. And that he promiſeth that God will aduenge quicklye, ought to be referred to his prouidence: for, as we are too raſh haſtie, ſo he commeth not tyme enough to helpe, as our fleſh imagineth. But if it were lawfull to enter into his counſell, wee ſhould know that his helpe is ready and at hand as neede requireth, and that it ſlacketh not the ſpace of a moment, but is ready at all ſeaſons. Yet it is demaunded, how Chriſt ſhould inſtruct his Diſciples to pray for vengeaunce, who otherwhere teacheth his Diſciples to bleſſe and to pray for their perſecutours? I aunſwere, Chriſte ſpeaketh heere of vengeaunce, as hee derogateth nothinge from his doctrine. God ſaieth, that he will be the auenger of the faythfull, not that hee would giue the raynes at lybertie to the affections of the fleſhe, but that he myght perſwade them, that theyr ſaluation is deare and pretious vnto him: alſo by this meanes he byddeth them to truſt in his defence. If without hatred, and free and cleare from wicked deſire of reuenge, they with a right ordred motion of the ſpirit craue the helpe of GOD, their prayer ſhall be holy and lawfull, and ſhall be heard of God himſelfe. But, becauſe nothing is more hard then to caſte off wicked affections, the Lord is to be required, that he would direct and gouerne our heartes by his ſpirit, that we may ſo conceaue pure and right praiers, ſo it ſhall come to paſſe, that we may rightly call vpon God the auenger, & he being praid vnto, wil aunſwere vs.

8. VVhen the ſonne of manne commeth. Chriſte in this ſentence declareth that it is no meruaile if menne doe conſume away in theyr euylles: to witte, becauſe they neglect the true remedie. But his will was to meete with an offence, which wee do dayly conceaue of the vyle confounding of all thinges. Vnfaythfulneſſe, cruelty, deceites, fraudes, violence, no regarde of equitie, ſhameleſneſſe doe abound euery where, the oppreſſed poore doe ligh, the innocentes are proudly and deſpitefully vexed: yet God ſeemeth to ſleepe in the mean ſeaſon in heauen: hereof it commeth to paſſe, that fleſh imagineth a blynd gouernment of fortune. But Chriſt here declareth that menne of iuſtice are leſte deſtitute of the heauenlye helpe, in confidence whereof they neyther know nor wyll repoſe them ſelues. For it is not meete they ſhould bee holpe of God, which grudging inwardly, haue no regard of his prouidence. But Chriſte dooth expreſly foretell, that there ſhould be vnbeleeuers euery where from his aſcention into heauen vnto hys returne agayne: by theſe wordes declaringe, that if the Redeemer ſhoulde not appeare ſo ſpeedilye, menne ſhoulde feele the wante: beecauſe no manne almoſte woulde looke or haue regarde to him. And I would to GOD the effecte of this propheſie were not too euident: but experience teacheth, though the worlde ſhould bee

ouerwhelmed and oppressed with a great heape of euyls: yet there can scarse be founde a litle sparke of faith in a fewe. Others doe take the worde fayth for integritie, but the former sense dooth better agree with the text.

Matth.	Mark.	Luke. 18.
		9. Hee spake also this parable vnto certeine, which trusted in themselues, that they were iust and despised others.
		10. Two menne wente vppe into the Temple to praye: the one a Pharisee, the other a Publycan.
		11. The Pharisee stoode and prayed thus with him selfe, O God, I thanke thee that I am not as other men, extortioners, vniust, adulterers, or euen as this Publican.
		12. I fast twise a weeke: I giue tyeth of al that euer I possesse.
		13. But the Publican standing a farre off, woulde not lyft vp so much as his eyes to heauen, but smote his brest, saying, O God, be mercifull vnto mee a sinner.
		14. I tell you, this man departed to his house iustified, rather then the other: for euerye manne that exalteth himselfe, shalbe brought low, and hee that humbleth himselfe, shalbe exalted.

Christ now giueth commaundement of an other vertue, which is necessary in true prayer: that the faythfull come not into the presence of God, except they doe humbly and simply submitte themselues. There is not a more deadly disease then arrogancy, which yet is so throughly fastened and setled in the bones and marow of vs all, that it can scarce be driuen away and rooted out by any remedies. And it is woonder that men are so deceiued, that they dare set vp themselues agaynst God, and boaste of theyr merites with him. For though ambition bewitcheth vs amongst men, yet when wee come before God, it becommeth vs to forget all our vaine confidence: but euery man thinketh that he hath humbled himselfe sufficiently, if onely in hypocrisie he hath prayd for forgiuenesse. Hereby we learne how necessary this admonition of the Lord is. Furthermore, Christ reproueth two vices, which he purposed to condemne, wicked trust in our selues, and pride in condemning our brethrē, which do spring one of an other: for whosoeuer deceiueth himself with vaine confidence, it cannot be but that he shuld lift vp himself aboue the brethren: neither is it any meruaile: for how should it be, that hee should not despise his equals, which in his pride lifteth vp himselfe against God? And whosoeuer is puft vp with a trust of himself, purposely maketh battell against God, who is reconciled to vs onelye by denying our selues, while we being without al hope of our owne power, vertue and righteousnes, do repose our selues in his onely mercy.

10. Two men. Chriſt compareth two men togeather, which do both pretend the exerciſe of religion in praying, yet they two ſeeme too much vnlike. For the phariſee hauing an outward holynes, comming to God, commendeth his lyfe, and commeth to offer the ſacrifice of prayſe, as it were in his owne right: But the Publycan as a man reiected, becauſe he knoweth himſelfe vnworthy to come before God, doth inſinuate himſelfe fearefully, by confeſsing his owne vnworthynes in his prayer: and Chriſt reiecting the Phariſee, ſaith, that the praiers of the Publican were acceptable before God. Agayn, there are alſo noted two cauſes, why the Phariſe was reiected: to wit, becauſe he truſting in his own righteouſnes, extold himſefe with condemning others. Yet he is not reprehended, becauſe he lyfted vp himſelfe in the forces of free will: but becauſe he truſted that he had reconciled God to him by the deſerts of his works. For this giuing of thankes, which he vſeth, teſtifieth that hee glorieth not in his owne ſtrength, as if he ſhould obtaine righteouſnes of himſelfe, or ſhould deſerue any thing by his owne induſtrie: but he rather aſcribeth it to the grace of God, that he is righteous. But though he giuing thāks to God, confeſſeth what good works ſoeuer he hath to be the meere benefit of God: yet becauſe he putteth his truſt in workes, and preferreth himſelfe before others, he with his prayer is reiected: whereby wee gather, that menne are not rightly and perfectly humbled (though they account that they canne do nothing of themſelues) except they alſo diſtruſting the merites of theyr workes, doe learne to place theyr ſaluation in the free goodnes of GOD, ſo that theyr whole truſt and confidence be grounded there. A notable place: for to ſome it ſeemeth ſufficient, if they take from manne the glory of good workes, becauſe they are the gyftes of the holy Ghoſt, and ſo they interprete it, that wee are iuſtified freely: becauſe God found no righteouſnes in vs, but that which he brought. But Chriſt goeth further, not onely aſsigninge the power of well doing to the grace of the ſpirit: but he taketh from vs all truſte in workes. For the Phariſee is not therefore reproued, becauſe he challengeth that to himſelfe, which was proper to God: but becauſe he truſteth in his owne merites, ſo that he would haue GOD mercifull vnto him, becauſe he hadde ſo deſerued it. Therefore let vs knowe, though any manne aſcribe the prayſe of good workes to G O D: yet if hee imagine the righteouſnes of them to be the cauſe of his ſaluation, or truſteth in the ſame, he is condemned of peruerſe arrogancye. And note, here is not reproued the vaine ambition, wherein men otherwiſe guiltie with them ſelues do glory amongſt men, but the ſecrete hypocriſie: for it is not ſaid that he was a ſetter forth of his owne prayſes, but that he praide ſecretly with himſelfe. But though hee ſette not forth the fame of his owne righteouſnes with a lowd voice, yet the inward pride was abhominable to God.

His glorying was in two thinges: for, firſt he freeth himſelfe from the common guyltineſſe of menne: then he ſetteth foorth his owne prayſes. Hee ſayeth that hee is not as one of the common ſorte, becauſe he is free from the ſinnes, which reigne euery where in the worlde. And that hee boaſteth that hee faſted twiſe euery weeke, and gaue tythes of all hys goodes, is as much, as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde, that hee perfourmed more then the law required.

Euen

Euen as the Monkes in Poperie, doe preache the workes of ſupererogation: as though it were a ſmal thing for them to fulfil the law of God. But though euery man for the meaſure of the vertues which God hathe beſtowed vppon him, is the more bound to giue thankes to the authour, and this is a godly meditation to conſider howe much euery manne hath receiued, leaſt he ouerwhelme the bleſsings of God in vnthankfulneſſe, yet two things are to be obſerued, leaſt we be lifted vp in any confidẽce, as if we had ſatisfied God: then, that we become not inſolent with deſpiſing the brethren. The Phariſie ſinneth in both: for he falſly chalenging a righteouſneſſe to himſelfe, leaueth nothing to the mercy of God: then, he deſpiſeth all others in reſpecte of himſelfe. And Chriſt woulde not haue reproued this thankes giuinge, if it had not bene polluted with theſe two ſinnes: but becauſe the proude hypocrite winking at his owne ſinnes, oppoſed the imagination of his ſound and perfect righteouſneſſe before the iudgement of God, it was neceſſary that hee ſhoulde fall with his wicked and ſacrilegious boldneſſe. For the only hope of the godly, ſo long as they labour vnder the infirmitie of the fleſh, is, when they acknowledge the good things they haue, to flee to the only mercy of God, and to ſet their ſaluation in the obtaining of forgiueneſſe. But it is demaunded howe he ſhould haue ſo great holineſſe, who was blinded with ſuch wicked pride: for ſo great perfection cannot come any other way, but from the ſpirite of God, which we are aſſured doth not raigne in hypocrites. I anſwer, he truſted only in an outwarde ſhew, as if the ſecreat and inward vncleannes of the heart ſhuld not come to account. VVherfore, thogh he was full within of wicked concupiſcences: yet he pretẽdeth an innocency, becauſe he careleſly iudgeth only by the outward ſhew. The Lord reproueth him notof vanitie, becauſe he falſly chalengeth that to himſelfe which he had not: yet it is to be noted, that no man is free from rapine, vnrighteouſneſſe, luſt, & other vices, except he be gouerned by the ſpirite of God. He vſeth thys woorde Sabboth in this place, as ofte times otherwhere, for a weeke: But God doeth not commaunde any where in the lawe, that his ſeruants ſhuld faſt euery weeke, wherefore this faſting and tenthes, were voluntary exerciſes without the preſcript commaundement of the law.

13. The Publicane ſtanding a farre off. Chriſt deliuereth not here a generall rule, as if it ſhould be neceſſary to looke to the ground as oft as we pray: but he onely noteth the ſignes of humilitie, which he commendeth to his diſciples. Further, humilitie is placed in this, if they ſpare not their owne ſinnes, but by condemning themſelues, they doe preuent the iudgements of God: and they doe ſimply confeſſe their owne guiltineſſe, that they might be reconciled to God. And hether belongeth that ſhame, which is alwaies companion with repentance: for the Lorde certainly doeth eſpecially ſtande vppon this, that the Publicane earneſtly acknowledging his owne miſery and wretched eſtate, onely fleeth to the mercy of God: for though he was a ſinner, yet by obtaining free forgiueneſſe, he hopeth that God wil become fauorable vnto him. In ſum, that he might obtain fauor, he confeſſeth himſelfe to be vnworthy of the ſame. And certainly, ſith forgiueneſſe of ſinnes doeth onely reconcile vs to God, it is neceſſary that we ſhoulde beginne there, if we deſire to haue our prayers acceptable to him. Furrher, he which before confeſſed himſelfe guiltie and conuicte, yet deſireth to be pardoned, baniſheth himſelfe from al confidence in works, and that was the purpoſe of Chriſt, to ſhew that God would not be entreated of any, but of them which do fearfully flie to his onely mercy.

14. This man departed to his houſe iuſtified. This is an improper compariſon: for they were not both iuſtified, Chriſt onely preferreth the Publicane in ſome degree, but he meaneth that he was acceptable to God, when as the Phariſie was altogither reiected. And this place doeth teach vs euidently what this worde to be iuſtified, doeth properly ſignifie: namely, to ſtand before God as if we were righteous. Neither was the Publicane therefore ſayd to be iuſtified, becauſe he had ſodainly gotten a newe qualitie: but becauſe his guiltines being pardoned, and his ſinnes aboliſhed, he obtained fauour, whereof it foloweth, that righteouſneſſe conſiſteth in forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Therefore as wicked confidence defiled and polluted the vertues of the Phariſie, ſo that his life which was laudable before the world, was not accounted of with God: ſo the Publicane not holpe with any merites or deſerts of workes, obtained righteouſneſſe onely by praying for forgiueneſſe: becauſe that he truſted not in any other thing, then the mercy of God. But it ſeemeth to be abſurde, that all menne ſhould be brought into order, ſith there are Sainctes much holyer then this Publican was. I anſwear, how much ſoeuer any man hath profited in the worſhip of God and true holineſſe: yet, if he conſider how much he yet wanteth of perfection, he cánot otherwiſe pray rightly, except he begin at confeſsiō of his own guiltines. For thogh ſome are more, ſome les, yet all are generally faultie. VVherfore it is not to be douted, but that Chriſt preſcribeth here a law to al mē: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, then is God pleaſed with vs, when diſtruſting in our workes, we ſeeke to be reconciled frely by grace. And the Papiſts are enforced in part to graunt this: but preſently they corrupt the doctrine with a wicked comment. They graunt that all haue neede of forgiueneſſe, becauſe no man is perfecte: but firſt they make miſerable men dronken in a vaine hope of a partiall righteouſneſſe (as they call it) then they adde ſatisfactions, whereby they ſhuld wipe away their guiltineſſe. But this ought to be the onely ſtay of our faith, that wee are accepted of God, not that we haue ſo deſerued it, but becauſe he imputeth not ſinnes.

Luke 17.

11. And ſo it was, when he went to Ieruſalem, that he paſſed through the mids of Samaria and Galile.
12. And as hee entred into a certaine towne, there met him 10. mē that were lepers, which ſtode a far off.
13. And they lift vp their voyces, and ſayde: Ieſus, maiſter, haue mercy on vs.
14. And when he ſaw them, he ſayd vnto them: Go ſhewe your ſelues vnto the prieſtes. And it came to paſſe, as they went, they were cleanſed.
15. Then one of them, when he ſaw that he was healed, turned backe, & with a loude voice praiſed God,
16. And fel downe on his face at his feete, & gaue him thankes: and he was a Samaritane.
17. And Ieſus anſweared, and ſaid: are there not ten cleanſed? but where are the nine?
18. There are none found that returned to giue God praiſe, ſaue this ſtraunger. 19. And

19. And he ſayde vnto him: Ariſe, goe thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole.
20. And when hee was demaunded of the Phariſies, when the kingdom of God ſhould come, he anſweared them, and ſayde: the kingdome of God commeth not with obſervation.
21. Neither ſhal men ſay: Loe here, or loe there: for beholde the kingdome of God is among you.

As Mathew before in the eight chapter, and the two other Euangeliſts declared that Chriſte healed one Leper, ſo Luke reporteth that the like myracle was ſhewed in healing of 10. Lepers. But there is an other purpoſe in this hyſtory: for here is deſcribed the vile and incredible vnthankfulneſſe of the Iewiſh nation, leaſt it ſhould ſeeme a wonder to any man, that ſo many benefites of Chriſt were ſuppreſſed, and ſo many myracles buried. The circumſtance is alſo added, which infameth their offence the more: for when the Lorde had healed nine Iewes, not one of them gaue thankes, but that their diſeaſe might be forgotten, they eſcape away by ſtealth. One only Samaritan profeſſeth what he oweth to Chriſt. Therfore of the one part here is ſhewed the diuine power of Chriſt: againe, the wickednesſe of the Iewes is reproued, whereby it came to paſſe, that almoſt no honour was giuen to ſo notable a myracle.

13. Ieſus, maſter. It appeareth that they al had ſome faith, becauſe they do not only craue the aid of Chriſt, but they giue him the title of maſter. Alſo, it may be gathered by their ready obedience, that they ſpake ſo frō their heart, and not fainedly: for although they yet ſawe the filthy ſcabbe vpon their fleſh, yet aſſone as they are commanded to ſhew themſelues to the prieſts, they obey without delay. Adde alſō, that they wold neuer haue gone to the prieſts, but by the perſwaſion of faith: for it ſhould haue bene a ſcorne for them to offer themſelues before the iudges of the Leproſie to witneſſe their clenſing, if the promiſe of Chriſt had not bene more forcible to them, then the preſent beholding of their diſeaſe. They cary the viſible leproſie in their fleſh, yet truſting in the only worde of Chriſte, they dout not to profeſſe themſelues cleane, therefore it cannot be denied but that there was ſome ſede of faith planted in their hearts. And thogh it is certaine that they were not regenerate by the ſpirit of adoption, yet there is no abſurditie in it, that they helde ſome beginnings of pietie. So much the more is it to be feared, leaſt it befall vnto vs, that the ſparkes of faith ſhining in vs, be extinguiſhed. for thogh the liuely faith neuer dieth, which hath his rotes faſtned in the ſpirit of regeneratiō: yet we ſee otherwhere, that many haue conceiued a faith for a time, which doth preſently vaniſh away. And this diſeaſe is too common, that neceſſitie enforceth vs, & that therby our minds are caried to ſeke God, yea, & the Lord himſelfe by the ſecrete inſtincte of his ſpirite ſolliciteth vs thereto: but after we haue obtained our deſires, howe doeth vnthankfull forgetfulneſſe ſwallowe vp that ſenſe, and feeling of pietie? So want and hunger engendereth faith, which fulneſſe killeth.

14. Go, ſhew your ſelues to the prieſts. This anſwer is as much, as if he ſhuld haue ſaid that they wer clenſed: for we know that the iudgemēt of the leproſie was in the law cōmāded to the prieſts, that they ſhuld diſcerne the cleane frō the vncleane: ſo Chriſt leaueth thē their right without diminiſhing it, and he maketh them witneſſes and allowers of his myracle. Therefore we ſayd that theſe men eſteemed holily and reuerently of Chriſte, which being yet diſeaſed, of his onely word they preſently ſhould conceiue hope of health. But the Papiſts doe very fondly gather their auricular confeſsion from hence. The Leprous menne are ſent I graunt by Chriſte to the Prieſts, not to vomite their ſinnes in their eares: but they are rather ſent to offer the ſacrifice according to the commaundement of the law. Neither, are they ſent to purge themſelues, as the Popiſh confeſsion (by their ſaying) bringeth cleanneſſe: but that they being nowe cleane before, ſhoulde ſhewe themſelues to the prieſtes. But they are double fooles, not conſidering what a filthy blot of infamie, they caſt vpon their confeſsion. They haue behaued themſelues well, if of al the multitude of them which haue gone to the Prieſtes, the tenth part onely returneth to Chriſte, and all the reſt are wickedly alienated away. For they cannot pretende this as a title of their confeſsion, but that it ſhalbe lawfull to returne againe this fruite of the ſame vpon them, that none returned from the Prieſts to giue glory to God. But theſe trifles being let paſſe, we vnderſtand to what end there was mention made of the Prieſtes.

It came to paſſe, as they went. Heere appeared the diuine power of Chriſte and of his wordes, and heere alſo was an inſtruction giuen, howe much obedience of faith ſhoulde pleaſe God: for heereof came their ſodaine health, that they beinge of good hope, doubted not to take their iourney at Chriſt his commaundement. If that that vaniſhing faith wanting a liuely roote, onely brought out the herbe, was yet adorned of God with a wonderfull effecte: howe much more excellent a reward remaineth for our faith, if it be ſetled ſincerely and perfectly in God: For thoughe the health of the body profited not the 9. Lepers to ſaluation, but for their fleeting and fraile faith they onely obtained a temporall gifte: yet vnder this figure it is ſhewed vs, how effectuall a true faith ſhalbe.

15. Then one of them. It is vncertaine whether he returned in the midſte of the iourney, and Lukes wordes ſeeme to ſignifie the ſame: yet it ſemeth more probable to me, that he came not to giue thanks vntill he had heard the iudgement of the Prieſtes. For it behoued him to be reſtored by the Prieſts to the common ſocietie, neither was it lawfull for neglecting the commaundement of Chriſt, to defraude the temple of God of the ſacrifice: except that other coniecture ſhall rather like you, aſſoone as he ſawe himſelfe cleanſed, before he deſired the teſtimonie of the Prieſtes, beinge caried with a holy and godly zeale came to the authour, that hee might begin his ſacrifice at thankeſgiuing. But in Chriſtes wordes there is an vpbraiding of the whole nation: for he doeth odiouſly compare one ſtranger with many Iewes: becauſe it was a common thing amongſt them to deuoure the benefites of God without any ſenſe of godlineſſe. And hereof it commeth to paſſe, that by ſo many and ſo notable myracles, Chriſte had almoſt no name amongeſt them. Yet let vs know that we are generally condemned all by this complaint, except we become thankefull to God for his benefites.

19. Thy faith hath ſaued thee. Some interpreaters do reſtraine this worde ſauing, to the cleanſing of the fleſh: but if it be ſo, ſith Chriſt commendeth the liuely faith in this Samaritane, it may be demaunded howe the other nine were ſaued, for they had all generally like health. Thus therefore it is to be noted, that Chriſte heere iudged otherwiſe of the gifte of God, then prophane men doe: namely, as a comfortable token and pledge of the loue of the father. The other nine Leapers were healed: but becauſe they do wickedly blotte out the grace of God, their vnthankfulneſſe hindereth and polluteth the health it ſelfe, ſo that they take not that profite by the ſame which they ought. Therefore only faith ſanctifieth the giftes of God, that they may be pure to vs, and being ioyned with a lawful vſe, they may be to our ſaluation. To be ſhort, Chriſt declareth by this worde how we ſhould vſe the benefites of God rightly. VVherby we gather that the eternall ſaluation of the ſoule is ioyned togither with this temporall gift. The Samaritane is ſaued by his faith. How? Certainly not ſo that he was healed of his leaprouſie: (for this was common with the reſt) but becauſe he is accepted into the number of the children of GOD, in that he receiued a token of a fatherly loue at his hand.

20. And when he was demaunded of the Phariſies. This queſtion vndoubtedly was moued in ſcorne. For when as Chriſt had ſpoken daily of the being of the kingdome of God at hand, and that there was no chaunge of the outward ſtate amongeſt the Iewes, the wicked and malitious menne thought this to be a plauſible coulour to vexe and trouble him by. Therfore as if he ſhould ſpeake in vain and trifle of the kingdom of God, they doe aske him ieſtingly, when at length that kingdome ſhall come. Yet if any ſhall thinke that they rather asked this queſtion of groſſe ignorãce, then to ſcorne at, I doe not ſtriue againſt it.

The kingdom of God commeth not. Chriſt in my iudgement neglecting thoſe dogges, applieth his anſweare to his diſciples: as being after prouoked by the wicked, he tooke thereby occaſion to teach them. And ſo their malice being laughed to ſcorne by the Lorde, while the truth is defended from their cauils, it ſheweth it ſelfe the more. Chriſt here vſeth this word obſeruation for great glory: as if he ſhuld deny the kingdome of God to come loftily, as in a pomp. For he declareth that they are much deceiued which ſeeke the kingdome of God, whiche is not carnall or earthly, with fleſhly eyes, when it is nothing elſe but an inwarde and ſpirituall renewing of the ſoule: for he teacheth them that they do peruerſly againſt the nature of that kingdome, which looke about hither or other, that they might obſerue ſome viſible notes: as if he ſhoulde haue ſayde, the reſtitution of the Churche which God hath promiſed, muſt be ſought inwardly: for he giuing to his electe a heauenly newneſſe of life, ſetteth vp his kingdome in them. And ſo he doeth ouerthwartly reproue the ſlouthfulneſſe of the Phariſies, becauſe they aſpire to nothing, but that whiche is earthly and tranſitorie. Yet it is to be noted that Chriſt only ſpake of the beginnings of the kingdom of God: becauſe that we begin nowe to be reformed by the ſpirite according to the image of God, that then a perfecte renewing of vs and of the world, might follow in his time.

their Synagogue, so that they were astonied, and sayd: whence commeth this wisedom & great workes vnto this man?

55. Is not this the Carpenters sonne? Is not his mother called Marie, and his brethren Iames and Ioses, and Simon and Iudas?

56. And are not his sisters all with vs? VVhence then hath hee all these things?

57. And they were offended with him. Then Iesus sayde to them: a Prophet is not without honour, saue in his owne country, and in his owne house.

58. And he did not many great workes there, for their vnbeliefs sake.

ny that heard him, were astonied, & said: from whence hath he these thinges? and what wisedome is this that is giuen vnto him, that euen such great workes are done by his handes.

3. Is not this the carpenter, Maries son, the brother of Iames and Ioses, and of Iuda and Simon? and are not his sisters heere with vs? And they were offended in him.

4. Then Iesus saide vnto them a prophet is not without honour, but in his owne, countrey, and among his owne kinred, and in his owne house.

5. And he could there do no great werks saue that he laide his hands vpon a fewe sicke folke, and healed them.

6. And he merualled at their vnbeliefe, and went about by the Townes on euery side, teaching.

53. VVhen Iesus had ended. Mathew meaneth not that Christ came presently after the end of those sermons into his own country: for by Marke it appeareth that there was some distance of time. But the meaning is, when he had taught sometime in Iudea, he returned againe to the Galileans, of whome he was yet receiued, but with small kindnesse. Luke rehearseth almost the like hystorie in the 4. chap. yet not the same. Neither is it any wonder that his countrey men were now offended at the beginnings of Christ, accounting his base house, his obscure and meane maner of bringing vp, so that they murmured against his doctrine: and they persisted after in the same malice, so that they ceased not to slaunder him, as oft as he would execute the office of a Prophet amongst them. Therfore this second reiecting of Christ declareth that the citizens of Nazareth were not amended by this time that he was away, but the same contempt was alwaies a let vnto them from hearing Christ.

54. So that they were astonied. They are astonied, being moued at the newnesse of the matter, that Christe which had not bene brought vp in learning, but had bene occupied euen from his youth vnto his mans estate, in an handy craft, should be such a Doctor, and should vtter diuine wisdom. VVhen they ought to haue beholden the hande of God in this myracle, their vnthankefulnesse made them, that they spread darknesse vpon themselues. They are enforced to wonder, will they, nill they: yet they despise him. VVhat is this else, then to cast away a Prophet taught of God, because he came not out of the schole of men? And they ouerthrow themselues in their owne confession, when as they giue so notable a testimonie to the doctrine of Christ, which findeth yet no place in them, because it hath not the vsuall originall from the earth. VVhy doe they not rather lift vp their eyes into heauen, that they might learne, that that came from God, which excelleth mans reason? Furthermore the myracles ioyned to the doctrine, ought to touche them depelier, or at least to waken them from sleeping in too much securitie, that they might giue the glory to God: for certain-certainly, while God dealeth by vnwonted meanes, he doeth so much the more euidently shew the power of his hande, yet this was the very cause why the Nazarites so malitiously drew a veile ouer their eyes. Therefore we see that simple ignorance did not hurt the menne; but they willingly tooke offences to themselues, least they should follow whether God calleth them. It behoueth vs rather to reason on the cõtrary part, where humane meanes doe want, the power of God doeth euidently shewe it selfe, that he might haue the whole praise to himselfe.

55. Is not this the carpenters sonne? VVe know that it was by the wõderful counsel of God, that Christ kept himself in a priuate life, vntil he was 30 yeres old. Hereof the Nazarites wickedly and vniustly tooke an offence, when they ought rather reuerently to embracehim, as one sodainly falne from heauen. They see God working in Christ: thereof of sette purpose they turne their eyes to Ioseph and Marie, and all his kinsfolkes, whose estate was meane and base, to be as a vaile drawne betweene them and the manifest light. VVe haue sayd other where before, that all kinsfolkes are called brethren after the maner of the Hebrewes. VVherefore Heluidius imagined too fondly, that Marie had moe sonnes, because there is mention made so oft of the brethren of Christ.

57. A Prophet is not without honour. I haue expounded this sentence more largely in the 4. chap. after Iohn. It may be this was a generall Prouerbe, that they which excel in excellent gifts, are no where lesse esteemed, then in their owne country: wherin the vnthankfulnesse of these men bewraieth it selfe, which the more familiarly God offreth himselfe, so much the more boldly they refuse him in the gifts of his spirite: yet I doe willingly subscribe to Chrysostome, who thinketh that the Iewes were specially reprehended by this saying. But that which was wont to be spokē against the whole nation, Christ doth properly apply to his countrey menne the Galileans: for he was neuer lesse esteemed in any place, then where he was borne. VVherfore he reproueth them worthily, that when they ought to haue bene the first that should haue embraced the grace offred them, they reiecte it farre from them: for it is too absurde, that a Prophet of GOD should be despised in that place where he was borne, to whome others, as out of a straunge place, doe come with great desire.

58. He did not many great workes there. Mark speaketh more Emphatically, that he could not doe any great worke there. Yet in the substance of the matter they agree very wel: the way was shutte vp against Christ by the wickednesse of his owne citizens, that he should not worke many myracles amongst them. He had giuē them some tast: they do willingly amase themselues, least they should vnderstand any thing. Therefore Augustine doth aptly compare faith to the open mouth of a vessel: but he sayth that infidelitie is like to a couer, wherwith the vessel is couered, lest it should receiue the liquor powred in of God. And truely the matter is euen so: for when the Lorde seeth that we receiue not his power, at length he withdraweth the same: and yet in the meane while we complaine that wee want his helpe, which our incredulitie driueth and remoueth farre from vs. Marke, by sayinge that Christe coulde not, amplifieth the offence of them from whome his goodnesse was staid: for certainly, the vnbeleuers do as much as in them lieth, holde backe the hand of God by their obstinacie, not that God is ouercome as an inferiour, but because they permit him not to shewe his power.

That

That yet is to be noted which Marke addeth, that notwithſtanding there were ſome ſicke folke healed. For hereby we gather that the goodneſſe of Chriſt did ſtriue with their malice, that it might goe beyond the hinderances. VVe doe finde the ſame in God daily: for though that neceſſarily and iuſtly he withholdeth his power, becauſe the way for him to vs is not open: yet we ſee that he making himſelfe a way through places impaſſable, ceaſeth not to do vs good. A wonderfull contention, that when we doe by all meanes endeuour to ouerwhelme the grace of God, leaſt it ſhould come vnto vs, yet that, as conquerour, breaketh out, and as it were in deſpite of vs it becommeth effectuall.

Math. 14.	Marke 6.	Luke 9.
1. At that time Herode the Tetrarche, heard of the fame of Ieſus:	14. Then king Herode heard of him, (for his name was ſpread abroade,) and ſayde: Iohn Baptiſt is riſen againe from the deade, and therefore great workes are wrought by him.	7. Newe Herode the Tetrarche heard of all that was done by him: & he doubted, becauſe that it was ſayde of ſome, that Iohn was riſen againe from the dead:
2. And ſayd vnto his ſeruaunte: This is Iohn Baptiſt: He is riſen again frō the dead, and therfore great workes are wrought by him.	15. Other ſayde, it is Elias: and ſome ſayd, It is a Prophet, or as one of the Prophets.	8. And of ſome, that Elias had appeared: and of ſome, that one of the old Prophets was riſen againe.
	16. So when Herode heard it, he ſayd: It is Iohn whome I beheaded: he is riſen from the dead.	9. Then Herode ſayd: Iohn haue I beheaded. VVho then is this, of whom I heare ſuch thinges? and he deſired to ſee him.

The Euangeliſts do therfore report this, that we might know that the name of Chriſt was much ſpoken of euery where, ſo that ignorāce might not excuſe the Iewes. For otherwiſe this doubt might haue crept into the mindes of many men: how ſhould it come to paſſe, that Chriſt liuing vpon the earth, ſhoulde reſt quietly in Iudea, as if he were thruſt vppe into a corner, and had reuealed his diuine power to none. Therfore the Euangeliſts doe nowe witneſſe that the fame of him was ſpred euery where, ſo that it came euen into Herodes court.

2. He ſayd vnto his ſeruaunts. It is gathered by the woordes of Luke, that Herode had not this in minde of himſelfe, but this ſuſpition was thruſt into him by the common rumour of the people. Neither doe I doubt but that the hatred of the Tyrant, and the deteſtation of the cruell ſlaughter ſhould giue occaſion of ſpeaches, as it commonly commeth to paſſe. This ſuperſtition did ſticke in the mindes of men euery where, that the deade returned into life vnder an other perſon, as it is ſayd other where. Nowe they take that which was next, that Herode by killinge cruelly that holy man, obtained not that which he hoped for, becauſe that hee being raiſed from the dead by the wonderfull power of God, ſhoulde become a more ſharpe enemy, and auenger of his ſinnes. Yet Marke and Luke do declare that mē ſpake diuerſly: namely, that ſome thought him to be Elias, others, ſome one of the Prophets, or which was equall to the Prophets in excellencie of the ſpirite. VVhy they ſhoulde imagine it of Elias rather then of any other, we haue ſpoken other where. Becauſe God had promiſed by Malachie 4.5. that Elias ſhoulde come who ſhoulde gather together the Church diſpearſed, they fondly drewe the Propheſie to the perſon of the man: when as the ſimple compariſon ſhould be in this meaning, leaſt the comming of the Meſsiah ſhould be obſcure and hidde, and leaſt the grace of redemption ſhould be kept vnknowne from the people, a certaine Elias ſhall goe before him, ſuch a one as he was in times paſt, which reſtored the ruinous eſtates and ouerthrowne worſhip of God. Therefore he ſhall goe before in ſingular power of the ſpirit, that he might make manifeſt that great day. The Iewes as they were groſſe interpreaters hadde drawen this to that Elias the Thesbite, as if that he ſhoulde execute the office of a Prophet againe. Yet others doe imagine that either ſome one of the olde Prophets was riſen, or that he ſhould be ſome great man and excellent as they were. Alſo it is wonderfull, when they were of diuers opinions: yet the truthe came in none of their mindes: eſpecially, when as the reckening of the time it ſelfe ſhould directe them to Chriſte. God had promiſed them a redeemer, which ſhould bring helpe to the miſerable & the loſt. The extreme neceſsity whereinto they were caſt, did then eſpecially require helpe of God. The Redemer is preſent, as is partly witneſſed by the crying of Iohn, and partly he himſelfe teſtifieth of his owne office. They are enforced to acknowledge ſome diuine power in him, yet falling to their owne deuiſes, they chaunge him into an other perſonne. So truely the world, through wicked vnthankfulneſſe vſeth to extinguiſh the graces of God offred to thē. In reſpect of Herode himſelfe, as I touched a little before, he conceiued the opinion that Iohn was raiſed, not with any ioy: but as euill conſciences doe quake fearefully, and doe bende at euery blaſt, ſo he eaſily conceiueth that which he feared. And God often ſcourgeth the vngoaly with theſe blind terrours: ſo though they hardē themſelues of purpoſe, neither are vexed by any other, yet they obtaine no reſt from that inwarde ſlaughterman, but that he ſharply ſcourgeth them.

Therefore greate woorkes are wrought by him. It is woonder by what reaſon they were ledde to bring theſe thinges in. Iohn in all the courſe of his preaching, wrought no ſigne: therefore it ſeemeth to be without all colour, that they ſeeing a man notable through myracles, ſhoulde imagine him to be Iohn: but they thinke that theſe myracles were nowe wrought at the firſt, by them to prooue his reſurrection, and which ſhoulde teſtifie that the holy Prophet of God was wickedly ſlaine by Herode: and nowe came foorth as a manne halowed, not to be touched but with reuerence, leaſt any durſt be ſo bold as to violate him any more. Therfore to worke workes by him: that is, they thought them to be wrought that hee might gette the more authoritie thereby, and that it might be euident that the Lorde was with him.

Mathewe 14.	Marke 6.	Luke.
3. For Herode had taken Iohn, and bounde him, and put him in priſon for Herodias ſake, his brother Philips wife.	17. For Herode himſelfe hadde ſent foorth, and had taken Iohn, and bounde him in priſon for Herodias ſake, which was his brother Philips wife, becauſe he had maried her.
4. For Iohn ſayde vnto him: It is not lawfull for thee to haue her.	18. For Iohn ſayde vnto Herode: It is not lawfull for thee to haue thy brothers wife.
5. And

5. And when hee woulde haue putte him to death, he feared the multitude, becauſe they counted him as a Prophet.
6. But when Herodes birth day was kept, the daughter of Herodias daunced before them, and pleaſed Herode.
7. Wherefore he promiſed with an othe, that he would giue her what ſoeuer shee would aske.
8. And shee being before inſtructed of her mother, ſayde: Giue me heere Iohn Baptiſts head in a platter.
9. And the kinge was ſory: neuertheleſſe, becauſe of the othe, and them that ſate with him at the table, he cõmaunded it to be giuen her.
10. And hee ſent and beheaded Iohn in the priſon.
11. And his head was brought in a platter and giuen to the maide, & she brought it vnto her mother.
12. And his diſciples came, and tooke vppe his body & buried it, and went & tolde Ieſu.

19. Therefore Herodias had a quarrell againſt him, and woulde haue killed him, but shee coulde not:
20. For Herode feared Iohn, knowing that hee was a iuſt man, and an holy, and reuerenced him, and when he had heard him, he did many things, & heard him gladly.
21. But the time being conuenient, when Herode on his birth day made a banket to his princes and captaines, and chiefe eſtates of Galile,
22. And the daughter of the ſame Herodias came in and danced, and pleaſed Herode and them that ſate at table together, the kinge ſaide vnto the maide: Aske of mee what thou wilt, and I will giue it thee.
23. And he ſware vnto her: what ſoeuer thou shalt aske of me, I will giue it thee, euen vnto the halfe of my kingdõ.
24. So shee went forth, and ſayd to her mother: what shall I aske? And shee ſayde, Iohn Baptiſts head.
25. Then she came in ſtraight way with haſt vnto the king, and asked: ſaying, I would that thou shouldeſt giue me euen now in a charger, the head of Iohn Bapt.
26. Then the king was very ſory: yet for his othes ſake, and for their ſakes which ſate at table with him, he would not refuſe her. 27. And immediatly the king ſent the hangman, and gaue charge that his head shoulde be brought. So hee went and beheaded him in the priſon,
28. And brought his head in a charger, and gaue it to the maide, and the maide gaue it to her mother.
29. And when his diſciples hearde it, they came and tooke vppe his body, and put it in a tombe.

The rehearſall of this hyſtory is now omitted by Luke, becauſe he had ſet down the ſame in an other place. I alſo wil be the ſhorter in this place leaſt by wryting one thing twiſe, I ſhould be troubleſome to the readers. The Euangeliſts do ſay, that Iohn was taken, becauſe he had condemned openly the ſtealing of Herodias, & the inceſtuous mariage with her. Ioſephus aſsigneth an other cauſe: namely, that Herode fearing ſome newe ſtirres againſt him, ſuſpected Iohn, which may be, that the tyrante vnder this pretence woulde haue excuſed his owne wickednesſe, or els that rumour was ſpred, as vniuſt violence & cruelty is ful of many falſ accuſatiõns.

ons. But the Euangeliſts doe declare the cauſe to be, that Herode was angry with the holy man, becauſe he was reprooued by him. Alſo Ioſephus is deceiued, who thinketh that Herodias was not taken away from his brother Philippe, but from his vncle Herode, the king of Chalcis. For at what time the Euangeliſtes wrytte, the memory of this offence was not onely freſh and newe, but was alſo apparant before the eyes of all men. And that Ioſephus in an other place ſayth that Philip was of a milde diſpoſitiō, I thinke it was as a ſpur to make Herode the bolder, for that he might the freelier be reprochefull and iniurious againſt a quiet and ſofte manne, not apt to make warre. There is alſo an other probable coniecture, that Herodias was rather giuen in mariage to her vncle Philippe, then to her great vncle her graundfathers brother beinge nowe a weake worne olde manne. But Herode Antipas, of whome mention is heere made, and Philippe were not brethren of one mother, but the firſte was borne of Marthaca, the thirde wife of Herode the Greate, and the other was borne of Cleopatra. Nowe to retourne to the Euangeliſtes: they ſay that Iohn was caſt into bandes, becauſe he hadde more freely reproued the wickedneſſe of Herode, then the cruelty of the Tyrant would beare. Nowe, the hainouſneſſe of the offence was odious and infamous enough of it ſelfe, that he did not onely fetche an other mannes wife from her lawfull bedde, and kept her at his owne houſe: but that he did this iniury to his germane brother. VVhen Iohn had freely reproued him, Herode feared not in vaine, leaſt any ſedition ſhould be raiſed ſodenly. Luſt did not ſuffer him to amende his ſinne: but he promiſeth himſelfe a ſafe and quiet liberty by caſting the Prophet of God into bandes. The ignorance of the hyſtorie cauſed many to thruſt in a vaine diſputation, whether it were lawfull for me to take to wife, her which firſt was maried to my brother. For though naturall ſhame abhorreth from ſuche a mariage, yet Iohn rather condemneth the taking of her away from her huſband rather then the inceſt: becauſe Herode by force or by deceite, hadde robbed his brother of his lawfull wife. And otherwiſe it was leſſe lawfull for him to take his Neece, then the wife of his deade brother in her wydowhoode. And it is not to be doubted but that ſo hainous an offence was ſpoken againſt euery where: but others reproued Herode with their euill ſpeaches in his abſence: onely Iohn commeth into his preſence, and reproueth him freely to his face, if it might be that he might by any meanes be brought to repentaunce. VVhereby we learne with what conſtant courage it behooueth the children of God to be furniſhed, which haue to doe with Princes. For hypocriſie and ſeruile flattery raigneth almoſte in all Courtes, ſo the eares of Princes cuſtomed to pleaſant ſpeaches, can abide no wordes, which ſhal more ſharply reproue their ſinnes. But becauſe the ſinne was ſo vile, the Prophet of God might not diſſemble, Iohn cōmeth to him, though he ſhould neither haue reward nor thankes, yet leaſt he ſhould neglect his duety, he doubteth not to incurre the diſpleaſure of the Tyrant: eſpecially, when he knewe that he being caught in the ſnares of a harlot, could ſcarce be remoued from his purpoſe.

5. VVhen he would haue put him to death. There ſemeth to be ſome difference in Mat. and Markes wordes, in that the firſt ſayth that Herode was deſirous of this cruel murther, but that he was ſtaid for fear of the people: but the other chargeth only Herodias with this cruelty. But the aſſwer is eaſy, that Herode woulde not in the beginning haue ſlaine the holy man, except ſome greater perſwaſion had compelled him ſo to do: becauſe he reuerenced him, and truely a reuerend feare ſtaied him from raging ſo cruelly againſt the prophet of God: but Herodias by pricking him daily forward, cauſed him to ſhake off all feare of God frō him. But when he was caried foorth in rage by that fury, that he deſired that the holy man were dead, yet was he ſtaied with a new let, becauſe he feared the mouing of the people againſt him. And Markes wordes are here to be noted, Herodias (ſayeth hee) laide waite for him: namely, becauſe Herode was not ſo forward, or willing to the murder, ſhe tried either to circumuent him by ſyniſter deuices, or to worke ſome ſecreat deſtruction vpon that holy mā. The firſt opinion pleaſeth me beſt, that ſhe ſought to entrap the minde of her husband by ſubtleties, but in vain, ſo long as Herodes cōſcience withſtode it, ſhee coulde not deſtroy that holy man. Then followed an other feare, leaſt any tumulte ſhoulde ariſe through the hainous crueltie of his death. But Marke toucheth only what ſtaid Herode, from giuing preſent place to the harlots requeſts: for Herodias deſired that Iohn had bene ſecreatly put to death aſſoone as he was caſt into priſon. But Herode reuerenced the holy man, ſo that he woulde willingly haue obeied his counſels. Alſo the feare here mentioned, was not a feare conceiued of the eſtimation of an other, as we feare them which gette ſome authoritie and credite, thoughe wee eſteeme them vnworthy the honour: but this feare was a willing reuerence, becauſe Herode durſt not deſpiſe him, whom he was perſwaded to be a holy manne, and a faithfull miniſter of God. And this is worthy to be noted: for though Iohn hadde experience, that it was profitable for him many wayes to be in ſome credite with the Tetrarche, yet he feared not to diſpleaſe him, when he could not otherwiſe keepe his fauor, then by winking treacherouſly at his notorious & infamous wickedneſſe. He might haue ſaid that he regarded not his own priuate commodities, neither had any other reſpect then of the common profite. For it is certaine that he ſought nothing ambitiouſly, but Herode was obedient to him in holy counſels, whiche appertained to the lawfull adminiſtration of the kingdome. But becauſe he ſawe that this kinde of recompence was not lawfull, that he might by betraying the truthe, gette ſome ſhewes and likings, he chuſeth of a frende, rather to make him his ennemie, then by flattery or ſilence to nouriſhe the ſinne which he is enforced ſeuerely to reprehend. Iohn therefore by his example, preſcribeth a certaine rule to godly teachers, that they ſhould not diſſemble nor winke at vices of Princes, though they ſhould of that price buy their fauour profitable for the common eſtate. But the ſpirit of God doeth ſhew vnto vs in Herode as in a glaſſe, that it befalleth oft times, that they which worſhip not god ſincerely, are yet ready in ſome poynt to obey his cōmandemēts, ſo that they may haue ſome liberty graunted to them by releaſe. But whē they are more ſtraightly dealt with, they become not only obſtinate, but by caſting off the yoake, alſo mad. There is therefore no cauſe, why they ſhould pleaſe themſelues, which yelde obedience to many good counſels, vntil they haue learned to yeld & to ſubmit themſelues wholely to God.

6. VVhen Herodes birthe day was kepte. The Euangeliſtes doe nowe begin to declare by what fraude Herodias brought the deſtruction of Iohn to paſſe at length, which ſhe had long time practiſed, and occaſion was giuen giuen her by a ſolemne feaſt kept when Herode celebrated his birth day. For it can ſcarcely be, but that thoſe great bankets, ſhould beſides luxury, pride, vnbrideled mirth, and other wickedneſſes, alſo drawe many other miſchiefes with it. Not that it is euil of it ſelfe to make a rich banket: but ſuch is the readineſſe of mannes witte to wantonneſſe, that the raines being lette louſe, they doe eaſily runne out of courſe. That ancient cuſtome cannot be diſallowed for ſolemnizing a birth day euery yere, for that day as oft as it commeth, admoniſheth euery one of vs to giue thākes to God, by whom he was brought into this life, & hath now by his bleſsing paſſed ouer many yeares: then that he ſhould remember how yll and vnprofitably he hath ſuffered the time to periſh, which was graunted of God: Laſtly, that he ſhoulde commend himſelfe the reſt of his life to the protection of the ſame God. But there is nothing ſo pure, which the worlde will not corrupt with her ſinnes: for the moſt part prophaneth with filthy corruptions the birthe day, which ought to be holy: and almoſte no ſumptuous banket is free from diſſolute wantonneſſe: firſt there is too much drunke: then is a doore opened to filthy and vnmodeſt ſpeaches: laſtly, no temperance is holden at all. This mooued holy Iob (his ſonnes banketting togither by courſe) to offer ſacrifice, becauſe that he thought that men could neuer moderate themſelues ſo wel, when companions do inuite eache other to be mery, but that offence ſhould grow many wayes. So it came to paſſe that Herode meaning to entertaine his gueſts ſumptuouſly, ſuffred his wifes daughter to dāce. Heereby it alſo appeareth what the diſcipline of that court was: for though many gaue themſelues liberty then to dance, yet it was a vile note of whoriſh wantonnes for a damſel mariageable to dance. But filthy Herodias had ſo framed her daughter Salome after her own maners, leſt ſhe ſhuld ſhame her. And what folowed then? namely the vngodly ſlaughter of the godly Prophet: for the heat of wine in Herode ſo flamed, that he forgetting grauity & wiſedom, promiſed that he would giue to a dauncing damſell euen to the one halfe of his kingdome. Truely a ſhamefull example, that a drunken king doeth not only abide to looke vpon with fauourable eyes ſo ſhameful a ſhew of his houſholde, but alſo promiſeth ſo great a reward. VVherfore let vs learne carefully to reſiſt the deuil, leaſt he entrap vs in ſuch ſnares.

MAR. 24. So ſhe went foorth, and ſayd to her mother. It is no maruaile that Herodias ſhould make ſo great account of the death of Iohn. That many do conieƈture that ſhe was kindled with deſire of reuēge, is voyd of reaſon: for the feare of diuorcement rather troubled and vexed her: as for the moſt parte, where whoremaſters begin to loath, they are aſhamed of their own luſt. But ſhe hoped by this offence to haue Herode the more bound vnto her; if the couenaunt of the adulterous bedde were confirmed and ſealed by the bloud of the Prophet, as with a ſacrifice. Therefore that ſhe might rule hereafter without care, ſhe would haue him put to death, whom ſhe found to be her alone enemy. VVhereby we are alſo taught, what miſerable griefe alwayes tormenteth an euill conſcience. Iohn was kepte in bandes: the imperious and cruell womanne myght haue forbidden all people from ſpeaking with him, and comminge to him, yet ſhe reſteth not, but is vexed with care and feare, vntyll the Prophet ſhuld be made away. This alſo much auaileth to the ſhewing forth of the efficacie of the woorde of God, that the voyce of the holy manne, though ſhutte vppe in priſon, doeth ſo vexe the minde of the kings wife, as a moſt grieuous torment.

26. The king was very ſorie. Religion was vaniſhed out of his heart, as we ſayd: but becauſe he foreſeeth how odious the crime wold be, he feareth the infamie and alſo the danger: hereof it commeth to paſſe that he repēteth him of his own lightneſſe. Yet he dare not deny the dauncer, leaſt he ſhould be accounted inconſtant, as though it were worſe to retracte that which he raſhly and fondly promiſed, then to be conſtant in a moſt deteſtable offence. But becauſe he will not in reſpecte of the perfecte vanitie of kings, haue his woorde broken which he had giuen, he preſently commaundeth that the Prophet ſhould be ſlaine. And we gather that Herode ſupped that night in Macherontis tower, wherein Ioſephus ſayeth that Iohn was impriſoned. And it is worth the labour to note, that the Euangeliſts doe ſay: for his othe and the gueſts that were preſent: whereof we gather, if he had ſworne a hundred times, no man being preſent to witneſſe it, yet he would not haue perfourmed his promiſſe. Therefore religion of conſcience bounde not Herode, but meere ambition caried him headlong: becauſe he accounted it no honeſtie for him not to perfourme the faith which he had giuen. So it commeth to paſſe, that wicked men negleēte their duety, becauſe they haue no reſpecte to God: but they are only bent to this, that they be not euill ſpoken of by men. Furthermore, if onely the religion of the othe had ben regarded of Herode, and not the ſhame of men, he yet ſinned more grieuouſly in perfourming that which he had fooliſhly promiſed, then if he had broken his othe. Firſt, this was an vnadui ſed raſhneſſe in ſwearing, in that he confirmeth the promiſſe of a doubtfull matter with an othe: then when it appeared that hee coulde not be ſette free from the faith which he had giuen, but that hee ſhoulde plunge himſelfe in a hainous offence, it was not lawfull for him to wrap vp the holy name in ſuch an offence. For what is more againſt God, then that he ſhould be the chiefe in ſo vngodly a murther. If the queſtion be moued of his priuate loſſe and diſcredite, lette him which ſwoare raſhly, beare the puniſhment of his fooliſhneſſe. But this muſt be taken heede of, where any man hath taken the name of God in vaine, leaſt by pretence of the ſame he be abuſed to the committing of ſome offence, & ſo ſhould commit double ſacriledge. Heereof it foloweth that Monkiſh vowes, to which, manifeſt wickednеſſe is adioyned, doe binde the conſcience no more thē magicall exorciſmes: becauſe God wil not haue his ſacred name enforced to the confirmation of ſinne. Yet this place doth teach vs to take heede that no man do vnadui ſedly promiſſe any thing: then that he ioyne not obſtinacie to his lightneſſe.

28. And he gaue it to the maide. This alſo encreaſeth the crueltie of the offence, that the holy mans head was after his death brought forth to be ſcorned: but the Lord doth ſomtimes ſo ſubmit his children to the pride of the wicked, vntil that he wil ſhew at length that the bloud of his children is pretious in his eyes. Herodias ioyeth that ſhee hath obtained her deſire, & cruelly triumpheth ouer her reprouer: but afterwards ſhe being put from her richeſſe, and depriued not onely of the honour of the kingdom, but alſo of her natiue country, and of all helps, when ſhe a pore woman painfully led a miſerable life in baniſhment, ſhewed a ioyful ſight to the the Angels, and to all good men. That the gueſtes are enforced to defile their eyes with the beholdinge of that abhominable pompe, we doe heereby learne, that they which ſitte at princes tables, are oft entrapped in many ſinnes. For though no bloudy offence ſhould defile the table, yet all things are ſo filled with all kinde of wickednesſe, that who ſoeuer do come thither, it behoueth thē at the leaſt to be giuen to pranks of baudry.

29. His diſciples came. This remained alſo to the cruelty of the woman, that the corpes of the holy man remained vnburied: for it is probable by this, that his diſciples performed this duty, that his body was throwen forth by the tyrants officers. And though the honour of buriall profiteth not the dead, yet the Lord would that this ceremonie ſhuld be reuerenced by vs, that it might be a witneſſe vnto vs of the laſt reſurrection. Wherefore this endeuour was acceptable to God, that Iohns diſciples ſhoulde come & bury their maiſters body. Further, this was a teſtimony of their piety: for by this meanes they profeſſed that the doctrine of the deade man yet liued and flouriſhed in their hearts. Therefore this confeſſion was praiſe worthy, eſpecially when it was not without daunger: becauſe they could not honour this man ſlaine by the tormentor, but that they ſhould prouoke the rage of the tyrant againſt them.

13. And when Ieſus heard it, hee departed thence by ſhippe into a deſarte place a parte. And when the multitude had hard it, they folowed him a fote out of the cities.	30. And the apoſtles gathered themſelues togither to Ieſus, and tolde him all things, both what they had done, & what they had taught.	10. And when the apoſtles returned, they tolde him what great things they had done. Then he tooke them, and went aſide into a ſolitarie place, neare to the citie called Bethſaida.

And when euen was come, his diſciples came to him, ſaying: This is a deſart place, and the houre is already paſt: let the multitude depart, that they may go into the townes and buy them vitails.	34. Then Ieſus went out, and ſawe a great multitude, and had compaſſion on them, becauſe they were like sheepe which had no shepheard: and hee began to teach them many things. 35. And when the day was now farre ſpent, his diſciples came vnto him, ſaying: This is a deſart place, and now the day is farre paſſed.	12. And whē the day began to wear away, the 12. came, and ſayd vnto him: ſend the people away, that they may go into the townes & villages round about, & lodge and gette meat: for we are heere in a deſart place.
16. But Ieſus ſayd to them: they haue no neede to goe away: giue yee to them to eate.	36. Let them depart, that they may go into the villages and townes about, and buy them bread: for they haue nothing to eate.	13. But he ſayd vnto them: giue yee them to eat. And they ſayde: we haue no moe but fiue loaues and two fiſhes, except we ſhoulde goe buy meat for all this people.
17. Then ſaid they vnto him, we haue heere but	37. But he anſwered and ſayde vnto them: Giue ye them to eat. And they ſayd	14. For they were about fiue thouſand men. Then he ſayd but 5. loues & 2. fishes.

18. And he said, bring them hither to me.
19. And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grasse, and toke the 5. loaues and the 2. fishes, and loked vp to heauen, & blessed, and brake, and gaue the loaues to his disciples, & the disciples to the multitude.
20. And they did all eate, & were sufficed, and they toke vppe of the fragments that remained, 12. baskettes full.
21. And they which had eaten, were about fiue thousande menne, beside women and little children.

saide vnto him: Shall we goe and buy two hundreth peny worth of breade, and giue them to eate?
38. Then he sayd vnto them: Howe many loaues haue yee? goe and looke. And when they knewe it, they sayde: fiue, and two fishes.
39. So he commanded them, to make them all sit downe by companies vpon the greene grasse.
40. Then they sate downe by rowes, by hundreths, and by fiftyes.
41. And he toke the fiue loaues and the two fishes, and looked vppe to heauen, and gaue thankes, and brake the loaues, and gaue them to his disciples to set before them, and the two fishes he deuided among them all.
42. So they did all eate and were satisfied.
43. And they toke vp twelue baskets ful of the fragments, and of the fishes.
44. And they that had eate, were about fiue thousand men.

saide to his disciples, cause them to sitte downe by fifties in a companie.
15. And they did so, and caused all to sitte downe.
16. Then he tooke the fiue loaues, and the two fishes, and looked vppe to heauen, and blessed them, & brake, and gaue to the disciples, to set before the people.
17. So they did all eate, & were satisfied: and there was taken vppe of that remained to the, 12. baskettes full of broken meat.

13. When Iesus heard it. Iohn reporting the same hystory, mentioneth not for what cause Iesus went ouer to the further shoar. Marke also and Luke doe somwhat differ from Mathew: for they teach that the cause of this iourney was, that he might giue some rest to his disciples, after they wer returned frō their ambassage. But there is no discord in that: because it may bee, that hee would haue his disciples aparte into a desert place, that there he might the better frame them to greater matters, and that at the same time a new occasion befell by the death of Iohn. For the death of Iohn might terrifie weake mindes, for that sorowful euente of that great Prophet, did now giue warninge, what condition remayned for them all. Certeinely, as it is declared before, Iohn being taken, Christe went out of Herodes iurisdiction, that he might turne awaye from the present fury: so it may be gathered, that Christe nowe withdrewe his disciples being yet fearefull from the fire, and went into a deserte place. Also it is vncerteine howe much time the Apostles spente in theyr firste ambassage: for the course of tymes was either neglected by the Euangelistes, or not strictly obserued (as we haue said otherwhere.) But it is rather probable to me, that they were not sent foorth once onely to declare the message of the kingdome of Christe, but as occasion serued, they did either iterate the same in some places, or after some time they went forth into diuers places. Therefore I take that they were now gathered togither, that hereeafter they might be daily folowers of him: as if it had ben sayde, they did not so goe from their maister, as if euery one had a continuall ordinarie office of teaching, but to preach for a time; then, to return to schoole againe, that they might profite better.

The multitude followed him. Though it was not vnknowne to Christe, (who knew all thinges before) what should come to passe, yet his will was as a man to prouide for his disciples, that he might indeede declare, that he had a care of thē. And by that great concourse it appeareth, how famous his name was euery where, that the Iewes might be inexcusable, which through their owne slouthfulnes were depriued of the benefit of saluation offered thē. And yet of this great multitude, which were enflamed with a sodaine heate to follow Christe, there was but a very small number, which gaue themselues to his doctrine truely and constantly, as it appeareth by Iohn.

14. Hee was moued with compassion. The other two doe expresse more plainely, and especaly Marke, why Christe tooke this compassion: to witte, because he saw hungry soules caried by their hot and zealous desire from their owne dwelling places into the desert. And that wante of doctrine was a token of a miserable dissipation: therefore Marke saieth, that Christ had compassion on them, because they were as sheepe wanting shepheards, not that he acknowledged them all for sheepe after the spirite of the Godhead, but as hee was man hee gaue iudgement of the present sight of them. For this was no smal token of piety, to leaue their owne houses, and to come in flockes to the Prophet of God, though hee of set purpose auoyded out of their sight. Then it is good to note, that Christ was mindefull of that person, which he sustayned: he had the office of a doctour layd vppon him: therefore he ought for a time to account all the Iewes of the flocke and Church of God, vntill they should estraunge themselues. But this mercifull affectiō so preuayled in Christ, that being wearied with his disciples, and almoste ouerwhelmed with continuall trouble, would not yet spare himselfe. Hee had sought some time of refreshing, and that not so much for himselfe as for his disciples: yet, because the necessitie of his office called him to a new labour: he willingly leaueth that priuate respect, and employeth himselfe in teaching the multitudes. And though hee hath now put off all those affections, which doe fall into a mortall man, yet it is no doubt but that he looketh downe from heauen vppon those miserable sheepe, which wante a shepheard, so that they seeke remedy for their want. Marke saieth that hee taught them many thinges: that is, that he preached long, that they might cary away some sound profit. Luke saieth, that he spake of the kingdōe of God, which is the same in effect. Mathew maketh no mention but of the miracles: because that there was most weight in them to get Christ a name. But it is easily gathered, that he omitted not the doctrine, which was the chiefe.

15. When euen was come. Now the disciples were frustrate of theyr hope, now they see Christ busied in teaching, also the people were so desirous to be taught, that they thought not of returning: therefore they admonish Christ, that in regard of their bodies he should send thē away into the next townes. And he purposely had deferde the miracle, which he thought to worke vnto that time. First, that his disciples being stirred somwhat vp to the consideration of the same, might the better profitte thereby: then, that the circumstaunce of the time it selfe shoulde teache, though he preuent not their necessities, neither helpeth them at the first, that he yet doth neuer cast away the care of them, but hath alwayes help ready in his hand,which he will beſtow in the very moment.

16. Giue yee to them to eate. Becauſe this miracle is fullyer expounded in the fixt chapter of Iohn, leaſt the repetition ſhould be troubleſome to the readers,I had rather it ſhuld be ſought there: yet,leaſt no.hing ſhuld be ſpoken here,I will briefly ſet downe the ſumme. Chriſt as yet hadde employed his labour to feed the ſoules,now he alſo extendeth his paſtorly office euen to the care alſo of the bodyes. VVherein he alſo confirmeth that ſaying of his, that to them that ſeeke the kingdome of God and the righteouſnes thereof, all other thinges ſhall then bee giuen, Math.6.33. It is not to be hoped,that Chriſt will alway in this manner giue foode to them that want and be hungry: yet it is certeine that he will neuer ſuffer that his ſhould want ſuch thinges,as ſhould maintaine life, but that hee would reach his hand from heauen,when hee ſhal ſo ſee it meete for the helpe of their neceſsities. But they,which deſire that Chriſt ſhould nouriſh them,muſt alſo learne not to deſire exquiſite deinties, but to be content with barly bread. That Chriſte commaundeth the people to ſitte downe by companies,was firſt for this purpoſe,that they being ſo diſpoſed into companies,the myracle myght be the more euident: Then that the men might be the eaſilyer numbred,and when ſome ſhould looke vpon others,they might themſelues be witneſſes of this heauenly grace: Thirdly,becauſe he ſaw the diſciples ſo carefull,hee would trye their obedience by commaunding them that, which ſeemed in ſhew to be as a ieſt. For it was wonder to what end Chriſte hauing no cates, would make a ſhew of a banket. To the ſame purpoſe alſo belong thoſe things which followe: the loaues were giuen to the diſciples, ſo that the wonderfull plenty ſhould grow betweene their handes, and ſo they ſhoulde be the miniſters of the diuine power of Chriſt. For, as if it were a ſmall matter for them to be eye witneſſes, Chriſt would that they ſhould feele and handle his power. Two hundreth peeces of money here ſpoken of by Budeus account,amounteth about the value of thirty foure Frenche poundes. So they eſteeme a litle bread for euery man at a French ſouſe. But when they had made account of ſo much bread, which ſhould ſuffice to feede the people but meanely, their obedience deſerueth no ſmall praiſe,while they ſimply obeying the commaundement of Chriſte, doe commit the ſucceſſe to his will and pleaſure.

19. He bleſſed. Bleſsing is taken in this place,as it is oftymes otherwhere,for giuing of thankes. But Chriſt teacheth vs by his example,that we cannot otherwiſe eate meates holyly and purely,except we do ſhewe our thankfulnes to God,out of whoſe hand they come vnto vs. Therefore Paule ſaieth, 1.Tim.4.5. VVhatſoeuer meates God dooth giue to vs,they are ſanctified by the word of God and prayer. VVherein he declareth that thoſe as beaſtly men(which neyther account of the bleſsing of GOD faythfully, nor doe praiſe the ſame in giuing of thankes) doe defile and pollute with the filthye pollutions of theyr owne infidelytie, whatſoeuer was by the owne nature pure: and againe, the meat which they doe deuoure, is polluted and defiled: Chriſt therefore preſcribed to his a manner of eating, leaſt they ſhould with wicked ſacrilledge prophane themſelues and the benefites of GOD. The lyfting vp of the eies into heauen,doe declare an earneſt and a vehement affection of praiers. Not that this geſture ſhould be alwayes neceſſary when we do pray: but becauſe that the ſonne of God would not neglect thoſe ceremonies profitable for mans infirmity. Alſo the lifting vp of our eies is a fit ſpur to ſtirre vp our ſluggiſhnes, for that our mindes are too much bent downward to the earth.

20. They tooke vp of the fragments, that remained. VVhen as the fragments which were left, after that ſo great a number of men were filled, were twelue times more then was ſet downe at the firſt, this gaue no ſmall lyght to the myracle. For all men vnderſtoode thereby, that Chriſte by his power did not onelye create meates for them of nothing, whiche ſhuld ſuffice for the preſent vſe, but if neede ſhould be, he could alſo prouide for the neceſsitie to come. Laſtlye, the myracle being wrought, Chriſt would that this ſhould be gathered againe to bee a notable teſtimony of the ſame, that they which were filled with meate ſhoulde now at leaſure behold the ſame. But though Chriſt doth not dayly multiplye loaues, neyther feedeth men without their handy labour, or tyllage of the fields, yet the fruit of this hiſtory extedeth euen to vs. For our ſlothfulnes and vnthankfulnes is the onely hinderaunce why we doe not ſee the aboundaunce of corne, whereby we ſhould liue, encreaſed by the bleſſing of God dayly vppon vs: Alſo, that beſides the refreſhing and nouriſhing of vs there alſo remayneth ſeede for the grounde of one yeares encreaſe, euery one of vs ſhould thinke with himſelf, that it is not without heauenly encreaſe, if that the ſame wickednes hindred not, whiche blyndeth aſwell the eies of the minde, as of the fleſhe, leaſt they ſhoulde behold the manifeſt worke of God. Alſo Chriſte declareth, that as all things are giuen of the father to him & into his hand, ſo the meates with which we are fed doe flow and come to vs from his grace.

Math. 14.	Mark. 6.	Luke.
22. And ſtraightway Ieſus compelled his diſciples to enter into a ſhippe, and to goe ouer before him, while he ſent the multitude awaye.	45. And ſtraightway he cauſed his diſciples to go into the ſhip: and to go before on the other ſide vnto Bethſaida, while he ſent away the people.
23 And aſſoone as he had ſent the multitude away, he went vp into a mountaine alone to pray: and when the euening was come, he was there alone.	46. Then aſſoone as he hadde ſent them away, he departed into a mountaine to pray.
24. And the ſhip was now in the mids of the ſea, and was toſſed with waues: for it was a contrary winde.	47. And when euen was come, the ſhip was in the mids of the ſea, and he alone on the land.
25. And in the fourth watche of the night, Ieſus wente vnto them, walking on the ſea.	48. And he ſaw them troubled in rowing (for the wind was cōtrary to them) and about the fourth watch of the night, hee came vpon them, walking vpon the ſea, and would haue paſſed by them.
26. And when his diſciples ſawe him walking on the ſea, they were troubled, aying, it is a ſpirite, and cried out for feare.	49. And when they ſaw him walking vpon the ſea, they ſuppoſed it had bene a ſpirite, and cryed out.
27. But ſtraightwaye Ieſus ſpake vnto them, ſaying, be of good comfort, it is I, be not afraid.
28 Then	50. For

28. Then Peter aunſwered him, and ſaid, Maſter, if it be thou bid me come vnto thee on the water.
29. And he ſaide come. And when Peter was come downe out of the ſhip, he walked on the water, to go to Ieſus.
30. But when he ſaw a mighty wind, he was afraid: and as hee beganne to ſinke, he cryed, ſaying, maſter, ſaue mee.
31. So immediately Ieſus ſtretched forth his hand, and caught him, & ſayd, to him, O thou of litle fayth, wherefore didſt thou doubt?
32. And aſſoone as they were come into the ſhip, the wind ceaſed.
33. Then they that were in the ſhip came and worſhipped him, ſaying, of a trueth thou art the ſonne of God.
50. For they all ſaw him, and were ſore afraide: but anon he talked with them, and ſayd vnto them, bee of good comfort: it is I, be not afrayd,
51. Then he went vp vnto them into the ſhippe, and the wind ceaſed, and they were ſore amaſed in themſelues beyond meaſure, and merualled.
52. For they had not conſidered the matter of the loaues, becauſe their heartes were hardned.

22. Ieſus compeld his diſciples. It behoued him to compell them, becauſe to leaue him, they would not haue paſſed ouer to an other place, but againſt their willes. Alſo they doe herein declare howe much they obeye him, while againſt their owne minde, they giue place and obey his commandement. And certeinly in ſhew it ſeemed very abſurd, that he would remaine alone in a deſert place, when night approched. Therefore their aptneſſe to be taught deſerued ſo much the more prayſe, for that the authoritie of the heauenlye maiſter was more regarded and eſteemed by them, then that which might ſeeme probable on the contrary part. And we do not rightly and perfectly obey God, except we do ſimply follow whatſoeuer he commaundeth, how much ſoeuer our ſenſe repugne againſt the ſame. Certeinly God alwaies hath the beſt reaſon and ground of his counſel and commaundement, but he often hideth the ſame from vs, that we might learne not to be ſelfewiſe, but wholly to depend vpon his will. Thus Chriſt compeld his diſciples to paſſe ouer, that hee might frame them to that rule of obedience, which I ſpake of. Neyther is there any doubt, but that he would make himſelfe a way to the miracle which next followeth.

23. Hee went vp into a mountaine alone. It is likely that the ſonne of God, from whom the tempeſt to come could not be hidde, did not neglect in his prayers the preſeruation of his diſciples: yet it is meruaile why he doth not rather preuent the perill, then apply himſelfe to prayer. But that he might fulfill the partes of a mediatour, hee ſheweth himſelfe to be both God and man, and gaue teſtimonies of both natures, as farre as the matter required. VVhen he had all thinges at his owne will, he ſhewed himſelfe to be a man by praying, neither did he that feigned lye, but he ſhewed a ſincere affection of humane loue towards vs. In this matter the diuine maieſtie withdrew it ſelfe after a ſort, which yet ſhewed it ſelf at length in his order. But in going vp into the mountaine, hee ſought oportunitie, that he might the freelyer pray farre from all noyſe. VVe know how eaſily the ardent zeale in prayer, through the leaſt diſturbances ces either falleth away,or elſe waxeth colde.And though Chriſt had not this imperfection,yet his will was to teache vs by his example, diligently to vſe all helpes,which may deliuer our mindes from all the ſnares of the world,that we being free,may be wholely bent into heauen.And ſolitarineſſe much auaileth in this,that they which prepare themſelues to prayer,ſhoulde be the more diligent,hauing God alone for witneſſe,powring out their heart into his boſome, they ſhould the more diligently examine themſelues:laſtly,cõſidering with themſelues that they haue to doe with God,let them lift vp themſelues aboue themſelues. Yet it is to be noted that he ſetteth not downe a lawe,as if it were not lawfull to pray any other where but in ſecrete:for Paule alſo commaundeth vs to lifte vp pure handes euery where,1.Tim.2.8. And Chriſt himſelfe ſometime prayed before men:and he alſo taught his diſciples,that they being gathered togither,ſhould conceiue praiers openly amõgſt themſelues. But that libertie of praying in all places hindereth not, but that they ſhoulde alſo vſe priuate prayers in time conuenient.

24. The shippe was nowe in the middes of the ſea. The readers ſhall finde this hyſtorie expounded by me vpon the ſixt chapter of Iohn, and therefore I will be the ſhorter heere. Chriſte ſuffered his diſciples to be toſſed with a troubleſome tempeſt,and with ſome daunger for a time,to that ende that they might with readier mindes receiue helpe when it ſhould be brought them:for the contrary winde roaſe about midnight,or a litle before.And thẽ at the fourth watche Chriſt appeared,that is, three houres ful before day:ſo their faith was as hardly ſhakẽ with terrours,as their armes were toyled with rowing. But when neceſsitie it ſelfe moſt vrged them to deſire their maiſters preſence,they were too groſſe and blockiſh to be afraid at his ſight,as if he hadde bene a ſpirite. For this cauſe Marke ſayeth that their hearts were blinded,and vnderſtoode not the matter of the loaues. For by that myracle they were ſufficiently taught, that Chriſte wanted not diuine power to helpe his: and that hee doeth carefully prouide for them,when neceſsity ſo requireth. Therefore their ſluggiſhnes nowe is worthily condemned: becauſe they doe not preſently call to minde that heauenly power,a notable token whereof being ſhewed but late, ought yet to be preſent before their eyes. But through the fault of theyr ſluggiſhnes they were afrayd, beecauſe they had not profited by the former miracles ſo rightly as became them: but their blindnes is eſpeciallye reproued,becauſe they had forgotten that,which they ſaw ſo late,or rather that they applyed not their mindes to conſider the Godheade, whereof the multiplying of the loaues was teſtimony euident enough.Yet Marke ſetteth downe two thinges in his wordes, that they conſidered not thoroughly the glory of chriſt,which was ſhewed in multiplying the loaues: then he declareth the cauſe,for that their heartes were hardened. And that ſeemeth to be added not onely for the aggrauating of the greatnes of the fault:but alſo to admoniſh vs of the infirmity of our minde, that we ſhould aske new eyes of the Lord. Certinely, it was, as I ſayde euen now,too beaſtly ignoraunce not to vnderſtande, as it were,the palpable power of God.Yet,becauſe all mankind is ſicke of the ſame diſeaſe,Mar. doth of purpoſe make mention of the blindnes, that wee might knowe that it is no new matter, if men cannot ſee into the manifeſt workes of God,vntill they be lightned from aboue:as Moſes alſo ſaid,Deut.29.4.

Yet

Yet the Lord hath not giuen you an hearte to vnderſtand. And though the word heart doth often ſignifie the wil or the ſeate of affections, yet here in this place, as alſo in the place of Moſes, which I cited, it is take for the mind.

27. Straightway Ieſus ſpake vnto them. Becauſe Chriſt is not known to be the delyuerer, while he offreth himſelfe in deede, hee calleth his diſciples by his word to the knowlede of him. Alſo the comfort, which he exhorteth them vnto, is in his own preſence: as if he ſhould haue ſaide; After they vnderſtand that he is preſent with them, they haue aſſured cauſe to be of good comfort. But becauſe that feare had poſſeſſed their mindes, he reproueth it, leaſt it ſhould hinder him, and delay theyr comforte. Not that they could be ioyfull and comforted without al feare: but becauſe it was neceſſary that the feare, which had preuailed ſhoulde bee appeaſed, leaſt it ſhould ouerwhelme their comforte. And though the voyce of the Sonne of God is to the reprobate deadly, and his preſence terrible, yet here is deſcribed to vs farre contrary effectes of the ſame to the faithful: to witte, that inward peace, and comfortable boldnes, obtaineth the victory in our heartes, leaſt we ſhould giue place to fleſhly feares. But then blinde and inconſiderate tumultes do trouble vs: becauſe that wee being vnthankful and malitious, do not hold out the innumerable benefits of God, as bucklers, which being rightly cõſidered, ſhuld be ſufficient to ſtay vs vp. And though it was high time to haue helpe, when Chriſte appeared, yet the tempeſt doth not preſently ceaſe, vntill the diſciples were better ſtirred vppe both to deſire, and alſo to hope for his grace. And that is to bee noted, that he might knowe, that the Lorde dooth not without cauſe ofte tymes defer that delyueraunce, whiche hee hath in his hande.

28. Then Peter aunſwered him. The exception which he maketh declareth that his fayth was not yet ripe. If it be thou (ſaith hee) commaund mee to come. But he had heard Chriſt ſpeake: therefore why doth he doubtingly and vncerteinly thus wauer yet in himſelfe? but in that ſo ſmall and weake fayth there breaketh out a heate of inconſiderat zeale: for he ought to haue mette himſelfe by his owne meaſure, and rather to pray to Chriſt for encreaſe of fayth, that by the guiding and direction of the ſame, hee might at length paſſe ouer ſeas and mountaines: but hee nowe deſireth raſhly to flye without the winges of fayth: and whereas the worde of Chriſte was not firmely nor rightly ſetled in his hearte, he deſireth that the waters ſhould be firme vnder his feete. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that this affection ſprang of a good beginning: but, becauſe it degenerateth into a corrupt extremitie, it looſeth the praiſe of goodnes. And of this it commeth to paſſe, that Peter preſently taſteth the puniſhment of his raſhnes. VVherefore let the faithfull bee taught by this example to take heede of raſh haſtines. VVhether ſoeuer the Lorde calleth wee muſt runne diligently, but he which paſſeth further ſhall feele at length by his vnhappy ſucceſſe, what it is to paſſe beyonde his owne boundes: Yet it may be demaunded, why Chriſte ſhould graunt Peters requeſte: For he ſeemeth ſo to allow it. But the aunſwere is ready, GOD for the moſt parte prouideth beſt for vs by denying thoſe things, which we deſire: and ſomtymes he graunteth our requeſtes, that hee may the better conuince vs by experience of our owne fooliſhneſſe. So, when he dayly graun-graunteth to his faythfull ones more then is meete, hee instructeth them in sobrietie, and modesty against the time to come. Furthermore, this was profitable for Peter and the rest, and is also profitable for vs at this day. The power of Christ shewed it selfe more euidently in the person of Peter, when he tooke him as a companion with him: then, if hee had walked alone vppon the waters. Yet Peter knoweth, and others doe plainely behold that he beganne to sinke, because he rested not in a perfect faith, nor reposed himselfe in the word of God by trusting the secrete power of God, which did before make the waters strong: yet christ dealeth louingly with him, because he suffered him not altogether to be swallowed vppe. Both these things befall to vs. For as Peter assoone as he was afrayd, beganne to sinke, so the fraill and vaine cogitations of the flesh do so work in vs, that we sinke in the midst of the course of our affayres, yet the Lord pardoneth our infirmitie, and reacheth out his hand, least the waters should drowne vs altogether. It is also to be noted that Peter seeing that his rashnes had but euil and badde successe, committeth himselfe to the mercy of Christ. Wherefore though we be worthily punished, it behoueth vs yet to flye to him, that he hauing mercy vppon vs, may giue vs that helpe, whereof we are vnworthy.

31. O thou of litle faith. Christ doth louingly preserue Peter, yet so that he doth not nourish nor flatter his fault. This is the end and purpose of this reproofe. wherein the weaknesse of his faith is condemned: yet it is demaunded whether euery feare doth argue a want of fayth: for so the words of Christ do seeme to note, there ought to be no doubting where faith doth reigne. I aunswere, Christe dooth here reproue a doubtinge, which was directly contrary to faith. It may so be that a man may doubt without offence, as where the word of God hath not yet made vs certein and sure. But the estate of Peter was otherwise, who beeing instructed by the commaundement of Christ, and now hauing experience of his power, yet fell to a vaine and peruerse feare from that double stay and strength he had.

33. They that were in the ship. I iudge that this was not onely spoken of the disciples, but of the mariners and other passengers. They therefore which had not yet professed to account him as a master, do now sodeinlye confesse him to be the sonne of God, in which worde they giue him the honor of the Messiah. For though that high mistery was not yet cõmonly knowne, how God should be manifested in flesh: yet, because they had learned out of the Prophets, that he which should be the redeemer, should be called the sonne of God, they which sette forth the glorye of Christ with this title, do declare that they beleeue in that Christ.

Matth. 14.	Mark. 6.	Luk.
34. And when they were come ouer, they came into the land of Genneſaret.	53. And they came ouer, & went into the land of Genneſaret, & arriued.
35. And whē ỹ mē of that place knew him, they ſent out into all that countrey round aboute, and brought vnto him al ỹ were ſick.	54. So when they were come out of the ship, ſtraightway they knew him:
36. And beſought him, that they might touch	55. And ranne about through al that region round about, and began to carye hither and thither in beds al that were ſick, where they heard that he was.
	56. And touch the hemme of his garment onely: and as many as touched it, were made whole.

56. And whither soeuer hee entred into townes, or cities, or villages, they layd their sick in theyr stretes, & praid him that they might touch at least the edge of his garment. And as many as touched him were made whole.

34. They came into the land of Gennesareth. The Euangelists do meane that region, which was so called of the name of the lake: though it is vncerteine whether the lake was so called, after the name of the lande: but in that there is no matter of waight. It behoueth vs especially to bende our eies thither, whither the Euangelistes do lead vs, that the glory of Christ was shewed not by one or two miracles, but that coast of Iudea was replenished with innumerable testimonies of him, the fame wherof might easily spread to Ierusalem and into other cities euerye waye. VVhereby we gather how vile and wicked the vnthankfulnes of that nation was, which malitiously shut theyr eies at the present brightnes of the glory of God: nay, they endeuoured as much as laye in them to extinguishe the same. But now it is our duety in this so great a heap of myracles, to learn to know to what end Christ came: namely, that he might shew himselfe a Phisition in healyng all diseases. For it behoueth vs to cal to remembraunce that, which Matthew alleaged before out of the Prophet Isaias, that he by healing the diseases of the body, figured, as in a shadow, some greater thing: to wit, that he should restore our soules to health, and that his peculyar office should be to take away spiritual diseases. And though at this day he is not conuersaunt vppon the earth, yet it is certeine that now in heauen he excelleth in exercising the same graces, whereof hee then gaue a visible testimony. And beecause wee all are diseased with all kinde of diseases vntill he heale: let euery one of vs not only offer himselfe vnto him, but let him also endeuour to bring others, which are in neede of the like remedy.

36. That they might touch the hemme. It is to be supposed that they were somwhat superstitious, when as they tied the grace of Christ to the touching of his garment: at least they defrauded him of part of his honour, when they hoped for no power by his simple word. But, least hee should quech the smoaking flaxe, he applyeth himselfe to theyr simplicitie: yet here is no cause why they should flatter themselues, which seek the grace of God in wood, or nayles, or garmentes, when as the scripture saith expressly, that it is abhominable to conceaue any thing now of Christe, but according to the worthines of his spirituall and heauenly glory. Theyr infirmity was borne with for a tyme, which not knowing that Christe was God, desired to come neerer to him. Now, sith hee filleth heauen and earth with the sauour of his grace, it behoueth vs to apprehend by fayth the saluation, which he offreth vs from heauen, and not with hands or eyes.

2. Why do thy disciples transgresse the tradition of the Elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread.
3. But he answered and saide vnto them, why doe yee also transgresse the commaundements of God by your traditions?
4. For God hath commanded saying, Honour thy father and mother: and he that curseth father or mother, let him dye the death.
5. But yee saye, whosoeuer shall saye to father or mother, by the gifte that is offred by me, thou maist haue profit:
6. Though he honour not his father, or his mother, shall be free. Thus haue yee made the commandement of God of no authority by your traditions.
7. O hypocrites, Esaias prophesied wel of you, saying,
8. This people draweth neere vnto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips: but their hearte is farre from me.
9. But in vaine they worship me, teaching for doctrins the precepts of men.

came from Ierusalem.
2. And when they sawe some of his disciples eate meat with common handes (that is to say, vnwashed) they complained.
3. (For the Pharises and al the Iewes, except they wash their handes oft, eate not, holding the tradition of the Elders.
4. And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not: and manye other thinges there be, which they haue taken vpon them to obserue, as the washing of cuppes and pots, and of brasen vessels, and of tables.)
5. Then asked him the Pharises and Scribes, why walke not thy disciples according to the tradition of the Elders, but eat meat with vnwashen hands?
6. Then he answered and sayd vnto them, Surely Esay hath prophesied well of you, hipocrites, as it is written, This people honoureth me with their lippes, but their heart is farre away from me.
7. But they worship me in vain, teaching for doctrines the precepts of men.
8. For yee lay the commaundementes of God aparte, and obserue the tradition of men, as the washing of pottes and cups, and many other such like things ye do.
9. And he saide vnto them, well, yee reiect the commaundement of God, that yee may obserue your owne tradition.
10. For Moses saide, Honour thy father and thy mother: and whosoeuer shall curse father or mother, let him dye the death.
11. But yee say, If a man say to father or mother, Corban, that is, by the gifte that is offred by me, thou maist haue profit, he shal be free.
12. So ye suffer him no more to doo anye thing for his father or his mother:
13. Making the word of God of no autoritie, by your tradition, which ye haue ordained: and ye do many such like things.

5. Then came to Iesus. This is a place most worthy to be noted: because that here is reproued an offence no lesse daungerous then common. We see what frowardnes there is in menne, both in the way and meanes of worshipping God, for they do dayly deuise new kindes of worshipping, and the wiser any man would seeme to be, the more he bendeth to shew his witte that way. I ſpeake not of ſtraungers, but of them which are of the houſhold of the church, whom God hath peculiarlye enriched with this honour, that they ſhould holde that as the rule of pietie, which hee hath ſpoken with his own mouth. God hath preſcribed in what maner we ſhould worſhip him, and in his law he hath comprehended a perfect holynes. The moſt part as if it were a light and a vaine matter to obey God, and to obſerue that which he hath commaunded, do of themſelues gather out of ſundry places many additions to the ſame. They whiche are in authoritie do wreſt their owne deuiſes to this end, as if they had ſomwhat in their heades perfecter then the worde of God. Then crepte in tyranny: for when men once take to themſelues that lyberty to commaund, they do ſeuerely exact the obſeruation of their own lawes, & do not abide that the leaſt title of the ſame ſhould be omitted either in cõtempt, or els by negligence. Alſo though the world cãnot abide the lawfull gouernment, and is moſt rebellious in bearing the Lords yoake, yet it doth eaſily and willingly yeelde to the ſnares of vaine traditions: yea, and many ſeeme to deſire ſuch a ſeruitude. But the worſhippe of God is defiled, which ought chiefly and principally to be obeyd, and the authoritie of men is preferred before his imperial dignitie. And ſo the commõ people is hardly and tyrannouſly enforced to apply their whole endeuour vpon trifles. But this place teacheth vs that al fained worſhippings do diſpleaſe God: becauſe that he alone would be heard, that hee might order and frame vs to true pietie after his own pleaſure: Then they loſe their labour, which as people not ſatiſfied with the only law of God, do weary themſelues in obſeruing the traditions of men. Thirdly, God is iniuried when as the deuiſes of men are extold ſo hygh, that the maieſtie of his law ſhuld fall away, or the reuerence of the ſame at leaſt ſhuld waxe colde.

The Scribes and Phariſes, which were of Ieruſalem. It is not declared for what purpoſe theſe Scribes came to Ieſus: yet, to me it ſeemeth probable, that they being moued with his fame, ſhould come with a deſire to learne, for aſmuch as he ſeemed to be a fit maſter: though it may be that they were ſent as ſpies. Howſoeuer the matter was, becauſe they brought theyr owne ſelfe lyking with them, the leaſte offence might eaſilye exaſperate them to byte or gnaw at Chriſte. VVhereby we ſee how hard it is for them to be drawne to ſound doctrine, which are poſſeſſed with ambition and deſire of reigne: eſpecially, they which are addicted to ceremonies which haue bene long accuſtomed, do admit no new thing, but do obſtinately condemne whatſoeuer is not accuſtomed. To be ſhort, there cannot be a people more lordly nor more froward then theſe men were. Both the Euangeliſtes doe make mention both of the Scribs and of the Phariſes. Yet Matthew ſpeaketh of them in the entraunce into the hyſtory, and Marke placeth them after. But the meaning is all one: for they meane, that of other ſectes the Scribes came, but the Phariſes were the chiefe, as they which then were moſt honoured, and the gouernmente then was in their handes. And it is no meruaile that they were ſooneſt offended with the contempt of the lawes, which they themſelues had made. For, as we ſaid before, when as they boaſted themſelues to bee the interpreters of the lawe, and thereof had their name giuen them, they had corrupted the puritie of the word with their owne deuiſes: and ſo what traditions ſoeuer the Iewes then had, came out of their ſhoppe: wherefore they became the hotter, and ſhewed themſelues the ſharper defenders of them.

2. VVhy doe thy diſciples. VVhen the controuerſie is of mans traditions, this queſtion is not of politike lawes, the vſe & end whereof, doe tende to an other purpoſe, then to preſcribe how God ſhould be worſhipped: but, becauſe there is a diuerſitie of mans traditions, there muſt bee ſome diſtinction vſed. For there are ſome, which are manifeſt wicked, becauſe they doe inſtitute wicked manner of worſhippinges, and ſuch as are ful contrary to the word of God. Others myxing the worſhip of God with prophane trifles, doe defile the puritie of the ſame. Others, whiche haue ſome more colour, not being infected with any notable fault, are yet for this cauſe condemned: for that they are imagined to be neceſſary for the worſhip of God, and ſo God is not meerely obeyed, and the conſciences are caught as in a ſnare. It is euident that the treatie heere is of this latter ſort. For the waſhing of hands, which the Phariſes vrged, coulde not of it ſelf be condemned of wicked ſuperſtition: for els Chriſt would not haue ſuffred the water pottes to haue beene placed at the maryage, except the ceremonie had beene lawfull: but the faulte was in this, that they thought that GOD coulde not bee otherwiſe rightly worſhipped. That ceremonie of waſhing was not broughte in at the firſte without ſome goodly pretence. We know how ſeuerely the law of God required outward cleanneſſe, not that the Lord would haue his ſeruauntes to bee ſtayde in the ſame, but that they ſhould the more carefully take heede of all ſpirituall vncleannes. But the law helde a meane in theſe waſhinges, and then came theſe Doctors vppon it, whiche thought not themſelues wiſe enough, except they added ſomewhat to the worde of GOD: and hereof came thoſe waſhinges, whereof there is no mention in the lawe. The Lawgiuers themſelues would not bragge that they had giuen any new law, but onely that they had added certeine cautions, which ſhould be meanes and helpes for the obſeruing of the lawe of God. And preſently corruption followed, when as the ceremonies brought in by man beganne to be accounted as part of the worſhip of God: and alſo when there was a neceſſitie layd vppon free and voluntary actions. For, God (as it is ſaid before) would alwayes be worſhipped by the preſcripte rule of his owne word: and therefore no addition to his lawe is tollerable. For as he permitteth the faythful to haue certeine outward rites, wherein they myght exerciſe themſelues to godlyneſſe: ſo hee ſuffered them not to bee mixed with his word, as if religion were in them. They waſh not their handes. The cauſe of the offence is ſet forth more at large by Marke: but this is the ſumme, there were many cuſtomes amongſte the Scrybes, which they took vpon them to obſerue of their own wil: thoſe were ſecundary lawes inuented by curious heades, as if the only commandemēt of God were not ſufficient. This pertained to cups, veſſels, garments and other things pertaining to houſhold, that they ſhould not touch any vncleane or defiled thing. But to deuiſe new waſhings was a vaine and idle deuice. This was not without a colourable cloake, as Paule ſaith, Col. 2. 23. The inuentions of men haue a ſhew of wiſdome: but if they hadde ſtayde themſelues in the onely law of God, theyr modeſtye ſhould haue bene more approued, then their ſcrupulous doubtfulnes.

Their will was to prouide that no vncleane perſon ſhoulde raſhlye and without conſideration eate meat: but it was ſufficient for the Lorde to purge the apparant ſpottes. Alſo theſe deuiſes had neither any ende nor meaſure: for they could ſcarſe moue a finger, but ſome new blot would ariſe: but this corruption was much the worſe, becauſe it was caſte as a religion vpon the conſciences, that he ſhould be guilty of vncleanneſſe: which did not oftē waſh his body with water. It may be they wold haue borne with the contempt of this ceremonie in meane men: but, becauſe they had conceiued a greater and more excellent eſtimation of Chriſte and his diſciples, it ſeemeth to be an heinous offēce, that the rites appointed by the Elders, which were religiouſly vſed by the Scribes, ſhould not be obſerued by the diſciples of that maſter, who profeſſed a better matter, then the preſent eſtate deliuered. Alſo they are much deceiued, which do compare the ſprinckling of their coniured water, which the Papiſtes call holy water, with the Iewiſh waſhinges. For the Papiſtes do blot out aſmuch as lyeth in them, that one Baptiſme by the iteratinge of the ſame ſo oft. Then it is applyed to exorciſmes, and that toyiſhe ſprincklinge is ſuppoſed to be of force, to waſh away ſinnes. If that it were a thing lawfull of it ſelfe, and were free from ſuch corruptions, yet that neceſsitye, which they vrge, is alwaies to be condemned.

3 VVhy do yee alſo tranſgreſſe the commaundements of God? Chriſt maketh here a double anſwere: the firſt is to the perſon (as they ſay) the other conteineth the definition of the matter and cauſe. The order is otherwiſe ſette downe in Mark, who firſt bringeth in that whiche Chriſte ſpake of the whole matter: then he addeth the reproofe, wherin he inueigheth againſt hypocrites: we will follow the courſe obſerued by Matth. Againe, when as the Lord demaundeth of the Scribes, why they defile the law of God, through their own traditions, he doth not yet plainely delyuer his diſciples from the fault obiected againſt them: but hee onely ſheweth them how wicked, prepoſterous and frovvard they were. They take it grieuouſly that the precepres of menne are not exactly obſerued: how much more grieuous a matter is it, that the law of God being neglected, they ſhould imploy their whole endeuor in the obſeruing of theſe traditions? Therfore it appeareth that they were moued rather with ambition, then with a true and right zeale, while they ſo prefer men before God. Alſo it doth eaſily appeare by the text, in what ſenſe he ſaith that the commaundements of God are tranſgreſſed. They did not openly, or profeſſedly aboliſh the law of God, as to affirme that to be lawfull, which the law had forbidden: but they did indirectly tranſgreſſe the ſame, when as the exerciſes enioined by the Lorde were ſuffred by thē carelesly to be omitted. The exāple which Chriſt bringeth is plaine & familiar, God hath commanded that children ſhuld honor their parents. Yet becauſe the offrings made for the gaine of the prieſts, the gathering of them was ſo narowly looked to, that they imagined that he ſinned more grieuouſly that offred nothing, then he that robd his parents of the honor due to thē. Alſo that which according to the law of god was left as a thing voluntary was of more importance in the iudgment of the ſcribes, thē one of the chief cōmādements of god. Therfore as oft as we are ſo bent to kepe the laws of men, ſo ŷ we imploy leſſe diligence & care, for the keeping of the law of god, we are accoūted to trāſgreſſe the ſame. A litle after he ſaith that the cōmandemēt of god is made of no autority, by ŷ traditiōs of mē: becauſe the Scribes do hold the people so bound to their deuises, that there could no time nor leasure be left to the word of god: also, because they thoght, that they had done their duety very well, that had waited of them at anynch, and hereof arose a liberty to sin. For it is thought that the law of God may be freely broken, sith that holines is rather put in the obseruation of other things then of it. Now, let euery man consider with himself whether this fault aboūdeth not more at this day amōgst the Papists, thē in times past amongst the Iews. The Pope with the whol dunghil of his cleargy denieth not but that God ought to bee obeied: but when they come to the purpose, where as they deteste the tasting of a litle flesh, as a deadly sinne, and theft and whordome but as a veniall sinne, they ouerthrow the law of God for their own traditions: and it is no way to bee suffered, that the obseruation of mans deuises should diminish any of that obedience, which is due to God alone. Further, the honour which GOD commaundeth to yeelde to the parents, is extended to all the dueties of godlines. The last clause that Christ addeth, that he is worthy of death, which curseth his father or his mother, tendeth to this, that wee shoulde know that the commaundement of honoring the parentes, is not small or of light importance, sith that the breach of the same is so sharply punished. And this doth not a litle amplifie the sinne of the Scribes, that so seuere a threatning terrifieth not them from letting the bridle loose to contemners of parents.

5. But ye say. This sentence wanteth that, which is more fully sette downe in Mark, where it is added, you suffer him no more to do any thing for his father and mother. And the meaning is, that the Scribes do wickedly in absoluing them, which withdraw themselues from dooing their dueties to their parents, so that they supply that want with a voluntarye sacrifice, which might haue bene omitted without any offence to God. Neyther may the words of Christ be so take, as if the Scribes should haue restrayned men from al right obedience: but they did so earnestly apply themselues to get their pray, that children in the meane space did not their duty to their parents.

7 Isaias propheſied wel of you. Now the Lord proceedeth further. For hee speaketh of the cause it selfe, which he deuideth into two partes. The first is, that they being only bent to outward rites, esteemed nothinge of true holines, which consisteth in the sincere integrity of the heart: the other, that they peruerslye worshipped God, after their owne will. And thoghhe seemeth to reproue the men, when he speaketh against counterfeit & feigned holines, yet he comprehendeth the sum of the doctrine, which is fully defined thus, The worship of God is spiritual, & consisteth not in sprinckling of water, or in any other ceremony. Also there is no other reasonable seruice of God, then that whiche is framed after hys word. And though Iesaias propheſied not only of the time to come, but had respect to the mē of his age, yet Christ saith that this propheſie belōgeth to the Scribes & Pharises: because they were like to those old hypocrites, with whō the prophet had to do. Christ rehearseth it not after the word that is there set down: yet the prophet doth expressly mentiō these two faults, wherwith the Iewes had prouoked the vengance of God against thēselues: that they faigned a holines onely with the lyppes and outward profeſsiō: further, that they declined to faigned worshippings.

Firſt therfore it is wicked hypocriſie,when men do not honour God,but in outward ſhew:for it were not euil of it ſelf to draw nere to god with the mouth and lyps,ſo that the heart went before. This therefore is the ſumme,becauſe the worſhip of GOD is ſpirituall, and nothing pleaſeth him,except the inward ſincerity of the heart be ioyned with it, they are hypocrites,which put holines in outward pompes.

9 They worship me in vaine. The Prophet ſpeaketh word for word thus. Their feare was taught by the precept of men. But Chriſt doth faithfully and aptly yeelde the ſenſe thus,God is worſhipped in vaine, where the will of men is thruſt in for doctrine. Alſo by theſe words al voluntary religiõs, as Paule calleth them,Col.2.23.are euidentlye condemned. For, as wee ſaid,ſith that God wilbe worſhipped after his own wil,only he aloweth no new faſhions of worſhipping him to be imagined. Therfore whẽ as man beginneth to wãder out of the cõpaſſe of the word of god,the more earneſtly & curiouſly he applyeth himſelf to worſhippe him,the greater iudgment he pulleth downe vpon himſelf: becauſe religion is prophaned by ſuch inuentions. The appoſition conſiſteth in theſe words, teaching doctrines the precepts of men. For Chriſt affirmeth that they go aſtray,which in place of doctrine do thruſt in the commaundementes of men: or which worſhip God after that rule. Therfore,ſith obedience before God is better accepted then ſacrifice, let this be holden as certeine,that all faigned worſhippings are vain before him, yea,as the Prophet teſtifieth,they are accurſed and deteſtable.

10 Then he called the multitude vnto him,and ſaid to them,heare and vnderſtand.
11. That which goeth into the mouth defileth not the man, but that which cõmeth out of the mouth defileth the man. 12.Then came his diſciples,& ſaid to him, perceiueſt thou not that ✠ Phariſes are offẽded in hearing this ſaying? 13.But he anſwered & ſaid, euery plãt which, mine heuẽly father hath not planted,ſhalbe rooted vp.
14.Let them alone:they be the blind leaders of the blind, & if the blynde lead the blind, both ſhal fal into the ditch. 15. Then anſwered Peter and ſaid to him,declare to vs this parable.
16. Then ſaid Ieſus,are ye yet without vnderſtanding?
17.Perceiue ye not yet,that whatſoeuer entreth into the meuth,goeth into the belly,& is caſt into the draught
18. But thoſe things which proceede out of the mouth,come from the hart and they defile the man.
19. For out of the heart come euill thoughts,murders, adulteries,fornications,

Mark.7

14. Then he called the whol multitude vnto him,& ſaid vnto them,heark̃ you al to me,and vnderſtand.
15. There is nothing without a manne that can defile him,when it entreth into him,but the thinges whiche proceede out of him, are they which defile ✠ mã.
16. If any haue eares to heare, let him heare. 17. And when he eame into an houſe away from the people,his diſciples asked him concerning the parable.
18. And he ſaid vnto them, what? are ye without vnderſtanding alſo? Doe ye not knowe that whatſoeuer thinge from without entreth into a man, cannot defile him, 19. Becauſe it entreth not into his heart, but into the belly,and goeth into the draught, which is the purging of al meates?
20. Then he ſaid that which commeth out of man, that defileth man.
21. For from within, euen out of the hart of men proceede euill thoughts,adulteries,fornications and murthers.
22.Theftes,couetouſnes, wickednes,deceit, vncleannes, a wicked eie,backbyting,pride,foolihnes.

Luk.6

39. And he ſpake a parable vnto them, caune the blind lead the blind? ſhall they not both fall into the ditch?

23. All

tions, thefts, false testimonies, slaunders. 20. These are the things, which defile the man: but to eate with vnwashed handes, defileth not the man.

23. All these euyll things come from within, and defile a man.

v. 20. He called the multitude vnto him. Here Christ turning himself to such as were willing to bee taught, doth more at large expound that whiche he had touched before, that the kingdom of God consisteth not in meate and drink, as Paul also teacheth. Ro. 14. 17. For, whē as outward things by nature are cleane, the vse of them is also free and cleane. Neither cōmeth the vncleannes of the good creatures of God. Therefore this is a general iudgment, that vncleannes commeth not into man from without, but that the fountaine is hid in himself. But by Synecdochen hee saieth, that out of the mouth of man commeth all those euils, which euery man bringeth forth of him. For hee alludeth to the present matter, as if he should haue said, we do not draw in at our mouth vncleannes togeather with meat and drinke: but al kind of filthines floweth out from vs.

v. 22. Perceiuest thou not that the Pharises. Because the Scribes were very froward and vnframeable, Christ bestowed not much labour in appeasing them, but had enough to do to reproue their hipocrisie & pride. So the offence which they had first conceiued is doubled, where they see their washings not carelesly, but as it were professedly despised of Christ as trifles. Now, in that Christ doubted not to set their malitious and poysoned mindes more on fire by pricking thē so sharply, let vs learne by his example not greatly to regard whether our doings and sayings please al men: yet the disciples (as it is the maner of rude and vnlearned men) do gather by the hard successe, that Christ answered dangerously and ill. For to this purpose tended their admonition, that Christ by correcting his ouersharpe speach, should endeuor to pacifie their offended minds. This is almoste a thing common to the weake, to iudge euil of that doctrin, which they see receiued with vnrighteous & enuious eares. And certeinly it were to be wished that the same might quietly and without offence haue the alowance of al men: but sith Sathan blindeth many mens mindes, and enflameth their hearts euen with madnes, & holdeth many soules ouerwhelmed with a beastly blockishnes, it cannot be that the true doctrine of saluation should sauor with all men: but especially ye it is no meruaile to see them exasperated, which nourish within them the poyson of malice and vntowardnes. We must endeuor our selues so far as lawfully we may, þ no offēce may arise of our maner of teaching. But it were a poynt of extreame madnes for vs to moderate as it were with greater wisdome the doctrine which we are taught of the heauēly master. But we see how of his speach wicked & leaud men took occasiō of offence: yea, we see how þ shew of offēce which was malitiously takē, was handled on either side.

13. Euery plant. Because that the weake minds were wounded with that the doctrine had no better successe, Christ would remedy that mischiefe. And he applieth this remedy, there is no cause why good menne shoulde be troubled, or shoulde the lesse honourably esteeme of the doctrine, though it light vppon many to their destruction. This place is ignorātly expounded of some, that all the inuentions of men, and what soeuer proceedeth not out of the mouth of God, must be rooted vppe and pearished: for CHRISTE hathe respecte rather vnto menne, and the meaning is, that it is no meruaile if the doctrine of saluation beecome deadlye to the reprobate. For they are alwayes caried headlong to deſtructiō, that are appoynted to the ſame. Vnderſtand therfore thoſe that are planted with the hand of God, to be them, which by his free adoption are grafted into the tree of lyfe: as Ieſaias alſo 60.21. calleth the Church renued by the grace of Chriſt, a graft planted by the Lorde. Further, for that ſaluation commeth only of Gods election, it is neceſſary that the reprobate do periſh, by what meanes ſoeuer it be done: not that God will deſtroy the innocent, and them that are without fault, but becauſe they of their owne malice do turne to their owne deſtruction whatſoeuer is offred them, though it be wholſom. So it commeth to paſſe, that the Goſpell to them that willinglye periſhe, is a ſauour of death to death, as Paul witneſſeth, 2. Cor. 2. 16. For though it be propoſed vnto all men for ſaluation, yet it bringeth not foorth this fruit but in the elect. Alſo it is the part of a faithfull and good teacher, ſo to temper whatſoeuer hee bringeth forth, that it may profit all men: but how ofte ſoeuer it falleth out otherwiſe, let vs comfort our ſelues with this aunſwere of Chriſte. And the ſimilitude doth notably expreſſe the cauſe of the deſtructiō not to be in the doctrne, but the reprobate, which haue no roote in God, hauing the doctrine ſet before them, doe vomitte out their hidden poyſon, that they might bring with haſte that death vppon themſelues, to the which they were before appoynted. Note that Chriſt ſpecially meaneth the hypocrits, which for a rime ſeeme to be planted as the good trees: for the Epicures, which are notorious for their groſſe and infamous contēpt of God, are not properly ſaid to be like to trees: but they, in whom ſome vaine ſhew of godlines ſhineth. Such were the Scribes, which were alofte in the Church of God, no otherwiſe then the Ceders in Libanon: ſo that their falling away might ſeeme the more abſurd. Further, where Chriſt might haue ſaide, that they doe worthily periſh, which do vnworthily refuſe their ſaluation, he goeth deeper, and denyeth that any man canne alwaies ſtand, excepte his ſaluation bee eſtabliſhed in Gods election. In which words he plainly ſheweth that the firſt beginning of our ſaluatiō commeth of that grace, wherein God choſe vs vnto himſelf for his children before we were created.

14. Let them alone. He ſaith that they are vnworthy, that there ſhould any account be had of them: therfore, that there is no cauſe why their offence ſhould much moue vs. From hence was gathered that old diſtinctiō of auoyding offences, which muſt be regarded, leaſt offence be giuen to the weak: but, if any ſtubborn or malitious wicked perſon ſhoulde take offēce, that is not to be regarded: for, if we would ſatiſfie the frowardnes of al mē, it wer neceſſary that Chriſt, who is the rock of offence, ſhuld be buried. Therfore it is conuenient to know the difference betweene the weak, which being offēded by ignorance, do preſently apply thēſelues to be cured, & the proud and froward, which take offences, leaſt the weake be troubled through our fault. But wheras the wicked wil frowardly be troubled, let vs without regard go through the midſt of offences. For he that ſpareth not the weak brethren, treadeth them as it were vnder his feete, to whom we are cōmanded to reach our hand: but it were not cōuenient to regard others, into whoſe offences it is neceſſary to fall, if wee deſire to hold a right courſe. Further, where vnder pretence of offence it commeth to paſſe to thoſe menne to be alienated, and to fall away from Chriſt, they muſt be let alone, leaſt they draw vs away with them,

They are blinde leaders of the blinde. Chriſt declareth that they ſhall miſerably periſh, who ſoeuer wil bend themſelues hither and thither after their pleaſure: for when they will ſtumble in the plaine way, it doeth heereby appeare that they are willingly blinde. Nowe, to what purpoſe ſhould a man ſuffer himſelfe to be gouerned by them, except that he would fall into the ſame pitte. And Chriſte, which ſunne of righteouſneſſe ſhineth to vs, by the light of the Goſpell not onely ſheweth vs the way, but wil haue the ſame preferred of vs, not without cauſe calleth his Diſciples backe from that ſlouthfulneſſe, leaſt for the fauour of blind menne, they ſhould wander as it were in darkeneſſe. Hereof we doe alſo gather that they all are inexcuſable, which vnder pretence of ſimplicitie or modeſtie doe deliuer themſelues to be deceiued and to be ſnared in errours. Luke in rehearſing this ſentence, noteth no circumſtance, but generally ſayeth that Chriſt vſed this ſimilitude, as he mētioning many ſayings of Chriſt, ſheweth not to what purpoſe they were ſpoken. And it might alſo haue bene, that Chriſte ſpake this ſame thing oftner: yet I thought good to ſet it down in this place, becauſe that other wher there is not an apter place, and Luke declareth not the time when it was ſpoken.

15. Peter anſweareth. Becauſe the diſciples doe bewray ouermuch rudeneſſe, Chriſt doeth correcte and reproue them, and worthily: for that they were as yet without vnderſtandinge, yet hee ceaſeth not to be theyr teacher. That which Mathew by name doeth attribute to Peter, Marke reporteth that it was in the ſame ſence demaunded of all of them, & that is euident by the anſwear of Chriſt, where not only the ignorance of Peter, but of them all togither is reproued. And the ſumme of it is, that men are not defiled with meates, but they haue the filthineſſe of ſinnes ſhutte vppe within them, which doe openly breake foorth into dedes & works. If any manne doe obiecte the intemperancie of feeding to be an vncleanneſſe, it is eaſily anſweared: for Chriſt ſpeaketh not but of the natiue and lawfull vſe of thoſe things which God hath made ſubiect vnto vs. To eat and to drinke, is of it ſelfe a thing free and indifferent: if any corruption falleth out in the ſame, it ſpringeth from man himſelfe, and ought therefore to be accounted as an inward thing, and not an outward.

19. For out of the heart come euil thoughtes. Heereby we gather that which I gaue warning of before, that the woorde mouthe, was firſt vſed heere of Chriſt, by reaſon of the circumſtance of the preſent place, but nowe there is no mention of the mouth: but it is onely ſayde, that from the heart of man proceedeth what ſoeuer is vncleane, and it doeth defile with the filthineſſe of the ſame. Marke differeth in this from Mathewe, in that hee reckeneth vp many ſinnes, as euill thoughtes, wicked deſires, which ſome tranſlate couetouſneſſe, I had rather take the ſame generally. In like maner deceit and intemperancie, and thoſe which doe thereafter follow: but though the maner of ſpeache is improper, it is ſufficient to hold the meaning of Chriſt, that all vices doe proceede out of the euill and corrupt affections of the heart. It is vnproperly ſayd, that the euill eye proceedeth of the heart, yet in the matter it ſelfe, there is nothing that is either abſurd or doubtfull: for that the vncleane heart defileth the eyes, ſo as they become the ſeruaunts or inſtruments of euil luſtes. Neither yet doth Chriſt reſtraine euery thing that is euill in man to manifeſt ſinnes: but that he might more euidently ſhewe the heart of man to be the ſeat of all euilles, he ſayeth that the teſtimonies and fruites are apparant in the ſinnes them ſelues. For the woorde Defiling or making vncleane, in Greeke is ſayd to make Common: as a little before Marke ſayd common hands, for vncleane. And it is an Hebrewe phraſe: for becauſe the Lord had ſeparated the Iewes on this condition, that they might be ſeuered from al the vncleanneſſe of the Gentiles, what ſoeuer differed from this holineſſe, they called common or as prophane.

Mathew 15.

21. And Ieſus went thence, & departed into the coaſtes of Tyrus and Sidon.

22. And beholde, a woman a Canaanite, came out of the ſame coaſtes, & cried, ſaying vnto him: Haue mercy on me, O Lorde, the ſonne of Dauid: my daughter is miſerably vexed with a deuil.

23. But he anſwered her not a word. Then came to him his Diſciples, and beſought him, ſaying: ſend her away, for ſhee crieth after vs.

24. But he anſweared and ſayd, I am not ſent, but vnto the loſt ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael.

25. Yet ſhee came and worſhipped him, ſaying: Lord helpe me.

26. And he anſwered and ſayd: It is not good to take the childrēs bread, and to caſt it to whelpes.

27. But ſhee ſaid: trueth Lord: yet in deede the whelps eat of the crums, which fall from their maſters table.

28. Then Ieſus anſweared and ſayd vnto her: O womā, great is thy faith: be it to thee, as thou deſireſt: and her daughter was made whole at that houre.

Marke 7.

24. And from thence he aroſe, and went into the borders of Tyrus and Sidon, and entred into an houſe, and would that no man ſhoulde haue knowen, but he could not be hid.

25. For a certain womā, whoſe little daughter hadde an vncleane ſpirit, heard of him, & came and fell at his feete.

26. (And the woman was a Greeke, a Syrophenisſian by nation) and ſhee beſought him that he would caſt out the deuil out of her daughter.

27. But Ieſus ſaid vnto her: let the children firſt be fed: for it is not good to take the childrēs bred, & to caſt it vnto whelps.

28. Then ſhe anſwered, & ſaid vnto him: trueth Lorde: yet in dede the whelps eate vnder the table, of the childrens crums.

29. Then he ſaid vnto her: for this ſaying, go thy way: the deuil is gon out of thy daughter.

33. And when ſhee was come home to her houſe, ſhe founde the deuill departed, and her daughter lying on the bed.

Luke.

In this myracle we are taught how the grace of Chriſt begā to ſpread amongſt the Gentiles. For though the full time was not yet come, wherin Chriſt ſhould make himſelfe knowen to the whole worlde, yet it pleaſed him to giue ſome taſtes of his commō mercy, which at length was beſtowed generally both to the Iewes and Gentiles after his reſurrection. Alſo in the woman of Canaan is deſcribed a notable image of faith, that by making compariſon, we might knowe that the promiſed redemption was worthily taken from the Iewes, whoſe vngodlines was ſo blockiſh. The woman which Mathewe calleth a Canaanite, is of Marke ſayde to haue bene a Grecian, and by nation a Syrophenisſian, wherein there is no difference: for we knowe that it was the common maner of ſpeache amongſt the Iewes, to call all forraine nations Grecians: and therfore that Anti-

Antithesis betwene the Grecians and the Iewes is often founde in Paule. Also, when shee was borne in the coastes of Tyre and Sidon, it is no meruaile that shee is called a Syrophenissean: when as the region hadde the name of Syria, and was a parte of Phœnicia, and the Iewes very odiously called all the inhabitants of that land Cananites. And it is to be supposed that the most part of them came of the people of Canaan, who being banished out of their country, toke the next place of refuge in their banishment. They doe both agree in this, that the woman came of a prophane nation, not brought vp in the doctrine of the lawe, that shee came of her owne accord to Christ in all humility to seeke aid of him. The circumstance is also to be noted, which is set downe by Marke, that Christ came not thither with banner displaid, but as a priuate man, that he might hide himselfin that corner for a time. But Marke speaketh after the common sense of flesh: for though Christ foresaw by his diuine spirit what should come to passe, yet in as much as he was the seruant & ambassadour of the father, he kept himselfe after the maner of man within the bounds of the calling laid vpon him: therfore it is said that he could not do that, which as a man he would haue done. In the meane while this circumstance hath great waight for the condemnation of the Iewes, that whē Christ in opē place did set before them the promised redemption with a loud voice and myracles annexed to the same, they remained blinde and deafe, when yet they boasted themselues to be heires of the couenant of the Lord, his peculiar people, and a priestly kingdome: and this woman which had none of these priuiledges with the children of Abraham, vnto whome the couenant in shewe appertained not, not being called either with woorde or signe, commeth running of her owne free will.

22. Haue mercy on me, O Lorde. Though this woman was a stranger from the Lordes flocke, yet she had gotten some taste of godlinesse: for without some knowledge of the promises, shee coulde not haue called Christ the sonne of Dauid. For although the Iewes were almost falne away frō the pure and sincere doctrine of the law, or at the least were turned far aside from the same, yet the renoumed fame of the promised redemption flourished. And whē as the restitution of the church rested vpon the kingdom of Dauid, whē as there was any speach of the Messias, the name of the son of Dauid was cōmon among them, & this confession was in the mouth of all men. But when as true faith was worne out amongest them by the wonderful & incredible goodnes of God it came to passe that the sauor of the promisses came to the natiōs that dwelt by them. Therfore, though this womā had not ben familiarly taught by any master, neither yet had framed a faith in Christ vnaduisedly to her self, but she cōceiued it out of the law and the prophets. VVherfore that dog Seruetus no lesse foolishly thē wickedly abused this exāple, that he might strip faith bare & naked of the promisses. After this sense, I deny not but that somtimes there may be a faith cōceiued, which alwais hath not an expres & distinct knowledge of sound doctrine: so that we hold this, that faith doth alwaies spring out of the woorde of God, and hath his beginning of the true principles, so that it may alwayes be annexed to some light of true knowledge.

23. But hee answeared her not. The Euangelistes doe diuers wayes commend the faith of this woman, as nowe of her inuincible constancie. For when the silence of Christe was a kinde of repulse, it is meruaile that shee was not ouerthrowne with this temptation: but her diligence in praying, was a witneſſe of her perſeuerance. Yet this ſeemeth to be contrary to the nature of faith and inuocation, as Paule doth deſcribe it to the Romanes, chap. 10. 14. namely, that no man can pray rightly, except he haue heard the woorde of God before. VVho therefore will ſay that this woman is endewed with faith, who when Chriſt held his peace of her own motion, breatheth forth her hope? But whē as Chriſt ſpeaketh & holdeth his peace two wayes, it is to be noted thoughe hee then ſuppreſſed the woordes of his mouth, yet hee ſpake inwardly in the minde of the woman: and ſo this inward inſtinct was vnto her in ſtead of outward preaching. Note alſo, that whē her prayer aroſe of the hearing of faith, though Chriſt doeth not preſently anſwear, yet the doctrine which ſhe once learned, doeth alwaies reſound in her, that Chriſt the Redemer ſhould come. So the Lorde often ſpeaketh to his faithfull ones, and withall holdeth his peace: for they truſting to the teſtimonies of the Scripture, where they heare him ſpeaking, they doubt not but that hee will be mercifull vnto them: and yet he doeth not preſently anſwear to their requeſts and petitions: but rather diſſembleth his hearing of them. Therefore we ſee what the purpoſe of Chriſt was in holding his peace, not that he wold quench the faith of the woman, but rather that hee might ſharpen her endeuour, and kindle her feruencie. If that ſo little ſeede of doctrine brought forth ſo great fruit in this woman of Canaan, nothing is more vnſeemely, then that we ſhoulde fall away, if at any time he holde vs in ſuſpence, & doeth not yelde vs preſently a kinde anſweare.

Sende her away. The diſciples do aske nothing in her fauour: but becauſe her importunitye is troubleſome vnto them, they deſire that ſhee may be ſent away by any meanes. But it was a very childiſh deuice, that the Papiſts vnder this pretence endeuoured to bring in the Saincts that are dead to be our patrons: for if we ſhould graunt that this woman entreated the diſciples either to ſpeake for her, or to fauour her (whiche yet cannot be gathered of the text) yet there is an other reaſon or ſtate of them that are dead, and of them that are aliue. Note further, that the diſciples do heare her diſdainfully: and if they had had the minde to helpe her with their patronage, yet they obtaine nothing.

24. I am not ſent. He rendreth a reaſon vnto his Apoſtles, why he heareth not the Cananite, becauſe he would employ himſelfe wholely vpon the Iewes, to whome onely he was ſent a miniſter of the grace of God. Therefore, of his calling and commaundement of the father, he argueth that no helpe is to be yelded vnto ſtrangers, not that the power of Chriſt ſhould be alwaies encloſed in ſo narow boundes, but becauſe the circumſtance of the time did ſo require, that he beginning at the Iewes, ſhoulde then eſpecially apply himſelf to them. As it was ſayd, Mat. 10. 5. And the partition wal was not broken down before the reſurrection, that Chriſt might preach peace to the Gentiles, which were ſtrangers frō the kingdō of God. Epheſ. 2. 14. Therefore he then forbade the Apoſtles to goe any other where before they did ſowe the firſt ſeede of the Goſpell in Iudea. Therfore it is true that he ſayth in this place, that he is not ſent but to the Iewes only, vntill at length the Gentiles ſhoulde ſucceede in their order. Further, he calleth not only the elect the ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael, but who ſoeuer came of the ſtocke of the holy fathers: becauſe the Lord comprehended prehended all in the couenant, and the redemer was generally promiſed vnto all,as alſo without exception he reuealed and offered himſelfe vnto all. This alſo is worthy to be noted,that he ſayeth he was ſent to the loſt ſheepe: As in an other place he ſayeth, that he came to ſaue that which was loſt,Math.18.11.and Luke 19.10. Nowe ſith at this day his grace is common to vs with the Iewes, we doe gather what our condition is, vntill he appeare vnto vs a ſauiour.

25. Shee came and worshipped him. This woman ſeemeth to ſtriue wyth a ſtout obſtinacie,ſo as ſhee would wreſt ſomewhat from him againſt hys will: but it is not to be doubted but that the faith which ſhee had conceiued of the goodneſſe of the Meſsias ſo encouraged her. And that preciſe deniall of Chriſt to be any part of his office,which repugnancie terrified not her,nor withdrewe her from her purpoſe, which came of this, that ſhe being wholely ſetled in the former feeling of faith which I ſpake of, admitted nothing contrary to her hope. And this is a true triall of faith, when by no meanes we ſuffer the generall principle of our ſaluation,which is grounded vpon the worde of God,to be ſhaken in vs.

26. It is not good to take the childrens bread. Chriſt now with a ſharper anſwer then the former, ſeemeth to take away all hope: for he doeth not onely teache,that what grace ſoeuer he receiued of the father,belongeth to the Iewes,and muſt be imploied vpon them,except they ſhould be defrauded of their peculiar right: but very reprochefully he compareth the woman her ſelfe to a dog, ſignifying that ſhee was vnworthy to be made partaker of his grace. But that the meaning may be made plaine vnto vs, it muſt be knowen that he calleth not heere the childrens bread, all the gifts of God, but only thoſe which peculiarly belonged to Abraham and to his poſteritye. For, from the beginning of the world Gods goodneſſe was ſo ſpred abroad in euery place,that it filled the heauen & the earth, ſo that all mortall men ſealt him for their father: but becauſe he vouchſafed to beſtow greater honour vpon the children of Abraham, then vpon the reſt of mankinde, that is called the childrens breade, what ſoeuer properly pertaineth to that adoption,whereby the Iewes only were choſen to be the children. The Gentiles doe enioy in common the light of the Sunne,the breath of life,the nouriſhments of the earth,togither with the Iewes: but the bleſsing which was hoped for in Chriſt, reſted onely in the houſe of Abraham. Vvherfore,to caſt that foorth in cõmon without difference, which God with a ſingular priuiledge appoynted for one nation,was nothing elſe but an aboliſhing of the couenant of God. For by this meanes the Gentiles ſhould be made equall with the Iewes, who ſhould excell them as it was meete. Therefore Chriſt vſeth the woorde Caſting, ſignifying that that is not well placed, whiche is taken from the Church of God, and made common for prophane men. But this ought to be reſtrained to that time,when God was only called vppon in Iudea. For ſince the Gentiles are taken into the felowſhip of the ſame ſaluation (which is done where Chriſt ſhineth euery where by the Goſpel)that difference is taken away, ſo that they which were dogges before,are nowe accounted amongſt the children. But here the pride of the fleſh muſt of neceſsity be ouerthrowne, when we heare that from the beginning we are dogges. The excellencie of mannes nature was greater from the beginning,in the which the image of God did ſhine,then that ſo reprochful a name ſhoulde light vpon all the Gentiles, yea euen vpon kings, whome God adorned with his owne title: but the ſinne and falling away of Adam brought it to paſſe, that the Lord ſhuld worthely caſt into the donghill with dogges, them that are degenerated by the offence of the firſt father: Eſpecially, where the compariſon is made betwene the Iewes which are exempted from the common ſorte, and the Gentiles which are baniſhed from the kingdom of God. The purpoſe of Chriſt is more euidently declared by Marke, where it is ſayde: Let the children firſt be fed. For he admoniſheth the Cananite that ſhee doeth prepoſterouſly: for that ſhee as it were flieth to the table at the middeſt of ſupper. But though he ſpecially regarded the examining of the womans faith, yet he alſo teacheth howe horrible a vengeance remaineth for the Iewes, which refuſed ſo incomparable a good thing freely offered vnto them, which he denied to others earneſtly and feruently deſiring the ſame.

27. Truth Lord. The anſwer of the woman declareth that ſhe was not caried with a blinde or blunt violence, ſo that ſhee would directly ſtũble at the ſaying of Chriſt. For whereas God preferreth the Iewes before others, ſhe alſo leaueth that honour of adoption vnto them, and ſayth that ſhee wil not hinder, but that Chriſte according to the order preſcribed by God, ſhould ſatisfie them: onely ſhee deſireth that a few crummes, falling as it were vnawares, may come to the dogs. And certainly God did neuer ſo ſhut vppe his grace amongſt the Iewes, but that he ſcattered a little taſte at the leaſt of the ſame amongſt the Gentiles. Therefore nothinge could be more aptly or better ſpoken to expreſſe the grace of God, which then ſprang amongſt them.

28. Great is thy faith. Firſt he praiſeth the faith of the woman, then he ſayeth, that he graunted her praiers for her faith ſake. Further, the greatneſſe of her faith eſpecially ſhewed it ſelf in that, that it being guided only with a litle ſparke of doctrine, ſhee not only knew the proper office of Chriſt, and attributed vnto him a celeſtiall power, but cõſtantly ſhe went forward through hard lettes, ſuffered her ſelfe to be ſet at naught, ſo that ſhee might holde that which ſhee hoped for, that ſhe ſhould not be without the aide of Chriſt. To be ſhort, ſhee ſo ſeaſoned her confidence with humility, that ſhee woulde not arrogate any thing raſhly vnto her ſelfe: neither yet with the feeling of her owne vnworthineſſe would ſhe ſhutte the fountaine of the grace of Chriſt out from her. But by the commendation of this prophane woman, is the vnthankefulneſſe of this people condemned, who boaſted that they were dedicated to God. But how this woman might be ſayd to beleeue rightly, who was not only deſtitute of the promiſe of Chriſt, but is beaten away with his worde cleane contrary, I haue ſhewed before. For though that ſharply in ſhew he refuſeth her prayers, yet being perſwaded of the ſaluation promiſed of God throughe the Meſsias, ſhee ceaſeth not to hope wel: and therefore ſhee thinketh that the gate is ſhutte againſt her, not that ſhee ſhould altogither be driuen away, but that ſhe ſhould more earneſtly endeuor with her faith to pierce through the chinkes of the ſame. The laſt clauſe containeth profitable doctrine, that faith obtaineth any thing of the Lorde, becauſe that hee ſo much eſteemeth the ſame, that he is alwayes ready to graunt our requeſts ſo farre as it is expedient.

Mathew

Matthew 15.

39. So Iesus went away frō thence, and came neare vnto the sea of Galile, and went vp into a Mountaine, and sate downe there.

30. And great multitudes came vnto him, hauinge with them, halte, blinde, dumme, maimed, and many other, and cast them down at Iesus feete, and he healed them.

31. In so much that the multitude wondered, to see the dumme speake, the maimed whole, the halt to goe, and the blind to see, and they glorified the God of Israel.

32. Then Iesus called his disciples vnto him and sayde: I haue compassiō on this multitude, because they haue continued with me already three dayes, and haue nothinge to eate, and I will not lette them depart fasting, least they faint in the way.

33. And his disciples sayde vnto him: VVhence should we gette so muche breade in the wilderneſſe, as should suffice so great a multitude?

34. And Iesus sayde vnto them: How many loaues haue yee? And they sayd, seuen, and a fewe little fishes.

35. Then he commanded the multitude to sit downe on the ground, 36. And tooke the seuen loaues & the fishes, and gaue thankes, and brake them, and gaue to his disciples, and the Disciples to the multitude.

37. And they did all eate, and were sufficed, and they tooke vppe of the fragmentes that remained, seuen baskets full.

38. And

Marke 7.

31. And he departed againe from the coastes of Tyrus and Sidon, and came vnto the sea of Galile, through the mids of the coastes of Decapolit.

32. And they brought vnto him, one that was deafe, and stambered in his speache, and praied him to putte his hand vpon him.

33. Then he toke him a side from the multitude, and putte his fingers in his eares, and did spitte, and touched his tong. 34. And loking vp to heaven, he sighed & said vnto him: Ephata, that is: Be opened.

35. And straight way his eares were opened, and the stringe of his tongue was losed, and he spake plaine.

36. And he commanded them that they should tel no man: but how much soeuer hee forbadde them, the more a great deale they published it.

37. And were beyond measure astonied, saying: Hee hath done all things well: hee maketh bothe the deafe to heare, and the dumme to speake.

Marke 8.

1. In these daies, when there was a very great multitude, & had nothing to eat, Iesus called his disciples to him and said vnto them, 2. I haue compassiō on the multitude, because they haue now continued with me 3. daies, and haue nothing to eat. 3. And if I send thē away fasting to their owne houses, they would faint by the waye: for some of them came from farre.

4. Thē his disciples answered him, how can a man satisfie these with breade here in the wilderneſſe. 5 And he asked them: howe many loaues haue yee? And they sayde, seuen:

6. Then he commanded the multitude to sit downe on the ground: and he toke the 7. loaues & gaue thankes, brake them, and gaue to his disciples to set before them, and they did sette them before the people.

7. They had also a fewe small fishes: & when he had giuen thankes, he cōmāded them also to be set before thē.

Luke.

38. And they that had eaten, were foure thousande men, beside women and little children.	8. So they did eate and were ſuffliced, and they tooke vp of the broken meate, that was left, ſeuen basketsfull
39. Then Ieſus ſent away the multitude, and tooke shippe, and came into the partes of Magdala.	9. (And they that had eaten, were about 4. thouſand) ſo he ſent them away. 10. And anon hee entred into a ship with his diſciples, and came into the partes of Dalmanutha.

39. So Ieſus departed away from thence. Thoughe Mathewe and Marke doe without doubt ſpeake of one and the ſame returne of Chriſte out of the partes of Sidon, yet in ſome things they doe much differ. This is a ſmall matter that one of them ſayeth, that he came into the partes of Magdala, and the other into the partes of Dalmanutha: for when as they were cities ſtanding neare togither, ſituated vpon the lake Geneſareth towardes mount Thabor, it is no maruaile that the countrey lying betwene them, be called by both their names. And Decapolis was ſo called of ten cities, and becauſe it was the region lying betwene Phœnice and the ſea coaſte of Galile, which way Chriſt was to paſſe when he returned from Phœnicia into Galile of Iuda. There ſeemeth to bee greater difference, in that Mathewe ſayeth that he healed many diſeaſed with diuers kindes of ſickneſſe: and Marke maketh mention onely of one deafe manne. Yet this knot alſo is eaſily diſſolued: for Marke choſe that myracle to ſet downe which was done by the way, the fame wherof being ſpred, moued the inhabitants of that country euery where, to bring forth moe vnto Chriſt to be healed. For we know that the Euangeliſtes doe not curiouſly ſet downe all things: but they are ſo ſpare in reporting of the myracles, that they touch only a few things for an example. Alſo it was ſufficient for Marke to ſhew one example, wherin the power of Chriſt was manifeſted, euen as he doth in others ſuch like, which follow a litle after.

MAR. 32. They brought vnto him a deafe man. To what purpoſe they praied him to lay his hand on him, may be gathered by the former places: for the laying on of hands was a ſolemne ſigne of bleſsing, wherby the gifts of the holy ghoſt were alſo giuen. And without doubt Chriſte often vſed this rite, ſo that theſe men demaunded nothing but that they knew he had vſed heretofore. But Chriſte vſeth other ſignes: for he toucheth the tongue of the dumbe man with his ſpittle, and putteth his finger into his eares. The onely laying on of his hands, had bene effectual enough: yea, though he had not moued his finger, he could haue done this only with a becke: but it appeareth that hee vſed ſignes frankly, as was moſte for the profit of men: as now, putting ſpittle to his toung, he would declare that the gifte of ſpeaking commeth from him alone: thruſting his finger into his eares, he taught that it was a gift proper to him, as it were to boare open the deafe eares, for it is needeleſſe to runne to allegories: and we ſee, they that haue moſt ſubtilly dalied in that courſe, are ſo farre from bringing foorth any thing that is ſounde, that they rather make the ſcripture to become a ieſting ſtocke. Therefore let this one thing ſatisfie diſcreate readers, that we obtaine of Chriſt both ſpeach and hearing by prayer, inſo muche as he infuſeth his force to our tongues, and pearceth into our eares with his fingers.

That

That he remoueth the deafe man from the multitude, he doeth it partly of that purpoſe, that he would not ſhewe the glory of his Godheade to the rude, and ſuch as were not as yet fitte witneſſes, but that they ſhoulde beholde the ſame a farre off: partly, that he might the more freely powre foorth his feruent prayer. For that he looked vp to heauen, and ſighed, was a ſigne of a vehement affection: whereby is perceiued how great his loue was towardes men, whoſe miſeries he ſo bewailed. Neither is it to be doubted, but by the taking of ſpittle out of his owne mouth, to putte into his mouthe, and by putting his fingers, his will was to teſtifie and to ſhew the ſame kinde and louing affection. Yet he declareth that he hath great power in curing all diſeaſes, and in giuing health, when as hee ſimply cõmaundeth the tongue and eares to be opened. Neither was it without conſideration, that Marke ſetteth downe that Chalde woorde, but that it might teſtifie the diuine power of Chriſte. Amongſt other trifles wherewith fooliſh men defiled baptiſme, heere they alſo had one Apiſh ieſting toye. By the which example we are admoniſhed, that there is no ende of licentiouſneſſe, when men begin to dally with the myſteries of God at their owne pleaſure.

36. He commaunded them, that they ſhould tell no man. Though there are many interpreaters which wreſt theſe commandements into an other ſence, as if Chriſt had purpoſely prouoked them to ſpread the fame of the myracle: yet that ſeemeth to me to be the more ſimple meaning, which I alleaged other where, that his purpoſe onely was to deferre it to an other time more conuenient and fitte. VVherefore I thinke not otherwiſe, but that their zeale was vnaduiſed, while they being commaunded to holde their peace, doe haſte to ſpeake. Yet it is not to be wondered at, that men not accuſtomed to the doctrine of Chriſt, ſhoulde be caried with ſo great a zeale, when it was not conuenient. Yet Chriſt turneth that to his owne glory, which was vnaduiſedly attempted by them: becauſe bothe the myracle was knowen, and that whole region deſpiſing the authour of heauenly giftes, was made inexcuſable.

37. He hath done all things well. After that Mathewe had gathered many myracles togither, he addeth at the length this clauſe, the multitude wondered and gaue the glory to the God of Iſrael: namely, becauſe that God ſhewing his power by vnwonted meanes, renued the remembraunce of his couenaunt. But in Markes woordes, the figure Antitheſis may be vnderſtoode: for whereas the rumour of Chriſt was very diuers, the multitude gaue teſtimonie that they were wicked and malicious people, who ſoeuer would ſpeake euill of his deedes, when as al his workes rather deſerued high praiſe, then ſo to be quarelled at. And we know that the ſenſe of nature teacheth that nothing is more vnrighteous, then to draw good woorkes into blame and hatred.

MATH. 32. I haue compaſſion on this multitude. Heere is a myracle ſette downe not vnlike the other, which wee expounded a little before: this is the only difference, that where before Chriſt fedde fiue thouſande men with fiue loaues and two fiſhes: now foure thouſand are fedde with ſeuen loaues and a few fiſhes. Alſo, when twelue baskets were filled with fragments then, nowe of greater aboundance fewer broken meates remaine. Heereby we learne that the power of God is not tied to meanes or helpes, neither is it any matter before him, whether it be great or litle:

as Ionathan ſayd, ſpeaking of his ſmal army, & of the huge multitude of his enemies, 1. Sa. 14. 6. And as the bleſsing of God ſatisfied as wel with one loafe as with 20. is enoughe to feede a great multitude: ſo if that be wanting, a hundred loaues ſhall not ſuffice to feede ten men: for where the ſtaffe of bread ſhalbe broken, though the meale be yelded by waight from the mil, and the bread from the ouen, yet ſhal it not auaile to ſtuffe the belly by deuouring it. The three daies faſting whereof Chriſt ſpeaketh, muſt be vnderſtoode, not that they abide three daies without meat, but becauſe there was no great prouiſion in thoſe deſart places, ſo that of neceſsity there wanted ordinarie foode. Alſo, that in thoſe hotte regions, there is leſſe ſtomacke to eate, then vnder our groſſe and colde aire, wherefore it is no maruell, if they abſtained the longer from meat.

33. VVhere should we gette ſo much bread in the wildernesse. The diſciples doe bewray too beaſtly a blockiſhneſſe, that then at the leaſt they call not to minde, that which they had learned of the power and grace of Chriſte, which they might haue applied to this preſent vſe: but as if they had neuer ſene any ſuch thing, they forget to ſeeke for remedy of him. And becauſe the like ſluggiſhneſſe doeth daily creepe vppon vs, ſo muche more heede muſt be taken, leaſt at any time our mindes be withdrawen from conſidering the benefits of God: that the experience of the times paſt may teache vs hereafter, to hope for the ſame that God hath now once or oftner beſtowed vpon vs.

Mathewe 16.	Marke 8.	Luke 12.
1. Then came the Phariſies and Sadduces, and did tempt him, deſiring him to shewe them a ſigne from heauen.	11. And the Phariſies came forth, and began to diſpute with him, ſeekinge of hym a ſigne from heauen, & tempting him.	54. Then ſayde hee to the people, when yee ſee a cloude riſe out of the VVeſt, ſtraighe way yee ſay a showre commeth, and ſo it is.
2. But he anſweared and ſayde vnto them: when it is euening, yee ſay faire weather: for the skie is redde.	12. Then he ſighed depely in his ſpirite, and ſayde: why doeth this generation ſeeke a ſigne? Verily I ſay vnto you, a ſigne ſhal not be giuen vnto this generation.	55. And when yee ſee the South winde blowe, yee ſay that it will be hoate, and it commeth to paſſe.
3. And in the morninge yee ſay, To day shalbe a tempeſt: for the skie is redde and lowringe: O hypocrites: yee can diſcerne the face of the skie, and can yee not diſcerne the ſignes of the times.	13. So hee left them, and went into the shippe againe, and departed to the other ſide.	56. Hypocrites, yee canne diſcerne the face of the earth, and of the skie: but why diſcerne yee not this time?
4. The wicked generation and adoulterous ſeeketh a ſigne, and there shall no ſigne be giuen it: but the ſigne of the Prophet Ionas: ſo hee left them, and departed.		57. Yea, and why iudge ye not of your ſelues what is right?

1. Then came the Phariſies. Marke ſayeth that they began to diſpute: whereof may be gathered, that when they were ouercome with reaſons, this this was their laſt refuge, as obſtinate menne ſo oft as they are driuen to extremities, yet leaſt they ſhoulde be enforced to ſubſcribe to the truthe, they commonly vſe to pretende ſomwhat beſides the cauſe. And though the maner of their diſputation is not expreſſed, yet it ſeemeth likely to mee that they brabled about the callinge of Chriſte, why he durſt innouate any thing, why he lifted vppe and bare him ſelfe ſo high, as if that by his comming the kingdome of God ſhoulde bee reſtored to the eſtate of the ſame. VVhen there remained nothing that they might obiect againſt his doctrine, they deſired to haue a ſigne giuen them from heauen. But it is certaine that they woulde not haue yeelded more to a hundred ſignes, then they did to the teſtimonies of the ſcripture. Note alſo that the power of Chriſt was manifeſted to their ſight already by many myracles, and might as it were be hādled with their hands. They deſpiſe the ſignes whereby Chriſte reuealed himſelfe familiarly vnto them, therefore howe muche leſſe woulde they profite by an obſcure ſigne fetched from farre. So the Papiſtes at this day, as if the doctrine of the Goſpell hadde neuer bene eſtabliſhed, doe deſire to haue it confirmed vnto them by newe myracles. It is alſo to be noted that when the Phariſies had great contention with the Sadduces, neither was it onely a bitter hatred, but there were daily hotte ſtrifes betweene them: yet nowe they doe mutually ioyne together againſt Chriſt: ſo when the wicked are at debate, yet their deadly diſcordes hinder them not, but that they will conſpire againſt God, and as it were by making leagues, they doe ioyne handes togither to ouerthrowe the truthe. By the woorde Tempting, the Euangeliſts doe ſignifie that they came not with ſincere mindes, nor with a deſire to learne: but to take him by deceit, for that they thought ſhould be denied them, or at the leaſt that Chriſt coulde not doe it, as they imagined. For becauſe they accounted no better of him but vilely and baſely, they had no other purpoſe, then by ſhewing his baſe eſtate, to ouerthrow that eſtimation which he had heeretofore gotten amongſt the people. So the vnbeleuers are ſaid to tempt God, as oft as they not obtaining what ſoeuer their pleaſure deſireth, doe fall to murmuring, and doe charge God with want of power.

2. VVhen it is eueninge. In theſe woordes Chriſte declareth that his power is ſufficiently declared, ſo that they might know the time of their viſitation, if they did not flee the open light, by the ſhutting of their eyes of their owne accorde. And he vſeth a notable ſimilitude and very fitte for the purpoſe: though the courſe of the aire is changeable, ſo that now of a ſodaine a tempeſt riſeth, now vnlooked for it waxeth cleare: yet nature directing them, menne by ſignes doe prognoſticate before, whether the day ſhall be faire or foule. Therfore Chriſt demaundeth why they do not know the kingdome of God, being reuealed by as euident ſignes as the other: for hereby it certainly appeared that they were too muche giuen to earthly and tranſitorie commodities, contemninge what ſoeuer pertained to the heauēly and ſpirituall life: and they were not thus blinde ſo much by ignorance, as of wilfull malice.

Therefore hee calleth them alſo hypocrites, becauſe they fained to ſeeke that, which being ſhewed them, they woulde not ſee. Further, the ſame reproofe doeth almoſte appertaine to the whole worlde: for becauſe that menne doe bende their witte, and applie theyr ſenſes to the preſent vſe, there is almoſt no manne who is not wiſe enoughe in this behalfe, or at the leaſt hauing obtained ſome meane knowledge, followeth that which is expedient. Then whereof commeth it, that we vnderſtande not thoſe ſignes whereby God calleth vs vnto him, but becauſe that euery manne giueth himſelfe to a wilfull ſluggiſhneſſe? The callinge of Chriſte and the preſent offering of eternall ſaluation was manifeſted to the Scribes as wel by the law and the Prophets, as by his own doctrine which was confirmed by myracles. There are very many ſuche at thys day, which do pretende that in doubtfull matters they haue iuſt cauſe to ſuſpēd their iudgmēt, becauſe þ a reſolute determination muſt be waighted for: Nay, they think this a point of great wiſdom, of purpoſe to auoid all inquirie after the truthe. As thoughe it were not a poynte of greate ſlouthfulneſſe to neglecte the eternall ſaluation of ſoules, when as they ſo diligently prouide for thoſe thinges which are of the fleſh and of the earth, and in the meane ſeaſon to pretende vaine excuſes of groſſe and deepe ignoraunce. But certaine vnlearned menne doe gather too muche abſurdly out of this place, that it is not lawfull by looking into the skie to iudge either of temperature or of ſtormes: For Chriſte rather of the right courſe of nature argueth that they ſhoulde iuſtlye pearish for their vnthankfulneſſe, which are ſo quicke wicked in things pertaining to this preſent life, and doe wittingly and willingly ouerwhelme the heauenly light with their owne blockiſhneſſe.

Mark addeth, that Chriſte ſighed in ſpirite, in which wordes he declareth that he took it grieuouſly & bitterly, when hee ſaw theſe vnthankfull menne ſo ſtubburnely to reſiſte againſt God. And certainly, it becommeth all them that are ſtudious of the glory of God, and carefull of mannes ſaluation, that nothinge wounde them deepelier with ſorowe, then when they ſee the vnbeleeuers of ſette purpoſe ſtoppe vppe from themſelues the meanes whereby they ſhould beleeue, and to apply al the witte they haue to that purpoſe, that they might darken the lighte of the woorde and woorkes of God with their miſtes. I thinke that the worde Spirite is putte heere Emphatically, that we might knowe that this ſighe came of the deepe affection of his heart, leaſt any Sophiſter ſhoulde ſay that Chriſte made but an outwarde ſhewe of ſorowe, which he fealt not inwardly. For it coulde not be otherwiſe but that holy ſoule which was gouerned by the ſpirite of zeale, ſhoulde be altogither grieued at ſuche vngodly frowardneſſe.

57. Why iudge you not of your ſelues. Heere Chriſt openeth the fountaine from whence the miſchiefe ſprange, and toucheth the bile it ſelfe, as it were with a launce: namely, for that they deſcended not into their owne conſciences, nor made there any ſearche with themſelues before God what is right. For heereof commeth it, that the hypocrites are ſo proude in their quarelling, and that they caſt foorth ſuch arrogant ſpeaches into the aire without regarde: they gather not their ſences togither, neither doe they ſette themſelues before the iudgement ſeate of GOD, that truthe being once knowen, mighte haue the victorie. Further, that which Luke ſayeth was ſpoken to the multitude, differeth not from that whiche Mathewe and Marke reporte: beecauſe that it is probable that Chriſte did generally bende his ſpeache againſte the followers and diſciples of the Scribes, and other ſuche like contemners of God, whome he ſawe to be too many: ſo that this complaint or rebuke lighted vppon the whole company of thoſe lewde ones.

MATH. 4. The wicked generation. This place was expounded in the 12. chapter. And the ſumme is, that the Iewes were ſatisfied with no ſignes, but that their wicked deſire did ſtill prouoke them to tempt God. Neither doth he ſimply cal them an adoulterous generation, becauſe they deſire any ſigne, which God ſometime graunteth to his children: but becauſe they of purpoſe prouoke God, therefore hee ſayeth that he ſhall be reſtored to them again aliue, as Ionas was. So Mat. reporteth. Marke maketh no mention of Ionas, yet hath the ſame ſenſe. For this neither could ſerue for a ſigne vnto them, that Chriſt being raiſed frō the dead, would ſend forth the ſounding voyce of his goſpell into all places.

Mathew 16.	Marke 8.	Luke 12.
5. And when his diſciples were come to the other ſide, they hadde forgotten to take breade with them.	14. And they hadde forgotten to take bread, neither hadde they in the ſhippe with them but one loafe.	1. In the meane time, there gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, ſo that they trode one an other: and he beganne to ſay to his diſciples: firſte, take heede to your ſelues, of the leauen of the Phariſies, whiche is hypocriſie.
6. Then Ieſus ſayd vnto them: Take hede and beware of the leauen of the Phariſies and Sadducees.	15. And he charged them, ſaying: Take hede, and beware of the leauen of the Phariſies, and of the leauen of Herode.
7. And they thought in themſelues, ſaying: It is becauſe wee haue brought no bread.	16. And they thought amonge themſelues, ſaying: It is becauſe we haue no breade.
8. But Ieſus knowing it, ſayd vnto them: O yee of little faith, why thinke yee thus in your ſelues, becauſe yee haue brought no breade?	17. And when Ieſus knewe it, he ſayde vnto them: VVhy reaſon ye thus, becauſe ye haue no bread? perceiue yee not yet, neither vnderſtand? haue ye your hearts yet hardened?
9. Do ye not yet perceiue, neither remember the fiue loaues, when there were fiue thouſande menne, and howe many baskettes tooke yee vppe?	18. Haue yee eyes and ſee not? and haue yee eares and heare not? and doe you not remember?
10. Neither the ſeuen loaues, when there were 4000. men, and howe many baskets tooke yee vp?	19. VVhen I brake the fiue loaues among the fiue thouſand, how many baskettes full of broken meate tooke yee vppe? they ſayde vnto him, twelue.
11. VVhy perceiue yee not, that I ſaid not vnto you cōcerning bread, that ye ſhoulde beware of the leauen of the Phariſies and Sadducees?	20. And when I brake ſeuen among foure thouſand, howe many baskettes of the leauings tooke ye vp? and they ſayd, ſeuen.
12. Then vnderſtode they that he had not ſayd that they ſhoulde beware of the leauen of breade, but of the doctrine of the Phariſies and Sadducees.	21. Then he ſayd vnto them: how is it that yee vnderſtand not?

5. VVhen the diſciples were come. Heere Chriſt of the former matter taketh occaſion to exhort his diſciples, to keepe themſelues from all corruptions which might hinder ſincere godlineſſe. The Phariſies had bene there a litle before, who had giuen teſtimonie of a poyſoned frowardneſſe: The Saduces had kept them companie: of the other ſide Herode a moſte vile aduerſary and corrupter of ſound doctrine. The diſciples being amongſt theſe daungers, it was neceſſary that they ſhoulde be warned to looke to themſelues: for when as the wiſedome of man doeth incline of it ſelfe to vanitie and errours, when leude deuices, falſe doctrines and ſuche other miſchiefes doe compaſſe vs about, there is nothing more eaſie for vs then to fall away from the true and naturall puritie of the woord of God. If it come to paſſe that we be ſo enſnared, it can neuer be, that true Religion ſhould haue full poſſeſsion of vs. But that the matter may more euidently appeare, let vs conſider Chriſtes woordes.

6. Take heede of the leauen of the Phariſies. Mat. ioyneth the Sadduces with the Phariſies. Marke putteth Herode in thoſe ſecondes roume. Luke maketh mẽtion only of the Phariſies. Though it is vncertaine whether Luke rehearſeth the ſame ſpeach of Chriſt: and defineth the leauen to be hypocriſie, & alſo doth briefly ſet down this ſentẽce, as if there were no dourfulneſſe in the woordes. And though the Metaphore of leauen, which is here applied to falſe doctrine, might other where be transferred to hypocriſie of life and behauiour, or elſe that the ſame was ſpoken twiſe: yet there is no abſurdity if we ſay that thoſe ſayings, which the other two, according to the courſe of the hyſtorie, doe ſet forth more largely, by Luke are touched ſomwhat otherwiſe, as not in the ſame place, or order, ſo that yet there be no difference in the matter. If it be lawfull to folow this cõiecture, hypocriſie ſhall ſignify ſomewhat elſe then a counterfait and fained ſhew of wiſedome, namely the fountaine it ſelfe and matter of vaine pompe, which boaſting of ſome great thing before men, is of no eſtimation before God. For as the eyes of the Lorde, as Ieremie witneſſeth 5.3. behold the truth: ſo by his word he directeth the faithful in perfect holineſſe, that with a perfecte and ſincere heart they may cleaue vnto righteouſneſſe, according to that ſaying, Deut. 10.12. And now O Iſrael, what doeth the Lorde require of thee, but that thou ſhouldeſt cleaue vnto him with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoule? But on the contrary ſide, the ſpirituall worſhip being neglected, they doe bring in the traditions of men, fading colours, as if God could be caught with ſuch baites. For although the outwarde ceremonies ſerue to make a ſhew, yet before God they are but childiſh trifles, further then we be exerciſed by them in true holineſſe. Nowe we vnderſtande why Luke put hypocriſie in ſteade of fained doctrine, and vnder this name hee comprehendeth the leauens of menne, which doe onely puffe vppe with a vaine ſhewe, and before God haue no ſoundneſſe in them: nay, they drawe the mindes of menne from the right ſtudie of godlineſſe to vaine rites nor to be eſteemed. But becauſe that Mathew his expoſition is plainer, it ſhall be beſt to reſt vpon that. When the Lorde had reproued the Diſciples, they at the length vnderſtoode, that they were commaunded to take heede of the doctrine, it is certaine that this was the meaning of Chriſte, to arme them againſt the preſent corruptions, with the which they were cõpaſſed on euery ſide. And therfore he ſpeaketh expreſly of the Phariſies and Sadduces, becauſe thoſe two ſectes tyrannouſly raigned at that time in the Churche, and wyth their corrupt doctrines they ouerwhelmed the doctrine of the Lawe and of the Prophets, ſo that there remained almoſt nothing ſounde or perfect? Further, it is demaunded wherfore Marke putteth Herode amongſt

the number of falſe teachers, who profeſſed no ſuche thing: I aunſwere when as he was halfe a Iewe degenerate and vnfaithfull, he endeuoured by all the ſubtelties he coulde to drawe the people after him. For this is the maner of all Apoſtates to adde ſome mixture, that a newe Religion may ſpring, which may abolish the former. Therefore, becauſe that he endeuoured craftily to ouerthrowe the principles of the true and auncient religion, that that religion might at the length flouriſh, which ſhoulde be moſt agreeable to his tyrannie: and becauſe he endeuoured to bringe in a newe kinde of Iudaiſme, the Lord doeth not without cauſe commaunde alſo to beware of his leauen. For as the Scribes ſcattered their errours out of the temple of God: ſo Herodes court was an other ſhoppe of ſathan, for the forginge of other errours. As we ſee the like in Poperie at this day, Antichriſt doeth not vomite his ſubtleties only out of the Churches and dennes of Sophiſters and Monkes: but he alſo proppeth vp his kingdom with the helpe of courtly diuinitie, ſo as he wil omitte no craft. And as Chriſte then mette with thoſe preſent euilles, and gaue his warninge to beware of that which was moſt noyſome: we being warned by this example, let vs learne wiſely to weigh what corruptions may annoy vs. A man may ſooner mixe fire and water togither, then make the inuentions of the Pope to agree with the Goſpel. Therfore who ſoeuer deſireth with good faith to become Chriſtes diſciple, lette him ſtudie to keepe hys ſoule pure from thoſe leauens. If he be nowe already infected with the ſame, lette him labour ſo muche the more in cleanſing himſelfe, vntill no more dregges nor filthineſſe ſticke in him. And now, becauſe that on the other part troubleſome men do attempt diuers wayes to corrupt ſounde doctrine, the faithfull muſt watch diligently for the auoiding of ſuche ſubtleties, ſo as they may celebrate a continual Paſſeouer with the ſweete bread of truth. And becauſe that vile wickedneſſe, noyſome leauen, and moſt deadly poyſon ouerwhelmeth nowe euery place, let men imploy all their ſenſes to this warning moſt neceſſary of all.

8. Why thinke you thus in your ſelues. The diſciples do againe declare how euil they haue profited both by their maſters doctrine, & alſo by his wõderfull works. For that which he had ſaid of taking hede of leauen, they ſo tooke as if Chriſt wold only draw them from the outward felowſhip. For becauſe that it was a cuſtome receiued amongſt the Iewes, that they ſhould not eate meate togither with prophane menne, the diſciples thought that the Phariſies were of the ſame ſort & number. And this ignorãce was to be tolerated in ſome ſorte: but becauſe they forgate ſo late a benefite, they thinke not that the remeady is in Chriſtes hande, that they ſhould not be compelled to defile themſelues with meate and drinke: he rebuketh them more ſharply, as they were well woorthy, and certainly this vnthankfulneſſe was too groſſe, when as they hadde ſo lately ſeene bread created of nothing for the ſatisfying of many thouſandes of menne, and that being twiſe done, nowe to take care for breade, as if the ſame power were not remaining in the maſter ſtill. By the which woordes we doe gather that all they are condemned of infidelitie, whiche hauing once or twice tried the power of God, doe afterward diſtruſt. For as faith nouriſheth the remembrance of the gifts of God in our hearts, ſo except the ſame faith be ouerwhelmed they will neuer be forgotten.

12. They vnderſtoode that he had ſpoken of the doctrine. It is not hard to bee vnderſtoode, but that Chriſt oppoſeth this word leauen againſt the ſimple and pure word of God. Chriſte taketh the ſame beefore in the good parte, when he ſaide that the Goſpel was like to leauen: but the ſcripture for the moſt parte doth hereby ſignifie any thing that is added, whereby the naturall purity of any thing is hindered. But in this place theſe two contraries doe without doubt aunſwere the one to the other, the ſimple trueth of God and the inuentions, which men deuiſe out of their owne brayne. Neyther is there any cauſe why any Sophyſter ſhoulde ſeeke to ſlyppe away, denying this to be vnderſtoode of euery doctrine: becauſe there can no other doctrine be found, which beareth the name of pure and ſweete doctrine, then that which proceeded from God. VVhereof it followeth that what mixture ſoeuer commeth from any other, is called leauen. As Paul 2. Cor. 11. 3. alſo teacheth that the faith is corrupted aſſoone as we are drawne from the ſimplicitie that is in Chriſt. Nowe is it to be ſeene, whoſe doctrine the Lorde woulde haue them to beware of. Then certainly was the ordinarie power of the Church in the handes of the Scribes and Prieſts, amongſt whom the Phariſies were chief. VVhen as Chriſte by name warneth his from their doctrine, it followeth that they all muſt be refuſed which mixe their own inuentions with the word of God, or which thruſt in any ſtraunge thinge, what degree of honour ſoeuer they are placed in, or what proude title ſoeuer they beare. VVherfore accurſed and corrupt is their ſubiection which ſubmit themſelues to the traditions and lawes of the Pope.

Mathewe.	Marke. 8	Luke.
	22. And he came to Bethſaida, and they brought a blinde man vnto him, and deſired him to touch him.
	23. Then he tooke the blinde by the hande, and ledde him out of the towne, and ſpit in his eyes, and putte his hands vppon him, and asked him if he ſaw ought.
	24. And he looked vp, and ſayde, I ſee men: for I ſee them walking like trees.
	25. After that, he put his handes againe vppon his eyes, and made him looke againe. And he was reſtored to his ſighte, and ſawe euery manne a farre off, clearely.
	26. And he ſent him home to his houſe, ſaying: neither goe into the towne, nor tell it to anye in the towne.

This myracle, the declaration whereof is omitted by others, ſeemeth to be reported by Marke, eſpecially for this circumſtance, that Chriſt did not at once, as he was often wont to doe, but by little and little reſtore the blinde man his ſight: the which it is likely that he did to this end, that he might in this man ſet an example of his free diſpẽſation, that he is not bounde to any certaine rule, but that he may ſhewe his power either this way or that. Therfore he doth not open the eies of the blinde ſo preſently, that he may ſee clearly with them: but he inſtilleth a darke and a confuſe ſight into them: then by putting his hands vpon them againe, he giueth them a perfect ſight: ſo the grace of Chriſt, which before was ſodẽly powred vpon others, commeth as it were drop by drop into this man.

24. I see men. The blind man was asked this question for the disciples, that they might know that somwhat was now giuen him: but yet that there was but a litle beginning only, and not fully healed. Therefore he aunswereth that he seeth men, because hee seeth some walkinge, whiche are straight like vnto trees. By which wordes hee confesseth, that his sight is not so cleare, as to discerne men from trees: but yet that he canne see now a litle: because that by their motion he gesseth them to be men, who he seeth to be of a straight stature: in which sense he also saith, that they are like vnto trees. Wherefore we see that onely by coniecture hee saith that he seeth men.

¶ 26. He sent him home to his house. That Christe suffered him not to returne to Bethsaida, where many might haue beene witnesses of the myracle, some thinke that it was done, because that Christe would punishe the inhabitants of that place by depriuing them of the vse of his fauour. Whatsoeuer the cause was, it is certeine that he wrought not this miracle to that end that it should alwayes be buried, but he would haue this with manye others kept secrete, vntill that the sinnes of the world being washed away by his death, he should ascend into the glory of the father.

Matth. 16.	Mark. 8.	Luke. 9.
13. Now, when Iesus came into the coastes of Cæsarea Philippy, he asked his disciples, saying, whome doe men say that I the sonne of manne am?	27. And Iesus went out, and his disciples into the townes of Cæsarea Philippi. And by the way he asked his disciples, saying vnto them, whom do men say that I am?	18. And it came to passe, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him, & he asked them, saying, who say the people that I am?
14. And they said, some say, Iohn Baptist: and some Elias: and others Ieremias, or one of the Prophets.	28. And they aunswered, some say, Iohn Baptist: and some, Elias, and some, one of the prophets.	19. They aunswered and sayd, Iohn Baptist: and others saye, Elias: and some say that one of the old prophets is risen againe.
15. He said vnto them, but whome say yee that I am?	29. And hee said vnto them, but whom saye yee that I am? Then Peter aunswered and said vnto him, thou art the Christ.	20. And hee sayde vnto them, but whom say ye that I am? Peter aunswered & said, the Christ of God.
16. Then Simon Peter aunswered, and saide, Thou art the Christ the sonne of the liuing God.
17. And Iesus answered, and saide to him, Blessed art thou Simon, the sonne of Ionas: for flesthe and bloud hath not reuealed it vnto thee, but my father, which is in heauen.
18. And I say also vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will buyld my Churche: and the gates of hell shall not ouercome it.
19. And I will giue vnto thee the keyes of the kingdom of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou shalt binde vppon earth, shalbe bounde in heauen: and whatsoeuer thou shalt loose on earth shalbe losed in heauen.

13. Into the coaſtes of Cæſarea Philippi. Marke ſaith that this communication was had by the way: and Luke; when hee had praid, and had none with him but his diſciples: Matth. doth not ſo exactly note the time: yet it is certeine that the three do report the ſame hyſtory: & it may be that Chriſt in that iourney, after he had made ſome ſtay and prayd, demaunded this of his diſciples. Alſo beecauſe there were two Cæſareaes: that was aunciente and more famous, whiche was firſte the towre of Straton: and this is ſcituated at the foote of Mount Libanus, not farre from Iordan, the epithite is added for difference ſake. For though ſome thinke that it was built in the ſame place, where the town Dan ſtoode in times paſt: yet, becauſe it was lately built by Phillip the Tetrach, it was called Philippy. VVhom doe men ſay that I am? This may ſeeme to bee the meaning, what ſhould be the common fame of the Redeemer, who was becom the ſonne of man: Yet the queſtion is otherwiſe: namely, what opinion men had of Ieſus the ſonne of Mary: And after his maner he calleth himſelfe the ſonne of man, as if he ſhould haue ſaide, whileſt I am now cloathed with fleſh, & am conuerſant vpon the earth, as one of the ſonnes of men, what iudgment is there of me? But the purpoſe of Chriſt was throughly to ſtrengthen his diſciples in an aſſured faith, that amongſte ſundry opinions they ſhould not wauer, as we ſhall preſently ſee.

14 Some ſay Iohn. There is nothing ſpoken heere either of the profeſſed enemies of Chriſt, neither of the prophane contemners, but of the more ſound and ſincere part of the people, and as of the choſen flowre of the Church. For the Diſciples doe only make mention of them, which ſpake honorably of Chriſt: and yet when the truth was propoſed vnto thē, no man tēded to that ſcope, but al mē vaniſhed away in their own delights. VVherby we perceiue how weake the wit of man is, which not onelye conceiueth nothing of it ſelf, that is right & true, but euen gathereth errours of true principles.

Adde this alſo, that when Chriſte was the onelye ſigne of concorde and of peace, whereby God woulde gather the whole world vnto him, the greater parte doe heereby take the occaſion of more diſſention. And euen amongeſt the Iewes, the vnitie of Faith was no other where ſettled then in Chriſte, and yet they whiche ſeemed before to haue ſome agreement amongeſt themſelues, are nowe ſeuered into ſundry opinions. Alſo, we ſee howe one errour engendereth an other: for becauſe this opinion was ſetled in the mindes of the common people, that the ſoules went into diuers bodies, heereof it came that they were the rather bent to this falſe imagination. But thoughe at the comming of Chriſte the Iewes were in this maner deuided, yet this varietie of opinions ſhoulde not haue hindered the godly, but that they ſhoulde haue deſired the right knowledge of him. For if any manne vnder that pretence geuinge himſelfe to ſluggiſhnes, hadde neglected to ſeeke Chriſt, euen in our iudgement hee ſhoulde bee inexcuſeable. Muche leſſe then ſhall hee eſcape the iudgement of G O D, if any manne by reaſon of diuiſions ſhall abhorre Chriſte, or of the falſe opinions of menne ſhall take occaſion of loathynge, ſo that hee wyll not vouchſafe to applye him ſelfe vnto Chriſt.

15. But whome saye yee that I am? Heere Christe seuereth his disciples from the reste of the people, whereby it might the better appeare to be an absurde thing for vs to be drawne from the vnitye of fayth, though others doe disagree. For whosoeuer doe simplye addict themselues to Christe, and doe not striue to adde anye thinge of their owne head to the Gospell, the true lyghte shall neuer fayle them. But heere is great dilygence required, that whyle the whole worlde slydeth after theyr owne inuentions, they shoulde take faste and sure holde of Christe. Beecause that Sathan coulde not take awaye from the Iewes the perswasion they had out of the lawe and the Prophetes of Christe to come, hee diuersly transfiguring him, hee deuided him as it were into partes: then hee thruste amongst them many false Christes, that the true Redeemer should not bee esteemed. Hee lefte not the same subtilties afterwarde, eyther to roote Christe vtterlye out, or to thruste an other person in his roume. VVherefore amongst the confused and contrary speaches of the worlde, let this voyce of Christe sound alwaies in our eares, whereby he separateth vs from wandring and vneonstant men, that we should not follow the multitude, neither that our faith should wauer amongst the contrary floudes of opinions.

16. Thou arte Christe. A short confession, but whiche containeth in it the whole summe of our saluation. For vnder the title of Christ is comprehended the eternall kingdome and priesthood, that he would reconcile God vnto vs, and that sinnes being washed away by his owne sacrifice, he would obtaine a perfect righteousnesse. Then that he would preserue vs being receiued into his fayth and custodye, and would adorne and enrich vs with all kinde of blessinges. Marke onely hath, Thou art Christ, and Luke hath, the Christe of God, but in the same sense: For in tymes paste they called the kings, which were annoynted of God, the Christes of God.

And Luke vsed this phrase before, where he sayde that Simeon had answere giuen him from heauen, that he should not dye before he shoulde see the Christ of the Lord. For surely it was a diuine redemption, which God gaue by the hand of his Sonne. Therefore it was necessary that he that should be the redeemer, shoulde come as a noted person from heauen with the annoyntment of God. Matthew expresseth it more plainlye, that he is the Sonne of the liuing God. For though it may bee that Peter did not as yet so expresly vnderstande howe Christe was begotten of God: yet he beleeued that hee was so excellent a person, that he had his beginning from God, not as other men, but that the liuely and true godhead dwelt in his flesh. VVhen the epithite liuing is giuen to God, it is a note to make a difference betweene him and dead Idols, which are nothing.

17. Blessed art thou Simon. VVhen as this is life eternall, to know one God, and whom he sent Iesus Christ, it is not without cause that Christ pronounceth him blessed, whoe confessed this from his heart. But he spake not this perticularlye to Peter alone, but his will was to shewe where the onely felicitie of the whole worlde is placed. And that all men may aspyre to the same with greater desire: first, it must be holden that all mē are miserable & cursed by nature, vntil they find remedy by Christ. Thē must be added, whosoeuer obtaineth christ, wāteth nothing at al of a perfect bles-bleſſednes, ſeeing wee can deſire nothing that is better then the eternall glory of God into the poſſeſsion whereof Chriſt doth bring vs. Flesh and bloud. Vnder the perſon of this one man, Chriſt admoniſheth all menne that faith muſt be asked of his father, & that the praiſe of the ſame muſt be attributed to his grace: for the peculyar lightening of God is here oppoſed to fleſh and bloud. VVhereby we gather that mennes mindes are voyde of vnderſtanding to perceiue the miſteries of the heauenlye wildome hidden in Chriſte: nay, all humane ſenſes do in this behalfe fayle, vntill God open our eies to ſee his glory in Chriſt. Therfore let no man truſting in his owne witte, lift vppe himſelfe in pride: but humbly let vs ſuffer our ſelues to be taught inwardlye of the father of lightes, that his onelye ſpirite may lighten our darkneſſe. And nowe they whiche are endewed with faith, acknowledging their own blindnes, let thē learne to yeelde that to God, which to him is due.

18. But I ſay vnto thee. Chriſte by theſe wordes declareth how muche Peters confeſsion pleaſeth him, in that hee beſtoweth ſo great a rewarde vppon it. For though he had giuen to Simon his diſciple the name of Peter, & had freely appointed him to be his Apoſtle, yet theſe which were free giftes, he aſcribeth as it were in ſteede of a reward to faith, which is a thing not ſtraunge in the ſcripture. Further, Peter is adorned with a double honour: for the firſt of them dooth belong to his owne priuate ſaluation, and the laſt to his Apoſtolicall function. VVhen he ſaith, Thou art Peter, he confirmeth that he gaue not this name before to him in vain, becauſe he ſhould be ſtedfaſt, as a liuing ſtone in the Temple of God. Though this extendeth to all the faithfull, Epheſ. 2. 21. Euerye one of whom are the Temples of God, and by faith beeing compact amongſte themſelues, do together make one temple: yet this excellencye of Peter is noted amongſt the reſt, euen as euery man receiueth more or leſſe in his order, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. Vpon this rock. Hereby it appeareth how the name of Peter agreeth, as with the name of Simon, ſo alſo with the reſt of the faythfull: beecauſe that they being grounded vppon the fayth of Chriſt, are with a holy conſent buylte vp togeather into a ſpirituall building, that GOD may dwell in the mideſt of them. For Chriſt declared that this ſhould be the commō foundation of al his Church, he would gather vnto Peter what company of the faythful ſoeuer ſhould be in the world: as if he ſhuld haue ſaide, you are now a ſmal number of men, and therefore this your confeſsion is of ſmall eſtimation at this preſent: but the time ſhall ſhortlye come, when it ſhall ſhew it ſelfe magnifically, and ſhall ſpreade it ſelfe more at large. And this did not a litle preuaile for the encouraging of the diſciples to bee conſtant: for that though their faith was yet obſcure and baſe, yet they were choſē of the Lorde as the firſt fruites, that at the length of that contemptible beginning, a new Church ſhuld ariſe, which ſhould ſtand as a conqueror againſt al the aſſaults of the infernal powers. For though ꝑ pronoune it, may be referred either to the faith, or to the Church, yet the latter ſenſe doth better agree, for that the ſtrength of the Church ſhall ſtand vnuāquiſhed againſt al the power of Sathan: namely, becauſe the truth of god ſhal alwaies continue vnſhaken, wherupon the faith of the ſame is ſtaid. And that ſaing of Io. 1. ep. 5. 4. anſwereth to this ſētēce. This is ꝑ victory, which ouercōmeth the world, euē your faith. A promiſe worthy to be noted, that that whoſoeuer are vnited in Chriſt, acknowledging Chriſt, and him to be a mediatour, ſhall continue to the end ſafe from all annoyaunce. For that which is ſpoken of the body of the Church appertaineth to the particular members of the ſame, ſo farre forth as they are one in Chriſt. Yet hereby we are admoniſhed, that ſo long as the Church ſhall be a Pilgrim vpon earth, it ſhall not be quiet, but ſubiect to many troubles. For therefore is Sathan denied the ſuperiority: becauſe hee ſhould dayly be againſt it. Therefore, that we may vſe this ſaying of Chriſt, let vs without feare glory againſt Sathan, and by faith let vs triumph ouer all his bandes: ſo agayne let vs knowe, that we haue as it were an allarme ſounded vnto vs, that we might be alwayes ready and prepared for the battayle. It is euident that by the name of gates is noted euery kind of power & ſtrong holde.

19. And to thee will I giue the keyes. Chriſte nowe beginneth to ſpeake here of the publike office: that is of the Apoſtleſhippe, whoſe dignitie is adorned with a double title. For Chriſte ſaieth, that the miniſters of the Goſpell are as porters of the kingdom of heauen, becauſe they beare the keyes of the ſame: ſecondly he addeth that they haue power to bind and to loſe, which is effectuall in the heauens. The ſimilitude of keyes is aptly applyed to the office of teaching, as Chriſt ſaith in Luke, 11.52. That the Scribes and the Phariſes, becauſe they were interpreters of the law, had likewiſe the key of the kingdome of heauen. For we know that the gate of lyfe is not otherwiſe opened vnto vs, then by the word of God. Wherof it followeth that it is deliuered vnto the miniſters, as a key into their hand. They which think that keyes in the plural number is therfore ſayd: becauſe the Apoſtles had not onelye commaundement gyuen them to open, but alſo to ſhutte, doe not ſpeake without ſome probable lykelyhoode: yet, if any man will take it otherwiſe, let him vſe his owne ſenſe. It is demaunded why the Lord ſhould promiſe to giue that to Peter, which he ſeemed to haue giuen before by creating him an Apoſtle. But this queſtion was aunſwered in the tenth chapter, where I ſayd that thoſe twelue at the firſt were ſent forth Preachers but for a time: ſo they returning to chriſt ended the courſe of that their calling. And after that Chriſt roſe againe from the dead, then beganne they to bee appoynted ordinary teachers of the Church, this honour is giuen them in reſpect of the time to come.

Whatſoeuer thou ſhalt bind. The ſecond metaphor or ſimilitude properly belongeth to note the forgiuneſſe of ſinnes. For Chriſte by his Goſpell delyuering vs from the guiltines of eternal death, loſeth the ſnares of the curſe wherein we were holden bound. Therefore hee teſtifieth that the doctrine of the Goſpell was ordained for the loſing of our bandes, that we being loſed by the voice and teſtimony of men here vpon earth, ſhuld alſo indeede be loſed in heauen. But becauſe that very many do not onely wickedly refuſe the deliueraunce offred, but alſo by their frowardnes doe procure a heauier iudgement for themſelues: therefore the power, yea and commaundement to binde, is alſo giuen to the miniſters of the Goſpell. Yet this is to be noted, that this is accidentall to the Goſpel, and as it were, againſt the nature of the ſame. As Paul, 2. Cor. 10.6. teacheth, when he ſpeaking of vengeaunce, which hee ſaith he hath ready againſt all vnbeleeuers and diſobedient, preſently after he addeth, when your obedience bedience is fulfilled. For, if the reprobate did not through their owne faulte turne lyfe into death, the Goſpell ſhould be the power of God to ſaluation to all men. Yet, becauſe that when the ſame is heard, the vngodlynes of many openly breaking out, doth prouoke the wrath of god the more, to ſuch it is neceſſary that the ſauour thereof ſhould be deadly. This is the ſumme, that Chriſt would aſſure his of the ſaluation profered vnto them in the Goſpell, that they might as ſurely looke for the ſame, as if he himſelf ſhould diſcend from heauen, as a witneſſe of it: and againe to ſtrike a feare into the contemners, leaſt they ſhould think that they might freely ſcorne at the miniſters of the word, both which were very neceſſary. For, becauſe that incomparable treaſure of lyfe is propoſed vnto vs in earthly veſſelles, 2. Cor. 4. 7. If the authoritie of the outward doctrine were not thus ſanctified vnto vs, the credite of the ſame would decay almoſte euery moment. Againe, the vngodly do ſo boldly ſet againſt it, becauſe they thinke they haue to doe with men. Therefore Chriſte declareth that by the preaching of the Goſpell is reuealed vppō earth, what the iudgement of God ſhalbe in heauen, and the aſſuraunce of lyfe and death cannot be had from otherwhere. This is a great honour, that we are Gods interpreters to witneſſe to the world his ſaluation. The great maieſtie of the Goſpell, which is called the ambaſſage of the mutuall reconciliation betweene God and men. To be ſhorte, it is a wonderfull comfort to godly mindes, when they knowe that the meſſage of their ſaluation brought them by a man of no reputation & mortal, is ratified before God. In the meane ſeaſon let the vngodlye raue as they pleaſe at the doctrine, which is preached by the cōmaundement of God: they ſhal fele at the length how truly & earneſtly God hath threatned thē by the mouth of men. Further, the godly teachers being furniſhed with this hope, maye without feare teſtifie vnto themſelues and others the grace of God, which giueth life, and with no leſſe courage may they thunder againſt the obſtinate contemners of their doctrine. Thus farre haue I plainly expounded the natural ſenſe of the words, ſo that nothing remaineth to be added, except the Romane Antichriſte deſiringe to colour his tirannye, dare be ſo bolde as no leſſe wickedly then vnfaithfully to peruert this whole place. And though the light of the true interpretatiō, which I haue ſhewed, ſeemeth to be ſufficiēt to chaſe away his darknes: yet, leaſt he ſhuld any thing hinder the godly readers, I wil briefly anſwere his corrupt quarrels. Firſt, hee imagineth Peter to be called the foundation of the Church. But who ſeeth not that he tranſferreth that to the perſon of the man, which was ſpoken of Peters faith? I graunt that Peter & a rock with the Grecians do ſignifie one thing, but that the firſt is ſpoken after the phraſe of the Athenians, & the other of the common language: but this diuerſity is not raſhly ſet down by Math. but the gender is rather chāged of purpoſe, that he might expreſſe ſome diuerſe thing: and I doubt not but that Chriſt noted ſuch a difference in his ſpeache. Therfore Auguſtine doth wiſely admoniſh, that it is not called a rock of Peter, but he is ſo called Peter of a rock, as we are al chriſtians of Chriſt. Further, that I be not tedious, whē that ſaying of Paul, 1. Cor. 3. 11. muſt be holden amongſt vs for certein and ſure, that the Church can haue no other foundation then in Chriſt alone, the Pope cānot deuiſe an other foundation without ſacrilegious blaſphemy. And certeinly how muche

we ought to deteſt this tiranny of the Pope euen in this one thing, it cānot be ſufficiently expreſſed in any words, that for his ſake the foundatiō of the Church ſhoulde be taken away, that the open gulfe of hell ſhould ſwallow vp miſerable ſoules. Adde further that this clauſe (as I touched before) doth not yet belong to the publike office of Peter, but onelye amongſt the holy ſtones of the temple, one place is giuen to him amongſt the cheefe. The titles that follow do belong to the Apoſtolical function. VVherof it followeth that nothing is ſpoken to Peter, which dooth not belong alſo to the reſt of his fellowes: for, if the dignity of the Apoſtleſhip is cōmon amongſt them, then whatſoeuer is annexed vnto the ſame, muſt alſo be common. But Chriſt ſpeaketh vnto Peter only by name: for as one in the name of al had confeſſed Chriſt to be the ſoone of God, ſo again the ſpeach is directed to one, which yet alike belōgeth to the other. Neither is that reaſon to be deſpiſed, which is alleaged by Cyprian & others, that Chriſte in the perſonne of one ſpake vnto all, that hee myght commend the vnitie of the Church. They except that hee to whom this was peculiarly giuen, is to be preferred aboue al the reſte. And this is as much, as if they ſhould contend to haue him to be an Apoſtle rather thē his fellowes. For the power of binding and loſing cannot be taken away from the office of teaching & the Apoſtleſhip, rather then heat or light from the ſun. But if we yeeld that ſowhat more was graunted vnto Peter then to the reſt, that he ſhuld excel amongſt the Apoſtles: yet the Papiſts do fooliſhly inferre, that a primacy was giuen him, that he ſhould be the vniuerſal head of al the Church. For there is both a difference betweene dignity & power, and alſo there is a difference of being in a higher degree of honour amongſt a few, then to gather the whol world vnder his elbowes. And truly Chriſt laid not a greater burden vpon him then hee was able to beare. He is commanded to be a porter of the kingdome of heauen, he is cōmaunded by binding and loſing to diſpence the grace of God, and to execute his iudgment vpon the earth: namely, ſo farre as the power of a mortal man doth reach. Therefore whatſoeuer is giuen him, muſt be reſtrained to the meaſure of grace, wherewith hee is indued for the edifying of the Church: So that huge empire, which the Papiſts arrogate vnto him, falleth downe. But if there were no controuerſie nor ſtrife but that Peter had it: yet this maketh nothing for the tiranny of the Pope. For the principle, which the Papiſts hold, no man in his right mind will graunt them, that here it was giuen to Peter, that he ſhuld paſſe it ouer as it were by right of inheritance to them that ſhuld come after him. VVherfore the Papiſts do make him liberal of an other mans. Further, if there ſhuld be a continual ſucceſsion, yet the Pope getteth nothing therby, vntil he be proued to be the lawful ſucceſſor of Peter. And how proueth he this? Becauſe Peter died at Rome. As though Rome by the horrible murther of the Apoſtle gat her ſelf the ſupremacy. But they pretende that he was alſo Biſhop there. How vaine that is I haue ſufficiently ſhewed in my inſtitution, from whence I had rather haue the whole tractation of this argument to be fetched, then here with the trouble and wearines of the readers to vnfold it again. Yet, let this ſhort clauſe be added: Although the Byſhop of Rome were by law the ſucceſſour of Peter, yet when by his owne falſhoode he ſhall depriue himſelfe of ſo great an honour, whatſoeuer Chriſt gaue to the ſucceſſours of Peter, ſhall profit him nothing.

nothing. It is too well knowne that the Popes court is at Rome: but they can shew no mark of a Church there. And he as much abhorreth the office of a Pastor, as he couetously striueth for his autoritie. And it Christe omitted nothing for the extolling of Peters heyres, yet hee was not so prodigall, as to bestow that honour vpon Apostates.

Matth. 16

20. Then hee charged his disciples that they shoulde tell no mã, that he was Iesus the christ.
21. From that time forth Iesus began to shew vnto his disciples, that he must go vnto Ierusalem, and suffer manye thinges of the Elders, and of the high Priestes, and of the Scribes, and be slaine, and rise againe the third day.
22. Then Peter toke him aside, and began to rebuke him, saying, master, pitie thy self: thy shall not be vnto thee.
23. Then hee turned backe, and said vnto Peter, get thee behind me, Sathan: thou art an offence vnto me: because thou vnderstãdest not the thinges that are of God, but the thinges that are of men.
24. Iesus then said to his disciples, if any man will folow me, let him forsake himself, and take vp his crosse, and follow me.
25. For whosoeuer will saue his life, shall lose it: and whosoeuer shal lose his life for my sake, shal finde it.
26. For what shal it profit a mã, though he should win the whole world, if he lose his own soule? or what shall a man giue for recõpence of his soule?
27. For the sonne of man shall come in the glorye of his father with his Angels, and then shall he giue to euery man according to his deedes.
28. Verily I saye vnto you, there be some of them that stand here, which shal not taste of death, til they haue seene the son of man come in his kingdome.

Mark. 8.

30. And sharpely hee charged them, that concerning him they should tell no man.
31. Then he beganne to teache them, that the sonne of manne must suffer many thinges, and shoulde bee reproued of the Elders, and of the high Priests, and of the Scribes, and be slaine, and within three dayes rise againe.
32. And hee spake that thing plainly. Then Peter tocke him aside, and began to rebuke him.
33. Then he turned back, & looked on his disciples, and rebuked Peter, saying, get te thee behinde me, Sathan: for thou vnderstandest not the thinges that are of God, but the thinges that are of men.
34. And hee called the people vnto him with his disciples, and said vnto them, whosoeuer will follow me, let him forsake himselfe, and take vp his crosse, and follow me.
35. For whosoeuer will saue his lyfe, shall lose it: but whosoeuer shal lose his life for my sake, and the Gospels, he shal saue it.
36. For what shal it profitte a man, though he should winne the whole world, if he lose his soule?
37. Or what shall a man giue for recompence of his soule?
38. For whosoeuer shalbe ashamed of me, & of my words amõg this adulterous & sinfull generation, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed also, when hee commeth in the glory of his father with his holye Aungelles.

Luke 9

21. And he warned & commanded them, that they should tel that to no man:
22. Saying, the sonne of man must suffer manye things, and be reproued of the Elders, and of the high Priests, & Scribs, and be slaine, and the third daye rise again.
23. And he said to thẽ al, if any man wil come after me, let him deny himself, & take vp his crosse daily, & follow mo.
24. For whosoeuer will saue his life, shall lose it: and whosoeuer shall lose his life for my sake, the same shal saue it.
25. For what auantageth it a man, if he win the whol world, & destroye himselfe or lose himself.
26. For whosoeuer shal be ashamed of me, and of my wordes, of him shal the sonne of man bee ashamed, when hee shal come in his glory, and in the glory of the father, and of the holye Angels.
27. And I tell you of a surety, there be some stãding here, which shal not taste of death, tyll they haue sene the king dome of God.

Marke. 9.

1. And he sayd vnto them, verily I say vnto you, that there be some of them that stand here, which shal not tast of death, till they haue seene the kingdome of God come with power.

Christ (after he had made a shewe of his glory to come) admonisheth his disciples what they should suffer, that they also might prepare themselues to beare the crosse: for the time of tryall was at hande: for the which he knew them farre vnmeet, except they should be furnished with a new force. But Christ bent himself chiefly to shew this, that his kyngdome should begin not with royal pomp, nor with great riches, nor with the pleasaunt allowaunce of the world, but with a reproachfull death. But there was nothing more difficult then to ouercome such an offence, especially if we consider how throughly they were now perswaded of their master: for they imagined that he should procure them an earthly felicity. Therefore they were caryed away with a vaine hope, earnestlye gaping for that time, when Christe should sodenly reueale the glorye of his kingdome. They had so litle mind of the ignominy of the croise, so that they thought it not lykely that any thing should befal vnto him to the contrary. This cyrcumstaunce also was very hard, that he shoulde be reiected of the Elders and the Scribes, who had the gouernmente of the Church in their hands. Vvhereof it is easie to gather, how necessary this admonition was. But, because it could not be, but ỹ the only mention of the crosse would grieuously trouble their weak minds, presently he healeth the wound, and saith that the thyrd day hee shall ryse againe from death. And certeinlye, when as in his crosse there onely appeared the infirmitie of the flesshe, our fayth shal finde nothing, wherein it shall reste or comfort it selfe, vntil it shall come to the resurrection, wherein the power of the spirite shineth forth. Therefore this course muste bee wisely holden by the ministers of the word, which desire to teache with profit, that they alwaies ioyne the glory of the resurrection with the ignominy of death. But it is meruaile why Christ wold not haue his Apostles to testifie of him, to whom hee had appoynted that office beefore. For to what end were they sente, but that they should bee preachers of the redemption, which depended vpon the comming of Christe? The answer is easie, if we remẽber those things, which I thẽ set down: nãely, that they were not created doctours, to declare the certeine and full testimonie of Christ: but only that they might prepare schollers for a master: that is, to make them which were ouerwhelmed with drowsinesse, apt to be taught and attentiue. Further, that commaundement was to laste but for a time, and the preaching of Christ put an end to the same. Now, because the time of his death drewe neere, and they were not as yet ready to witnesse their faith: yea, their confession shoulde haue bin had in diuision for the weaknes of their faith: therefore the Lorde commaundeth them silence, vntyll that others know that he is the conqueror of death, and that he endue them with more constancy.

22. Peter beganne to rebuke him. It is a signe of immoderate heat, that Peter vseth his maister thus: yet hee seemeth to beare some reuerence towardes him, that he tooke him aside, and durst not reprove him before witnesses: yet his intemperancy is great, in that he warneth him, as if hee were not well in his wittes, that he should spare himselfe. But rash zeale driueth men, yea, and casteth them downe headlong so farre, that they doubt not to make God subiect to their pleasure. Peter iudgeth it to be an absurd thing, that the Elders should crucifie the sonne of GOD, who should be the redeemer of the people, and that he should be put to death, who was the auctour of lyfe. Therefore hee endeuoureth to drawe Christ backe, that hee should not deliuer himselfe ouer to death. It is a fayre colour, but it is necessarye that more credit bee giuen to the iudgement of Christ, then to Peters zeale, by what pretence soeuer it be excusable. And here we are taught what those intentes, whiche are supposed to be good, are auaileable before God. Their is so great prid in men, that they thinke they haue iniury, and they complaine if that, whiche they thinke to be right, be not also accepted of God. So we see with what frowardnesse the Papistes doe maintaine their deuotions, but while they so boldly allow of themselues: God doth not onely reiect that which they thinke to be worthy of great prayse, but he also doth sharply condemne it of vngodly madnesse. If truely the sense and iudgment of man should preuayle, Peters intent was godly, or at the least allowable. But Christe could not more sharply nor more contumeliously reiecte him. VVhat meaneth, I beseech you, his so sharpe an aunswere? who euery where behaued himselfe so meekely, that hee would not breake the bruised reede, Es. 42.3. How thūdreth he now so vehemently against his chosen disciple: The reason is apparaunt, that in the person of one man he would restraine all men from flattering their owne affected zeale. For though it is harde to keepe vnder the pleasures of the flesshe, for that they are lyke to wylde beastes: yet there is no beast so furious, as the wisdome of the flesshe. Therefore Christe dooth so sharpely inueigh against the same, and beateth it downe as it were with an yron mallet, that wee myghte onelye learne to bee wyse out of the woorde of God.

23 Get thee behinde me Sathan. Some do reason verye fondlye of this word behind, as if Peter were commaunded to followe, and not to goe before. For Luke beefore in the fourth Chapter declareth that the deuill was repulsed from the Lorde with the same wordes. And the word Hypage signifieth to leaue off, from whence that latine word Apage, i. auoyde, is deryued. Christe therefore reiecteth his disciple farre off, beecause that with his preposterous zeale hee playd Sathans prancke. Neither dooth hee simply call him aduersary, but hee calleth him deuill, in token of great detestation. The reason is to be noted, which is presentlye added, Thou art an offence vnto me, beecause thou vnderstandest the thinges that are of menne, and not the thinges that are of God. Peter was an offence to Christ, while he opposed himselfe against his calling. VVhereof it also appeareth how menne are madde in theyr peruerse zeale. For while Peter endeuoured to stoppe his maisters course, he was not aduised of himselfe, but that he would haue defrauded himselfe and all mankind of eternall saluation.

Therefore in one worde wee are taught, with what diligence that must be auoyded, whatsoeuer it be that draweth vs from the obedience of God. And Christ openeth the fountaine of all this mischiefe, when he saith, that Peter sauoreth the thinges which are of menne. Therefore least the heauenly iudge cast off vs and our endeuours to the deuil, let vs learne not to be tied to our owne iudgement, but obediently to imbrace that which the Lord alloweth. Now let the Papistes goe, and extol their owne deuises vp to the sky: they shall feele at the length, when they shal come before the celestiall tribunall seate, what that boastinge shall preuaile, which Christ pronounceth to be deuillish. And for vs, let vs not desire otherwise to be wise then from the mouth of GOD, except wee would willingly shut the way of saluation against our selues with deadly barres.

24. Iesus then sayd to his disciples. Because that Christe saw Peter abhorre the crosse, and knew that al others had the same affection, he doth generally entreate of bearing the crosse: neither teacheth he the twelue alone, but layeth the same lawe vppon all the godly. VVe had almost the lyke sentence in Math. 10.28. But there the Apostles onely were admonished of the persecution, which remained for them assoone as they should beginne to discharge their function: but here he teacheth the common exercise of al younglinges, and as it were entreth into the firste principles, all them that will professe the Gospell. And saith expressly, If any man will followe mee, that he might refell Peters ymagination. For hee proposing himselfe an example of denyall of himselfe and of patience to euerye manne, hee declareth that hee must suffer, that which Peter thought vnmeete for his person. Furthermore, hee inuiteth all the members of his body to follow him. For so ought the wordes to be vnderstoode, If anye manne will be my disciple, let him forsake himselfe, take vppe his crosse, and followe mee, or let him frame himselfe after my example. And the meaning is, that none can be accounted for Christes disciples, but they which are true followers of him, and are readye to runne in the same race.

Further, he prescribeth a short rule of imitation, that wee might know in what thing he especially requireth that we should be lyke to him: and that consisteth in two poyntes, in denyall of our selues, and in willinge bearing of the crosse. This denial reacheth farre: namely, that we denying our owne wisdome, and forsaking al the affections of the flesh, might bee readye to bee brought to nothing, so that GOD might lyue and reigne in vs. VVee knowe howe naturallye menne are ouerwhelmed with a blinde loue of themselues, how much they are giuē to themselues, and how much they account of themselues. But if we desire to enter into Christes schole, it behoueth to beginne at that foolishnes, whereunto Paule exhorteth vs. 1. Corinthyans 3.18. Then to goe forward to tame and to bringe vnder all affections. Therefore he preacheth of taking vp of the crosse: for though generally the life of all men is subiect to common miseries: yet, because that God doth peculyarly exercise his seruāts, that he might make them lyke vnto the image of his own sonne, it is no meruaile that this law is said to be giuen to them. Also though God loadeth with the crosse aswell the wicked as the good, yet none are saide to bear the crosse, but they which do willingly lay their shoulders vnder it: for thogh a fearce & vntamed horse beareth a rider, yet he taketh him not vp.

Therefore this is the patience of the faythfull, with a willing minde to beare the crosse. Luke addeth this word dayly, whiche hath great force in it: for Christ declareth that there is no ende of our warfare, vntyll wee shall departe out of this world. Therefore let this be the daily meditation of the godly, when as they haue born many troubles, to prepare themselues to beare new.

25 For whosoeuer will saue his lyfe. A most apt consolation, that they truly shall finde life, which doe willingly suffer death for Christ: for Mark doth expresly prescribe vnto the faythfull this cause of death: and therefore it is to bee vnderstoode in Matthew his wordes. For oft tymes it commeth to passe, that ambition or desperation driueth prophane men to contemne life, so that couragiously they hasten to death, but yet they profit not therby. Also the opposed threatning auaileth much to the shaking off of the drowsie sluggishnes of the flesh; when as he forewarneth them that are desirous of this present life, that they onelye prevaile thus farre, that they shal lose the same. There is a contrarietie betweene this temporal life and the eternall, as we taught before vpon the tenth chapter, from whence the readers may seeke for the rest.

26 For what shall it profit a man, &c? if hee lose his owne soule? The word soule is heere taken properly: for Christe admonisheth that the soule of man is not therefore created to enioy the world onely for a fewe dayes: but that at length it may attaine to that immortality in heauen, as if he should haue said, how great is this sluggishnes, and how beastly blockishnes is it, that the world so holdeth men bound vnto it, and ouerwhelmeth thē, that they consider not to what end they were born; and haue an immortal soule giuen vnto them, that the race of this earthly life being finished, they should liue for euer in heauen? And all men truly doe confesse that the soule is more worth then all the riches and pleasures of the worlde: but in the meane season the sense of the flesh doth so blinde them, that wittingly and willingly they cast their soules into destruction. Therefore, least the world should enchaunt vs with her baytes, let vs consider in our minde the excellency of our soule: which if it bee earnestlye considered, dooth easilye dispearse the vaine imaginations of an earthlye felicity.

27. For the sonne of man shall come. That the former doctrine may the better sinke into our minds, Christe setteth before their eyes the iudgement to come: for that this transitory lyfe may become vile vnto vs, it is necessary for vs to be touched with an earnest feeling of thee heauenly: The slowneſſe and sluggishnesse of our minde hath nead to bee holpe and stirred vp to looke vp into heauen. Therfore Christ citeth the faithfull to his trybunall, that they might continuallye thinke that they liue for no other cause, but to aspyre to that blessed lyfe, which shall bee reuealed at that day. And the warning tendeth to this purpose, that wee might know that they striue not in vain, to whom the confession of their faith is more deare and precious then their life: as if Christ should haue sayde, Cast your lyues into my hande and keeping without feare: for I wyll shewe my selfe at length the auenger, who will at length restore you agayne perfectlye, though you seemed for a tyme to perishe.

Hee mentioneth the glorye of the father and the Aungels, least hys disciples shoulde iudge of his kingdome after the present face or shewe:

for as yet hee was base and despised, beeing hidde vnder the habite and shape of a seruaunt. Therefore he promiseth to be farre otherwise when he shall come to be the Iudge of the worlde. Further, those words which Marke and Luke haue more, the readers shall finde expounded in the tenth Chapter of Matthew: Also I haue spoken sufficiently otherwhere of the reward of workes. This is the summe of it: as ofte as there is a rewarde promised to good workes, it doth not oppose the merite of thē against the free righteousnes of faith, neyther dooth it shewe the cause of saluation, but onely encourage the faithful to the study of weldoing, while they are certeine that they labour not in vaine. Wherefore these two do very wel agree, we are iustified freelye, because we are accepted of God besides our desert: and yet that he of his owne free will & pleasure bestoweth a reward not due vnto our works.

21. Verely I say vnto you. Beecause the disciples might yet doubte amongst themselues, when that day should be, the Lorde stirreth them vp with a neerer hope: namely, that hee will shortly giue a shewe or token of his glory to come. We know how true the common prouerbe is, in that which is desired haste it selfe seemeth to make delay: but it is found most true, especially ye amongst vs, while our saluation is differd to the comming of Christe. The Lorde therefore that hee might in the meane season refresh his disciples, hee proposeth vnto them for their confirmation a time in the meane season: as if hee should haue saide, If it seeme too long for you to waite for my comming, I wil sooner preuent the same: for before you shal dye, that kingdome of God shalbe euidente beefore your eyes, of the hope whereof I commaund you to depend. This is the naturall sense of the wordes. For that which some doe imagine of Iohn is but a fancy. By the comming of the kingdome of GOD is meant the manifestation of the heauenlye glorye, which Christe beganne at hys resurrection, and shewed it more fullye, by sending the holye Ghost, and by working merueilous workes: for in these beginninges hee gaue his Disciples a taste of the newnes of the heauenly lyfe, when by true & certeine tryalles they might knowe him, that he sate at the right hand of his father.

Matth. 17	Mark. 9	Luk. 9.
1. And after sixe dayes, Iesus took Peter, & Iames and Iohn his brother, and brought thē vp into an high mountaine a parte.	2. And sixe dayes after, Iesus took Peter & Iames, and Iohn, and brought them vp into an high mountaine out of the waye alone, and he was transfigured before them.	28. And it came to passe about an eight daies after those wordes, that he tooke Peter, and Iohn, and Iames, and wente vp into a mountaine to pray.
2. And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sunne, and his clothes were as white as the light.	3. And his raymente did shine, and was verye white, as snow, so white as no fuller eanne make vppon the earth.	29. And as he prayd, the fashion of his countenaunce was chaunged, and his garment was white, and glistered.
3. And beehold, there appeared vnto them Moses, and Elias, talkinge with him.	4. And there appeared vnto them Elyas with Moses,	30. And beholde, two men talked with him, which were Moses and Elyas,
4. Then		31. Whiche appeared in glory, and told of his departing, which

4. Then answered Peter, and said to Iesus, master it is good for vs to be here: if thou wilt let vs make here three tabernacles: one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.
5. VVhile he yet spak, behold a bright cloud shadowed thē: and behold there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloued sonne, in whom I am well pleased, heare him.
6. And when the disciples heard that, they fell on their faces, and were sore afraid.
7. Then Iesus came and touched them, and sayd, arise, and be not afrayd.
8. And, when they lifed vp their eies, they saw no maine saue Iesus onely.

ses, and they were talkinge with Iesus.
5. Then Peter aunswered and said to Iesus: master it is good for vs to be heere: let vs make also three tabernacles: one for thee: and one for Moses, and one for Elias.
6. Yet hee knew not what hee said: for they were afraid.
7. And there was a cloude that shadowed them, and a voice cāe out of the cloud, sayinge, This is my beloued sonne, heare him.
8. And sodenly they looked round about, and sawe no more any man saue Iesus only with them.

he should accomplish at Hierusalem.
32. But Peter and they that were with him, were heuy with sleepe, and when they awoke they sawe his glorye and two men standing with him.
33. And it came to passe, as they departed from him, Peter said to Iesus, maister, it is good for vs to be here: let vs therefore make three Tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias, & wiste not what hee said.
34. VVhile he thus spak, there came a cloud, and ouershadowed them, and they feared whē they wer entring into the cloud
35. And there came a voyce out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloued sonne, heare him.
36. And whē the voice was past, Iesus was found alone:

First, it is to be considered for what purpose Christ tooke vppon him the heauenly glory for so short a time, and had but onely three of his disciples as witnesses of this straung sight. The opinion of some, that it was done to that end, that they might be strengthened against that tēptation, which was now at hand, by reason of his death, is not probable to me. For why should hee haue depriued others of that remedy: naye, why doth he expresly forbid them, that they should not declare what they had seene before his resurrectiō: but because the profit of the visiō should appeare after his death? Therfore I doubt not but that Christ would declare that he was not drawn to his death against his wil, but went willingly to the same, that hee might offer vp a sacrifice of obedience to his father. This knowledge came not into the disciples mindes, vntil Christ rose againe. Neither was it necessary for them at that time to conceaue that diuine power of Christ, which they should know conquering vpon the crosse: but they are taught against another time aswel for their own sakes as for ours, least the infirmity of Christ should offend any man, as though it were by necessity or constraint, that he should suffer. For it is euident that it was as easie for Christ to exempt his body from death, as to adorne it with heauenly glory. Therefore we are taught that hee was subiect to death, because his wil was so: and that he was crucified, because he offred himself. For that same flesh, which being offred vpon the crosse lay in the graue, could haue bene free from death and the graue, whē as it had now before bene partaker of the celestiall glory. But we are also taught, that so long as Christ was conuersant in the world in the shape of a ſeruaunt,and that his maieſty was hid vnder the infirmity of fleſh, nothing was withdrawn from him: becauſe that he humbled himſelf of hys own freewil:but now the reſurrectiō taketh away that vaile,wherwith his power was hidden for a time.Further, it was ſufficient for the Lord to chuſe three witneſſes:becauſe that by the law that number was preſcribed for prooving any matter,Deut.17.6. The difference of the tyme ought not to offend vs.Math. and Mar.do number ſix whol daies which paſſed betweene:But Luke, ſaying that it was done almoſt eight daies after,comprehendeth aſwel that day, wherin Chriſt ſpake that, as the day wherin he was trāſfigured.Therfore wee ſee that they do agree very wel in one ſenſe vttered in diuerſe words.

2. And was tranſſigured before them. Luke ſayth that this came to paſſe, when hee praid:and by the circumſtaunce of the place and the tyme it may be gathered that he praied for this that he obtayned, that a viſible ſhewe or demonſtratiō of his godhead might be reuealed in the brightneſſe of a new ſhape:not that he had nead to aske by prayer of any other,for that he had not,or that the wyl of the father was to be doubted of:but that in the whole courſe of his humilitie, if hee did any thinge as God,he referred it to his father:and his purpoſe was to ſtirre vs vppe to prayers.But in this tranſſiguration the diſciples did not ſee Chriſte altogeather in that excellency,that he is in now in heauen,but he only gaue them ſuch a taſte of that great glory,as they were able to abyde. Then his face ſhone as the ſunne: but now it farre exceedeth the brightnes of the ſunne:Then an vnwoonted brightnes ſhone in his apparell, nowe without apparell the maieſty of his Godhead ſhyneth through out hys whole body. So GOD in times paſte appeared vnto the fathers,not ſuch as he was in himſelfe, but as they were able to abyde the beames of hys great bryghtneſſe: for Iohn ſaieth,1.Io.3.2. that the faythfull ſhal not ſee him as hee is before that they be made lyke vnto him.

Nowe there is no cauſe for any manne to diſpute ſubtilly of the whitneſſe of his garmentes,or of the brightneſſe of his face,when as this was not a full reuealing of his celeſtiall glorye: but hee partelye gaue a taſte in figures, of that whiche they were not yet able wholly to conceaue.

3. Moſes and Elyas appeared vnto them. It is demaunded,whether Moſes and Elias were verily preſent, or that the diſciples ſawe onely the lykeneſſe of them, as the prophetes did oftentimes ſee the viſions of thinges abſent.Though the matter be diſputable on both ſides(as menne ſay)yet it is more profitable in my iudgement, that they were brought indeede into that place.Neyther is there any abſurditie in it,ſeeing that God hath both bodies and ſoules in his hande,at his pleaſure to reſtore the dead to life for a time.

And Moſes and Elyas roſe not then for themſelues : but that they might be preſent there with Chriſte . If any manne demaunde agayne, how the Apoſtles knew Moſes and Elias, whom they had neuer ſeene : The anſwere is eaſie:for ſith God brought them to appeare,he gaue thē alſo ſignes and markes whereby they might bee knowne amongſt them. And this was by an extraordinary manner of reuelation, that they certeinly knew them to be Moſes and Elyas.

But why theſe two appeared rather then any other of the compãnye of the holy fathers, that reaſon ought to ſatiſſie vs, that the lawe and the Prophets had no other purpoſe nor ende but Chriſt. For it made greatlye for our faith, that Chriſt came not without teſtimonye, but was beefore commended of God. Neyther doth that reaſon diſpleaſe me, which was woont to be brought, that Elyas was eſpecially taken, to repreſẽt al the Prophetes: for though hee lefte nothing in writing, yet was hee the chiefe next vnto Moſes: he reſtored the religion of God, which was corrupted: yea, he was without compariſon an eſpeciall auenger of the law and true holyneſſe, being nowe almoſte extinguiſhed. That they appeare with Chriſt, and talke togeather is a ſigne of conſent. But what theyr talke was Luke onely reporteth: namely, that they talked of the manner of his departure, which remayned for him at Ieruſalem. Further this muſt not be reſtrained to theyr priuate perſons, but rather to that office, which was before enioyned them. For it was the wil of God, though they had bene now long dead, and had perfourmed the courſe of theyr calling, that they ſhuld yet againe confirme with theyr voyce that which they had taught in theyr lyfe: that wee might know that the ſaluation promiſed to the holye fathers in the Sacrifice of Chriſte is common to vs. Nowe, when as the olde Prophets propheſied of the death of Chriſt; hee (whiche was the eternall wiſdome of GOD) ſate in the ſecrete throne of his glory. VVhereof it followeth that hee was not to be cloathed with fleſh ſubiect vnto death, but that hee freely ſubmitted himſelfe thereunto.

4. Maiſter it is good for vs to be here. Luke reporteth that Peter ſayd ſo when Moſes and Elyas were gone: wherby we gather that he was afraid leaſt that by their departure they ſhuld loſe that ſweet and bleſſed ſight. And though it is no meruaile that Peter was ſo delighted with that pleſaunt ſight, that all other thinges being deſpiſed, the onely enioying of that ſatiſfied him, as it is ſayd in the Pſ. 16.11. That the fulneſſe of ioy is in the countenaunce of God: yet this was a prepoſterous deſire of his: that he vnderſtoode not the ende of the viſion: then that hee fooliſhlye made the ſeruauntes equall with the maſter: thirdly hee erred, when hee wold make tranſitory Tabernacles for menne to dwel in, which were already receaued into the celeſtiall and Angelycall glory. I ſay hee vnderſtoode not the ende of the viſion. For, when he heard Moſes and Elias ſay that the time of the death of Chriſt, was at hand, as a man amaſed at that ſight, which was but momentary, hee dreamed the ſame to be eternall.

VVhat meaneth this, that the kingdome of Chriſt ſhould bee by this meanes included in ſo narow a roumth of twentie or thirty footes? where was the redemption of the whole Church? VVhere was the fellowſhip of eternall ſaluation? This alſo was a very peruerſe iudgement, to imagine Elyas and Moſes to be fellowes with the Sonne of GOD: as if it were not neceſſarye that all menne ſhoulde be brought vnder, that hee alone may be extolde. Now, if Peter is contente with his lotte, whye dooth hee thinke them to haue neede of earthlye ſupplyes, at the ſight of whome hee thinketh himſelfe ſo happye? Therefore two of the Euangeliſtes doe verye well note that hee knewe not what hee ſayde.

Marke

Marke addeth the cauſe for that they were afraid. Neither was it the wil of God, that the Apoſtles ſhould at that time profit further, then to beholde the Godheade of his ſonne for a moment, as it were in a liuely glaſſe. Afterwarde in ſucceſſe of time he ſhewed them the frute of it, and corrected their want of iudgement. Therefore Marke declareth that Peter being aſtoniſhed, ſpake as a man altogither amaſed.

5. Behelde a bright cloude. A cloude was put before their eyes, that they might knowe that they are not yet fitte to beholde the brightneſſe of the heauenly glory: for when as the Lord gaue ſome tokens of his preſence, he added withall ſome vailes, to ſuppreſſe the boldneſſe of mannes wiſdome: ſo nowe that hee may inſtructe his diſciples in humility, he withdraweth from their eyes the beholding of the celeſtiall glory. Alſo this admonition doeth appertaine to vs, that we ſhoulde not deſire, to breake into thoſe ſecreates, which paſſe our ſenſes: but rather that euery manne doe ſoberly containe himſelfe within the meaſure of his faith. Further, this cloud ſhould be in ſtead of a bridle to vs, leaſt that our curioſitie become more wanton then is meete. The diſciples alſo are admoniſhed that they muſt retourne to their accuſtomed warfare, and that they muſt not promiſe themſelues a triumph before the time.

There came a voyce out of the cloude. And this alſo is woorthy to be noted, that the voyce of God ſounded out of the cloude, but there was neither body nor face ſeene. Therefore let vs remember that warning that Moſes gaue, Deut. 4. 15. God appeared not in any viſible ſhape, leaſt that we being deceiued, ſhould thinke him to be like vnto man. It is true that the holy fathers in times paſt ſaw ſundry ſhapes, whereby they might know God: yet he alwaies abſtained from ſuch ſhewes as might yelde any occaſion or prouocation to make idolles. And truely, ſith the mindes of men are bent more then is meete they ſhoulde be, to groſſe fantaſies, it were hurtfull to put oyle to the lampe. This was a moſt notable manifeſtation of the glory: when as he calleth vs vnto him out of the cloud with his owne voyce, howe abſurde is it for vs to goe about to make him to bee preſent before our eyes in a ſtocke of woode or ſtone? Therefore lette vs learn by faith alone, & not with fleſhly eyes to pierce to that light which we cannot come neare, wherein God doth dwel. But the voyce came out of the cloude, ſo as the diſciples knowing that it came from God, might receiue the ſame with ſuch reuerence as was meete.

This is my ſonne. I do willingly ſubſcribe to their iudgement, which thinke that heere is a ſecreat oppoſition betweene Moſes, Elias and Chriſte, as if that Chriſt ſhould commaund his diſciples to be content with the onely ſonne: for that name ſonne is Emphaticall or very forcible, whereby hee is extolled aboue the ſeruaunts. Alſo Chriſt is here adorned with two titles no leſſe honourable then profitable to our faith, namely, welbeloued Sonne, and alſo Maiſter. In that the father calleth him beloued, in whome he is well pleaſed, he declareth him to be the Mediator in whom he reconcileth the world to himſelfe. VVhen he commaundeth to heare him, hee maketh him the chiefe and onely doctour of his Churche. For when as it was his purpoſe to note him from al others, as by theſe words we doe truely and properly gather, by nature he is his only Sonne, in like maner it is to be obſerued, that he alone is beloued of the father, that he is made the onely Doctour, that all authoritie might reſt in his power.

If any man will except againſt this, asking whether God loueth aungelles, and men, or no: the aunſweare is eaſily made, the fatherly loue of God which hee beareth to aungelles and to menne, commeth from that fountaine. Neither is the ſonne therfore beloued of the father, that other creatures ſhoulde be hated: but that hee might impart with them, that which was proper to himſelfe. Though the eſtate of vs and of the Aungelles is diuers. For theſe were neuer eſtraunged from G O D, that they ſhould neede a reconciler: but we by ſinne were ennemies, vntill Chriſte reconciled him vnto vs. Yet that is alwayes certaine that God is merciful to bothe, ſo as he embraceth vs in Chriſte: for the very aungelles coulde not be ioyned to God without a head. Nowe, when as the father ſpeaketh heere, and diſtinguiſheth himſelfe from the ſonne, it followeth that they are diſtincte in perſonnes, thoughe the eſſence and maieſtie is one, and the ſame.

Heare him. I ſhewed before that the Church is called backe by this word to the onely doctoure Chriſt, that it might depend onely of his mouthe. For though Chriſte came to confirme the lawe and the prophets, yet he ſo holdeth the chiefe roume, that by the brightneſſe of his Goſpell, hee ſwalloweth vppe thoſe ſparkes which ſhone in the olde Teſtament: for he is the ſonne of righteouſneſſe, at whoſe comming it appeared to be ful day. And this is the reaſon why the Apoſtle ſayeth in the firſt chapiter to the Hebrewes, God who at ſundry times, and in diuers maners in olde time ſpake by the prophets, ſpake in theſe laſt daies by his beloued ſonne. Furthermore at this day Chriſt is no leſſe heard in the law and the prophets then in his Goſpell, that the authoritie of a maiſter, might wholely reſt vppon him, euen as he chalengeth the ſame to himſelfe alone, Mathewe 23.8. And he keepeth not his prerogatiue ſafe, except that al mens tounges keepe ſilence. Vherfore it is neceſſary, that what ſoeuer menne haue deuiſed, ſhoulde be ouerthrowne and caſt downe, that hee might keepe vs vnder his doctrine. And he doeth daily ſend foorth Doctours, but ſuche as doe purely and faithfully deliuer that whiche they ſhoulde learne of him, and not ſuche as doe mixe the Goſpell with theyr owne additions. In ſumme, no manne is a faithfull teacher of the Church, except that he be both Chriſtes diſciple, and alſo bring others to him to be taught.

6. And when the diſciples heard this. It was Gods will to ſtrike the diſciples with this feare, that he might the better imprinte the remembraunce of the viſion in their hearts. In the meane ſeaſon we ſee howe great the infirmitie of our fleſh is, whiche is ſo afraide at the hearing of the voyce of God. The cauſe why the wicked doe either ſcorne at it, or contemptuouſly deſpiſe it, is, becauſe God doeth not effectually touche them. But it is neceſſary that the Maieſtie of God ſhoulde caſt vs downe aſſoone as we feele him. But Chriſte afterwarde doeth his office, raiſing vppe them that are throwne downe: for therefore came he downe to vs, that by his direction the faithfull might without feare appeare in the preſence of God: and his maieſtie which otherwiſe conſumeth all fleſhe, ſhall be no more terrible vnto them.

Furthermore, hee doeth not onely comfort them in woorde, but alſo confirmeth them by touching. That afterwarde it is ſayde, that they ſaw onely Chriſte, tendeth to ſhewe that the glory was tied to the lawe and the the Prophets but for a time, that onely Chriſte might continue glorious. For if we will vſe the helpe of Moſes rightly, hee muſt not be reſted vpon, but we muſt applie our diligence, that by him we may be ledde as it were by the hande vnto Chriſte, whoſe miniſter hee is togither with all the reſt. This place alſo may bee applied to the ouerthrowinge of their ſuperſtitions, which doe not onely ſette Chriſt equall with the Prophets and Apoſtles, but doe ſo ioyne him with their common halfe Sainctes, as if that he were as any one of their number. But the graces of God doe ſhine in his Sainctes to a farre other ende, then that they ſhoulde forceably take vnto themſelues parte of the honour due vnto Chriſte. And the fountaine of this errour might haue benne noted in the Diſciples themſelues: for as long as they were feared with the maieſtie of GOD, their miindes wandered in ſeeking after menne: but when Chriſt hadde comfortably raiſed them vppe, he onely was ſeene of them. For if wee haue that comfort in vs, wherewith Chriſte taketh away our feares, all thoſe fooliſhe affections which doe drawe vs hether and thether, ſhall vaniſhe away.

Mathew 17.	Marke 9.	Luke 9.
9. And as they came down from the Mountaine, Ieſus charged them, ſaying: Shewe the viſion to no manne, vntill the Sonne of manne riſe againe from the deade.	9. And as they came downe from the mountaine, he charged them, that they ſhewlde tell no man what they hadde ſeene, ſaue when the Sonne of manne were riſen from the dead againe.	36. And they kepte it cloſe, and tolde no manne in thoſe dayes any of thoſe thinges which they hadde ſeene.
10. And his Diſciples aſked him, ſayinge: VVhy then ſaye the Scribes, that Elias muſt firſt come?	10. So they kept that matter to themſelues, and demanded one of an other, what the riſinge againe from the deade ſhoulde meane?
11. And Ieſus aunſweared, and ſaid vnto them: Certainly Elias muſt firſt come, and reſtore all things.	11. Alſo they asked hym, ſaying: VVhy ſay the Scribes, that Elias muſt firſt come?
12. But I ſay vnto you that Elias is come already, & they knewe him not: but haue done vnto him what ſoeuer they woulde: likewiſe ſhall alſo the Sonne of manne ſuffer of them.	12. And hee aunſweared, and ſayde vnto them: Elias verily ſhall come firſte, and reſtore all thinges: and as it is wrytten of the Sonne of man, he muſt ſuffer many thinges, and be ſet at nought.
13. Then the diſciples perceiued that hee ſpake vnto them of Iohn Baptiſt.	13. But I ſay vnto you, that Elias is ceme (and they haue done vnto him, what ſoeuer they woulde) as it is wrytten of him.

9. And

9. And as they came downe from the Mountaine. VVe haue ſhewed before why the time was not as then fully come for the publiſhing of that viſion. And truely, there ſhoulde haue bene no credite giuen to the diſciples, except that Chriſt had giuen at his reſurrection a more euident token of his glory. But after that the diuine power ſhewed it ſelf openly, that momentanie beholding of his glory began to haue place, that it might euidently appeare euen when he was moſt abaſed, that yet his Godhead remained founde with him, thoughe it was couered vnder the vaile of the fleſh. Therefore he doeth not without cauſe commaunde his diſciples to holde their peace, vntill he ſhould ariſe from death.

10. And his diſciples asked him, ſaying. Aſſoone as there was mention made of the reſurrection: the diſciples do thinke that the kingdome of Chriſte ſhould begin: for ſo doe they expound this ſaying, that the world ſhould knowe him to be the Meſsias. For they imagined another matter of the reſurrection then Chriſte meant, as appeareth by Marke: They diſputed amongſt themſelues, what the riſing againe from the dead ſhould meane. It may be that that fable began then to ſpring, which is holden at this day for a certain Oracle amongeſt the Rabbines, that the comming of the Meſsias ſhoulde not be after one maner, for firſt, it ſhould be meane and baſe: but ſhortly after his royall and kingly dignitie ſhould followe. And this errour hath ſome colour of likelihoode in it, for it ſprange of a true principle. The Scripture declareth that the Meſsias ſhoulde come twiſe: for it promiſeth that he ſhould be a redeemer, that ſhould with the ſacrifice of hymſelfe waſh away the ſinnes of the world.

And to this purpoſe doe belong thoſe propheſies of Zach. 9. 9. Reioyce O Sion: Beholde thy king commeth, poore, ſitting vppon an Aſſe, &c. and of Iſai 53. 2. He hath neither fourme nor beauty, when we ſee him: hee was without fourme and like to a Leper, that we ſhoulde not deſire him. Then he propoſeth him as a conquerour of death, who ſhoulde make all things ſubiecte vnto him. But we ſee howe the Rabbines doe depraue the ſincere doctrine of the ſcripture with their inuentions. And as all things were very much corrupted at the comming of Chriſt, ſo it is to be ſuppoſed that the people had this fanſie alſo amongſt them. It hath bene ſhewed twiſe or thriſe howe groſſely they erred, about the perſon of Elias. It may be that they alſo meant maliciouſly and ſubtilly, vnder pretence of Elias to derogate from Chriſte. For when as Elias was promiſed as a forerunner to the Meſsias, who ſhoulde prepare the way before him: it was eaſie for them to lay this preiudice vppon Chriſt, that he came without Elias: euen as the deuill at this day enchaunteth the Papiſtes almoſte with the ſame ſubtletie, that they ſhould not looke for the day of iudgement, vntill that Elias and Enoch ſhould appeare. It may verily be ſuppoſed, that the Scribes hadde deuiſed this ſnare of purpoſe, that they might diſcredite Chriſte, as if he wanted the chiefe ſigne and note of the Meſsias.

11. Certainly Elias muſt come. VVe haue ſhewed other where, whereof this errour ſprang among the Iewes. For in reſtoring the decaied eſtate of the Churche, Iohn Baptiſt ſhould be like to Elias, and Malachi gaue that name alſo vnto him: that was raſhly taken of the Scribes, as if that the ſame Elias the Thesbite ſhould returne againe into the world. Nowe Chriſte declareth that Malachie propheſied nothing in vaine, but that his propheſie was naughtily wreaſted to an other purpoſe, as if hee ſhould haue ſayde: the promiſſe of the comming of Elias was true, and it was alſo fulfilled: but now haue the Scribes refuſed Elias, whoſe name only they doe obiecte falſly againſt me. And the reformation is attributed to the Baptiſt, not that he perfourmed the ſame, but becauſe that in a continuall courſe he deliuered that to Chriſt, as from hand to hand to be perfourmed which he had begon. And becauſe the Scribes had reiected Iohn without a cauſe, chriſt admoniſheth his diſciples that ther is no cauſe why they ſhoulde be hindered with their craftie deceits: further, it muſt ſeeme no ſtrange thing vnto them, if they take the ſame liberty to reiect the maiſter, that they did before to reiect the ſeruant. And leaſt any man ſhould be troubled with the ſtraungeneſſe of the matter, the Lord declareth that they were both foretolde in the ſcriptures: namely that the redemer of the world ſhould be reiected of the falſe and vngodly teachers, aſwell as Elias his forerunner was.

Because that Marke is fuller, and setteth downe the seuerall poyntes plainly, we will folowe the course of woordes sette downe by him. And first he doeth euidently declare wherefore Christe became nowe sharper then he was woont to be, wheras he exclameth against the Iewes, as people vnworthy to be any longer borne withall for their frowarde malice. VVe know how gently he was wont to vse them, yea though they dealt importunately with him. The father heere sueth for his only sonne: very great necessity vrgeth him, modestly and humbly he sueth to Christe for his mercy. VVhy then is he of a sodaine more earnest against them, then he was accustomed, and sayeth that they are not to be borne? Because the reason of so greate seueritie is not sette downe by Mathewe and Luke, some interpreaters were deceiued, whiche thought that Christe rebuked heere either his disciples, or the childes father. But if we do well consider the whole course of the hystorie, as it is sette downe by Marke, it shall be easie to iudge that Christe was rather offended at the malice of the Scribes, then so roughly to reproue the ignorant and the weake. VVhen as in the absence of Christ the lunatike childe had bene brought foorth in the middest amongest them, it seemed to be a very plausible occasion for the Scribes to quarrell, and they willingly tooke it. They are therefore earnest with the disciples, that if they haue any power, they shoulde shewe it in healing the childe. It is likely that the disciples tried, and coulde not bring their purposes to passe: so the Scribes boast as conquerours, & they doe not onely scorne at the disciples, but they quarrell against Christe, as if that his power were decayed in their person. But this was a moste abhominable vngodlines, ioyned with like ingratitude, maliciously to suppresse so many myracles, whereby they had learned howe greate power Christe hadde: for of sette purpose they endeuoured to quenche the light sette before their eyes. VVherefore Christe exclaimeth against them not without cause, that hee can beare no longer with them, and calleth them a faithlesse and croked nation: for they shoulde by so many former instructions haue at least profited thus farre, not to seeke occasion of quarelling.

MAR. 14. Hee sawe a great multitude. No doubt but the disciples were accounted as iesting stockes, as the ennemies to the truth are woont with their bragges to make muche, euen of nothing. The Scribes therefore by their troubleſome dealing, laide the diſciples open to be ſcorned of many. And yet it ſeemeth that ſome were not euill affected: for aſſoone as they ſee Ieſus, they ſalute him: yea, his preſence pulleth downe the inſolencie of the Scribes, in ſo much that being demaunded whereof they diſputed, they helde their peace.

17. Maiſter, I haue brought my ſonne. Mathew noteth another kinde of diſeaſe then Marke doeth: for he ſayeth that the man was lunatike. Yet they doe both agree in theſe two poynts, that he was dumme, and at certaine times was driuen into rages. But they are called lunatike, whiche eyther at the wane of the Moone haue the falling ſicknes, or are troubled with a giddineſſe. Neither do I hold that which Chryſoſtome imagineth, that this name was inuented by the ſubtletie of Sathan, that hee might blotte with infamie the good creatures of God: for certain experience teacheth that theſe diſeaſes doe encreaſe and decreaſe according to the courſe of the Moone: yet this letteth not, but that ſathan may adde his forces to ſuch naturall meanes. Therefore I thinke that this man was not deafe and dumme by nature, but that his tounge and eares were poſſeſſed by Sathan. Furthermore, when as the weakeneſſe of the braine & ſynewes made him ſubiecte to the falling ſickneſſe, there was a greater miſchiefe added by Sathan himſelfe. Heereof it came to paſſe, that he euery where ſought his owne deſtruction, then, that he lay all to torne, that he falleth downe as one without life, and like vnto a deade man. And heereby we learne, how many meanes Sathan hath to hurt vs, except he be driuen away by the hand of God. As many infirmities as there are of the fleſh & of the ſoule, which we think to be innumerable, ſo many dartes do they yeelde to Sathan to annoy vs. Therefore we are more then blockiſhe, if ſo miſerable a condition of ours, doe not prouoke vs to prayers. And heerein doeth the incomparable goodneſſe of God ſhewe it ſelfe, that when we are beſette with ſo diuers daungers, yet hee preſerueth vs vnder his defence: eſpecially if we conſider with howe great a deſire oure ennemie is enflamed to deſtroy vs. But this comfort ſhoulde alſo come into our minde, that Chriſte came to bridle his madneſſe, and that wee doe therefore remaine ſafe amongeſt ſo many daungers, becauſe oure heauenly medicine is of more force then all our daungers. The circumſtance of the time maketh alſo to this purpoſe: the father aunſweareth that his ſonne hath bene thus miſerably tormented euen from his youth. If Sathan haue ſo great libertie giuen him vppon that tender age, what ſhoulde not we feare, whiche by our owne ſinnes doe make oure ſelues meete for ſuche deadly blowes, and which doe miniſter weapons to our enemie, and vpon whom he coulde enter as into his owne right, if his deſire were not reſtrained and ouerthrowne by his wonderfull power.

MAT. 17. O generation faithleſſe. Though Chriſt ſeemeth to directe his ſpeach to the father of the lunatike, yet it is not to be douted, but that he hath reſpect to the Scribes, as I taught a little before. For it is certaine that the ſimple & weake were not rebuked, but they which being encloſed in their owne malice, doe ſtubbornly reſiſt God. Therefore Chriſt denieth them as woorthy to be borne withall any more by him, and threatneth that he will ſhortly diuorce himſelfe from them. But nothing woorſe can fall out, then that he ſhould forſake vs.

And

And this is no ſmall reproofe, that they ſhould ſo proudly refuſe the grace of his viſitation, where is alſo to be noted that men are to be handled diuerſly, euery man according to his inclination: for whē as he alloreth them that are apt to be taught with all gentleneſſe, he beareth wyth the weake, and doeth alſo moderately ſtirre vppe the ſlowe, hee ſpareth not theſe croked ſerpents, whome he ſeeth not to be cured with any remedies.

MAR. 20. Aſſoone as the ſpirite ſawe him. That the deuill rageth more vehemently vpon the man then he was woont, it is no maruell: for the nearer the grace of Chriſte ſheweth it ſelfe, and the more effectually it worketh, the more outragiouſly ſathan fareth: for he is ſtirred vppe with the preſence of Chriſt, as with the ſounde of a trumpet, and he mooueth what tumults he can, and ſtirreth as much as he is able. It behoooueth vs to meditate this before the time, leaſt that our faith be troubled, as oft as at the appearance of the grace of Chriſte, this our enemie ariſeth againſt vs with more violence then he was wont. Yea, an other thing moreouer is here to be noted, the true beginning of our healing is to be ſo throughly afflicted, that we ſhalbe but little from death. And alſo, that the Lord kindleth a torche or light at the furious rage of ſathan, to ſhewe foorth his grace: for when as men were aſtoniſhed at that horrible ſight, thereby the power of Chriſt which preſently folowed, might be the better diſcerned of them.

21. Of a childe. Heereby we gather that this was not inflicted as a puniſhment for the ſinnes of the manne: but was the ſecreate iudgement of God. It is certaine that the infantes when they come firſte oute of the wombe of their mother, are not innocent before God and guiltleſſe, but Gods ſcourges haue ſometime ſecreat cauſes, and that for the triall of our obedience. Neither doe we otherwiſe yeelde that honour that is due to God, then if we do reuerently and modeſtly adore his iuſtice, euen when it is hidden from vs. If any man deſire to knowe more of this matter, he may ſearch in that place of the ninthe chapter of Iohn: neither this manne hath ſinned, nor his parents.

22. And if thou canſt doe any thing, helpe vs. VVe ſee howe little honour he yeeldeth vnto Chriſt: for he thinking him to be ſome Prophet, whoſe power is finite within meaſure, he commeth vnto him doubting. But the firſt foundation of faith is to embrace the immeaſurable power of God. Alſo it is the firſt entrance to prayers, to extoll the ſame aboue all lettes, ſo that we may be certainly perſwaded that we pray not in vaine. And becauſe that this man thought of Chriſte no otherwiſe then as of a man, his falſe opinion is corrected: for it behoueth that he ſhoulde beleeue, that he might be capable and fit to receiue the grace deſired. Chriſt doth not plainly reproue the man in his anſwer: but turning back again vpon him an other way that which he had ſpoken euill, he ſheweth him his faulte, and teacheth him to ſeeke a remeady. For this exception: If thou canſt beleue, is as much as if he ſhould haue ſayde: Thou deſireſt me to helpe thee if I can doe any thing: But thou ſhalt finde in me a fountaine of power, that cannot be drawne drie, if that thou bringeſt a meaſure of faith large enough. Heereof may be gathered a profitable doctrine whiche generally belongeth vnto vs all. The Lorde is not the lette, that the great bountifalneſſe of his goodneſſe floweth not from him vnto vs: but it muſt be impu-imputed to the narow ſtraites of our faith, that it ſtilleth downe to vs as it were drop after drop: nay, ofttimes we cānot feele a drop, becauſe that our vnbeliefe ſtoppeth vp our heart. But in vaine would ſome ſubtel men ſhew themſelues heere, as if Chriſt would teach, that manne coulde beleeue of himſelf, when as he had no other purpoſe, then to caſt vpon men the fault of their owne weakeneſſe: ſo oft as they doe weaken the power of God by their owne vnbeliefe.

23. All things are poſſible to him that beleueth. It is not to be douted but that Chriſt taught that the fulneſſe of al good things was giuen vnto him of his father: and that any kinde of helpe cannot be hoped for from him alone otherwiſe, then as from the very hand of God, as if he ſhoulde haue ſayd: onely beleeue, and thou ſhalt obtaine. But howe faith ſhall obtaine any thing, we ſhall ſee a little after.

24. I beleeue Lord. He ſayeth that he beleeueth, and yet confeſſeth himſelfe to be an vnbeleuer, though theſe two ſeeme to be contrary, yet there is no man which hath not the triall of it in himſelfe: for where as there is not a perfect faith any where, it followeth that they are in part vnbeleeuers: yet ſo God of his mercy pardoneth vs, and accounteth vs faithful for that litle portiō of faith. Yet it behoueth vs, diligently to ſhake of the dregs of infidelitie which doe ſticke in vs, and to ſtriue with them, and to craue of the Lorde that he woulde correcte them: and as oft as we are in this conflicte to flie to him to helpe vs. If we well conſider what is giuen to euery man, it ſhall eaſily appeare that there are very fewe that haue an excellent faith, fewe that haue a meane faith, and that the moſt haue but a ſmall meaſure.

Mathewe 17.	Mar. 9.	Luke 17.
19. Then came the diſciples to Ieſus apart, and ſayde: VVhy coulde not we caſt him out? 20. And Ieſus ſayd vnto them: Beeauſe of your vnbeliefe: for verily I ſay vnto you, if yee haue faith as much as is a graine of muſtard ſeede, yee ſhall ſay vnto this mountaine, remooue hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remoone: and nothing ſhall be vnpoſſible vnto you. 21. Howe beit this kinde goeth not out, but by praier and faſting.	28. And when he was come into the houſe, his diſciples asked him ſecreatly, why could not we caſt him out? 29. And he ſayd vnto them, This kinde can by no other meanes come foorth, but by prayer and faſting.	5. And the Apoſtles ſayde vnto the Lorde: increaſe oure faith. 6. And the Lord ſayde: if ye had faith as much as a graine of muſtarde ſeede, and ſhoulde ſay vnto this Mulberie tree, plucke thy ſelfe vppe by the rootes, and plant thy ſelfe in the ſea, and it ſhould euen obey you.

19. Then came the Diſciples. The Diſciples do maruell that the power which once they hadde is taken from them, when as they depriued themſelues therof through their owne fault. Therefore Chriſt aſsigneth this want to their vnbeliefe, and that ſentence which he touched before, he rehearſeth againe, and proſecuteth more at large that nothing is impoſsible to faith. It is certaine that it is an hyperbolicall kinde of ſpeache when as he ſayth, that by faith trees & mountains ſhuld be remoued. Yet the ſum tendeth to this purpoſe, that God will neuer leaue vs, ſo that we would open the doore to his grace. Neither is his meaning, that God will giue what ſoeuer commeth raſhly in our minde or thought: nay, when as nothing is more contrary to faith, then the raſh & vnaduiſed vowes of our fleſh, it followeth that where faith raigneth, euery thing is not confuſedly deſired, but that which the Lorde alloweth. Therefore this ſobrietie muſt be holden, that we deſire not more then that which he hath promiſed vs, and that our praiers be reſtrained to that rule he ſet downe. If any man obiecte that the diſciples knew not whether it pleaſed the Lord that the Lunatike ſhould be healed, the anſwer is ready, that theſe things befell through their owne fault. For Chriſt nowe ſpeaketh of a ſpeciall faith, which had his ſecreat forces as the preſet matter required. And this is that faith whereof Paule maketh mention in the 1. Cor. 12. 9. Then how came it to paſſe that the diſciples were ſpoiled of that power of the ſpirite, which they had before for the working of myracles, but that they had choaked it with their owne ſlouthfulneſſe? But that which Chriſte ſpake of a perticular faith according to the circumſtance of the place, appertaineth to the common faith of the whole Church.

21. This kinde goeth not out. In this ſaying Chriſt doth not reproue their ſluggiſſneſſe, that they might know that they had neede of no common faith: for otherwiſe they might haue excepted, that they were not altogither without faith. Therefore the meaning is that euery faith ſufficeth not, when the battell is to be fought hotly with Sathan, but it requireth ſtrong forces. And he preſcribeth prayer as a remeady to the weakeneſſe of faith, whereunto he adioyneth faſting as a helpe. You, ſayeth he, tender exorciſtes come foorth as it were to fight with a ſhadow, or to a battell in ſport: but you haue to deale with a ſtout champion, who will not be ouercome but with a great and ſharpe fight. Therefore faith muſt be ſtirred vp with prayer: and becauſe you are ſlow and colde to prayer, the helpe of faſting muſt be alſo added. Hereby it doeth euidently appeare howe ridiculouſly the Papiſts doe of faſting make a medicine to driue away deuils, when as the Lorde applieth it to no other purpoſe, then to ſtirre vppe a deſire to prayer. VVhen as he ſayeth that kinde of deuil can not be caſt foorth by any other meanes then by praier and faſting, the meaning is, where as Sathan hath taken deepe rootes, and hath hadde a long poſſeſſion, or where he walketh with an vnbrideled libertye, it will be harde and muche a doe to gette the victorie, and therefore wee muſt ſtriue with all our forces.

45. But they vnderstoode not that woord: for it was hidde from them, so that they could not perceiue it: and they feared to aske him of that worde.

46. Then there arose a disputation among them, which of them shoulde be the greatest.

47. VVhen Iesus sawe the thoughtes of their heartes, hee tooke a little childe, and sette hym by him,

48. And said vnto them: VVho soeuer receiueth a little childe in my name, receiueth me: and who soeuer shall receiue me, receiueth him that sent me: for he that is least among you all, he shalbe great.

22. As they abode in Galile. The nearer the time of his death approched, the oftner Christe warneth his disciples, least that fearfull sight shoulde weaken their faith. This speache was vsed a little after that the myracle was wrought. For Marke sayth that he went from that place into Galile, that he might lite quietly there in the meane time: for he had determined to come to Ierusalem at the solemne day of the sacrifice, because he was at the next Passeouer to be offred vp himselfe. And though they had bene often admonished of this matter before, yet they are no lesse troubled, then if they neuer hadde heard any thing of it before. The opinion which they had taken before, doth so much preuaile, as that it darkeneth their minds in the most cleare light. The Apostles had imagined amõgst themselues, that the kingdom of Christ should be quiet & pleasant: they thought that assoone as it should be shewed foorth, it should be receiued with the allowance of all men: there was nothing more incredible then that the Priests and Scribes, & others the chief of the church should be against it. Therefore they being in errour, doe not admit any thing that is sayde on the contrary parte: for Marke sayeth they knewe not what the Lorde meant. But whereof commeth this ignorance, when as his worde was so manifest and so plaine, but that that vaine illusion hadde couered their mindes as with a vaile, that they durst not aske any further: thoughe it maye bee partly attributed to a certayne reuerence, yet I thinke not but that they helde their peace as men being oppreſſed with ſorowe, and ſtricken with that abſurdity which they had imagined to thēſelues. VVherfore this ſhame is not altogither to be praiſed, which nouriſhed a perplexed dout & a corrupt ſorow. In the meane while a ſecreat ſeede of godlines, rather then any manifeſt knowledge of the truth, tied them to Chriſt, that they ſhuld not depart frō his ſchole. There was ſome beginning or rote of faith & of true vnderſtāding planted in their harts, ſo that this zeale of following Chriſt was far from that implicite faith of the papiſts: but becauſe they had not as yet proceded ſo far in the knowledge of the nature of the kingdome of God, and of the promiſed renewing in Chriſt, I doe ſay that the deſire of godlineſſe did rather appeare in them then any certaine knowledge. Heereby we gather what was in them worthy either of praiſe or of reprehenſion. But though their blockiſhneſſe is not to be excuſed: yet there is no cauſe why we ſhoulde maruel that ſo expreſſe and euident a declaration of the croſſe and ignominie of the maſter, was vnto them as a riddle: not onely becauſe it was contrary to the glory of the ſonne of God to be refuſed and to be condemned, but becauſe there was nothinge more vnlikely, then that the grace promiſed peculiarly to the Iewes, ſhoulde be reiected of the gouernours of the ſame nation. And becauſe the great horrour of the croſſe, wherewith they were ſodenly taken, excluded them from the comfort of the hope of the reſurrection which was added: let vs learne that ſo oft as mention is made of the death of Chriſte, to comprehende the whole 3. daies togither, that the death and burial may lead vs vnto the happy triumph and newe life.

1. The ſame time the diſciples came. It appeareth by the other two, that the diſciples came not to Chriſt of their owne freewil: but when as they had priuily reaſoned the matter by the way, they were drawen out of their denne into the light. But there is no abſurditie in it, that Mathewe haſting to Chriſtes anſwer, doth not ſet downe the whole courſe of the hyſtorie, but paſsing by the beginninge, doeth ſummarily declare why Chriſt reprooued that fooliſh deſire of ſoueraigntie amongſt the Diſciples. But when Chriſt inquireth of the ſecreat ſpeach, and vrgeth the diſciples to cōfes, that which they deſired to haue ſuppreſſed: we are taught to beware of all emulation, be it neuer ſo ſecreat. Further, the circūſtance of the time is to be noted: the foretelling of death had made them ſadde and doubtful: yet as if they had heard of ſome fond fables, or had a poeticall cup of fained drinke begun to them, they doe preſently ſtriue about the ſupremacie. How commeth it to paſſe that ſo great carefulneſſe ſhuld ſo ſpedily vaniſh away, but that the mindes of men are giuen ſo much to ambition, that they forgetting the preſent warfare, being deceiued with a falſe imagination, doe ſtraight ſtep to the triumphs? If the remembrance of that ſo lately ſpoken, was ſo ſoone forgotten of the Apoſtles: what ſhall become of vs, if we bid the meditation of death farewell for a long time, and giue our ſelues to ſlouthfulneſſe, to careleſneſſe, or to idle ſpeculations. But it is demaunded what occaſion of trouble the Diſciples had? I aunſwear, that fleſh doeth willingly ſhake off all trouble, and letting paſſe all cauſe of heauineſſe, doeth take holde of that whiche was ſpoken of the reſurrection whereof the contention aroſe amongſt them being thus careleſſe.

And

And becauſe they doe eſchewe the former part of the doctrine which is vnpleaſant to the fleſh, God ſuffereth them to erre in the reſurrection, that they might dreame of that whiche ſhoulde not come to paſſe, that Chriſt by preaching onely, ſhould get himſelfe a kingdom which ſhould be earthly, that ſhoulde preſently growe to great wealth and proſperitie. But in this queſtion there was a double fault: for the Apoſtles dealt very prepoſterouſly, while they reiecting the care of warfare whereunto they were called, as ſouldiers that had well deſerued, they deſire reſt, and ſeke to haue rewardes giuen them with honor before the time. And ſecondly they dealt yll in this, that where as they ought to haue bent theſelues together with one conſent, mutually to help one an other, and to deſire for the price, no leſſe for their brethren then for theſelues, through malitious ambition ſome of them endeuored to preuent the reſt. VVherfore, that our courſe may be allowed vnto the Lord, let vs learne patiently to bear the burden of the croſſe that is laid vpon vs, vntil the full time come for vs to be crowned: further as Paul exhorteth, Rom. 12.10. In giuing honor, go one before another. The vaine curioſity of thoſe men at this day is like to the former fault, which leauing the lawfull courſe of their calling, doe leape before their time aboue the heauens. The calling vs in the Goſpel to his kingdome, ſheweth the way that leadeth thither. But theſe winged men, not thinking of faith, of patience, of calling vpon God and other exerciſes, doe diſpute what is done in heauen: but this is as muche, as if any man about to take a iourney diligently inquiring of the ſituation of his Inne or lodging, mooueth not one foote forwarde: for when the Lord commaundeth vs to walke vppon the earth, who ſoeuer doeth curiouſly diſpute howe the deade doe ſitte in heauen, doeth hinder himſelfe from comming into heauen.

2. And Ieſus called a little childe. The ſum is, who ſoeuer deſire greatneſſe, whereby they may be aboue their brethren, ſhalbe ſo far from obtaining the ſame, that they cannot ſticke to the vtmoſt corner. And he reaſoneth of the contrary, becauſe that only humility doeth extoll vs. And becauſe that outward things ſet before our eyes do moue moſt, he ſetteth before them a figure of humilitie in a yong child. For that he commaundeth his to become like to a childe, is not ſtretched generally to all thinges. VVe know that in children many things are corrupt: wherfore Paul wold not haue vs to be children in vnderſtanding, but in malice, whome otherwiſe in vnderſtanding, he commaundeth to be of a ripe age. But becauſe that infants doe not yet knowe, what it is to be preferred aboue others, that they ſhould ſtriue about ſuperioritie, by their example Chriſt would blot out of their minds, thoſe things which prophane men & children of the world, do alwaies diſcourſe of the pleaſure of honours, leaſt any ambition ſhoulde ſtirre them vp. If any man except that infants euen from the wombe haue pride grafted in them, ſo that they would haue themſelues to be moſt accounted of, and moſt cared for: the aunſwer is eaſie. Similitudes muſt not be too exactly nor narowly ſifted, to haue them agree in all poyntes. But becauſe there doth yet raigne ſo great ſimplicitie in infants, that they knowe not the degrees of honours nor the ſwellinges of pride: therfore Chriſt doth fitly and aptly propoſe them for an example. And to this purpoſe appertaineth that conuerſion whereof hee maketh mention: namely, that the diſciples had now framed theſelues too much to the common maners of men, and therfore that they might come to the right marke, their course must be turned backward. Euery man desireth the first or second place for himselfe: but Christ alloweth no man, no not in the loweſt place, except that he forget that superiority, & humble himselfe. And on the contrary he sayth that they shalbe greatest which do hūble themselues, least that we should thinke that we loose any thing, when we do willingly leaue al greatnes. And heereof may be gathered a short definitiō of humility: namely that he is truely humble, who neither challengeth any thing vnto himselfe before God, nor contemptuously disdaineth his brethren, nor desireth to be sene higher, but satisfieth himself to be accounted one of the members of Christe, desiring no other thing, then that the head may be onely exalted.

5. And who soeuer shal receiue. Christ now doth metaphorically cal thē children, which laying aside al loftinesse, doe frame thēselues to modesty and subiection: and that is added in stead of a comfort, least submission should be hard & troublesome vnto vs, wherby Christ doth not only receiue vs into his owne protection, but commendeth vs also to men. And by this meanes the faithful are taught howe they shoulde eche esteme of others, while euery man submitteth himselfe. For howe is the mutuall frendship commonly nourished amongst the children of the world, but while each doth bear with anothers couetousnes? Therfore the couetouser any man is of glory, the more boldly he taketh authority vnto himself, that he may be extolled, and that the lowly should be scorned & disdained. But Christ cōmādeth, that the more any mā doth hūble himselfe, the more he should be honored. And that is the meaning of that saying which is added in Luke. Neither yet doth he cōmand that they which are worthily despised, should be the more esteemed: but they which are void of all pride, & do make no account to be abased.

Mathew 18.

6. But who soeuer shall offend one of these litle ones which beleeue in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, & that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. 7. VVoe be vnto the world because of offences: for it must needes bee that offences shall come, but woe be to that manne, by whom the offence commeth. 8. VVherefore if thine hand or thy foote, cause thee to offend, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halte or maimed, then hauing two hands, or two feete, to be cast into euerlasting fire. 9. And if thine eye cause thee to offende, plucke it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, then hauing two eyes, to be cast into hell fire.

Marke 9.

42. And who soeuer shall offend one of these little ones that beleeue in me, it were better for him rather, that a millstone were hanged about his necke, and that he were cast into the sea. 43. VVherfore if thine hād cause thee to offende, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life, maimed, then hauing two handes, to goe into hell fire, that neuer shall bee quenched. 44. VVhere their worm dieth not, and the fire neuer goeth out. 45. Likewise if thy foote cause thee to offende, cut it off: it is better for thee to go halt into life, then hauing two feete, to be cast into hel, in to the fire that neuer shall be quenched. 46. VVhere their worme dieth not, and the fire neuer goeth out. 47. And if thine eye cause thee to offend, plucke it out: it is better for thee to go into the kingdome of God

Lu. 17.

1. Then sayde he to the disciples: It can not be auoided, but that offences will come, but woe be to him by whome they come.

2. It were better for him that a great millstone were hanged about his necke, and ỹ he were cast into the sea, then that hee should offende one of these little ones.

10. See that yee deſpiſe not one of theſe little ones: for I ſay vnto you, that in heauen their angels alwayes behold ☞ face of my father in heauē. with one eye, then hauing two eyes to be caſt into hel fire. 48. VVhere their worme dieth not, and the fire neuer goeth out.

6. But who ſoeuer ſhal offend. This ſemeth to be added for the comfort of the godly, leaſt their eſtate ſhould ſeme troubleſom vnto them, if the world doth deſpiſe them: for this doth much hinder thē frō humbling thēſelues to this voluntary modeſty: becauſe they thinke that by this meanes they ſhal become contēptible, yet it is hard if we be not only loathed, but alſo troden vnder fote of proud men. Therfore Chriſt encourageth his diſciples with this cōfort, that if the world deſpiſe their baſenes, yet god doth not neglect them. Yet it alſo ſemeth to rēd to an other end: for the ſtrife begā of their ſuperiority in honor. VVherof it might eaſily be gathered, that the apoſtles were infected with a wicked deſire to be aloft. Alſo it cā not be, but that he ſhuld be reprochful to his brethrē, who ſoeuer pleaſeth himſelf too much, or deſireth to be preferred before al mē. To heale this diſeaſe, Chriſt denoūceth a horrible puniſhmēt, if any mā in his pride ſhal caſt down pore mē, already hūbled of their own accord. But he cōprehēdeth more vnder this word Offence, then if he had forbidde the contempt of them, though it cānot otherwiſe be, that any mā ſhuld careleſly offend the weake: but becauſe he yeldeth not that regard & honor vnto thē that he ſhuld. Now whē there are ſundry kinds of offences, yet what kinde of thing an offence is, is briefly to be conſidered. If through our defaut any mā either ſtūbleth, or is brought out of a right courſe, or is hindred, him we are ſaid to offend. Therefore who ſoeuer deſireth to eſcape this puniſhmēt which Chriſt denoūceth ſo ſeuerely, let him reach his hand vnto thoſe litle ones which are holdē as abiects before the world, & help thē to run their courſe wel. For chriſt cōmēdeth thē vnto vs, that they might be to vs an exāple of willing humility: euen as Paul giueth this rule to the childrē of God, Ro. 12. 16. that they ſhuld make theſelues equal to thē of the lower ſort. Alſo in the 15. 1. that no mā ſhuld pleaſe himſelf. And becauſe chriſt ſet down that kind of puniſhmēt, which was thē moſt fearful & wherwith moſt hainous offences were puniſhed, we do therby gather how dear & pretious they are to God, which are vile & deſpiſed before ☞ world. 7. VVo be to the world becauſe of offences. This place may be expoūded 2. waies: of the doer, as if chriſt ſhuld curſe the authors of the offences, & ſo vnder the name of the world ſhuld al vnbeleuers be cōprehended: or of the ſufferer, as ☞ Chriſt ſhuld bewaile the euils which he ſaw to be at hād to light vpō the world for offences: as if he ſhuld haue ſaid, no peſtilence ſhalbe more dāgerus, nor ſhal bring mo miſeries, then ☞ it ſhal come to pas that many ſhalbe troubled or fal away through offences. And this ſenſe doth better agree with the place: for I dout not but if the lord had ſpoke of offences in the other ſenſe, he wold haue ſpoken more at large: that he might make his more diligent & careful to beware. Therfore leſt Sathan ſhuld take vs or we be aware, the Lord crieth out that nothing is more to be feared of vs, then offences: for as ſathā hath many at hand, ſo he ceaſeth not to throw new before vs almoſt at euery ſtep, & we as creatures too weak or ſluggiſh, do eaſily fal at them. So it cōmeth to pas that ther are but few that do make any mean procedings in the faith of chriſt. And of thoſe few which do enter into the courſe of ſaluatiō, ſcarce euery 10. do come to the goale without fainting.

Nowe, when as by this counſell Chriſt hath ſet this terror vppon offences, that he might make his more vigilant, woe be to our careleſnes, if euery of vs prepare not himſelfe valyauntly to ouercome them. For it is neceſſary. That the Lord might the more ſharpen the care and diligence of his, he forewarneth that it cannot otherwiſe be, but that they muſte goe through diuerſe offences: as if he ſhould haue ſaide, it is an euyl that cannot be auoyded. So it is a confirmation of the former ſentence, for that Chriſte doth thereby teach how many euilles do follow vppon offences, when as the Church neuer ſhalbe, nor can be free from this euill. But he ſheweth not the cauſe of the neceſsity: as Paule. 1. Cor. 11. 19. ſpeaking of hereſies, ſaith, that they muſt therefore ariſe, that they which are approued, might be known. But this is to be holden, that God wold haue mē in daūger of offēces, that he might therby exerciſe the faith of his children, and that he might ſhake off the hypocrites, as weedes and chaffe from the pure and cleane wheate. And if any man ſhal murmurre and complaine, that it is abſurd for the Lorde to giue Sathan libertye to worke the deſtruction of wretched men: it is our part to think reuerently of the ſecrete counſels of God: of which this is one, that it is neceſſary for the world to be troubled with offences.

But woe be to that man, by whom offences doe come. After that he hath exhorted his to beware of offences, he inueigheth againe againſt the auctors of them: and that his threatning may be the more forceble, hee addeth that neyther the right eye, nor the right hande are to be ſpared, if they giue vs occaſion of offence. For I doe take it that this was added to amplyfie the matter: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, offences are to bee reſiſted ſo diligently and conſtantly, as that it is rather meete to pull out the eyes, and to cut off the handes, then that you ſhuld nouriſh the offences. For, if any man ſhal doubt to loſe any of his members, with this fauouringe or ſparing, he caſteth himſelf into eternal deſtruction. Therfore how horrible vengance remaineth for them, which deſtroy their brethren with offences. But, becauſe theſe two verſes were expounded before in the fifte chap. it was ſufficient now to touch the purpoſe, why Chriſt rehearſeth the ſame ſentence in this place.

10. See that yee deſpiſe not one of theſe litle ones. Becauſe that pride is the mother of reproach, and contempte bringeth forth boldnes to offende, Chriſt vppon vrgent cauſe, that he might giue a remedy in time conueniēt for the healing of this diſeaſe, forbiddeth the deſpiſing of litle ones. And certeinly, as we touched euen now, whoſoeuer ſhal haue a right regarde of the brethren, will neuer eaſily be brought to giue offences. To the ſame purpoſe alſo tendeth this clauſe of Chriſtes ſpeach: whereto he applyed the beginning: namely, that wee muſte ſtriue in ſubmiſsion and humbleneſſe amongſt our ſelues: becauſe that God embraceth the litle ones with a ſingular loue. But it were too abſurd for them to be deſpiſed or not to be regarded of any mortall man, whome God hath in ſo great eſtimation. Further, he proueth his loue by this, that the Angelles, which are the miniſters of their ſaluation, doe familiarly enioye the countenaunce, and behold the face of God. Though, in my iudgement, he wold not ſimply teach how honourably God doth deale with them in appoynting Aungelles to bee their keepers, but alſo threateneth them that contemne them: as if hee ſhould haue ſayde, their contemners ſhal not goe free, whoſe Angelles are neere and at hand to ſeeke reuẽge. Therefore let vs beware how their ſaluation be vile in our ſight, for the procuring whereof the Angelles haue their charge. That ſome doe take this place, as if God ſhuld aſsigne proper Angelles to euery of the faithfull ones is of no force: for the wordes of Chriſt do not ſignifie any ſuch thing, that one Aungell ſhould bee alwayes appoynted to this or to that man: and it diſagreeth from the whole doctrine of the Scripture, whiche declareth that the Angels do pitch their tents about the godly, and that the charge is not giuen to one Angel alone, but to many, that they ſhuld defend euery of the faithful, Pſ. 34. 8. Therfore let that fancy go of the good Aungell and the bad, and let it ſuffice vs to know, that the charge of the whole Church is committed to the Aungelles, that they may help all the ſeuerall members of the ſame, as neceſsitie and vſe ſhal require. If any man demaund whether the Angelles, though by nature they are aboue vs, are yet in degree inferiour to vs, becauſe they are appoynted to be miniſters to vs: I anſwer, there is no cauſe of let why they ſhould not yeeld the obedience to God, in that free grace of his, which be beſtoweth vpon vs, though ſo it commeth to paſſe, that they are called ours, becauſe they apply themſelues to helpe vs.

Math. 18.

11. For the ſonne of man is come to ſaue that which was loſt.

12. How thinke yee? If a manne haue an hundred sheepe, and one of them be gone aſtray, doth hee not leaue ninety and nine, and goe into the mountaynes, and ſeeke that whiche is gone aſtray?

13. And if ſo be that he finde it, verely I ſay vnto you, he reioyceth more of that sheepe, then of the ninetie nine, which wente not aſtray.

14. So is it not the wil of your father, whiche is in heauen, that one of theſe litle ones ſhould perish.

Mark.

Luk. 15.

1. Then reſorted to him all the Publicans and ſinners to heare him.

2. Therefore the Phariſes and Scribes murmured, ſaying, he receiueth ſinners, and eateth with them.

3. Then ſpake he this parable to them, ſaying,

4. VVhat manne of you hauinge an hundred sheepe, if he loſe one of them, doth not leaue ninety and nine in the wildernes, and go after that which is loſt, until he find it?

5. And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his sheulders with ioy.

6. And when he commeth home, hee calleth togeather his friends & neighbours, ſaying vnto them, reioice with me: for I haue found my sheepe, which was loſt.

7. I ſay vnto you that likewiſe ioy shal bee in heauen for one ſinner that conuerteth, more then for ninety and nine iuſt menne, whiche neede none amendment of lyfe.

8. Either what woman hauing tenne peeces of ſiluer, if shee loſe one peece, doth not lyght a candle, and ſweepe the houſe, and ſeeke diligently, till she finde it?

9. And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and neighbors, ſaying, reioyce with me: for I haue found the peece, which I had loſt.

10. Likewiſe I ſay vnto you, there is ioye in the preſence of the angels of God, for one ſinner that conuerteth.

11. For the ſonne of man. Now Chriſt alſo by his own example exhorteth to giue honour euen to the weake and abiecte brethren. For hee came not from heauen as a redeamer to ſaue onely them, but alſo for the dead, which had bene loſt. But it is too vile a thing for vs to loath them, whom the ſonne of God hath ſet ſo much by. Neither if the weake ones haue faultes, which might bring them into contempt, is our prid therefore to be excuſed: for they are not to be eſteemed after the value of their own vertues, but for Chriſtes ſake: after whoſe example who ſo will not frame himſelfe is too froward and proud.

12. How thinke yee? Luke maketh a further rehearſall of the occaſion of this parable: namely that the Scribes murmured againſt the Lord, who they ſaw dayly conuerſant with ſinners. Therefore Chriſtes will was to ſhewe, that a good teacher muſte take no leſſe paines to recouer thoſe, which were loſte, then to preſerue thoſe, whiche are vnder his hande. Though the ſimilitude proceedeth in Mathew: namely, that the diſciples of Chriſt ſhould not onely be friendly entertayned: but their faultes are to be borne with, ſo as wee may endeuour to bring them that wander into the way. For though it fall out that they doe ſometimes go aſtray, yet becauſe they are ſheepe, ouer whom God hath ſet his owne Sonne to be their ſhepheard, it behoueth vs to gather them from going aſtraye, ſo farre muſt we be from putting them to flight with vnkindnes, or from taking lyberty to driue them away. For to this purpoſe beelongeth that ſaying, heede muſt be taken that we deſtroy not that, which God would ſhould be ſaued. That which Luke reporteth tendeth ſomwhat to a diuerſe ende: becauſe al mankinde is Gods, they are to be gathered which are ſtrangers, & as great ioy is to be made, while they that were loſt returne to good, as if any man ſtould beyond all hope recouer that, which he was ſory ſtould be loſt.

LV. 10. There is ioy in the preſence of the Aungels. If the Angels doe reioyce among themſelues in heauen, when they ſee reſtored into their company, that which was loſt: it becommeth vs that are in the ſame and like eſtate with them, to be partakers of the ſame ioy. But how is it, that hee ſayth, that the Angels do reioyce more at the repentaunce of one wicked man, then at the perſeueraunce of many righteous, whom nothing more delighteth then a continuall and iuſt courſe of righteouſnes? I aunſwere, though it ſhould more agree with the deſires of the Aungels, (as it is alſo more to be deſired) that men ſhoulde alwayes continue in pure integritie: yet, becauſe the mercy of God doth more appeare in the delyuerance of a ſinner, who now had bene giuen ouer to deſtruction, & had falen off as a rotten member from the body, he attributeth to the Angels after the maner of men, the greater ioy for this good vnlooked or vnhoped for. Further, he doth ſpecyallye reſtraine the word repentaunce to the conuerſion of them, which were wholly falne from God, as that they now riſe from death to lyfe. For otherwiſe there ought to be a continuall meditation of repentance through the whole life: neither is any man exempted from this neceſsity, when as their ſeueral ſinnes do ſtir all men to a daily exerciſe of the ſame. But it is one thing amongſt offences, or falles, or errours, to go forward to the goale, when thou art entred into the courſe: and it is an other thing, to call a man home from errour, who was altogeather out of the way, or to beginne a right courſe from the prisons. They neede not such repentaunce, who haue now begunne to frame their life after the rule of Gods lawe, that they might beginne to lyue holyly and godly: though it be necessary for them to sigh vnder the infirmities of their flesh, and to labour to reforme and correct them.

Math.	Mark.	Luke. 15.
		11. Hee sayd moreouer, A certeine man had two sonnes.
		12. And the younger of them sayde to his father, Father, giue me the portion of the goodes that falleth to me. So he deuided vnto them his substance.
		13. So not long after, when the younger sonne had gathered al together, he took his iourney into a farre countrey, and there he wasted his goodes with riotous liuing.
		14. Now, when hee had spent all, there arose a great dearth throughout that land, & he began to be in necessity.
		15. Thē he went and claue to a citizen of that countrey, and he sent him to his farme, to feede swine.
		16. And he would fain haue filled his belly with the huskes, that the swine eat, but no man gaue thē him.
		17. Then he came to himself, and saide, how many hired seruants of my fathers haue bread ynough, and I die for hunger?
		18. I wil rise and go to my father, and say vnto him, Father, I haue sinned against heauen, & before thee,
		19. And am no more worthy to be called thy sonne: make me as one of thy hyred seruaunts.
		20. So he arose, and came to his father, and when he was yet a great way off, his father sawe him, and had compassion, and ranne, and fell on his necke, and kissed him.
		21. And the sonne saide vnto him, Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne.
		22. Then the father said to his seruaunts, bring forth the best robe, and put it on him, and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feete,
		23. And bring the fat calf, and kill him, and let vs eate and be merry.
		24. For this my son was dead, & is aliue again: & he was lost, but he is found. And they began to be merry.

This parable is nothing els but a confirmation of the former doctrin. And in the former part of it ther is shewed, how redy & willing god is to forgiue sinnes: and in the other, how malitiously & peruersly they doe, which do murmur at his mercy, which we wil handle after in that place. And vnder the person of a prodigal yong man, who through lust & ryotous expenses being brought to extreame pouerty, returned in al humility vnto his father, against whom he had bene iniurious & disobedient, Christ describeth al sinners, who lothing their owne madnes, do applye themselues vnto the grace of God.

And

And vnto a humane father, who not onely forgiueth the offences of his ſonne, but runneth willingly foorth to meete him, he compareth GOD, who is not ſatisfied in pardoning them that aske forgeueneſſe, except he doe alſo preuent them of his fatherly kindneſſe. Nowe we will conſider the particular poyntes.

12. The yonger of them ſayd. Heere is firſt deſcribed a token of vngodly folly in a yong man, in that he deſiring to depart from his father, thought not himſelf wel, except he might haue free liberty to wantonneſſe, without checke or controlment of his father. Vnkindneſſe is alſo added to the former, in that he forſaking the old man, he doeth not onely depriue him of thoſe dueties which in righte he oweth him, but alſo ſpoyleth and diminiſheth his goodes. Then followeth a riotous liuing in pleaſure, and vnbrideled wickednеſſe wherein he waſteth all his goodes. By ſo manifolde ſinnes he had deſerued, that he ſhoulde finde his father neuer to be appeaſed towardes him. And it is not to be doubted, but that the great goodneſſe of God and his incomparable fauour is deſcribed vnto vs vnder this example, that no outragiouſneſſe of ſinnes ſhould driue vs with feare from the hope of obtaining forgiueneſſe. It is no fonde interpretation if any man ſhall ſay that they are like to this fooliſh and frowarde yong man, who abounding with the Lorde with great plentie of good things, yet being mooued with a blinde and giddie couetouſneſſe, would part with him, that they might be free away from him: as if it were not more to be deſired to liue vnder the fatherly care and gouernãce of God, then to haue all the kingdomes of the earth. But becauſe I feare leaſt this alluſion be too ſubtile, I will be ſatisfied with the literall ſenſe: not that I finde fault with them, that vnder ſuche a figure reproue their madneſſe, which thinke they ſhal liue happily to haue ſomwhat of their own, that they might be rich of thẽſelues without the heauenly father: but becauſe I doe now keepe my ſelf within the boũds of an interpreater. But Chriſt heere declareth what vſeth to befall to yong men, when they folow their owne will: for they being voide of counſell, and riotous in liuing, are vnmeete to rule themſelues, where feare and ſhame reſtraineth them not, it cannot be but that they ſhould caſt themſelues headlong whether ſoeuer pleaſure ſhall cary them, and being full of diſhoneſtie, they make haſte to vile pouertie. Afterwarde he deſcribeth the puniſhment, which by the iuſt iudgement of God, remaineth for the moſt part of ſuche prodigall waſters: namely, that their goodes being wickedly waſted, they ſhoulde be throughly pinched with hunger, and becauſe they knewe not how to vſe thriftily, aboundance of the beſt breade, they ſhalbe driuen to feede vpon acornes and huskes. To be ſhort, that they becomming ſwines fellowes, ſhould thinke themſelues vnworthy of mannes meat: for this is a hoggiſh deuouring, waſtfully to ſpoyle that, which was giuen for the preſeruation and maintenance of life. That ſome doe ſubtilly expound this to be a iuſt plague of vngodly loathing, that they for hunger ſhould goe to the huskes, which refuſed the pleaſant bread in the houſholde of the heauenly father, doe ſpeake very truely and profitably, neither doeth any religion forbid the vſe of this ſimilitude: but in the meane ſeaſon it muſt be conſidered what allegories doe differ from the naturall ſenſe.

16. He would faine haue filled his belly. It declareth that for hunger he no more thought vpon his former dainties. Neither when he gaue this kind of meate to the ſwine could he want. That ſaying of Cyrus is notable, who, when in his flight he had bene long faſting, being ſowhat refreſhed with meate and browne bread, ſayd, that hee neuer taſted ſo ſauorye bread before: ſo neceſsity compelled this yong man, whereof mention is now made, to haue a ſtomack to the husks. The reaſon is added: becauſe no man gaue vnto him. For the copulatiue ſhould in my iudgment bee reſolued into a word cauſall. Neither is this ſpoken of the huskes, which were by him: but I vnderſtand it, that no man had compaſsion of hys want. For no man thinketh himſelf bound to the prodigal, which waſte their own goodes without regard: nay, becauſe they were wont to ſpoile al things, nothing is thought ſhould be giuen them.

17. Then he came to himſelfe. Here is a meanes deſcribed vnto vs, wherby God calleth men to repentaunce. If they would willingly be wiſe, & would yeelde themſelues to be taughr, he would allure them more gently: but, becauſe they frame not to obedience, except they be tamed with corrections, he chaſtiſeth them the ſharpelyer. Therfore hunger was the beſt ſchoolemiſtreſſe for this young man, whom plenty and fulnes made ſo outragious and diſobedient. Being taught by this example, we muſt not thinke that God dooth deale cruelly with vs, if at any time hee laye greater troubles vpon vs: for by this meanes hee teacheth the frowarde and them that are drunken with pleaſure, obedience. Further, what myſery ſoeuer we ſuffer, is a profitable calling of vs to repentaunce. But as we are ſlow, ſo do we ſcarſe at any time come to a right minde, excepte we be driuen to it by extreame miſeries. For vntill that troubles doe oppreſſe vs, and that deſperation doth pricke vs, the fleſh doth alwayes lifte vp it ſelfe in pride, or at leaſt reſiſt good thinges. VVhereby we gather that it is no meruaile, if that the Lord dooth deale often times violently and doubleth his blowes vppon vs, to breake our frowardnes, and as it is in the prouerbe, he driueth hard wedges into hard knottes. It is alſo to be noted that hope of a better eſtate, if he returned to his father, prouoked the young man to repentaunce. For no greatnes of puniſhmentes ſhall ouerthrow our ſinnes, or make vs diſpleaſed with our ſinnes vntyll ſome profit do appeare. Therefore as this young manne by hope of his fathers kindnes is moued to ſeeke for reconciliation: ſo the knowledge of the mercy of God muſt be the beginning of our repentaunce, which ſhal moue and ſtirre vs to hope well.

20. VVhen he was yet a great way off. This is the chiefe poynt of the parable, If men which by nature are deſirous of reuenge, and holde theyr owne right too faſt, are yet moued with a fatherly loue, ſo as they do louingly forgiue their ſonnes, and of their owne freewill will ſeeke out thoſe loſt wretches: God, whoſe great goodnes exceedeth all the loues of fathers, will be nothing harder to vs. And certeinly here is nothing ſpoken of an earthly father, that God doth not promiſe of himſelfe. Before they cry, ſaith he, I wil heare Iſa. 65. 23. That ſaying alſo of Dauid is wel known, Pſa. 32. 5. I haue ſaid I will confeſſe my vnrighteouſnes vnto the Lord againſt my ſelfe, and thou forgaueſt the puniſhment of my ſinne. Therefore as this father is not onely eaſie to be entreated at the prayers of his ſonne: but goeth out to meete him comming, and before he heareth any one word, he embraceth him all torne and deformed as hee is: ſo God looketh not for long entreataunce; but as ſoone as the ſinner determyneth termineth to confesse his fault he dooth willingly meete him. But it is a filthy quarrell of theirs, which do hereof gather, that the grace of GOD is not bestowed vpon sinners, before that they do preuent the same with their repentance. Here say they is proposed to vs a father redy to forgiue, but it is after the sonne hath determined to returne to him: therfore god doth not regard nor bestow his grace vpon any others then them, which beginne to seeke the same. It is true, that it is required that the sinner should be grieued in conscience, and displeased with himselfe, which should obtaine forgiuenes: but they do very euil gather hereof, that repētance, which is the gift of God, doth proceede from mē of the proper motiō of their owne heart. And in this behalfe is a mortall man very fondly compared with God: for an earthly father cannot renew the peruerse heart of his sonne with the secrete instinct of the spirit, as God doth of stonye heartes make fleshy. To conclude, it is not handled in this place, whether man conuerted vnto God, returneth of himselfe: but onely vnder the figure of a man is commended the fatherly kindnes of God, and his readines to graunt forgiuenes.

21. Father, I haue sinned against heauen. Here is an other part of repentance noted: namely, a feeling of sinne ioyned with sorow and shame. For hee that is not sory e that hee hath sinned, and hath not his offence beefore his eies, will rather attempte anye thing, then that hee wyll thinke to returne to a good course: therfore it is necessarye that a lo athinge of a former estate shoulde goe beefore repentaunce. But there is great weight in this speech, that it is said that the young man returned or came to himselfe: for who so followeth the wandring errours of his desires, is carryed into a forgetfulnes of himself. And certeinely, the violente motions of the flesh are so wandring, that who soeuer giueth ouer himselfe vnto them, shall vanish away as a man departed or gone out from himselfe. Therefore the transgressours are commaunded to returne to theyr heart, Isa. 46. 8. There followeth also a confession, nor such as the Pope hath framed, but such as the sonne doth therewith reconcile vnto him his offended father: for this humility is verye necessary for the redeeming of offences. This manner of speaking, I haue sinned against heauen and before thee, is as much as if it had bene saide, that God was offended in the person of an earthly father. And certeinely nature it selfe teacheth this, that whosoeuer lifteth vp himselfe against his father, doth also vngodlyly arise against God, who maketh children subiect to the parents.

22. Bring forth the best robe. Though (as it hath bene often saide) it were a fond thing to search all sinal pointes in parables: yet the letter shal not here be wrested, if we say that the heauenlye father dooth not onely so forgiue our sinnes, that he burieth the remembrance of them: but also restoreth those gifts wherof we were depriued: so as he spoyling vs of thē againe, doth chastise our vnthākfulnes, that with the reproach and dishonesty of the nakednes, he might driue vs to be ashamed.

Math.	Mark.	Luk. 15.
		25. Now the elder brother was in the fielde, and when he came and drew neere to the house, he heard melody and dauncing;
		26. And called one of his seruauntes, and asked what what theſe thinges meant.

27. And he ſaide vnto him, Thy brother is come, and thy father hath killed the fatted calfe: becauſe he hath receiued him ſafe and ſound.
28. Then he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out and entreated him.
29. But he aunſwered and ſaid to his father, Lo, theſe many yeeres haue I done thee ſeruice, neyther brake I at any time thy cõmaundement, & yet thou neuer gaueſt me a kid, that I might make mery with my friends: 30. But when this thy ſonne was come, which had deuoured thy goodes with harlots, thou haſt for his ſake killed the fatte calfe.
31. And he ſaid vnto him, ſonne, thou art euer with me, and al that I haue is thine. It was meete that we ſhould make mery, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, & is aliue againe, & he was loſt, but he is found

This laſt part of the parable accuſeth them of vnkindnes, which maliciouſly would reſtrain the grace of God, as if they enuied that miſerable ſinners ſhould attaine ſaluation. For we know that the prid of the Scribs is here reſtrained, who do not think that the reward due to their deſerts is not paied them, if that Chriſt ſhould admit the Publicans and the cõmon ſorte of people to the hope of eternall ſaluation. Therfore the ſum is, if we deſire to be accounted the ſonnes of God, thoſe faultes of our brethren, which he fatherly remitteth, we muſt brotherly forgiue. They that thinke that the people of the Iewes are deſcribed vnder the figure of the elder ſonne, though they do it not without ſome reaſon, yet they ſeeme to me not ſufficiently to marke the whole courſe of the texte: for of the murmuring of the Scribes ther aroſe a ſpeach, as if they were troubled at the kindnes of Chriſt towardes miſerable men, which had bene loſe lyuers. Therefore he compareth the Scribes, which ſwelled with arrogancye to thriftye and modeſte men, who alwayes wel regarded their houſhold eſtate by liuing honeſtly and ſparingly: yea, hee compareth thẽ to obediente ſonnes, who al their lifetime do patiently beare the autority of the father. And though they were altogether vnworthy of this prayſe, yet Chriſt ſpeaking after their ſenſe, by conceſsion imputeth vnto thẽ this fained holines for a vertue. As if he ſhuld haue ſaid, although I ſhuld graunt vnto you that which you do falſly brag of, that you haue alwaies bene obedient ſonnes vnto God, yet their brethren muſte not ſo proudly and cruelly be caſt off, when they repent from their wicked life.

28. Therefore came his father out. In theſe words he reproueth the intollerable pride of hypocrites, that they muſt bee entreated of the father not to enuy at the mercy ſhewed vnto their brethren. Further, though God doth not entreate, yet, by his example he exhorteth vs to beare with the faults of the brethren. And that he may cut off all excuſe from theyr wicked rigor, he doth not only bring in hypocrites ſpeaking, whoſe falſe boaſtinge might be refuted: but alſo if any man ſhall wholly discharge al dueties of godlynes towards his father: yet hee denyeth him to haue any juſt cauſe of complaynt, for that his brother is forgiuen.

It is certeine that the sincere worsshippers of God are alwayes free and void from this malitious affection: but the purpose of Christ is to shew, that hee is vnrighteous that enuyeth his brother receiued into fauour, although he would not giue place to the Angels in holynes.

31. Sonne, thou art euer with me. There are two chiefe pointes in this aunswere: the first is, that there is no cause why the Elder should be angry, while he seeth that he is not endamaged by the receiuing of his brother into fauour: and the other that he hauing no regard of the saluation of his brother is grieued & sory for the ioy conceiued of his returne. All mine, saieth he, are thine: that is, though thou haste yet taken away nothing from my house, thou hast lost nothing: for all thinges remaine safe for thee. Further, what doth our ioy offend thee, whereof thou shuldest haue bene a companion? For it is meete to reioyce for that thy brother, who wee thought had bene loste, is in safety, and returned home againe. VVe must note these two reasons: for neyther doe wee lose anye thing, if GOD doe kindely receiue into fauour them, whiche by theyr sinnes hadde bene estraunged from him, and it is a hardnes without our godlines not to be gladde, when we see our brethren restored from death to life.

Matth. 18.	Mark.	Luk. 17.
15. Moreouer, if thy brother trespasse against thee, goe, and tell him his fault betweene thee and him alone, if hee heare thee, thou haste wonne thy brother.		3. Take heede to your selues: if thy brother trespasse against thee, rebuke him: and if he repent, forgiue him.
16. But if hee heare thee not, take yet with thee one or two, that by the mouth of two or three witnesses euery word may be confirmed.
17. And if hee will not vouchsafe to heare them, tell it vnto the Church, and if he refuse to heare the Church also, let him be vnto thee as an heathen man and a Publican.
18. Verely I say vnto you, whatsoeuer yee bind on earth, shal be bound in heauen, and whatsoeuer ye lose on earth, shalbe losed in heauen.
19. Againe, verely I say vnto you, that if two of you shal agree in earth vppon any thing, whatsoeuer they shall desire, it shal be giuen them of my father, which is in heauen.
20. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

15. If thy brother trespasse against thee. Because hee had spoken before of bearing with the infirmities of the brethrē, now he sheweth more plainly how, and to what ende, and how farre they are to be borne with. For otherwise it had bene a ready obiection, that offences cannot otherwise be auoyded, but that euery manne shoulde winke at the faultes of other men, and so should sinne be nourished by bearinge with it. Therefore Christ

Christ prescribeth a meane betweene both, which neither shall offende the weake too much, and yet shall be apte for the healing of their diseases. For seuerity compounded to the nature of a medicine is profitable and prayse worthy. In summe, Christe commaundeth his disciples so to forgiue one another, that yet they endeuor to correct their faults, which must be wisely obserued: because that nothing is more difficult then to spare and fauour men, and freely to reprehend their faultes. All men almost do leane to the one side, so that eyther they do deceiue one another with deadly flatteringes, or els they strike them too hardly, whom they should heale. But Christ commendeth to his disciples mutual loue, which should bee farre from flattery. Hee onely commaundeth them to season their admonitions with moderation: least, if they be too austere & hard, they should ouerthrow the weake. And he expresly setteth downe three degrees of brotherly correction: the first is, that hee which hath sinned, should be admonyshed priuately. And the second is, if hee shew any token of stubbornesse, that hee be againe admonished beefore witnesses. The third is, if he preuaile nothing this way, that he be delyuered to the publike iudgment of the Church. And this is the purpose, which I spake of, least that charity be broken vnder pretence of feruent zeale. Further, because ambition doth cary away the most part of men, so that they are too desirous to spread the offences of their brethren, Christ doth in time meete with this faulte, commaunding vs to couer the faultes of our brethren as much as we can. For who so are delighted with the shame and infamy of the brethren, it is certeine that they are caryed away with hatred and malice: for if there were any charity in them, they would haue regard of the shame of the brethren. It is yet demãded, whether this rule doth generally extend to all sinners. For there are very many, whiche wil allow no publike reproues, vntyl the offender be first pryuately admonished. But there is a manifest restraint in Christes wordes: for he doth not simply and without exception commaund that whosoeuer sinneth, should be admonished or reproued priuately, and without any witnesse: but he would haue vs to try this way, when we are priuately offended: not because the matter is our owne, but beecause it is meete that wee shoulde be wounded with sorowe, as ofte as GOD is offended. Neither yet dooth Christe speake heere of suffring iniuryes: but hee dooth generally teach vs, so to imbrace and vse louing kindnes amongst vs, least by handling the weake ones more sharply, wee should lose them which were to be kept. Therefore this clause against thee, doth not note an iniury done to some one man, but distinguisheth betweene secrete and manifest sinnes. For, if any man sinneth against the whole Churche, Paule commaundeth that he should be publikly reproued, so that hee woulde not haue the very Elders spared. For of them by name doth Paule giue Timothy charge, that by publike reprouing them beefore all men, they might be made a publike example to others, 1. Tim. 5. 20. And certenly it were a ridiculous thing, that hee which offended, so that his offence were openly knowne to the publike offence of the brethren, should bee admonished of euery one of them: for, so if a thousand knew it, he shuld be admonished a thousand tymes. Wherefore that distinction, whiche Christ expresly maketh, is to be kept, that no man by making secrete offences common, should rashly and without necessity defame his brother.

If he shall heare thee, thou hast wonne. Christ confirmeth his doctrine by the profit and fruite that shall come thereof. For it is no small matter to get a soule to God, which was in bondage to Sathan. And whereof cōmeth it to passe, that they which are false, doe seldome repent, but because that they being handled odiously, and as enemies, do hardē themselues in obstinacy? Therefore nothing is better then gentlenesse, which reconcileth to God them which had falne from him. And he that dooth intemperately runne into a fond fauouring the offender, doth willingly lose the saluation of his brother, which he had in his hand. In Luke Christ commaundeth vs expresly to be satisfied with a priuate admonition, if our brother be thereby brought to repentaunce. Hereby is also gathered how necessary it is that there be amongste the faythfull a free and mutuall lyberty of reprouing one another. For, when as euery one of vs doth offend often euery daye, it were extreame crueltie by our silence and dissimulation to betray the saluation of them, whō by a friendly reprofe we might delyuer from destruction. For though that succesſe doth not alwayes followe, yet dooth there lye a great guiltinesse vpon him, who neglecteth the remedy prescribed by the Lord for the preseruation of the saluation of the brethren. It is also to be noted, that the diligenter we are to perfourme this duety, the more the Lord doth yeeld ouer his own honour to vs. For one man cannot conuerte another, it only belongeth vnto him: yet doth he adorne vs with this vndeserued title, that we doe gaine or winne a lost brother.

16 If he heare thee not, take yet with thee. The second degree is, that hee which behaued himselfe stubbornely towardes one manne, or woulde not abide to be taught, shoulde againe be admonished before witnesses. Some doe heere obiecte that it is in vaine to call witnesses, if wee haue to deale with a manne that is disobedient and rebellyous, for hee wyll be so farre from being bente to acknowledge his fault in theyr presence, that hee will more wickedly deny the same. But this knotte shall be easily losed, if thou wilt distinguishe betweene a kinde or manner of denyinge. and of slypping backe. Hee that precisely denyeth the deede, and saieth, that hee is falsely and slaunderously charged, is to be lette alone: for it shall be in vayne to vrge him by callynge him beefore wytnesses. But, beecause the moste parte of menne doe eyther frowardly scorne, or impudently excuse that which they had doone wickedly and vngodly, vntyll they be brought before greater auctoritie, it shall bee profitable to obserue this course towardes them. Also the saying of our sauiour must so be vnderstod, as it appeareth by the word he vseth, which signifieth to reproue. To reproue, is to conuince by euident demonstration. And how shoulde I reproue him, that stoutlye denyeth the whole matter. For he that hath so hard a browe, as to deny the offence committed, shutteth vp the way against the second admonition.

Now wee vnderstand against whom Christe woulde haue vs to vse witnesses, that the admonition may haue the more weight and the greater effect. But there is no absurditie in it, that he doth bend Moses words somewhat into an other sense. Moses forbiddeth to giue iudgemente of a matter vnknowne, and setteth downe this as a lawful meanes of triall, that by the testimony of two or three, euery word may stand or be confirmed.

Christ

Christe alluding to that lawe, saieth, that the cause is euident, where two or three witnesses doe arise to condemne the man, especially that the iudgment of the church may be the riper. Neither is there any cause why he should complaine of iniury, for being brought forth into the lyghte, which refused to heare two or three.

17. Tell it vnto the Church. It is demaunded what hee meaneth or vnderstandeth by the name of the Churche. For Paule, 1. Corinthians, 5. 5. commaundeth the incestuous Corinthe to bee excommunicate, not of anye chosen number, but of the whole companye of the godly, and therefore it maye seeme probable that the iudgement was heere referred to all the people. But, beecause that then there was as yet no Church, which hadde giuen theyr name to Christe, nor anye such order appoynted, and the Lorde himselfe speaketh as of a manner vsed and receyued: it is not to bee doubted, but that hee alludeth to the order of the olde Churche, as also in other places he applyeth his speach, accordinge to the manner knowne amongste them. When hee commaundeth, Matthew 5. 23. that the gyfte, which wee woulde offer be left at the Altar, vntyll wee may be reconcyled to the offended brother, it is not to be doubted, but that hee woulde by the presente forme and manner of worshypping of GOD vnder the lawe, teache vs, that wee cannot praye ryghtlye, nor offer anye thing to GOD, so longe as we are at dyscorde with the brethren. So therefore nowe dooth he looke into the fourme of disciplyne receyued amongste the Iewes: for it were absurde for hym to appoint the iudgemente to the Church, when as yet there was none.

Also, when as the authoritie of excommunication amongste the Iewes was in the handes of the Elders, whoe represented the person or estate of the whole Church, Christe dooth then verye aptly appoynt, that they whiche haue sinned, should at length be openly brought before the Church. if they doe eyther proudlye despyse, or scoffinglye scorne at pryuate admonitions. VVee knowe that after the Iewes returned from the captiuitie of Babylon, they hadde a chosen councell, which they called Sunhedrim, in Greeke Synedrion, whereunto the censure of manners and doctrine was committed. This gouernmente and this brydle to keepe frowarde and vntractable menne in order was lawfull and approued of God.

If anye manne except that all thinges were corrupt and out of order, at the comminge of Christe, so that that tyranny should bee accounted nothing lesse then the iudgement of the Church: The aunswere is easie: though the manner of theyr dealinge was defiled and corrupted, yet was the order worthylye praysed of CHRISTE, as it had been in tymes paste delyuered by the Fathers. And when as shortlye after hee erected a Church, the corruption being taken awaye, hee restored the pure vse of excommunicating. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that the order of disciplyne, which flouryshed vnder the kingdome of CHRIST succeeded in place of that Elder. And certeinely, when as the prophane nations hadde a shadowe of this rite of excommunicating, it appeareth that God had put this into the minds of men from the beginning, that if any were vncleane and defiled, they ſhould be driuen from the holy exerciſes.

Therefore it was a vile and ſhamefull thing for the people of GOD to be altogeather without that diſciplyne, whereof there was remaynynge ſome ſhewe amongſt the Gentiles. And that whiche was obſerued in the lawe did Chriſte tranſlate to vs: becauſe that wee and the aunciente fathers haue one & the ſame cauſe. But it was not the purpoſe of Chriſt to ſend his diſciples to the Synagogue, which when it willingly nourysſhed filthy corruptions in her boſome, it excommunicated the true & ſincere worſhippers of GOD. But he declareth that that order ſhould bee holden in his Church, which had bene holily appoynted vnder the law. That which is preſently added of Heathens and Publycans confirmeth the interpretation that I brought. For, becauſe the Heathens & the Publycans were then much hated and abhorred amongſte the Iewes, vnto them he compareth men that are vncleane and incureable, which wyll obey or yeelde to no admonitions. It is certeine that he would not haue giuen this precept to the Heathens, of whome the Church ſhoulde be gathered, that they ſhoulde flye from themſelues: Neyther is there any cauſe at this day why the faythfull ſhould abhorre the Publycans. But Chriſt, that he might the better be vnderſtoode, borowed that manner of ſpeach, which was preſently vſed in his owne countrey. But the meaning is, that we ſhould haue nothing to doe with the contemners of the Church, vntil they repent.

18. Whatſoeuer ye ſhall bynde. Hee rehearſeth the ſame wordes nowe, which hee vſed beefore in the ſixteene Chapter: but in a diuerſe ſenſe. For there his purpoſe was to confirme the authoritye of doctrine, and heere hee appoynteth diſciplyne, which is adioyned to doctrine. There Chriſte ſayde that the preaching of the Goſpell ſhould not be in vaine, but that it ſhould be a ſauour eyther to lyfe or to death: here hee ſayeth, though the wicked doe ſcorne the iudgement of the Church, yet it ſhall not be in vaine. This diſtinction muſt be holden, that he ſpeaketh there of the word preached, and here of publike cenſures and diſcipline. But let the readers ſeeke for the reaſon of byndyng and loſinge from thence. This is the ſumme, whoſoeuer hauing committed a ſinne, dooth humbly acknowledge his fault, and entreateth, ſo that he obtaine forgiuenes of the Church, he is not abſolued onely of men, but alſo of GOD. Agayne, whoſoeuer ſcorneth the reproues and threatning of the Church, if he be condemned of the ſame, that iudgment ſhall bee confirmed in heauen, which was giuen by men.

If any manne obiect that GOD by this meanes ſhoulde be as an vnder Iudge, without a voyce of his owne, but muſt ſubſcribe to the iudgment of mortall menne: there is an aunſweare ready. For Chriſt doth not ſo defende the right of his Church, as that he would thereby diminiſhe his owne right and his fathers: but that hee would thereby rather ſanctifie the maieſtie of his word. For as in the ſixteene Chapter his will was not to eſtabliſh generallye euery doctrine, but that which came out of his mouth: ſo neyther in this place dooth he ſay that euery iudgment ſhall be eſtablyſhed and ratified, but that, wherein he himſelf is preſident and chiefe: and that not onelye by his ſpirite, but alſo by his worde.

Whereof it followeth, that men do GOD no preiudice, whyle they pro-pronounced nothing but from his mouth, and doe faithfullye endeuour themſelues onely to execute that, which he had commanded. For though Chriſte is the onely Iudge of the world, yet he would in the meane ſeaſon haue the miniſters of his word to denounce and proclaym the ſame. Further, he would haue the Church to delyuer his iudgment: So hee derogateth nothing from himſelfe by vſing the miniſterie of menne, but he alone loſeth and byndeth. Yet hereof aryſeth a queſtion, whē the church tollerateth many hypocrites, and alſo abſolueth many, which pretende a faygned repentaunce, whether it be apparaunt that ſuch bee abſolued in heauen. I aunſwere, that the ſpeach is directed to none other, then to ſuch as do rightlye and ſincerely reconcile themſelues to the Churche. For he that would giue comfort, and take away feare from fearefull & trembling conſciences, he ſayth, that whoſoeuer ſhall ſinne, if they be receiued into fauour with the Church, are freed from guyltineſſe beefore God. For hee appoynted this as a pledge of heauenly grace, whiche nothing apperteineth to hypocrites, which doe peruert the right vſe of reconciliation.

And there ariſeth hence no ſmall hope vnto the godlye, when as they heare that their ſinnes are blotted out before God and angels, aſſoone as they obtaine forgiueneſſe of the Church. In the other parte there is no ambyguitie of the meaning of Chriſte. For, when as ſtubborne & proud men are ready vnder this pretence to deſpyſe the iudgmēt of the church, as vngodly knaues, they doe often very boldlye appeale to the tribunall ſeate in heauen. Chriſte, that hee may with terrour breake their pryde, ſaieth, that their condemnation is ratified in heauen. In the meane while he encourageth his to a iuſt and righteous ſeueritie, leaſte they ſhoulde giue place to the wicked frowardneſſe of them whiche refuſe or ſhake off all diſcipline. Heere is alſo to be ſeene how ignorauntly the Papiſtes doe wreſt this place, to colour all kynde of tyranny. It is certeine that the ryght and auctʜority of excommunicating is giuen vnto the church, and all menne of a right minde doe confeſſe the ſame: but whether that euery manne, or that one that is not called by the Churche, but created by the horned and diſguyſed beaſte, may according to his pleaſure ſend forth theyr vaine and empty crakes of excommunications, accordinge to theyr pleaſure? But it is manifeſte that the lawefull gonernmente of the Church was committed to the Elders, not onelye to the miniſters of the worde, but to them alſo, which of the people were ioyned to them to be cēſors of the word. Yet they not cōtented with their former impudencye, endeuoured to proue out of this place, whatſoeuer burdens they layd vppon the people to be borne. I ſpeake not of that, that the moſte wicked enemyes of the Church doe vnworthily vſurpe, and by violence take vnto themſelues, the auctʜority which was graſted vnto the church: I onely ſay, when Chriſte ſpake not, but onelye of correcting of ſinnes, they which by their lawes enſnare ſoules, doe no leſſe fooliſhlye then wickedlye abuſe his teſtimony.

It is of the ſame ſorte of braune; that vnder this pretence they defend their auricular confeſsion. For though Chriſt appoynted that they ſhould be reconcyled to the Church, which by theyr faulte were brought to the publyke iudgement: yet was it not his will to lay a lawe vpon all men, that they ſhuld vnburden thē of their ſinnes in the eare of a ſacrificer. But their fancies are ſo friuolous, that it is not neceſſary to ſtand any longer to confute them.

19. Againe, I ſay vnto you. He confirmeth the former ſentence: becauſe God will not onely giue the ſpirite of counſell and wiſdome to thē that ſhall aske it: but he alſo will cauſe that whatſoeuer they ſhall doe out of his worde, ſhould want power and effect. But he ioyning conſent to the prayer, declareth how ſoberly and reuerently the faythful ſhould behaue themſelues in all their holy actions. The ſinner muſt be admoniſhed, & except he giue place to that reproofe, he muſt be excommunicated. Here it behoueth not onely to aske counſell of the holy mouth of God, that nothing be done but according to his word, but alſo it is meete to beeginne with prayers. VVhereby that which I taught before, appeareth more euidently, that there is no licence giuen to men to doe whatſoeuer they luſt, but God is placed as a reuenger of the gouernment of the Church, that he might defend and ſanctifie the iudgementes, whereof he is the auctour. In the meane ſeaſon, while the faithfull doe meete, they are taught to ioyne their petitions and generally to pray together, not onely to teſtifie the vnitie of faith, but that God would heare the deſire of them all. Therefore, as God doth often promiſe otherwhere that he wil heare the priuate prayers of euery man: ſo here Chriſt adorneth publike praiers, with a ſingular promiſe, that he might thereby ſtir vs vp the more earneſtly to exerciſe the ſame.

20. VVhere two or three are gathered in my name. This promiſe ſtretcheth further then the former. For the Lord declareth that he will be preſente as oft as two or three ſhal be gathered in his name, that hee may directe them with his counſell, and bringe to proſperous ſucceſſe whatſoeuer they ſhall take in hande. There is no cauſe therefore why they ſhould doubt, which delyuer ouer themſelues to be ruled by hym, but that they ſhall feele by his preſence that profit and fruit they ſhall deſire. But ſith it is an ineſtimable good thing, to haue Chriſt the chiefe and preſidente in all our affayres, as againe nothing is more miſerable then to be without his grace: this promiſe ſhould be no ſmall ſpurre to vs, that we might godlyly and holyly ioyne togeather amongſte our ſelues. For whoſoeuer eyther neglecteth the holy aſſemblies, or negligently ſeparateth himſelfe from the brethren, or behaue himſelfe careleſly in preſeruinge vnitie, dooth hereby declare that he maketh no accounte of the preſence of Chriſte.

But firſt it muſt be prouided, that they which deſire to haue Chriſte preſent, ſhould be gathered in his name. But the definition of this clauſe muſt alſo be noted, that the wicked do no leſſe falſely & impudētly then wickedly make hys holye name as a cloake to their conſpiracies. Therefore excepte we wyll caſte Chriſte forth to theyr ſcornes, and togeather ouerthrowe that which he here promyſed: firſt, it muſt be known what this ſaying meaneth: namely, that they which are gathered, all lettes being caſt away, which hynder vs from comming to Chriſte, ſhould come ſincerely to Chriſt, and yeelde to obey his worde, and ſuffer themſelues to be gouerned by his ſpirite. VVhere this ſimplicitie taketh place, it is not to be feared but that Chriſte by his bleſsinges wyll openly declare, that that the company is not gathered together in vaine. VVherin the groſſe follye of the Papiſtes doth bewray it ſelfe. They cry that theyr councels cannot erre, and therefore that al theyr decrees muſt bee holden: becauſe that as ofte as two or three are gathered in the name of Chriſte, hee is in the midſt of them. But firſt it were to be demaunded, whether they came together in the name of Chriſte or no, of whoſe faith, doctrine & affection it is doubted. VVhile the Papiſts doe omitte or hyde this, who ſeeth not that the differēce between the holy & prophane aſſemblyes, are ſubtilly confounded by them, that the power of doing any thing may be tranſferred from the Church to the ſworne enemies of Chriſt? Therefore let vs know, that none but the godly worſhippers of God, which do ſincerely ſeeke Chriſt are comforted here with hope, that they ſhuld not doubte of hys preſence. And the baſtarde and vnfruitefull councelles, whiche weaue webbes of theyr owne braynes, beeinge lefte, Chriſte wyll alwayes remain as chiefe with the doctrine of his Goſpel amongſt vs.

Math. 18.	Mark.	Luk. 17
21. Then came Peter to him, and ſayde, maiſter, how oft ſhal my brother ſinne againſt me and I ſhal forgiue him? vnto ſeuen times?		4. And though hee ſinne agaynſte thee ſeuen tymes in a day, & ſeuen times in a daye turne againe to thee, ſaying, it repenteth me, thou ſhalt forgiue him
22. Ieſus ſayde vnto him, I ſaye not to thee, vnto ſeuen times, but vnto ſeuenty times ſeuen times.
23. Therefore is the kingdome of heauen likened vnto a certeine king, which would take accounte of his ſeruants.
24. And when hee had begunne to reckon, one was brought vnto him, which ought him tenne thouſande talents.
25. And beecauſe he had nothing to paye, his maſter commaunded him to be ſold, and his wife, and his children, and al that he had, and the debt to bee payde.
26. The ſeruaunte therefore fell downe, and beeſought him, ſaying, maiſter, appeaſe thine anger toward me, and I will pay thee all.
27. Then that ſeruaunts maiſter had compaſſion, and loſed him, and forgaue him the debt.
28. But when the ſeruaunt was departed, he found one of his fellowes, whiche ought him an hundred pence, and he layde handes on him, and tooke him by the threat, ſaying, pay me that thou oweſt.
29. Then his fellowe fell downe at his feete, and beſought him, ſaying, appeaſe thine anger towarde me, and I wil pay thee al.
30. Yet

30. Yet he would not, but went and caſte him into priſon, till he ſhould pay the debt.
31. And when his other fellowes ſawe what was don, they were very ſory, and came and declared to theyr maſter all that was done.
32. Then his maſter called him, and ſaid vnto him, O euil ſeruant, I forgaue thee al that debt, becauſe thou praidſt me.
33. Oughteſt not thou alſo to haue had pittye on thy fellow, euen as I had pittie on thee?
34. So his maſter was wroth, and deliuered him to the iaylers, tyll hee ſhoulde paye all that was due to him.
35. So likewiſe ſhall my heauenly father doe vnto you, except ye forgiue from your hearts, ech one to his brother their treſpaſſe.

21. Maiſter, how oft. Peter maketh this obiection according to the cõmon ſenſe and wiſdome of the fleſh. Naturally it is grafted in all men, that they would haue themſelues pardoned, ſo that if any man doe not preſently obtaine forgiuenes, he complaineth that he is ſtreightlye and vnkindly dealt with: but it is much a doe to finde them that will ſhewe themſelues eaſie to bee entreated of others, which deſire to bee gentlye dealte with themſelues. Therefore, when the Lorde exhorted his diſcyples to louing kindneſſe, this doubt came into Peters minde: what ſhall come of it, if wee be ſo ready to forgiue, but that our gentleneſſe ſhall be a bayght to prouoke them to ſinne? Therefore he demaundeth whether it be conuenient to forgiue them that ſinne often. For the number of ſeuen, ſignifieth as much as the aduerbe ſeuen times, and is taken for a great number. As if hee ſhould haue ſaide, Maſter, howe ofte wouldeſt thou haue vs to receiue them that offend into fauour? For it is abſurde and vnprofitable that they ſhould finde vs ſo ready to be appeaſed. But Chriſt is ſo farre from being moued with this obiection, that he expreſſly ſaith, that there ſhuld be no end of forgiueing. Neither yet would he appoint any certeine number, but rather commandeth that we ſhould neuer be weary. Luke doth ſomwhat differ from Mathew: for he ſimplye reporteth the commandement of Chriſte, that wee ſhoulde bee readye to forgiue ſeuen times: yet the ſenſe and meaninge agreeth, that wee ſhuld be ready and willing to forgiue not once, or twiſe, but as oft as the ſinner repenteth. This is the onely difference, that according to Mathew the Lord reprouing Peter, for that he was too ſtreight in that behalfe, encreaſeth the number hyperbolically, which of it ſelfe ſufficeth to ſette forth the ſumme of the matter. Neither did Peter aske the queſtiõ, whether he ſhould forgiue ſeuen times, for that he was content to goe ſo far, but that by obiecting or making a ſhew of a great abſurditie, hee might drawe Chriſte from his iudgment, as I touched euen now: for hee that will be ready to forgiue ſeuen times, wil alſo be appeaſed at the ſeuenty offence.

But out of Lukes wordes there aryſeth an other queſtion; becauſe Chriſt Chriſt doeth not commaund to forgiue, but when the ſinner doth turne to vs and ſhall teſtifie his repentance: for by this meanes hee ſeemeth to graunt his liberty to deny mercy and forgiueneſſe to the wicked. I anſweare, offences are forgiuen two wayes. If any man doe me an iniurie, and I laying aſide the deſire of reuenge, doe not ceaſe to loue him, but in ſtead of iniurie, I beſtowe a benefite vpon him: though I thinke hardly of him as he deſerueth, yet am I laid & accounted to forgiue him. For when God commandeth vs to do well to our ennemies, he doeth not therefore preſently require, that we ſhoulde allowe thoſe things in them which he condemneth: but he would onely haue our mindes free from all hatred. In this kind of forgiueneſſe it is not to be looked for, that he which hath offended ſhould come of his owne accorde to appeaſe vs: ſo that it behoueth vs to loue them, which of ſet purpoſe exaſperate vs, which refuſe fauour, and heape olde offences and newe togither. The ſecond manner of forgiuing is, whē we ſo receiue a brother into fauour, that we thinke wel of him, and are perſwaded that the remembraunce of his ſinne is blotted out before God. And this is that I gaue warning of before, that Chriſte doeth not heere ſpeake onely of iniuries done to vs, but of all kinde of offences. For he woulde haue them that are fallen to be holpen by our compaſsion, which doctrine is therefore very neceſſary, for that by nature we are almoſt all froward beyonde meaſure: and Sathan vnder pretence of ſeuerity, driueth vs to extreme rigor, ſo that thoſe miſerable mē that are not forgiuen are ſwallowed vp of ſorrowe and deſpaire. But it is heere againe demaunded whether a man is to be creadited aſſoone as in woorde he ſhall profeſſe repentance. For if this be graunted, it ſhall of neceſsitie followe that wittingly and willingly they offend. And where were then diſcretion, if that without correction any manne might freely ſcorne at vs euen to the hundred offence? I anſwear firſt that he ſpeaketh heere of daily offences, for the which euen the beſt manne hath neede of forgiueneſſe. Therefore, when as in ſo great infirmitie of the fleſhe, we haue ſo dangerous a way, ſo many ſleights and aſſaults, what ſhoulde become of vs, if at the ſecond & third offence all hope of forgiueneſſe were take away? Secondly, it is to be added, that Chriſt ſpoyleth not the faithful of iudgement, that they ſhould fondly be too credulous at one word: but he would onely haue them righteous and kinde, that they may reach their hande to the repentant: if it appeareth that from the heart they are diſpleaſed with thēſelues for their ſinnes. For repentance is a holy thing, and hath nede of diligent examination: but as oft as the ſinner ſhall giue a ſigne of conuerſion, Chriſt would that he ſhould be admitted to reconciliation, leaſt he being ouerthrowne with the repulſe, ſhuld faint. Thirdly it is to be noted, when any manne hath giuen ſuſpition of himſelfe, becauſe of his lightneſſe and inconſtancie, we may ſo releaſe him when he asketh forgiuenes, that hereafter we may marke his maners, leaſt he deſpiſe our pacience and kindeneſſe whiche proceedeth from the ſpirite of Chriſt. For the counſell of the Lorde muſt be holden, that they that are fallen muſt bee holpen with our kindneſſe, that they may be raiſed vppe againe. And certainly we muſt imitate the goodneſſe of our heauenly father, who meeteth ſinners a farre off, that hee maye call them to repentaunce. Further, when as repentance is a maruellous woorke of the ſpirite, and the creation of a newe man, if we deſpiſe the ſame, we doe iniurie to God himſelfe.

23. The kingdome of heauen is likened vnto a certaine king. Becauſe it is hard to draw vs to mercy: and eſpecially when as many faults of our brethrē are to be borne with, there doeth preſently a loathſomneſſe creepe vppon vs, the Lord doth confirme this doctrine, with a moſt apt and fitte parable. The ſumme whereof is this, they that will not be brought to forgiue the offences of the brethren, doe very euill prouide for themſelues, and they make too hard and too ſtraight a law for themſelues: for they ſhal finde God as ſtraight & as hard to be entreated towardes them. For the ſimilitude conſiſteth eſpecially in 3. poyntes: for the maiſter is ſet againſt the ſeruant, a great ſum againſt ſmall or meane things, ſingular clemency to extreme cruelty. Thete 3. things being obſerued, the meaning of Chriſte may be eaſily gathered. For what are we if we be compared with God? And now what ſumme is euery one of vs endebted towards him? Laſtly, how light are the offences wherwith our brethren be endangered to vs, if our obligation to God be conſidered? How vnworthy therefore of the merey of God is a miſerable wretch loaden with an intollerable burden, who is ſo hard to be entreated of his fellowes, that he will not forgiue the leaſt offence? As concerning the words, the ſpiritual eſtate of the Churche, is heere called the kingdom of heauen: as if Chriſt ſhould haue ſayde, the caſe betweene God and manne in reſpecte of the ſoule, and the eſtate of the ſpirituall life is at that poynt, as betweene a ciuil earthly maſter, and his ſeruauntes, in reſpecte of money and the buſineſſes of this preſent life.

25. His maiſter commanded him. It were a friuolous thing ſubtlely to ſearch & ſift out euery perticular poynt here: for god doth not alwaies ſhew his rigour vnto vs at the firſt, vntill wee be driuen to entreate and to ſue for forgiueneſſe: nay he preuenteth vs with his free goodneſſe, but he onely teacheth what ſhoulde become of vs, if God ſhould vſe vs, as in iuſtice he might. Alſo, if he ſhuld exacte of vs that which is due, how meete it were for vs to flee to prayers, for this is the onely remaining refuge for ſinners. The great difference betweene the ſummes is alſo to be noted: for when as one talent is more then a hundred pence, what are a hundred pence to ten thouſand talents?

31. When his fellow ſeruants. Though there is no myſterie to be ſought in theſe woordes, yet becauſe they containe nothing but that which nature teacheth, and we doe daily learne by experience, it is to be knowen that we ſhall haue ſo many aduerſaries and witneſſes againſt vs before God, as there are men with whom we liue: becauſe it cannot otherwiſe be but that ſuch cruelty ſhuld be diſpleaſant & odious to them, eſpecially while euery man is afraid of himſelf, leaſt that ſhould light vpon his own head, which he ſeeth befall vnto another. The queſtion that is demaunded out of the ſentence folowing is but in vaine, how God will puniſh thoſe ſins which he hath forgiuen: for this is the ſimple meaning: Though he offer mercy to all mē, yet they are vnworthy to enioy the ſame, which are ſuch cruel dealers, of whom no pardon may be obtained. But the Papiſts are to be ſcorned at, while they would draw their Purgatorie fire out of the aduerb vntil: for it is euidēt that Chriſt here ſpeaketh of eternal death, & not of any temporal puniſhment, wherby he ſhuld ſatiſfie the iudgement of God.

Mathew

Mathew 17.	Marke.	Luke.
24. And when they were come to Capernaum, they that receiued polle money, came to Peter and ſayd: Doeth not your maiſter pay tribute? 25. He ſayd, yes. And when he was come into the houſe, Ieſus preuented him, ſayinge: VVhat thinkeſt thou Simon? Of whome doe kings of the earth take tribute or polle money? Of their children or of ſtrangers? 26. Peter ſayd vnto him: of ſtrangers. Then ſayde Ieſus vnto him: then are the children free. 27. Neuertheleſſe, leaſt we ſhould offend them, goe to the ſea, and caſte in an angle, and take the firſte fiſhe that commeth vppe, and when thou haſt opened his mouth, thou ſhalt finde a piece of 20. pence: that take, and giue it vnto them for thee and me.

24. And when they were come to Capernaum. The purpoſe of this hyſtorie muſt eſpecially be noted: for in that Chriſt willingly declared his ſubiection, euen as he had taken vpon him the ſhape of a ſeruaunt: yet withall he ſheweth both by words and by myracle, that he was not ſo debaſed either by law or by neceſsity, but of his owne free and voluntary ſubmiſsion, that the world ſhould eſteme him, as ſome one of the cõmon people. This was not cuſtome which was woont to be gathered for paſſage, but a yearely tribute whiche was impoſed vppon the Iewes for euery of their heads, that they ſhould pay that to tyrants, which they were wont to pay to God alone. For we know that this tribute was ſet vppon them by the law, that by the yerely paimẽt of half a ſicle, they ſhuld profeſſe God of whom they were redemed to be their chiefe king. VVhen as the kings of Aſia had trãſlated it vnto themſelues, it pleaſed the Romanes wel to follow their example. So the Iewes being as it were eſtranged from the gouernment of God, paied to prophane tyrants the holy tribute commaunded in the law. Yet it might ſeeme abſurd, that Chriſt cõming to redeme the people, coulde not ſet himſelfe free from tribute. That he might take away this offence, he taught in words that he was bound therto, but only of his owne free wil, and he proued the ſame by myracle: for he coulde haue exempted himſelfe from earthly Empire, that ruled the ſea & fiſhes.

Your maiſter. Some thinke that the toll gatherers vpbraided Chriſt, as if that he ſhould withdraw himſelfe from the common courſe. For as they were a ſcornefull and a reprochefull kinde of men, ſo I thinke that this was reprochefully ſpoken. For whereas euery man was wont to be ſeaſed in his owne citie, we knowe that Chriſt had no quiet abiding in any one place. Therefore theſe men doe demaunde, whether he be free from lawes, becauſe that as a wanderer, hee goeth about hither and thither. And Peter in his anſweare made a modeſt excuſe to appeaſe them: Yes ſayeth he, he will pay. VVherby we gather that Chriſt was wont to pay before: becauſe Peter promiſed it as a thing not to be doubted of. And that they call vppon him, rather then vppon the other, I thinke was for that Chriſt dwelt with him: for if they had all vſed one lodging, the exaction ſhould haue been common.

Therefore

Therefore the Papiſtes are to be laughed at, which vnder ſo friuolous a pretence, do make Peter a companion with Chriſt in dignitie. He choſe him a Vicare ſay they, and made him in honour like to himſelfe, whom in paying of tribute hee made equall to himſelfe. But by this meanes they may make all ſwineheards Chriſtes vicares, for euen they paid as much. If that Peters ſupremacie appeared in paying of tribute, from whence is this immunitie which they chalenge to themſelues? But ſo it behoueth them to be very fooliſhly fonde, which doe ſo depraue the ſcripture after their owne pleaſure.

VVhat thinkeſt thou Simon? Chriſt heerein made a ſhewe of his diuinitie, declaring that nothing is hidden from them. But whereto tendeth his ſpeach? Is it to exempt him and his from ſubiection to the lawes? So ſome doe expounde it that Chriſtians are free by right: but that they doe freely ſubmit themſelues to the common order, becauſe that otherwiſe humane ſocietie coulde not be maintained. Yet I thinke this rather to be the meaning: Becauſe it was daungerous, leaſt the diſciples ſhoulde thinke that Chriſt came in vaine, for ỹ by paying of tribute he might take away hope of deliuerance, he ſimply ſayeth that he doeth therefore pay tribute, becauſe that he doth of his owne accorde abſtaine from his owne right and power, whereof is to be gathered that nothinge is diminiſhed from hys kingdome. But why doeth not he chalenge to himſelfe that whiche was his owne? namely, becauſe his maieſtie was vnknowen to the tribute gatherers. For though his kingdome is ſpirituall, yet it muſt ſo be eſteemed of, ſith he was the onely ſonne of God, that he was alſo heir of the whole world, that all things ought to be ſubiecte to him, and to be brought into order before him. The meaning therefore is, that kings are not therefore appoynted of God to rule ouer mankinde, neither hathe he eſtabliſhed common wealthes, that he which is the ſonne, ſhuld without reſpect be brought into the ſame ſeruitude with other men: yet, vntill the glory of his kingdome be manifeſted, he doth willingly abaſe himſelfe to be as a ſeruaunt togither with others. The Pope doeth no leſſe fooliſhly then happily abuſe this, that he might free his cleargie from lawes: as though that a ſhaue crown could make them the ſonnes of God, which ſhuld be free from tributes and taxes. But Chriſt had no ſuche purpoſe, as to chalenge himſelfe the honour of the kinges ſonne, that hee might thereby at the leaſt, obtaine to haue a houſe free by priuiledge from the common order. VVherfore the Anabaptiſts do very ignorantly wreſt theſe words for the weakening of the politike eſtate: for there is nothing more certaine, then that Chriſt did not pleade for the common right of the faithfull: but tooke onely a ſimilitude from kings, which togither with them of their houſholdes are free.

27. Caſt in an angle. Though I doe graunt that Chriſtes bagges were not alwayes full, yet I doe not thinke that he was enforced by want to giue this commaundement to Peter: but that he might prooue by myracle, that his dominion reacheth further, then all the kings of the earth, for he hath the fiſhes tributaries to him. And we reade that he did this onely once: for one inſtruction in his whole life was ſufficient. Further, a ſtater was ſo much in value as a ſiccle, namely, four drachmes, or two didrachmes.

49. And Iohn anſweared & ſaid: Maiſter, we ſawe one caſting out diuels in thy name, and wee forbade him, becauſe hee followed not thee wyth vs.
50. Then Ieſus ſayde vnto hym: Forbid yee him not: for hee that is not againſt vs, is with vs.
51. And it came to paſſe, when the daies were accomplished, that he ſhould be receiued vppe: he ſetteled himſelfe fully to goe to Ieruſalem,
52. And ſent meſſengers before him: and they went and entered into a towne of the Samaritanes, to prepare him lodging.
53. But they woulde not receiue him, becauſe his behauiour was, as though he would goe to Ieruſalem.
54. And when his diſciples, Iames and Iohn ſawe it, they ſayde, Lorde: wilt thou that wee commaunde that fire come downe from heauen, and conſume them as Elias did?

MAR. 38. Maiſter. Hereby it appeareth that the name of Chriſte was as then renowmed, ſo that they vſed it, which were not acquainted with his diſciples: or it may be that they abuſed the ſame, for I dare not affirme any certaintye of it. It may be, that the partie heere mentioned, embraced the doctrine of Chriſt, and gaue himſelfe to woorke myracles not of any euill minde. But becauſe that Chriſte gaue this power but to certaine choyce preachers of his Goſpell, I thinke that he tooke this vpon him vnaduiſedly, or rather intruded himſelfe into this office. But though he prepoſterouſly attempted this, in that he durſt imitate the diſciples without commaundement, yet his boldneſſe was not wythout ſucceſſe, for it pleaſed the Lorde by this meanes alſo to make his name knowen: as he worketh ſometime by them whoſe miniſterie he doth not allow as lawfull. Furthermore, there is no cauſe to the contrary, but a man that hath a perticular faith, may followe a blinde zeale: and ſo caſt himſelfe headlong to woorking of myracles. Nowe I come to Iohn and to his companions. They ſay that they forbad a man from woorking of myracles. VVhy did they not firſt aſke whether it was lawful or no? For they beinge nowe vncertaine and in doubt, doe aske the maſters iudgement. VVhereof it followeth, that they without conſideration toke vpon them authoritie of forbidding. VVherfore he is to be condemned of raſhneſſe, who ſoeuer ſhall attempt more then he knoweth to be allowed him by the woorde of God. Furthermore, Chriſtes diſciples are to be ſuſpected of ambition: for they doe this in defence of the priuiledge of their owyne honour. For howe commeth it to paſſe, that they ſhoulde ſo-

dainly reſtraine a manne with whome they were not acquainted from woorking of myracles, but becauſe they alone woulde enioy this libertie? for they doe alledge this cauſe, that he followed not Chriſt: as if they ſhould haue ſayde: He is no follower of thine as we are: therefore why ſhould he haue this honour?

39. Forbid him not. Chriſt wold not haue him forbidden, not that he had ſet him a worke, or allowed his dede, or elſe wold haue it allowed by his diſciples: but becauſe that is to bee borne with, and to be reioyced at, where God is glorified by any occaſion. So Paule, Phill. 1. 18. though he was diſpleaſed with the euill dealinge or ambition of the wanderers, which boaſted themſelues with the name of the Goſpel, yet he reioyceth that the glory of Chriſt is ſette foorth by this occaſion. And the reaſon is to be noted, which followeth, that it cannot be, that he ſhoulde ſpeake euill of Chriſte, that wrought myracles in his name: and therefore that was to haue beene accounted as gaine. For thereof it followeth, that except the diſciples had beene more giuen to their owne glory, then ſtudious and deſirous to ſette foorth the glory of the maiſter, they would not haue take the matter ſo grieuouſly, when as they ſaw the ſame ſet forth, and encreaſed otherwiſe. Neither yet, where as Chriſte ſayeth that they are to be accounted as friendes, which are not open ennemies, doeth hee commaunde to lette the bridle ſlacke to all raſh menne to do what they luſt, that we ſhould holde our peace, while they according to their pleaſure ſhould ſtirre hether and thether, and trouble the whole order of the Churche (for ſuche licentiouſneſſe muſt be brideled ſo farre as our calling will ſuffer) he onely denieth that they doe well, which doe earneſtly withſtand and ſtoppe, leaſt the kingdome of God ſhould encreaſe by any meanes. Neither doeth he ſo acknowledge them for his, as that he accounteth them of his flocke, which are indifferent betweene ennemies and friendes: but his meaning was, that in as much as they hurt not, they doe profite and helpe. For it is a prouerbiall ſayinge, whereby we are warned not to mooue warre, vntill we be prouoked to the ſame.

LVKE. 51. When the dayes were accomplished. Onely Luke reporteth this hyſtorie, which yet is not a little profitable many wayes, for firſt the Diuine fortitude and conſtancie of Chriſt in deſpiſing death is heere deſcribed: Then, what great hatred and enimities diſſentions in religion do breede: Thirdly, howe the nature of menne is caried to impatience with a raſhe zeale: Further, howe ready and apt it is to followe the falles and faultes of the Sainctes: Laſtly, we are taught meekeneſſe by the example of Chriſte. But the death of Chriſt is called a taking away, not only becauſe he was then taken from amongſt men, but becauſe that he departing from the baſe priſon of the fleſh, aſcended vp on high.

Hee had ſettled himſelfe. Heereby Luke declareth, that when the death of Chriſte was before his eyes, the feare of it being caſt away, he went forwardes to meete the ſame: yet withal he declareth that he did ſtriue, that as a conquerour of the terrour, hee might boldly offer himſelfe to death. For if no feare had beene throwne vppon him, if no difficultie, no ſtriſe, no care, to what ſhoulde he ſettle his countenaunce? But becauſe hee was neither blockiſhe, nor yet caried away with a raſhe and headie boldneſſe, it behooued him to be mooued at that cruell and bitter death: Naye, at that fearefull and horrible torment, whiche he knewe to be neare ready to fall vppon him from the ſeuere iudgement of God: and euen that is ſo farre from darkening or diminiſhing of his glory, that it is a notable ſhewe and declaration of his loue towardes vs. For not regardinge himſelfe, that hee might apply himſelfe to our ſaluation, thorough the middeſt of terrours he haſtened vnto death, the day and time whereof, he knewe to be neare.

52. And ſent meſſengers before him. It is to be ſuppoſed, that hee then hadde a great company of followers with him. The meſſengers are ſent, neither to prepare pleaſant dainties, nor to chuſe ſome beautifull palace, but onely to declare, that a greate companye of ſtraungers were comminge. But they beinge ſhutte out and repulſed, doe tarie waytinge for their maiſter. Further, we doe heereby learne, that whiche I noted in the ſeconde place, when as men doe diſagree betweene themſelues in matters of doctrine of Religion, they doe eaſily fall out into mutuall hatred. For it was a ſigne of moſte bitter hatred, to defraude the hungrie of their meate, and to deny harbour to the weary. But the Iewiſhe religion was ſo euill thought of, and eſteemed amongeſt the Samaritanes, that they thought them not woorthy of any kindneſſe whiche followed it. It may bee, that the griefe of the reproache vexed them, that they knewe that the Iewes accounted their temple as prophane, and deteſted it, and eſteemed them as degenerate and corrupt worſhippers of God. But when as ſuperſtition was once receiued, they frowardly ſtacke to the ſame, and wyth a wicked emulation they contended to defend the ſame.

At the lengthe the contention grewe ſo hotte, that in one fire it deſtroyed bothe theyr Countreys: for Ioſephus declareth that it was the firebrande of the warres of the Iewes. And thoughe Chriſte coulde readily haue auoyded that enuie, yet hee hadde rather hymſelfe to bee a Iewe, then to gette hym lodginge by an ouerthwarte deniall of the ſame.

54. And when his Diſciples ſawe it. It may be, the region where they were, putte them in minde that they ſhould deſire that lightning ſhould fal down vpō the wicked: for in times paſt Elias had in that place ouerthrowne wyth fire from heauen the kings ſouldiours, whiche were ſent to take him, 2. Reg. 1. 10. Therefore it came into their minde, to thinke that the Samaritanes which ſo vnwoorthily reiected the ſonne of God, were ordained to the like deſtruction. And heere we doe ſee whether a foliſh imitation of the holy fathers doth cary vs. Iames and Iohn do pretende the example of Elias: but they conſider not howe much they differre from Elias, they doe not examine the extremitie of their zeale, they looke not to the callinge of God. The Samaritanes had the like goodlye pretence for their idolatrie, as it is ſette downe in Iohn 4. 20. but they were both amiſſe, for that wythout any regarde, they were rather Apes then followers of the holy fathers. And thoughe it is doubted, whether they thought the power to be in their owne handes, or that they deſired Chriſt to giue it them: yet I doe thinke this the more probable, that they were lift vppe with a fooliſh hope, thinking themſelues ſufficiently armed to execute that reuenge, ſo that Chriſt would allow of it.

55. Yee knowe not of what ſpirite yee are. By this aunſweare Chriſt not only reſtrained the vnbrideled heat in the two diſciples, but he alſo preſcribeth a rule to vs all, that we nouriſh not any ſuch heat in vs. For it behoueth him, who ſoeuer he be that attempteth any thing, that he be wel aſſured with himſelfe, that he haue the ſpirite of God for his authour and his guide, and that he be led with a right and pure inſtincte of him. Feruencie of zeale doeth cary many men: but if the wiſdome of the ſpirit be wanting, they become as blubbers and frothe. Alſo it often falleth out, that the troubleſome affections of the fleſh are mixed with the zeale, and they which ſeeme to be moſte zealous of the glorye of God, are blinded with a priuate affection of the fleſh. VVherfore, except the Spirit of God doe guide our zeale, it will not ſerue for an excuſe, that wee attempted nothing but of a good zeale. But the Spirite it ſelfe ſhall gouerne vs by counſell and wiſedome, that we doe nothing beſide our duetye, nor beyonde our callinge, alſo that we attempt not any thing but wiſely and conueniently: Further, he will indue our mindes (euery dreg of the fleſh being wiped away) with a right affection, that we deſire not any thinge but that which God commaundeth. Chriſt alſo blameth his diſciples, for that they were farre from the ſpirite of Elias, and that they doe wickedly in taking that to thẽſelues which he did. For Elias executed the iudgement of God, which was cõmaunded him by the ſpirite of God, but theſe men, not by the commaundement of God, but by the prouocation of the fleſh, are caried to ſeeke reuenge. VVherefore the examples of the Saincts are no defence to vs, except the ſame ſpirite doe dwell in vs, which directed them.

Mathew 19.	Marke 10.	Luke.

7. They ſayde vnto him: VVhy then did Moſes commaunde to giue a bill of diuorcement, and to putte her away?	6. But at the beginninge of the creation, GOD made them male and female.

the hardnesse of your heart, suffered to put away your wiues, but frō the beginning it was not so.

9. I say therefore vnto you, that who soeuer shall put away his wife, except it be for whoredome and marry another, committeth adulterie: and whosoeuer marrieth her which is diuerced, doth commit adulterie.

one flesshe: so that they are no more twaine, but one flesh.

9. Therefore, what God hath coupled together, let no man separate.

10. And in the house his Disciples asked him againe of that matter

11. And he sayd vnto them: who soeuer shal put away his wife, & marrie another cōmitteth adultery against her.

12. And if a woman put away her husband, and be married to another, shee committeth adulterie.

Though the Pharisies doe lay snares for Christ, and do craftily set vpon him, that they might intrappe him, yet their malice wrought for our profite: as the Lord doeth wonderfully knowe how to turne to the good of his, what soeuer things the wicked doe deuise for the subuersion of true doctrine. For by this occasion was the question answered, which the libertie of diuorcement did bring forth, and there was a certaine law deliuered, of the holy and inseparable knot of Matrimonie. But thereof is taken an occasion of quarrelling, because that the answere could not bee but odious on both sides in respecte of them. They demand whether it is lawful for a mā to put away his wife for euery cause: If christ denie it, they will cry out that he doth wickedly abrogate the law: If he affirme it, they will bragge that he is rather a baud, then a Prophet of God, who will so fauour the lust of men. And this they had conceiued in their mindes: but the sonne of God, who knew how to take the wise in their owne subtlety, deceiued them of their hope, and seuerely resisted their vnlawfull diuorcements: yet shewing withall, that hee bringeth forth nothing but that which was agreeable to the lawe. For he concludeth the matter in two pointes: he sayth that the order of creation should be as a law, that a man should keepe his marriage promise as a lawe all his whole life, and that diuorcements were permitted, not that they were lawfull: but because he had to doe with a people that was stubborne, and would not be taught.

4. Haue yee not read. Christ doeth not answere directly to that which is demanded, but hee doeth plainely satisfie the question proposed: as if any man now being demanded of the masse, should faithfully declare the mysterie of the holy supper, and should at the length inferre, that they are sacrilegious and falsifiers, that dare bee so bolde as to adde or to diminish any thing from the pure institution of the Lord, he should openly ouerthrowe the fained sacrifice of the masse. And Christe taketh this rule, God from the beginning ioyned manne and woman together, that they two might make one perfect man. Therefore hee that putteth away his wife, teareth away from himselfe as it were the one halfe of himselfe. But nature suffereth not, that any man should rend asunder his owne body. Hee addeth another argument drawne from the lesse to the greater, the bonde of matrimonie is holier and straiter, then that wherein the children are bound to the parents. But godlineſſe tieth the children to the parentes in a band that cannot bee loosed. Much leſſe therefore may the husband, renounce his wife. Hereof it followeth that the bande made of God, is broken if a man be diuorced from his wife. And nowe this is the meaning of the wordes. That God the maker of mankinde, made man and woman, that euery man being contented with one onely wife, ſhould not deſire any others: for he reſteth vpon the number of two, as alſo the Prophet Malachie, cha. 2.10. when he inueighed againſt Polygamie, bringeth the ſame reaſon, that God in whom ther was aboundāce of ſpirit, ſo that it was at his pleaſure to create mo, yet made but one man: namely, ſuch as is here deſcribed of Chriſt. Therefore the inſeparable ſocietie of one husband with one wife, is proued by the order of creation. If any man ſhall obiect, that by this reaſon it ſhall not be lawfull, the firſte wife being dead, to take an other: The anſwere is eaſie: the bande is not only broken by death, but the ſecond wife is placed of God in the roomth of the former, as if ſhee were one and the ſame.

5. For this cauſe ſhall a man leaue father. It is doubted whether Moſes bringeth in Adam, or God ſpeaking in that place: but whether of the two thou takeſt, it maketh litle to this preſent place: for it was ſufficient to bring the Oracle of God, though it ſhould be ſpoken by Adam. But hee doth not ſimply commande him that marrieth a wife, to leaue his father, for ſo God ſhould be contrary to himſelfe, if by Matrimonie he ſhould aboliſh that honour which he cōmandeth children to vſe towardes their parents: but while compariſon is made betweene thoſe duties, the wife is preferred before father and mother. But if any man ſhould ſend backe meſſage to his father, & ſhould ſhake off that yoake whereto he is bounde, no man would allow ſuch a monſter. Much leſſe then ſhal there be libertie granted to diſſolue Matrimonie.

They ſhall be two in one fleſh. By this Polygamie is no leſſe condemned, then that libertie of putting away wiues. For if the knitting together of two be ſanctified of the Lorde, then the ioyning eyther with three or foure is adulterous. But Chriſt as I ſayd a litle before, doeth apply it otherwiſe to his purpoſe, euen thus, that who ſoeuer ſhould put away his wife, ſhould rend himſelfe in peeces: for the power of holy Matrimonie is ſuch, that the husbande and the wife become one fleſhe. Neither was it the purpoſe of Chriſt to bring in the foule & filthy deuice of Plato, but hee ſpeaketh reuerently of that order appoynted by God. Therefore let the husband & the wife ſo liue together, that the one may ſo nouriſh the other, euen as the one halfe part of himſelfe: and let him ſo command, as the head of the wife, and not as a tyrant: in like maner let the woman modeſtly ſubmit her ſelfe in obedience.

6. That which God hath ioyned together. Chriſte in this ſentence brideleth the luſt of men, that they ſhould not by forſaking their wiues, breake the holy knot. And as he denieth it to be in the power of the man to break matrimony, ſo hee giueth a law to all others, that they ſhould not confirme vnlawfull diuorces by their authority. For the Magiſtrate abuſeth his authoritie, which ſheweth fauour to a mā to put away his wife: yet chriſt properly bent himſelfe to this purpoſe, ♀ euery man ſhould religiouſly maintaine the faith which he hath giuen for himſelfe, and they which are prouoked by luſt or wicked affection to diuorcement:

let them thus think with themselues: who art thou that wouldest take liberty to thy selfe to breake that which God hath ioyned. But this doctrine may also be applyed further The Papists imagining vs a Church separated from Christ her head, they do leaue vs an vnperfect & a maimed body: in the holy supper whereas Christe ioyned bread and wine, they are so bolde as to depriue all the people of the vse of the cuppe. Against these deuilish corruptions we may oppose: that which God hath ioyned together, let no man put a sunder.

7. Why then did Moses. They hadde thought vpon this quarrell before, if Christe (which was most likely) shoulde require the lawfull vse of diuorcements. For what soeuer God permitteth in his lawe, seemeth to bee lawfull, whose onely will maketh the difference betweene good and euill. But Christe meeteth their false enuy with a fitte answer, that Moses graunted this for their frowardnesse, and not as that he should allow it as lawfull. And he confirmeth this saying with a notable reason: Because it was not so from the beginning. Hee taketh this as graunted, when God at the beginning instituted Matrimonie, he established a perpetuall law which should be in force euen to the end If that the institution of Matrimony is to bee accounted as a lawe inuiolable, it followeth that what soeuer declineth from the same, proceedeth not from the pure nature of the same, but of the corruption of men. Yet it is demaunded whether it was lawfull for Moses to permitte that, which of it selfe was euill and corrupt: I answere, that which he did not seuerely forbidde, is vnproperly sayde to bee permitted. For he gaue no lawe of diuorcementes, as that he woulde approue the same by his allowance: but when as the wickednesse of men coulde not otherwise bee restrained, hee gaue that remedy which was most tollerable, that the man shoulde at the least giue testimony of the chastity of his wife. For the lawe was not giuen but in fauour of the women, least that after they were vniustly reiected, they shoulde incurre any slaunder. Whereby we gather that it was rather a punishment layd vpon the men, then a liberty or permission graunted for the prouocation of their lust. Note also that the spirituall gouernment, doth differ much from the politike and outward order. What is lawfull and meete to bee done, the Lorde comprehendeth in tenne woordes: nowe because it may bee that many thinges are not called before the iudgement seate of men, whereof euery mannes conscience reproueth and conuinceth him, it is no meruaile if politike lawes doe agree vnto them. Let vs take a familiar example, we haue greater liberty to contende by lawes, then the rule of charitie will beare. Why is this so? because right cannot bee giuen to euery manne, except there bee a way opened to demaunde it: in the meane season the inwarde lawes of GOD sheweth, that that must be followed which charity commaundeth, yet there is heere no cause why Magistrates shoulde bee excused for their negligence, if they doe of their owne accorde cease from correctinge of sinnes, or shall omitte those thinges which the estate of their callinge doeth require. But lette priuate menne take heede, leaste by coueringe their offences, vnder pretence of lawes, they double their faulte. For the Lorde doeth here by the way blame the Iewes, as if it were not sufficiēt for thē to haue their frowardnes born with, or passed by without punishment, except they shuld make God the author of their sinne. If that a rule of liuing godly and holily cannot alway? nor euery where bee gathered out of the lawes politicke, much lesse of custome.

9. I say vnto you. Marke reporteth that this was spoken to the Disciples aparte, when they were come into the house: but Matthewe omitting this circumstance, setteth downe the speach: as the Euangelistes doe often leaue out some circumstance by the way. For they count it sufficient to gather the summs of thinges. So there is no difference but that the one setteth downe the matter more plainly then the other. And this is the summe: Though the lawe doth not punish diuorcements, which do differ from the first institution of God, yet hee is an adulterer which putteth away his wife, and taketh him another. For it is not in the will and pleasure of manne, to dissolue the faith of Matrimonie, which the Lorde would haue to remaine firme and sure, therefore she is a harlot that supplyeth the roumth of the lawfull wife. But hee putteth an exception, because that a woman by committing whoredome, cutting her selfe as a rotten member from her husband, setteth him at liberty. They which doe deuise other causes, are worthily reiected, because they will bee wiser then the heauenly maister.

They will haue the Leprosie to bee a lawfull cause of diuorcement, because the infection thereof doeth not onely infecte the husbande but also the children. But as I woulde counsell a young man that hee should not touch his wife that hath the Leprosie, so I do not allow him that liberty to put her away. If any man obiecte, that they which cannot liue alone, haue neede of remedy, least they shoulde burne: I say, that is no remedy, which is without the warrant of the word of God. I alde also, that they shall neuer want the gifte of continencie, if they would deliuer themselues to be gouerned of the Lord: because they follow, that which hee prescribeth. Some manne shall begin to loath his wife, so that he cannot abide to lie with her: shall this euill bee remitted by taking two wiues? An other mans wife shall fall into the palsie, or Apoplexie, or shall bee diseased with some other incureable disease: shall her husband reiecte her vnder pretence of innocencie? But we know that they shall neuer want the helpe of the spirite, which do walke in his wayes. For the auoyding of fornication, sayth Paule, 1.Cor.7.2. Let euery man marry a wife. Hee that hath done this, though it fall not out according to his desire, hath done his part. Therefore, if any thing want, it shall be amended by the help of God. To go any further, it is nothing lesse then to tempt God. And whereas Paul noteth an other cause, 1.Cor.7.25. namely, whereas for hatred of godlines, the married persons are reiected of the vnbeleeuers, that a godly brother or sister, is not then subiect to bondage, is not repugnant from the minde of Christ. For he doth not speake there of a lawfull cause of diuorcement, but onely whether a woman continueth bounde to the vnbeleeuing man, after that she is for hatred of God wickedly put away, and cannot otherwise be receiued into fauour, the if she deny God. Whereof it is no meruaile that Paule chuseth rather to bee separated from men, then to be alienated from God Yet that exception which Christe putteth, seemeth to be in vaine. For if the adultresse deserueth death, to what purpose shuld he speake of diuourcement?

But

But because it was the duty of the husband to follow the adultery with iudgments, that he might cleare his house of that offence, whatsoeuer the successe be, Christ setteth the husband that conuinceth his wife of vnchastitie free from that bonde: and it may be that amongst a corrupt and wicked people this sinne might raigne with freedome from punishment. As the ouerwharte pittie of Magistrates at this day, driueth men of necessity to put away their defiled wiues because adulteries are not punished. And it is to bee noted, that this law is cõmon and free to both partes, as the bonde of faith is mutual and like. For where as the husband is cheife in other thinges, in respect of the bed hee is equall to the wife, for hee is not maister of his owne body. Therefore, when as the adulterer shall fall away from the knot of matrimonie, the wife is set at liber tie.

Hee that marieth her that is put away. This sentence hath beene most corruptly expounded by many interpreters: for they thought generally and confusedly, that it was commaunded to liue sole after diuorcement. So if the husbande should put away the adultere sse, of necessitie they both shoulde liue vnmaried. As if that this were the libertie of diuorcement, onely to lie away from the wife: as if also Christ did not euidently in this cause permit that to be done, which the Iewes were woont generally to vsurpe vnto themselues according to their owne pleasure. Therefore that errour was too grosse: for when Christe condemneth him for adulterie that marieth her that is put away, it is certaine that this is to be vnderstoode of vnlawfull and friuolous diuorcements.

Therefore Paule commaundeth them to remaine vnmaried, which are so put away, or to be reconciled to their husbandes: because that matrimonie is not ouerthrowne by brawlinges and dissentiones, as in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, the seuenth chapter, and the eleuenth verse, and that is gathered out of Marke, whereas the wife by name is spoken of, which should depart from her husbande: not that it was lawfull for the wiues so to giue a bill of diuorcement to the husbandes, but that the Iewes were fallen into strange corruptions: but Marke noted the corruption which the Lord reproued, and then raigned euery where, that after voluntary diuorcements they both went forwarde to a newe mariage. Therefore he maketh no mention of adulterie.

10. Then said his disciples to him: If the matter bee so betweene man and wife, it is not good to marrie.
11. But he sayd vnto them, all men cannot receiue this thing, saue they to whom it is giuen,
12. For there are some chaste, which were so borne of their mothers belly: and there bee some chaste, which be made chaste by menne: and there bee some chaste, which haue made themselues chaste for the kingdome of heauen. He that is able to receiue this, let him receiue it.

As though the eſtate of husbands were very hard, that ſo long as they ſhall remaine chaſt, they ſhould be compelled rather to beare all other thinges then to depart from them: the Diſciples mooued with this anſwere of Chriſte doe except, that it is better to bee without wiues, then to be caught in ſuch a ſnare. But why doe they not againe conſider howe ſtraight the bondage of the wiues is, but that the affections of the fleſhe doeth tie them to themſelues and their owne commodities, that deſpiſing all others, they onely deſire to bee prouided for themſelues. Yet heere doeth a vile vnthankefulneſſe appeare, that they woulde refuſe the ſingular gifte of GOD, eyther for feare or wearines of one diſcommoditie. It were better according to their opinion, to anoyde mariage, then to tie himſelfe in a bande of perpetuall fellowſhip. And if God hath inſtituted Matrimonie for the common good of mankinde, though it bringeth ſome things which are not very acceptable, it muſt not therefore be deſpiſed.

Therefore let vs learne if among the bleſſinges of GOD, there bee any thing which pleaſeth not vs, let vs not bee ſo daintie nor ſo froward, but let vs vſe them with reuerence. Eſpecially, wee muſt take heede of this wickednes in holy Matrimonie: for becauſe it is inwrapped with many troubles, Sathan indeuoureth to vexe it with hatred, and infamie, that he might withdraw men from it. And Hierome heerein ſhewed too euident a token of a malicious and peruerſe witte, in that he doeth not onely quarrell at that holy and godly order of life: but what tauntes or reproches ſoeuer hee caune gather out of prophane writers, hee caſteth vppon it, that hee might ſlaunder and deforme the beautie of the ſame. And let vs thinke that what ſoeuer troubles doe befall in Matrimonie, are accidentall, becauſe they ariſe of the corruption of men.

Alſo let vs remember, that ſith after our nature was corrupted, it became a medicine or ſalue, it is no maruale if a ſowre taſte bee mixed with the ſweete. But it is to be ſeene how the Lord reproueth this fooliſhneſſe. Hee denying all men to be receiuers of this ſaying, declareth that the choiſe is not in our hand, as if that wee had authoritie to conſult of the matter. If any man thinke it profitable for him to bee without a wife, and ſo without tryall made, doeth lay a lawe of ſinfull life vpon himſelfe, is farre deceiued. For God, who ſayde it is good that woman be a helpe to man, will puniſh the contempt of his order: for mortall menne doe arrogate too much vnto themſelues, while they ſtriue to exempt themſelues from the heauenly calling. Further, that it is not free for al men to chuſe which they luſt, Chriſt prooueth by this, becauſe continencie is a ſpeciall gifte. For when he ſayth, all cannot receiue it, but they to whom it is giuen, he plainly declareth that it is not giuen to all men. Whereby their pride is conuinced, which doubt not to arrogate to themſelues, that which Chriſt ſo plainely taketh from them.

12. For there are ſome chaſte. Chriſte nameth three kindes of menne that are chaſte. They which are chaſte by nature, or whiche are made chaſte by men, are driuen from Matrimonie by want: becauſe they lacke thoſe partes of a manne. Others hee ſayeth are chaſte, whiche haue made themſelues chaſte, that they might the better ſerue God. Theſe hee ſetteth free from the neceſſitie of marriage. Whereof it followeth, that all other which doe abhorre Matrimonie, doe with a ſacrilegious boldneſſe after the manner of giantes) fight with God. The Papiſtes vrging this worde, making chaſte, as if men of their owne pleaſure, could make lawes of continency, is too colde. For Chriſte firſt ſheweth that God giueth this to whom he thinketh good. And a little after hee doth againe affirme, that the ſole life is raſhly choſen, where any man is not indued with a ſpeciall giſte. Wherefore this making chaſte, is not ſubiect to free will: but the plaine meaning is: when by nature ſome are apt to marriage, though they doe abſtaine, yet they tempt not God, becauſe God graunteth them liberty.

For the kingdome of heauen. Many doe fooliſhly expound it, for the deſerting of eternall life: as if that ſole life contained in itſelfe ſome meritorious worſhip, as the Papiſts doe faine it to bee an Angelicall eſtate. But Chriſt ment nothing els, but that the maried ought to haue this ende ſet before them, that they being free from all cares, might the diligentlier apply themſelues to the exerciſes of godlines. Therefore it is a fooliſh imagination, to account ſole life for a vertue: for God is no more pleaſed by that, then hee is by faſting, neither doeth it deſerue to be accounted amongſt thoſe duties which God requireth of vs, but he muſt looke to an other end: For Chriſt would expreſly ſet downe, though any man be free from whoredome, yet his ſole life is not approued of God, if he only prouide for his owne eaſe and delightes: but hee is onely hereby excuſed, if he apply it to a free and quiet meditation of the heauenly life. In ſumme, Chriſt teacheth that it is not ſufficient, if the vnmarried doe liue chaſtly, except they do purpoſely abſtain frō it, that they might apply themſelues to better exerciſes.

Hee that is able to receiue this, let him receiue it. By this clauſe Chriſte warneth that the vſe of Matrimonie muſt not be deſpiſed, except that in a blinde raſhneſſe we would caſt our ſelues headlong to deſtruction: for it behoued him to lay his hand vppon his diſciples, whome hee ſawe runne headlong without iudgement. But this admonition is profitable for all menne: for few in choyce of that kinde of life that they will leade, doe conſider what is giuen them of God: but they leape without choyce, whether ſoeuer their vnaduiſed heate doth cary them: and I would this had been better heard heretofore. But I know not with what enchauntments of Sathan their eares were ſtopt, that againſt nature, and as it were in deſpite of God, they woulde lay vppon themſelues that ſnare of perpetuall ſingle life, whom God hadde called to marriage: after, their miſerable ſoules are ſo caught in the deadly ſnare of a vow, ſo that they woulde neuer out of that pit.

Matth. 19.	Marke 10.	Luke 18.
13. Then were brought to him little childrē, that he ſhould put his hands on them, and pray, & the diſciples rebuked them.	13. Then they brought little childrē to him, that he ſhuld touch them: & his diſciples rebuked thoſe that brought them.	15 They brought vnto him alſo babes, that hee ſhould touch them, And when his diſciples ſawe it, they rebuked them. 16. But Ieſus called
14. But Ieſus ſayde: Suffer the little	14. But when Ieſus ſaw it he was little children, and forbid them not to come to me: for of such is the kingdome of heauen.

15. And when he had put his hands on them, he departed thence.

was displeased, and sayd vnto them: Suffer the little childrē to come to me, & forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of god.
15. Verily I say vnto you: who soeuer shall not receiue the kingdome of God as a little childe, shall not enter therein.
16. And hee tooke them vp in his armes, and put his handes vpon them, and blessed them.

led them vnto him: and saide suffer the babes to come vnto me, and forbid thē not: for of such is kingdome of God.
17. Verily I say vnto you, who soeuer receiueth not the kingdome of God as a babe, he shall not enter therein.

This history is very profitable, because it teacheth that Christ doth not onely receiue them which do willingly come to him, by the motion of a holy desire & faith, but also them which by reason of their age, feele not how greatly they doe neede his grace. There is as yet no vnderstanding in these little children, that they should desire to be blessed: yet he receiueth them louingly and kindly, & with a solemne maner of blessing, he consecrateth them to his father.

Their purpose also, which brought the children to christ, should be obserued: for except they had a stedfast perswasion in their mindes, that hee had the power of the spirit in his hand, to poure out vpon the people of God, it had bin absurde to haue brought children to him. Wherefore it is not to bee doubted, but that they desired that his grace might be bestowed vpon them. Therefore for the amplifying of the matter, Luke addeth this word Also, as if he should haue said, after they had tried how many wayes he helpe thē that were growne in yeares, they hoped also that children should not go away from him altogether voyd of all the gifts of the spirit, if he should lay his hands vpon thē. Also, the laying on of hands (as wee sayd other where) was an auncient & solemne maner of blessing amongst the Iewes: therfore it is no maruell, if they desire Christe to pray for their children by vsing that solemne ceremonie. Yet by the way, when the greater blesseth the lesse, Heb. 7.7. they giue vnto him the honour of a great prophet.

13. The disciples rebuked him. If a Diademe hadde beene set vpon his head, they had willingly and with great reioycing accepted it, because that as yet they knew not his proper office. But now they account it a thing vnworthy his person to receiue children: and their errour wanted not colour: for what businesse hath so great a prophet and the sonne of God to doe with children. But heere wee learne that these iudges were not vpright, which esteemed of Christe after the vnderstanding of their owne flesh: for thereof it commeth to passe that they should spoyle him of his proper gifts: and againe would attribute vnto him vnder pretence of honour those thinges which belong not vnto him. From hence sprang a great heape of superstitions, which brought a faigned Christ e into the worlde. Wherefore lette vs learne not to thinke otherwise of him then hee hath taught, nor to put any other person vpon him, then was put by the fathers.

We

Wee see what befell in Popery: they thought that they yeelded great honour to Christe, if they should bow themselues before a crust of bread: a stincking abhomination before God. Againe, because they thought it not honourable enough for him to supply the place of an aduocate for vs, they created for them an innumerable sort of patrons: but by this meanes the honour of the mediatour was taken from him.

14. Suffer little children. He testifieth that he is willing to receiue little children, and then taking them in his armes, he not only embraceth them, but also putting his handes vpon them, he blesseth them. Whereby we gather that his fauour also reacheth euen vnto this age. Neither is it any meruaile: for when as the whole flocke of Adam is shut vp vnder the guiltinesse of death, it is necessary that all from the greatest to the least should perish: but those, which the one redeemer doeth deliuer. But to driue away that age from the grace of redemption, should be too much cruelty: therefore we do not vnaduisedly hold out this buckler against the Anabaptistes. They deny Baptisme to infantes, because they are not capable of that misterie, which is their signed. We do except of the other side, sith Baptisme is a pledge and a signe of free forgiuenesse of sinnes, and also of adoption vnto God, it may not bee denyed to infantes, whome God adopteth and washeth with the bloud of his Sonne. That they obiect that repentance and newnesse of life is there also figured, is easily answered. For they are renewed by the spirite of God, for the measure of their age, vntill by degrees in time conuenient, that vertue which is hidden in them shall encrease and shew it selfe openly. And that they contend that wee cannot be otherwise reconciled to God, and made heires of the adoption but by faith, we graunt this to be true of them that are growne in yeares: but as concerning infantes, this place proueth it to be false.

Certainely, this imposition of handes, was not a iugling nor an idle shewe, neither did Christ poure forth his prayers into the ayre in vaine: & he could not solemnly offer them vnto God, but that he would grant his prayers with out exception. And what should he request for them, but that they might be receiued amongst the Sonnes of God? whereof it followeth, that they were regenerate by the spirite into the hope of saluation. And to bee short, his embracing them declared, that Christ accounted them of his flocke. If that they were partakers of the spirituall giftes, which Baptisme figureth, it were absurde, that they should be depriued of the outward signe. Thirdly, it is a sacrilegious boldnes to driue them faire from the sheepefolde of Christe, whome hee nourisheth in his owne bosome, and to cast them out as straungers, shutting the gate vpon them, whom Christe will not haue to be forbidden. For of such, In this woorde hee comprehendeth alwell the little ones, as them that are like them. For the Anabaptistes doe very fondly exclude children, at whome they should beginne. But in the meane season he taking occasion of this present matter, exhorted his disciples, that laying by malice and pride, they should put on a childish nature. Therefore it is added by Marke & Luke, that no man can enter into the kingdome of heauen, except he be borne like vnto a childe. But the admonition of Paul is to be noted in the former Epistle to the Cor. the 14. chap. & 20. verse. Be not children in vnderstanding, but in maliciousnes.

Matth. 19.

16. And beholde one came, and ſaid vnto him, good maſter, what good thing ſhall I do, that I may haue eternall life?

17. And he ſayd vnto him, why calleſt thou mee good? There is none good but one, euen God, but if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commaundements.

18. Hee ſayde vnto him which? And Ieſus ſayde, theſe, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt not ſteale, thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe.

19. Honour thy Father and Mother: and thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe.

20. The young man ſaide vnto him, I haue obſerued all theſe things from my youth: what lacke I yet?

21. Ieſus ſaide vnto him, if thou wilt bee perfect, goe ſell that thou haſte, and giue it to the poore, and thou ſhalt haue treaſure in heauen, and come, and follow me.

22. And when the young man heard that ſaying, he went away ſorrowfull: for hee had great poſſeſſions.

Marke 10.

17. And when hee was out on the way, there came one running, and kneeling to him, and asked him good Maiſter, what ſhall I doe, that I maye poſſeſſe eternall life?

18. Ieſus ſaid to him, Why calleſt thou me good? there is none good, but one, euen God.

19. Thou knoweſt the commaundements, thou ſhalt not kill. Thou ſhalt not ſteale. Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe Thou ſhalt hurt no man. Honour thy father & mother.

20. Then he anſwered and ſayd to him, maiſter, all theſe thinges I haue obſerued from my youth.

21. And Ieſus beholde him, and loued him, and ſayde to him, one thing is lacking vnto thee, goe and ſell all that thou haſt, and giue to the poore, and thou ſhalt haue treaſure in heauen, and come follow me, and take vp the croſſe.

22. But hee was ſad at that ſaying, & went away ſorrowfull: for hee hadde great poſſeſſions.

Luke 18.

18. The a certain ruler asked him saying: good maiſter what ought I to do, to inherit eternal life?

19. And Ieſus ſaid vnto him, why calleſt thou me good? none is good, ſaue one, euen god

20. Thou knoweſt the commandements, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery. Thou ſhalt not kil Thou ſhalt not ſteale. thou ſhalt not bear falſe witnes. Honour thy father and thy mother.

21. And he ſaide, all theſe haue I kept from my youth.

22. Nowe, when Ieſus heard that, he ſayde vnto him, yet lackeſt thou one thing: ſell all that euer thou haſt, & diſtribute vnto ỹ poore, & thou ſhalt haue treaſure in heauen, & come follow me

23. But when he heard thoſe things, he was very heauy: for hee was meruelous rich.

16. Beholde one came. Luke ſayeth that hee was a ruler, that is, a manne of great authority, not one of the common people. Though riches get honour, yet it ſeemeth that he was eſteemed as a graue and a good man. And all circumſtances being conſidered, though he is called a young man, yet I thinke he was one of that ſorte, which by a ſober and chaſte life reuerenced the auncient integritie. And hee came not deceitfully (as the Scribes were wont:) but with a minde to learne: and ſo as well in woordes, as by kneeling down he declared that he reuerenced Chriſt as a faithfull teacher. But againe, a blinde confidence in his woorkes hindreth him from profiting vnder Chriſte, vnto whom otherwiſe he deſired to yeelde himſelfe to be taught. So at this day wee ſee ſome not euill affected: yet will hardly taſte the doctrine of the Goſpell: becauſe they are caried away I know not with what ſhadowiſh holines. Further, that we may iudge the better of the eſtate of the anſwer, the maner of the queſtion muſt be be noted: for he doth not simply aske by what meanes, or which way he should come to eternall life: but what good should he doe to get it. So hee dreameth of merits, whereby he would make a full recompence for eternall life, wherfore Christ very aptly leadeth him to the obseruation of the lawe, which is the certaine way to life, as I will presently more fully declare.

17. Why callest thou me good? I doe not take this reproofe so subtilly as a great parte of the interpreters doe, as though Christe woulde secretly instruct him of his godhead. For they doe thinke that these wordes doe signifie thus much, as if he should haue said, if thou knowest no higher thing in mee, then a humane nature, thou doest wrong to giue that title of good to me, which belongeth to God alone. Verely I doe grant, to speake properly, men are not woorthy of so honorable a title, no, nor the Angels: for they haue not a drop of goodnesse of themselues, but what they borowe from God. But Christ had no other purpose, then to bring his doctrine into credite: as if hee should haue sayd: thou doest euill to call me good master, except thou doest acknowledge me to come from God. Therefore the young man is not heere instructed in the essence of the godhead, but is led to beleeue the doctrine He had now already some affection to obedience: but Christe would haue him to goe further, as to heare God speaking. For (as it is the maner of men, of deuils for the most part to make Angels) they doe generally call them good teachers, in whom they see nothing that is good. And these are as prophanings of the giftes of God. Therefore it is no marualle if Christ to get his doctrine authoritie doth call the yong man back to God. Keepe the commandements. Some of the old writers haue corruptly interpreted this place (whom the Papists followed) as though that Christe shoulde teach, that by the obseruatiō of the law we could deserue eternal life. But christ considered not what men could doe: but answereth to the question proposed: what is the righteousnes of works, which the law defineth. And certainely, so it must be holden, that God in his law cōprehendeth the way to liue holily and righteously, wherin perfect righteousnes is contained. Neither did Moses vtter this sentence in vaine, He ℣ doth these shall liue therein. Likewise I call heauen and earth to witnesse, that I haue this day shewed you life. Therefore it cannot be denied, but that the obseruation of the law is righteousnes, whereby life may be obtained, if any man were a perfect obseruer of the lawe. But, because wee are all void of the glory of God, nothing shalbe found in the law but cursing: neither is there any other refuge for vs, then to flie to the free gift of righteousnes. Therefore Paul setteth down two sortes of righteousnes, the one of the lawe, the other of faith: the first he placeth in works, but the secōd in the meere grace of Christ. Whereby we gather that this answere of Christ was of righteousnes, according to the law: for it was meete that the yong man inquiring of the righteousnes of works, should first bee taught, that no man is accounted righteous, but he ℣ satisfieth the law (which is impossible) that he seeing his own infirmitie might flie to the refuge of faith. Therefore I grant, sith God hath promised the reward of eternall life to the obseruers of his law, this way were to be kept, if ℣ infirmitie of our flesh he hindered vs not: but the scripture teacheth that it is our fault, so that it is necessary for vs to haue that by gift which wee cannot obtaine by merites. If any man obiect that the righteousnes in the law is proposed to vs in vaine, wherto no man can at any time attaine: I answere, it is not in vain, because it it is an inſtruction, whereby we are lead vnto that righteouſnes, which is to be had by ſuite. Therefore Paul, where hee ſayth, that the Doers of the lawe are iuſtified by the righteouſneſſe of the lawe, excludeth all men. Further, this place aboliſheth all thoſe faigned deuices, which the Papiſtes inuented for the obtaining of ſaluation. For they were not onely deceiued in that, ſ they would binde God vnto them by their good workes, that hee ſhould ſaue them of dutie or of debt, but while they prepare themſelues to doe good workes, the doctrine of the law not regarded, they bend themſelues to faigned deuotions, as they call them: not that they doe openly refuſe the lawe of God: but becauſe they doe preferre the traditions of men farre before it. But what ſayth Chriſt? namely, this worſhip onely is approued of God, which he preſcribeth, becauſe that obedience is more acceptable to him, then all their ſacrifices. Therefore who ſo euer indeuoureth to frame his life to pleaſe Chriſt, while the Papipſtes are occupied in their friuolous traditions, let him imploy all his indeuour in keeping the commandementes of the law.

18. Thou ſhalt not kill. It is marualle when Chriſt would haue vs bounde to the whole law, why he onely toucheth the ſecond table: but hee therefore doth it, becauſe that by the duties of charitie euery mans mind is beſt diſcerned what is in it. Godlines toward God is the cheife: but, becauſe that hypocrites doe often counterfeit the obſeruation of the firſt table, they are beſt tryed by the ſecond table. Therfore we muſt know that Chriſt choſe thoſe cõmandements, wherein appeareth a teſtimony of true righteouſnes: yet, by that figure Synecdoche, he noteth the whole by a part. There is no matter in that, that hee ſetteth the commandement of honoring the parents in the laſt place: for he regarded not to keepe the exact order. Yet this is worthy to be noted, that hee putteth it in the ſecond table, leaſt any man ſhould bee deceiued by that errour of Ioſephus, who thought that it appertained to the firſt table. That which is after added in the ende: Thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour, is nothing diuerſe from the former commandements, but it is a generall expoſition of them all.

19. The young man ſayde vnto him. The lawe might haue beene deade to him, when as hee dreamed that hee was ſo righteous: for, except he had flattered himſelfe through hypocriſie, this had beene a very good admonition towardes the learning of humilitie, to ſee his owne blottes and faultes in the glaſſe of the lawe. But he being drunken with a fooliſh boldnes, carelеſſly boaſted that he had well diſcharged his dutie euen from his childhoode. Paul confeſſeth that he was in the ſame caſe, and that he was perſwaded that he ſo liued ſo long as hee knewe not the force of the lawe: but after that he felt the power of the lawe, hee was deadly wounded thereby. Therefore Chriſtes anſwere, which followeth was directed to the affection of the manne. Yet Chriſte required nothing of him but the commandementes of the lawe: but, becauſe the ſimple rehearſall of them mooued him nothing, he diſcouereth in other words his ſecret diſeaſe of couetouſneſſe. I grant it is not commaunded in any place of the lawe, that wee ſhoulde ſell all: but when as the ende of the lawe is to drawe menne to the denyall of themſelues, and expreſly condemneth luſt, wee ſee that Chriſte had no other purpoſe, then to correcte that falſe perſwaſion of the young man. For if he had throughly knowne himſelfe, at the hearing ring of the lawe rehearsed, hee woulde haue confessed himselfe in daunger of Gods iudgement.

Now, because the simple woordes of the lawe doe not sufficiently conuince him of his guiltinesse, hee declareth the inward sence in other woordes. For if Christ should now require any other thing besides the commaundements of the lawe, he should be contrary to himselfe. He taught euen now that perfect righteousnes was comprehended in the commaundementes of the lawe: howe therefore should it agree for him to reproue the law for default? Further, that protestation of Moses, which I cited before had beene false. Therfore christes meaning was not, that the young man wanted one thing besides the obseruation of the law, but one thing in the obseruation of the law. For, though the law doth in noe place compell vs to sell all: yet, because it bringeth all our corrupt lustes to nothing, because it teacheth vs to beare the crosse, because it woulde haue vs to be ready to abyde hunger and penury, the young man is farre from the full obseruation of the same, so long as he is caried away with the loue of his riches. And he saith one thing wanted, because hee had no neede to speake of whoredome and murther. but hee noteth the speciall disease, as if hee shoulde touch the byle with his finger. And it is to be noted that he doth not only commaund him to sell, but to giue to the poore: for to reiecte riches were of it selfe no vertue, but a vaine ambition. Crates the Theban is commended by the prophane historiographers, because he cast his money and what precious thing soeuer he had into the sea, for that he thought hee could not be safe, except hee destroyed his riches. As though it had not beene better for him to haue bestowed that vpon others, which hee thought superfluous for himselfe. Certeinly, when as charitie is the bond of perfection, hee that defraudeth himselfe and others of the vse of money, deserueth no prayse. Therefore Christ doeth not simply commend the selling, but the liberalitie in helping the poore. Christ also vrgeth further the mortification of the flesh, when he saith follow me: For he doth not only commaund him to giue him his name, but to put his shoulders to the bearing of the Crosse, as Marke doeth expresly expound it. And it was meete that hee should be thus launced: because that when hee was at home, hee was wont to liue pleasantly vnder the shadow and in idlenesse, he had neuer conceiued, or had taste very little, what it shoulde meane to crucifie the old man, and to tame the lusts of the flesh. But the Monkes are too ridiculous, while vnder pretence of this place, they challenge to themselues the taste of perfection. First, it is easie to vnderstand, that it is not commaunded to all menne without difference to sell all. For the husband-man, which is accustomed to liue of his labour, and thereby to nourish his children, shoulde sinne, if hee shoulde sell this small portion of land, not being compelled thereto by necessitie. Therefore it is better to keepe that, which God hath put into our handes, so that wee doe modestly and thriftily maintaine our selues and our household, and giue some part to the poore, then wastefully to spoyle all. But what a goodly selling is this, which the Monks doe so much brag of? When as a great number, which cannot finde foode at home, thrust themselues into monasteries, as into swines sties full stuffed. All men doe carefully spare from themselues, that these idle bellyes might be fatted with other mens bread.

A notable chaunge ſurely, when they being commaunded to giue to the poore that which they rightly poſſeſſe, they are not content with their owne, but take away other mens.

MAR. 21. Ieſus beheld him, and loued him. That which the Papiſtes do hereof gather, that good morall woorkes, (which are not wrought by the inſtinct of the ſpirite, but goe before regeneration) doe of right deſerue, is too childiſh a deuiſe. For, if they gather a deſert of the loue of God, we may ſay that frogs and flies doe deſerue: becauſe God loueth all his creatures, without exception. Therefore it is needfull to diſtinguiſh the degrees of loue. In reſpect of this preſent place it ſhall bee ſufficient to know that God loueth none with a fatherly loue, but his owne ſonnes, whom he hath regenerate with the ſpirit of adoption: and by this loue it commeth to paſſe, that they ſhall be approued before his tribunall ſeate. According to this ſence, to be beloued of God, and to be iuſtified before him are both one in ſignification. But God is ſayd ſomtimes to loue them, whom he neither alloweth nor loueth: for becauſe the preſeruation of mankind is acceptable vnto him (which conſiſteth in iuſtice, equity, moderation, wiſdom, faith, and temperaunce) he is ſaid to loue the publike vertues: not that they doe merit ſaluation or grace: but becauſe they tend to that ende, which he alloweth. In this ſence, according to diuers reſpects, he loued & hated Ariſtides & Fabritius: for in as much as he had adorned them with an outward righteouſnes, & that for the common good, he loued his owne worke in them: yet, becauſe the heart was corrupt, that outward ſhew of righteouſneſſe auailed them nothing to the obtaining of righteouſnes. For we know that the hearts are purged onely by fayth, & that the ſpirit of vprightnes is giuen only to the mẽbers of chriſt. So the queſtiõ is anſwered, how it could be that chriſt ſhuld loue a man that was proud, and an hipocrite, when nothing is more odious before God then theſe two vices. Neither is it any abſurditie that God ſhuld loue that good ſeede, which he put into ſome natures, ſo that he yet reiecteth the perſons and the workes for their corruption.

MAT. 22. Hee went away ſorrowfull. The departure ſheweth at length how farre the young man was from the perfection, whereto Chriſt called him. For how cõmeth it to paſſe that he withdraweth himſelfe from chriſtes ſchoole, but becauſe it was a griefe to him to forſake his riches? But if we be not ready to beare pouerty, it is euident that luſte doeth yet raigne in vs. And this is that, which I ſaid before, that Chriſt commaunded to ſell all, was not an addition to the lawe, but a tryall of the ſinne that lay hid. For as euery man is more giuen to this or to that ſinne, ſo by the reprehending of the ſame he is the more layde open.

Further, this exãple teacheth vs that to continue cõſtantly in chriſtes ſchoole, it is conuenient to renounce the fleſh. This young man departed from Chriſt, who brought with him both a deſire to learne, & modeſty: becauſe it was hard for him to leaue that vice, wherwithe he was acquainted. The ſame ſhall befall to vs, except the ſweetnes of the grace of Chriſt do make all the inticements of the fleſh vnſauory to vs. Whether this temptation were but for a time, ſo ꝑ the yong mã afterward repented, it is vnknowne: yet by coniecture it is probable, that he was drawne away by his couetouſneſſe, that he ſhould not profit any thing.

Mathew. 19	Mar. 10.	Luke 18
23. Then Ieſus ſayd vnto his diſciples, verely, I ſay vnto you, that a rich man ſhall hardly enter into the kingdome of heauen 24. And againe I ſay vnto you, it is eaſier for a Camell to goe through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of God. 25. And when his diſciples heard it, they were exceeding ly amaſed, ſaying, who then can be ſaued? 26. And Ieſus beheld them, and ſayde vnto them, with men this is vnpoſſible: but with God all things are poſſible.	23. And Ieſus looked round about and ſaid vnto his diſciples, howe hardly do they that haue riches enter into the kingdome of God? 24. And his diſciples were aſtonied at his wordes. But Ieſus anſwered againe, and ſayde vnto them, Children, howe hard is it for them that truſt in riches, to enter into the kingdome of God? 25. It is eaſier for a Camell to goe through the eye of a needle, then for a riche man to enter into the kingdome of God. 26. And they were much more aſtonied, ſaying with themſelues who then can be ſaued? 27. But Ieſus looked vppon them and ſayde, with men it is impoſſible but not with God: for with GOD all things are poſſible.	24. And when Ieſus ſaw him ſorrowfull, hee ſayde, with what difficulty ſhall they that haue riches enter into the kingdome of God? 25. Surely it is eaſier for a Camell to goe through a needles eie then for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of God. 26. Then ſaid they that hearde it, and who then can bee ſaued? 27. And hee ſayde, the things which are vnpoſſible with men, are poſſible with god

23. A rich man ſhall hardly enter. Chriſt doeth not declare howe noyſome and deadly a plague couetouſnes is, but alſo howe great hinderance riches doe bring. Marke aſſwageth the ſharpneſſe of the ſaying, while he applyeth it onely to them which put their truſt in riches. But I thinke that the former ſentence is rather confirmed by theſe words, then corrected: as if he ſhould ſay, that it ſhould not ſeeme marualous to them, that riche men haue ſo harde entrance into the kingdome of heauen: for it is a common diſeaſe almoſt of all men, to truſt in their riches. This doctrine is alſo very profitable for all men: namely, to rich men, as that they being admoniſhed before of their danger, ſhould take heede: to poore menne, that they ſhoulde bee content with their eſtate, and not ſo couetouſly deſire that, which will bee more to their harme then to their gain. It is certaine that riches of it ſelfe do not hinder vs frō following: but (ſuch is the corruption of man) that they which haue aboundance canne ſcarſly eſcape from drowning themſelues therein. So that they which flow with riches are holden bounde by Sathan, as it were in chaines, that they ſhoulde not looke vp into heauen: nay, they entrench, binde and enthrall themſelues wholy to the earth. The ſimilitude of the Camell, which hee addeth a little after, amplifieth the difficultie, for it declareth that rich men do ſwel & are more puft vp with pride & vaine boldnes, ſo that they cannot ſuffer thēſelues to be brought into ſuch ſtraites, as God doth keepe his children.

I thinke that by this word Camel is rather noted a great rope for a ſhip, then a beaſt.

25. And when his diſciples heard it. The diſciples doe maruaile: for this ſhould not make vs a litle carefull, conſidering ỹ riches do ſtop vp the entrance into the kingdome. For which way ſoeuer wee ſhall turne our eyes, a thouſand ſtops wil ſet themſelues againſt vs. But let vs note that they were ſo amaſed, that yet they fled not from the doctrine of Chriſt. He of whom mention was made euen now dealt otherwiſe: for the ſtraightnes of the commandement ſo feared him, that he diuorced himſelfe from Chriſt: but though theſe men bee amaſed, and doe aske who then can be ſaued, yet they bende not their courſe an other way, but deſire to vanquiſh the doubtfull hope. So it ſhall profit vs to feare the threatninges of God, ſo oft as hee denounceth any hard or fearefull thing: ſo that our mindes faint not, but rather be ſtirred vp.

26. With men this is vnpoſsible. Chriſt doeth not altogether ſet their mindes free from all care: becauſe it was profitable for them to vnderſtand how hard it is to aſcend into heauen. Firſt, that they might imploy all their endeuours to this purpoſe: then, that they diſtruſting themſelues might ſeeke for helpe from heauen. Wee ſee how ſluggiſh and careleſſe we be. What ſhould befall, if the faithfull ſhould thinke that they ſhould walke pleaſantly, through a ſofte and pleaſant plaine, for recreation? This therefore is the cauſe, why Chriſt doth not extenuate the danger (that he might thereby put his diſciples out of feare) but rather increaſeth it. For, whereas before he had onely ſayd that it was hard, now he ſayth, it is impoſsible.

Whereby it appeareth that they are very prepoſterous teachers, which are ſo afraid to ſpeake hardly, that they giue libertie to the ſluggiſh fleſhe. But it were better to follow the rule of Chriſt, who ſo tempereth his ſpeach, that he might teach men that are throwne downe in themſelues, only to repoſe themſelues in the grace of God, and withall that hee might ſtirre them vp to prayers. So hee doth wiſely helpe the infirmity of men, not by attributing any thing vnto them but by ſtirring vp the mindes to hope in the grace of God. And by this anſwere of Chriſt is that generall rule reſelled (which the Papiſts gathered out of Hierome.) Whoſoeuer ſhall ſay that the law is hard to be kept, let him be accurſed. For Chriſt doth plainely declare, that it is not poſsible for men to keepe the way to ſaluation, but ſo far as the grace of GOD doeth helpe and direct them.

Luke. 22.

28 And ye are they which haue continued with me in my temptations.

29. Therefore I apppoynt vnto you a kingdom, as my father hath appoynted vnto me.

30. That yee may eate & drink at my table in my kingdome, and site on seates, and iudge the twelue tribes of Israel.

Peter dooth secretely compare himselfe and the other disciples with that rich man, whom the world had alienated from Christ. And because they ledde a poore and wandring lyfe not without reproofe and troubles, neither did there appeare anye shewe of a better estate in tyme to come: hee demaundeth, and not without cause, whether they haue lefte all, and followed Christ in vaine. For it were an absurd thing for them to be spoiled, & not to be better recõpenced by the Lord. But what were those al thinges? For, when as they were base and poore men, they scarse had a house to leaue: therefore this bragging might seeme to be ridiculous. And certeinly experience sheweth howe greatly menne doe commonly esteeme of theyr dueties towardes GOD. As at this day they which were almost ready to begge in popery, do proudly cast forth that they haue lost much for the cause of the Gospell: yet the disciples may be excused, for though their estate was neuer gorgious, yet they lyued at home of their handy occupations, as the richest of them all. And wee knowe that poore menne accustomed to a quiet and honeste life, are hardlyer drawn from their wiues and children, then those men, which are caryed by ambition, or that are drawne hether and thether with the blaste of prosperitie. And except there had beene some reward layde vp for them, they did very fondly to chang the manner of their life. But as they were in this behalfe to be excused, yet herein they offended, that they desire now to see triumph, when they had not yet gone throgh the warfare.

If at any time wee doe loath and bee vnpacient, that the time or tryumph is delayd, let vs learne first to consider the solaces, wherewith the Lorde asswageth the bitternesse of the crosse in this world: then to stirre vp our ſelues with the hope of eternal life. For in theſe two poynts is the anſwere of Chriſt contained.

MAT. 28. Verely, I ſay vnto you. Leaſt the Diſciples ſhould think they had loſt their labour, and repent them of the courſe they had begunne, Chriſt teacheth them that the glory of his kingdom, which as then was hidde, ſhould be reuealed, as if he ſhould ſaye, there is no cauſe whye you ſhould faint at this your baſe eſtate. For I, who doe ſcarſly lye amongſte the meaneſt, will at the length aſcend into a throane of maieſtie. Therefore beare a litle, vntill the time of manifeſting of my glory ſhall come. But what doth he then promiſe them? Namely, that they ſhalbe fellowes of the ſame glory. For by giuing them throanes, wherin they ſhuld iudge the twelue tribes of Iſrael, he compareth them to Ambaſſadours, or to chiefe counſellers and preſidentes, whiche haue the chiefe ſeates in the kingly aſſembly. VVee know that the Apoſtles were choſen twelue in number, that ſo it might be declared that God by the ſending of Chriſte would gather togeather the diſperſed remnauntes of his people. This was the chiefe dignitie, but as yet it was hidden: therfore Chriſt defereth their deſires vnto the laſt manifeſtation of his kingdome, that then they might receiue the fruit of their election: yet it is not to be doubted, but that Chriſt ſpak in this place of the latter day. In the regeneration. Some doe referre this poynt, to that which followeth in the text. So regeneration ſhould be nothing elſe but the newneſſe, which ſhould followe our reſtoring, while that which is mortall ſhall be ſwallowed vp of life, and our weake body ſhall be made like to the heauenly glory of Chriſt. But I doe rather referre this regeneration to the firſt comming of Chriſt, becauſe the world beganne then to be renewed, and the Church ſprang vp out of the darkneſſe of death into the light of life. And this manner of ſpeaking is found euery where in the Prophetes, and dooth very well agree with the cyrcumſtaunce of this place. For the renewinge of the Churche ſo often promiſed, made them hope for ſome greate happines, when as the Meſsias ſhould appeare. Chriſt, therefore that he might take away that errour, diſtinguiſheth betweene the beeginning and the end of his kingdome.

LVK. 28. You are they. Though Luke ſeemeth to report this ſpeach of Chriſt diuerſly, and as if it were ſpoken at an other time: yet I thinke not otherwiſe, but that it appertaineth to this time. Neither is there ſet downe a continuall Sermon or ſpeach of Chriſte, but diuerſe ſentenſes ſette togeather without regard of the order of the tyme, as ſhal apeare be ſayde a little after. But he vſeth moe wordes then Mat. for ſith the Apoſtles followed him in his temptations, and continued conſtant, hee ſaieth that they ſhall alſo be partakers with him of his glorye. It is demaunded what hee meaneth by theſe his temptations? I thinke that hee meante thoſe troubles, wherewith GOD generallye exerciſed him and hys Apoſtles. And hee dooth verye aptlye vſe this worde Temptations: for euen accordinge to the ſenſe of the humane nature his faith and patience was proued.

29. I appointed vnto you a kingdom. Hee doth not onlye make them rulers here, but kings. for he imparteth with them the kingdome which he receiued of his father. But there is a great vehemẽcy in that word I appoint, that they ſhuld not with a raſh and hotte deſire make too muſh haſte to possesse that kingdom, wherof he only had the lawful autoritie of ordaining: and he exhorteth the to patience by his example. For though his father had made him a king, yet he is not presently placed in his glory: nay he humbled himself, and through the shame of the crosse he obtained the kingly honour. To eate & to drink vpon his table is metaphorically put for this, that they should be fellowes of al his glory.

MAT. 29. Whosoeuer shal forsake. After he had stirred vp their mindes to hope for the life to come, he also encourageth them with present comfortes, and confirmeth and strengthneth them to beare the crosse. For though God suffreth his to be much afflicted, yet he doth neuer forsake them, but he will recōpence their sorowes with his helpes. Neither doth he onely speake to his Apostles, but taking this occasion, he generally directeth his speach to all the godly. This is the summe: they that shal willingly lose al things for Christes sake, shall yet euen in this life bee more blessed then if they had kept al, but the chiefe reward is laid vp for them in heauen. Yet that promise of recompensing of an hundred fold, seemeth not to agree with that we see in experience. For they which for the most part are spoiled of parentes, or children, and other kinsmen, or are depriued of their wiues, and robbed of their goodes for the testimonye of Christ, are so farre from recouering their owne goodes, that as people without company and forsaken, they should painefully and hardly trauell in banishment with great want and pouertie. I answere, if any man doth rightly esteeme the present grace of God, wherwith he comforteth and lifteth them vp in their miseries, he wil graunt that it is rightly preferred before al the riches of the world. For though the vnfaithfull doe flourish, yet because they knowe not what shall become of them to morow, it is necessary that they shoulde alwayes be doubtfull and afrayde: neither can they otherwise enioy their pleasures, but that after a sort they are amased at themselues. In the meane season God maketh his mery, so that the litle good, which they enioy is more worth vnto them, and farre more pleasaunt, then if without Christ great abundance of goodes shuld flowe vppon them. In which sense I take that word was added in Mark with persecutions, as if Christe shoulde haue saide: though the godly in this world doe alwaies suffer persecutions, and that the crosse doth alwayes cleaue as it were to the backe of them: yet the sauce of Gods grace is so sweete, which maketh them so mery, that their estate is more to be desired then the pleasures and dainties of kinges.

30. Many that are first. This sentence was added to teach vs to shake off the sluggishnes of the flesh. The Apostles hasted now to the reward when as they were scarse come forth into the race. And wee all are of this disposition almost, that if we haue passed one month in seruice, we all desire to be rewarded and set at libertie, as if we had bene verye seruiceable soldiours, and had well deserued. But Christe exhorteth them that beganne well to goe on forwarde couragiously, and withall hee warneth them that runne, and beganne verye freshly, that they shall anayle nothinge, if they faynte in the middest of the race. As Paule also declareth, all that runne, obtayne not the pryce, 1. Corinthyans, 9. 24. And in an other place by his owne example, that they shoulde forgette those thinges whiche are behinde, and to endeuour to the other part of the course, which is before. Philippians, 3. 13. Therefore as oft as we do thinke of the heauenly crowne, it becommeth vs to be pricked forward as it were with new spurs, that we become not duller hereafter.

Math. 20.	Mark.	Luk.
1. For the kingdome of heauen is like vnto a certeine housholder, whiche wente out at the dawninge of the daye, to hyre labourers into his Vineyarde.
2. And he agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, and sent them into his vineyard.
3. And he went out about the third houre, and sawe other standing idle about the market place,
4. And saide vnto them, goe yee also into my vineyarde, and whatsoeuer is right, I will giue you: and they went their way.
5. Againe hee wente out about the sixt or nynth houre, and did likewise.
6. And he went about the eleueth houre, and found other standing idle, and said vnto them, whye stande ye here all the day idle?
7. They sayde vnto him, beecause no manne hath hyred vs. He sayde to them, go ye also into my vineyarde, and whatsoeuer is ryght, that shal ye receiue.
8. And when euen was come, the master of the vineyard saide vnto his stewarde, call the labourers, and giue them their hire, beginning at the last, tyll thou come to the first.
9. And they whiche were hyred aboute the eleuenth houre, came and receiued euerye manne a peny.
10. Now, when the firste came, they supposed that they shuld receiue more, but they likewise receiued euery man a peny.
11. And when they had receiued it, they murmured against the master of the house:
12. Saying, these last haue wrought but one houre, and thou hast made them equall vnto vs, which haue borne the burden and heat of the day.
13. And hee answered one of them, saying, friend, I doe thee no wrong: didst thou not agree with mee for a peny?
14. Take that which is thine owne, and goe thy waye: I will giue vnto this laste, as muche as to thee.
15. Is

15. Is it not laweſull for mee to doe as I wyll with myne owne? Is thyne eye euyll, becauſe I am good?

16. So the laſt ſhall be firſt, and the firſt laſt: for many are called, and few are choſen.

Sith this parable is nothing elſe but a cõfirmation of the ſentence going next before The firſt ſhalbe laſt, let vs now ſee how it is to be applyed. Some interpreters doe gather this to be the ſumme of it. Becauſe the heauenly inheritaunce is not obtained by merites of workes, but is giuen freelye, they ſhall be all equall in glory. But Chriſte doth not diſpute eyther of the equalitie of the heauenly glory, or what the eſtate of the godly ſhall be: but hee onely ſaieth this, that there is no cauſe whye they, whiche are firſte in time, ſhoulde glory or bragge ouer others: For the Lord as oft as he pleaſe can call them, whom hee ſeemed to neglect for a tyme, and eyther to make them equall, or to preferre them before thē which were firſt.

It ſhould be but fooliſh curioſitie, if any man woulde exactly diſcuſſe al the perticular poyntes of this parable. Therefore no more muſt bee ſought, then it was Chriſtes purpoſe to deliuer. Alſo we haue ſhewed already, that he applyed himſelf to no other end, but to prouoke his as it were with continual ſpurres to go forward. VVe know that ſluggiſhnes doth for the moſt part ariſe of too much confidence. So it commeth to paſſe, that many as if they had got to the end of the race, do fainte in the midſt of the courſe. Therefore Paule commaundeth vs to forget thoſe things, which are behind vs, that we cõſidering what there is yet remaining for vs, ſhoulde prepare our ſelues to runne luſtilye. Yet it ſhal not be hurtful to run through the words, that the doctrine may therby more euidently appeare.

1. For the kingdom of heauen is like. The meaning is, that the ſame account is to be made of the calling of God, as if any man ſhould hire labourers in the morning for certeine wages, to dreſſe his vineyard, and then ſhoulde afterwards ſend ſome without couenant, to whom he yet giueth like reward or hire. And he doth therfore make mention of the kingdō of heauen: becauſe he compareth the ſpiritual life to the earthly, & the reward of eternal life, to money, wherwith mē are paid their wages for their labours, which they haue done. Some do ſubtily apply this place, as if chriſt ſhuld diſtinguiſh betweene the Iewes and the Gentiles: for they ſay that the Iewes were called at the firſt houre, and had a rewarde promiſed by couenant: becauſe the Lord promiſed them eternal life, vpon condition if they performed the law. But in calling of the Gentils, there was no couenant made eſpecially of works: becauſe ſaluation was giuen thē freely in Chriſt. But al theſe ſubtilties are to no purpoſe: for there was no difference in the couenant which God made, but only in the time, for that they which went into the vinyard in the euening, receiued the ſame reward that they did, which came firſt.

For though God in times paſt promiſed in the law a reward of workes to the Iewes: yet, we know that this took not effect: becauſe that no man could at any time obtaine ſaluation by his own merits. VVhy then (ſhal ſome man ſay) doth Chriſte expreſlye make mention of a couenaunte, ſpeakinge of the firſte, and ſaieth nothinge of it when hee ſpeaketh of the other? Namely, that he might teach that no man is iniuried by thys, that the latter haue as much honour, as if they hadde beene called at the firſt. For in proper ſpeach hee oweth nothing to anye manne: and of his own right he challengeth of vs (whom he hath tyed vnto himſelf) whatſoeuer obedience we are able to yeeld vnto him. But, becauſe he dooth freely offer vs a reward, hee is fayde to hyre our labours, which otherwiſe are due to him. Heereof it commeth to paſſe, that he alſo calleth the crown, which he giueth vs freely by the name of a reward. Furthermore that he might declare that we haue no cauſe to quarrel with God, if hee ioyne others with vs, which came long after vs, as fellowes in honour, hee boroweth the ſimilytude of the cuſtome of menne, who firſte do agree of the wages, before they ſend the labourers to worke. But if anye manne will hereby gather, that menne are created to labour, and that euery manne hath his charge enioyned him of God, that men ſhould not be ſlouthfull and ydle, he ſhall not wreſt Chriſtes wordes at all. Alſo it may be gathered, that our whole lyfe is vnprofitable, and maye rightly be condemned for ſlouthfulneſſe vntill that wee frame our lyues according to the commaundement and calling of the Lorde. Whereof it followeth that they auayle nothing in toyling, which doe raſhly take vpon them this or that kinde of life, and waight not for the allowaunce of theyr calling from GOD. Laſtly, it is to be gathered out of the wordes of Chriſte, that they doe pleaſe God, which do labour to profit the brethren. It ſeemeth that a peny (which is ſomewhat more in value then foure French Caroleys) was the ordinary hyre for a dayes worke. The houres three, ſixe and nine are therefore mentioned: becauſe that the day was wont in times paſt to be deuided from ſunne riſing to ſunne ſetting into twelue houres, ſo was there an other diuiſion of the day by three houres: ſo againe did they deuide the night into foure watches. Threefore the eleuenth houre ſignifieth the end of the day.

8. And when euen was come. There is no miſterie to bee ſought in this, that the maſter commaundeth to beginne at the laſt, as though GOD would crowne them firſt, which were in courſe of time laſt. For this deuiſe ſhould not agree with the doctrine of Paule, who ſaith, that they, which remaine at the comming of Chriſt, ſhall not preuent them, which ſlept before in Chriſt, but ſhall follow.

Chriſt now in this place ſetteth it down in a diuerſe order: becauſe he could not otherwiſe declare (that which hee after added) that the firſte murmured, becauſe they had no more giuen them. Note alſo that he doth not ſay that there ſhould be ſuch murmuring at the latter day, but onely denieth that there ſhalbe any cauſe of murmuring. For the faygned perſon, which he bringeth in, in the ſimilitude, giueth no ſmall lighte to this doctrine, that the liberalitie of God is ſubiect to no complaintes of men, though he adorne with large rewardes the vnworthy, that haue deſerued nothing. In vaine therefore do ſome imagine that the Iewes were reproued in theſe wordes, who were malitious and enuious againſte the Gentiles. For it were abſurde to make ſuch equall in rewarde with the Sonnes of GOD. And this wickednesſe lyghteth not vppon the faithfull ſo to murmurre againſt God. But the meaning is plaine, that it is free for GOD, ſith hee defraudeth no man of his iuſt rewarde, to beeſtowe vppon them, whom he lately called with a rewarde, which was vndeſerued.

16. So

18. So the laſt ſhall be firſt. Hee doth not here compare the Iewes with the Gentiles, as he doth otherwhere: nor the reprobate, which fall awaye from the faith, with the elect, which do perſeuer. Therefore the ſentence which is added by ſome, Many are called, but few are choſen, dooth not agree with it. Chriſt onely willed, that as any man is called before others, ſo he ſhould runne the race with more diligence: then he exhorteth all men to modeſtie, that ſome ſhould not preferre themſelues before others, but that they ſhould willingly admit them to the common price. The Apoſtles, becauſe they were the firſt fruites of the whole Church, ſeemed to challenge ſome notable thinge to themſelues: and Chriſt denied them not, but that they ſhuld ſit as Iudges to iudge the twelue tribes of Iſraell. But leaſt ambition or vaine confidence in themſeles ſhoulde make them ſwell, they were withall to be warned, that others which were called long tyme after them, ſhould be partakers of the ſame glorye: becauſe GOD is bound to no manne, but calleth freely whomſoeuer hee pleaſeth, and giueth vnto them that are called, ſuch rewarde as pleaſeth him.

Math. 20	Mark. 10	Luke. 18.
17. And Ieſus went vp to Ieruſalem, and tooke the twelue diſciples apart in the way, and ſaid vnto them, 18. Behold, wee goe vp to Ieruſalem, and the ſonne of man ſhall be deliuered vnto the chiefe Prieſtes, and vnto the Scribes, and they ſhall condemne him to death. 19. And ſhal deliuer him to the Gentiles, to mock, & to ſcourge, and to crucifie him: but the third daye hee ſhall riſe againe.	32. And they were in the way, going vp to Ieruſalem: and Ieſus went before them, and they were amaſed, and as they followed, they were afraide, and Ieſus tooke the twelue againe, and began to tell them what things ſhuld come to him, 33. Saying, beholde, we go to Ieruſalem, and the ſonne of man ſhalbe deliuered vnto the high Prieſtes, and Scribes, and they ſhall condemne him to death, and ſhal deliuer him to the Gētiles. 34. And they ſhall mock him, and ſcourge him, and ſpitte vpon him, and kil him: but the third daye hee ſhall riſe againe.	31. Then Ieſus tooke vnto him the twelue, and ſaid vnto thē, behold, we goe vp to Ieruſalem, and al things ſhalbe fulfilled to the ſon of man, that are written by the prophets, 32. For he ſhalbe deliuered vnto the Gentiles, & ſhall be mocked, and ſhalbe ſpitefully entreated, and ſhalbe ſpitted on. 33. And when they haue ſcourged him, they wil put him to death: but the third day he ſhal riſe againe. 34. But they vnderſtoode none of theſe thinges: and this ſaying was hid from them, neither perceiued they the thinge which were ſpoken.

Though the Apoſtes had beene taught before how the Lorde ſhould depart, yet, becauſe they had not profited as was mete, he rehearſeth now againe, that which he had often ſayde. Hee ſeeth that the day of death draweth neere: yea, that the time is now at hand, when hee would offer vp himſelfe to be ſacrificed: and he ſeeth his diſciples not only afeard, but euen aſtonied with a blind feare. Therefore hee exhorteth them to conſtancye, leaſt they ſhoulde faint at the temptation. Further, he confirmeth them two waies. For in that hee telleth them before what ſhoulde come to paſſe afterwarde, he dooth not onelye ſtrengthen them, leaſte they being compaſſed with ſodeine troubles not looked for, ſhoulde bee ouerthrowne: but he oppoſeth the manifeſtatiõ of his Godhead againſt the offẽce of the croſſe, leaſt ꝑ ſhorte time that he ſhuld be thrown down ſhould diſcourage them, where as they ſhould be perſwaded that he was the Sonne of God: and therefore the conquerour of death. The ſeconde reaſon he vſeth to confirme them, is gathered of the neereneſſe of the reſurrection. But it is good to looke neerer into the words. Marke declareth that which the other two conceale, that aſwell the Apoſtls as other their companions, were hastie and afraid, before that Chriſte tooke hys Apoſtles aparte, and told them, that he went preſently to the ſacrifice of death. But it is vncertaine why they were thus afraid, except it was beecauſe they had tried before, that they had great aduerſaries at Ieruſalem. Therefore they had rather that Chriſt ſhould take his eaſe in ſome backe place, out of the reach or caſt of the darts, then willingly to offer himſelf into the handes of ſo deadly enemies. And though this feare was manye waies corrupted, yet this was no ſmal token of obedience and godlines, that they followed Chriſt. It had bene much better, if they had folowed gladly and cheerefully whetherſoeuer the ſonne of God would haue led them: but this reuerẽce is praiſe worthy, that they had rather abide troubles themſelues, then they would forſake him.

17. Hee tooke the twelue. It might ſeeme merueilous, when as all had neede of comfort, (for they were al afraid) why he made only the twelue priuy of his ſecrete. But I think ꝑ he would not therfore ſpeak of it opẽly, leaſt the rumor thereof ſhould be ſpread far abroad before the time. Further, when as he had no hope of good to be wrought preſentlye by his admonition, he thought it ſufficient to commit the ſame to a fewe, which ſhould afterwardes be witneſſes of the ſame. For, as the ſeede caſt into the earth, dooth not preſentlye bring forth fruit, ſo we know that Chriſt ſpake many things to his Apoſtles, which brought not forth fruit preſently. If that he had admitted all without choyce to this ſpeache, it might haue beene that many for feare would haue fled away, and haue filled the common peoples eares with this rumor. So the death of Chriſt ſhould haue beene without glory, which he ſo raſhly ſeemed to go vnto. Therfore he ſpeaketh ſecretly to his Apoſtles: and yet he choſe not them as ſuch as were fit to profit thereby, but (as I touched euẽ now) that they might afterward be witneſſes of the ſame. But Luke dealeth more fully in this behalfe: for he dooth not onely declare that Chriſt foretold theſe things, which were at hand: but the doctrin which he added withal, that thoſe things, were fulfilled in the ſonne of man, which were written by the Prophets. For this was the beſt remedy to ouercome the temptation, to haue ſome marks or notes euen in the ſhame of the croſſe, whereby the prophets had noted the promiſed ſauiour. Now it is not to be doubted, but that the Lord ſhewed alſo out of the Prophets, what profit they ſhould hope for by his death. For the Prophets do not onely teach that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer: but they adde the cauſe, that he might reconcile the world to God.

18. Behold, we goe vp to Ieruſalem. Hereby we perceiue that Chriſt was armed with diuine force for the cõquering of the terrors of death, who witting & willing haſtened to meete death. For why ſhuld he without cõpulſion

goe to that bloudy butchery: but becauſe the inuincible power of the ſpirite, vanquiſhing feare, had exalted him aboue all humane affections. But in that he toucheth the circumſtances more nearely, he doth therein giue a more euident declaration of his Godhead. For he could not by his humanity geſſe, that after he was condemned of the Prieſts and Scribes, he ſhoulde be deliuered to the Gentiles, that being entreated with ſpittinges vpon, and other reproches, he ſhould be beaten with whips, and at length bee caried to the puniſhment of the croſſe. And it is to bee noted, that though the Lord knew the infirmity, yet he woulde not hide the moſte grieuous offence. For as we ſayde before, there coulde nothing haue befallen more to the ſhaking of the mindes of the godly, then to ſee all the holy order of the Church againſt Chriſt. Yet to deceiue or to beare with their infirmity, he ſpareth not, but doeth freely declare the matter it ſelfe, and ſheweth the maner howe to ouercome the temptation: that is, that they ſhoulde certainly looke for the reſurrection: but becauſe it was neceſſary that he ſhould firſt die, he appoynteth them by hope in the meane ſeaſon to waite for their triumphe.

34. But they vnderſtoode none of theſe things. VVhat blockiſhneſſe was this, not to vnderſtande thoſe things which Chriſte tolde them ſo plainly and familiarly, of no high nor hidden matter: but ſuch, as they of themſelues might haue conceiued ſome ſuſpition of. But heere it behooueth alſo to remember, that which I ſpake other where, they were therefore holden in ſo great ignorance, becauſe that when they hadde imagined that they ſhould haue a ioyfull and a happy iourney, they accounted it for a great abſurdity, that Chriſt ſhould ſo reprochefully be crucified. VVhereby we gather howe much the mindes of men are bewitched with ſuch falſe imagination, wherefore we muſt be the more heedefull, leaſt we being tangled with ſuch deuiſes, become blinde in the light.

Mathew 20.	Marke 10.	Luke.
20. Then came to him the mother of Zebedeus children, with her ſonnes, woorshipping him, and deſiring a certaine thing of him.	35. Then Iames and Iohn, the ſonnes of Zebedeus came vnto him ſayinge: Maiſter, we woulde that thou ſhouldeſt doe for vs that we deſire.
21. And he ſayde vnto her, what wouldeſt thou? Shee ſayd to him: Graunt that theſe my two ſonnes, may ſit the one at thy right hand, and the other at thy left hand in thy kingdome.	36. And he ſayd vnto them: what would you I ſhould do for you?
	37. And they ſaid to him: graunt vnto vs, that we may ſitte one at thy right hand, & the other at thy left hand in thy glory.
22. And Ieſus anſweared and ſayd: yee knowe not what yee aske. Are yee able to drinke of the cup that I ſhall drinke of, and to bee baptiſed with the baptiſme that I ſhall be baptiſed with? They ſayd to him, we are able.	38. But Ieſus ſayd vnto them: you know not what you aske. Can yee drinke of the cuppe, that I ſhall drinke of, & be baptiſed with the baptiſme that I ſhall be baptiſed with?
23. And he ſayd vnto them: yee ſhall drinke in deede of my cuppe, and	39. And they ſayd vnto him: we can. But Ieſus ſayd vnto them, ye and shalbe baptiſed with the baptiſme that I am baptiſed with: but to ſit at my right hand, and at my left hand, is not mine to giue: but it shalbe giuen to them, for whome it is prepared of my father.

shal drinke in deede of the cuppe that I shall drinke of, and bee baptiſed with the baptiſme wherewith I shalbe baptiſed. 40. But, to ſitte at my right hād, & at my left, is not mine to giue: but it shall be giuen to the, for whom it is prepared.

This hyſtorie containeth a notable ſpectacle of the vanity of man. For it teacheth that true and godlye zeale is often mixed with ambition or ſome other corruption of the fleſh: ſo that they which folow Chriſt, doe looke ſome other where then becommeth them. Further, they do wander farre out of the way, which are not cōtented with Chriſt alone, but ſeeke this thing or that thing beſides him and his promiſes. Neither is it ſufficient to apply the minde ſimply to Chriſt at the firſt, except there be alwaies a continuance of the ſame puritie: becauſe that corrupt affectiōs doe often creepe vpon vs in the midſte of the race, and draw vs back into ſome crooked path. As it is credibly to be ſuppoſed that Zebedeus two ſonnes profeſſed Chriſte ſincerely at the firſt: but when they ſaw themſelues in no ſmall credit with him, and heare mention made that he is toward a kingdome, their mindes are preſently caried to a wicked deſire, and they loath to remaine ſimply in their office. If this befalleth to the two chief diſciples, it behoueth vs to walk very carefully, if we wil not fall from the right courſe. Eſpecially where anye apte occaſion offreth it ſelfe, heede muſt be taken leaſt the couetouſnes of honours ſhould infect or poyſon the deſire of godlines. But though Mat. & Mark do ſomwhat differ in words, yet they agree in the ſubſtance of the matter. Math. ſaith that Zebedeus wife came and made requeſte for her ſonnes, that they might be placed firſt in the kingdom of Chriſt. Mark bringeth in them making the requeſt themſelues. But it is probable that they beeing aſhamed to do it themſelues, did craftily ſette their mother forwardes, who might the more boldly demaund it. But that the motion came from thē, it is gathered of this, that Chriſt anſweareth them, and not the mother. Alſo that the mother humbly ſhewed that ſhe had ſomwhat to aske, before ſhe would vtter what ſhe had in her minde. And they alſo in Marke do generally condition, that they would haue graunted them whatſoeuer they ſhoulde deſire. This fearefull inſinuation teſtifieth that they thought euil of it themſelues.

21 In thy kingdome. This was praiſe worthy in Zebedeus ſonnes, that they hoped for ſome kingdome of Chriſt, whereof there appeared not then ſo muche as the leaſt ſhewe. They ſee him deſpiſed vnder the baſe eſtate of a ſeruaunt; yea they ſee him deſpiſed and loathed of the world, and ſubiecte to many reproofes: yet they perſwaded themſelues that ſhortly he ſhall be a glorious kinge, becauſe he had ſo taught them. Sure a ſingular example of faith: but we perceiue hereby how quickely the pure ſeede degenerateth into corruptions, aſſoone as it is ſetteled in our harts: for they imagined the ſhadow of a kingdom, & preſently they fal away & ſeeke for the chiefe roumes. Therfore, ſith this wicked & vile couetouſneſſe ſprang after a general beginning of faith, which of it ſelfe was worthy to be praiſed, we muſt pray vnto God that he wold not only open the eyes of our minds, but alſo that he would continually direct vs, and hold vs in the right way. He muſt alſo be entreated, that he wold not only giue vs faith, but that he would keepe vs pure from all mixture.

22. You know not what you aske. This their folly is to be condemned in two poynts: firſt, for that they ambitiouſly deſired more then was meete, then for that they imagined a vaine fantaſie in ſtead of the celeſtiall kingdom of Chriſt. Concerning the firſt, who ſoeuer not ſatisfied with Gods free adoption deſireth to be aloft, goeth beyond his calling, and by thruſting himſelf in, further then is meete, becōmeth vnthankfull vnto God. Now it were too ouerthwart a courſe to meaſure the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, by the vnderſtanding of our fleſhe. And certainly, the more ſuche idle ſpeculations do delite mans vnderſtanding, ſo muche the more they muſt be auoided: as ſee the bookes of the ſophiſters, full of ſuch vaine deuiſes.

Can you drinke of the cuppe. That he might reprooue their ambition, and withdraw them frō their corrupt deſire, he ſetteth before them the croſſe, and all the troubles which the children of God muſt paſſe through. As if he ſhuld haue ſayd: haue you ſo much leiſure from the preſent warfare, that you now appoynt an order for the glory & pomps of the triumph? For if they had been earneſtly giuen to follow their calling, they had neuer giuen place to this wicked imagination. Wherefore Chriſte in this ſentence commaundeth them which do greedily ſnatch at the price before the time, to be occupied in meditatinge the exerciſes of godlineſſe. And certainly, ambition is beſt ſuppreſſed with this bridle, becauſe that our eſtate is ſuch while we wander in this world, that it behoueth vs to ſhake off thoſe vaine delites: the ennemye ſometime ſetteth vpon vs with ſecreat ſleights, and thoſe very many, and ſometime he aſſaulteth vs with open force. Is not he worſe then a foole, who amongſt ſo many deathes doth careleſſy delite himſelf in a fantaſied triumph? The Lord commandeth his to be ſure of the victory, and to triumphe in the midſt of death, becauſe that otherwiſe they ſhould not be encouraged to fight manfully: but it is one thing for a man in hope of a reward promiſed from God, to bend himſelfe to fight chearefully, and to apply himſelfe withal his force to this purpoſe: and it is another thing for me vnmindful of the warres, forſaking the ennemy, and neglecting the daungers, to runne before vnto the triumph: which ſhoulde haue beene waited for vnto the time appoynted. Note alſo that this prepoſterous ſpeede, doeth for the moſt part drawe menne from their calling. For euen as the moſte cowarde in battaile doeth moſt greedily deſire the pray: ſo in the kingdome of Chriſte none doe more deſire the ſupremacie, then they which doe moſte flee all trouble and labours. Therefore Chriſte doeth rightly tie them to their ſtandinge, that are puffed vppe with vaine glorye. But the ſumme is, that the crowne is prepared for none but them whiche ſtriue lawfully: and eſpecially, that no man ſhall liue and raigne with Chriſte, except he be a pertaker of his ſufferings and death before.

By the woorde Baptiſme, the maner of the Metaphore doeth plainely appeare: for wee knowe that the faithfull are inſtructed by Baptiſme, to deny themſelues to crucifie the olde man, and alſo to beare the croſſe. It is to be doubted whether the Lorde by the woorde Cuppe, aliuded to the myſterie of the holy Supper: but becauſe that then it was not yet in vſe, I doe rather take it for the meaſure of afflictions, which God aſſigneth to euery man. For becauſe that the Lorde according to his pleaſure layeth his burden vpon euery man, euen as the houſholder deuideth and parteth his portions amongſt his houſholde, therefore it is ſayde that hee giueth them his cuppe to drinke. But there is no ſmall comfort in theſe wordes to alay the bitterneſſe of the croſſe, while that Chriſt doth ioyne himſelf with vs in the ſame. For what is more to be deſired, then to haue all things in cõmon with the ſonne of God? For by that meanes it commeth to paſſe, that thoſe things which at the firſt ſhew ſeeme to be deadly, doe woorke for our ſaluation and life. And who ſoeuer deſireth to be altogither without the croſſe, how ſhall he be accounted amongſt the diſciples of Chriſt, who refuſeth to be baptiſed with his baptiſme? for this is nothing elſe then to withdraw himſelfe from the firſt rudiments. And nowe as oft as baptiſme is mentioned, let vs remember that we are baptiſed of this condition, and to this ende, that we ſhoulde beare the croſſe vppon our ſhoulders. Iohn and Iames doe bragge very luſtily, that they are ready to drinke of the cuppe, in the which the bolde confidence of the fleſh appeareth: for when we are without the reache of the dartes, we ſeeme able to doe any thing. And that which befell ſhortly after, diſcouered their raſhneſſe. Yet this good was in them, that as men ready for both eſtates, they offer themſelues to beare the croſſe.

23. Yee ſhall drinke in deede of my cuppe. Becauſe they were diſciples, it was neceſſary that they ſhould be made like their maiſter. And Chriſt telleth them before, what ſhoulde come to paſſe afterwardes, that they might arme themſelues with patience: and vnder the perſon of theſe two men, he ſpeaketh to al his diſciples. For though many of the faithful haue that lotte to die peaceably, and not a violent and bloudy death, yet it is common to all (as Paule Rom. 8. teacheth) to bee made like to the image of Chriſt. Therefore they are all their life, as ſheepe led to the ſlaughter.

It is not mine to giue. Chriſt by this anſweare derogateth nothing from himſelfe: but only declareth that this office was not enioyned him of the father, to aſsigne euery manne a diſtincte and proper ſeat in heauen. He came, that he might gather al his into eternal life: and this ought to ſuffice vs, that there is an inheritance for vs purchaſed with his bloude. But in what degree ſome ſhalbe placed aboue others, neither is it our part to enquire, neither would God that Chriſt ſhould reueale it to vs, but that it ſhould be deferred vnto the laſt reuelation. Nowe we vnderſtande the purpoſe of Chriſte, that hee diſputeth not heere of his owne power, but onely would haue the ende conſidered wherefore he was ſent of the father, and what belongeth to his calling. And therefore he maketh a difference betweene the ſecreat counſell of God, and the office of teachinge committed vnto him. A profitable admonition, teaching vs to be ſoberly wiſe, and not to endeuour our ſelues to breake into the hidden myſteries of God, and eſpecially that we be not curious aboue meaſure, in ſearching the eſtate of the life to come. For it doeth not yet appeare, 1. Iohn 3. 2. what we ſhall be, vntill God ſhall make vs like vnto him. But it is to be noted, that there is not an equality amongeſt the children of God, after they ſhall be receiued into the heauenly glory, but he rather promiſeth that degree of honour to euery one of them, to the whiche they are ordained by the eternall counſell of God.

Mathew 20.	Marke 10.	Luke 22.
24. And when the other tenne heard this, they diſdained at the two brethren.	41. And when the ten heard that, they beganne to diſdaine at Iames and Iohn.	24. And there aroſe alſo a ſtrife among thē, which of them ſhoulde ſeeme to be the greateſt.
25. Therefore Ieſus called them vnto him, & ſayd: ye know that the Lordes of the Gentiles haue domination ouer them, and they that are great, exerciſe authoritie ouer them.	42. But Ieſus called them vnto him, and ſaide to them: yee know that they which delite to beare rule amonge the Gentiles, haue domination ouer them, and they that bee great amonge them, exerciſe authoritie ouer them.	25. But hee ſaide vnto them: The kinges of the Gentiles raigne ouer them, & they that beare rule ouer them, are called Gracious Lordes.
26. But it ſhall not be ſo among you: but who ſoeuer wil be great among you, let him be your ſeruaunt.	43. But it ſhall not be ſo among you: but who ſoeuer will be great amonge you, ſhall be your ſeruaunt.	26. But you ſhall not be ſo: but let the greateſt among you, be as the leaſt: & the chiefeſt, as he that ſerueth.
27. And who ſoeuer will bee chiefe amonge you, lette him bee your ſeruaunt.	44. And who ſoeuer will be chiefe of you, ſhall be the ſeruaunt of all.	27. For who is greater, hee that ſitteth at table, or he that ſerueth? Is not he that ſitteth at table? And I am among you, as he that ſerueth.
28. Euen as the Sonne of man came not to bee ſerued, but to ſerue, and to giue his life for the raunſome of many.	45. For euen the Sonne of manne came not to be ſerued, but to ſerue, and to giue his life for the ranſome of many.

24. VVhen the other tenne heard this. Luke ſeemeth to referre this contention to an other time. But who ſoeuer ſhall wiſely conſider that 22. chapter, ſhall eaſily perceiue, that thoſe ſpeaches ſpoken at diuers times, were wrytten vppe togither without regard of order. Therefore that contention for ſuperiority, wherof Luke maketh mētion, ſprang from this fountaine, that the ſonnes of Zebedeus, ambitiouſly ſought for the chiefe places in the kingdome of Chriſt. And yet the other hadde no iuſt cauſe to diſdaine them: for when as the two were ſharply reproued for their foliſh ambition, ſo that they went away from Chriſte with ſhame; what hurt tooke the other tenne, by that fooliſh deſire of theirs, which they obtained not? For though there was iuſt cauſe giuen thē of emulation, yet the repulſe of the others ſhuld haue appeaſed them. But the lord wold by this occaſiō diſcouer the diſeaſe that lay hid in thē: for there was not one of them which woulde willingly giue place to the others, but euery man nouriſhed ſecreatly in himſelf the hope of the ſuperioritie. For it cōmeth to paſſe, that they enuie and contend amongſt themſelues: yea, that wicked deſire raigneth in all men. If that this vice was grafted in baſe and obſcure men, and brake out vppon light and almoſte no occaſion: howe much behoueth it vs to take hede, where there is wode for the hidden fire to burne, or matter to woorke on. Therefore we ſee that ambition waxeth hotte amongeſt the mighty and honourable, and ſheweth the flames

farre and wide, except the ſpirite of modeſty doe quenche from heauen, that pride that ſticketh in the nature of men.

25. Ye know that the Lordes of the Gentiles haue domination ouer them. Firſt it is ſaid that Chriſt called them vnto hym, that he might reproue them apart. Alſo we do gather hereof, that when they were aſhamed of their deſire, they did not openly complain, but there began a ſecreat whiſpering and grudging, and euery one of them did ſecreatly preferre himſelfe aboue others. Further, he doeth not generally declare how deadly a plague ambition is, but ſimply teacheth that there is not a more foliſh thing, then to ſtriue about nothing. For he declareth that there ſhall be no ſuche ſuperioritie in his kingdome as they did ſtriue for. They therefore are deceiued, which do ſtretch this ſaying to all the godly in generall, when as Chriſte onely teacheth of that matter in hande, that the Apoſtles were very fonde to make any queſtion of degree, of power, or of honoure in their eſtate and calling: for the office of teaching whereto they were appoynted, hadde no likelihoode with the Empires of the worlde. I graune that this doctrine as well appertaineth to priuate menne as to kings and magiſtrates: for no manne deſerueth to bee accounted of the flocke of Chriſte, but he that hath ſo profited vnder the ſchoolemaiſter of humilitie, ſo that hee will arrogate nothinge to himſelfe, but humbly applieth himſelfe to maintaine brotherly loue.

This is true, but the purpoſe of Chriſt was (as I ſayde) to putte a difference, betweene the ſpirituall regiment of his Church and earthly empires, leaſt the Apoſtles ſhoulde apply themſelues to courtly graces and faſhions. For as euery one among the nobles is beloued of kinges, ſo hee climeth vppe to wealth and offices. But Chriſte ſette Paſtours ouer his Churche, not to beare a Lordly rule ouer them, but to miniſter. So the errour of the Anabaptiſtes which do baniſh kings and magiſtrates from the Churche of God, becauſe Chriſte ſayde they were not like his diſciples, is ouerthrowne: for the compariſon is not made heere betweene Chriſtians and prophane menne, but betweene offices. Note alſo, that Chriſte regarded not ſo muche the perſonnes of the menne, as the eſtate of his Churche. For it might come to paſſe that he which ſhoulde be the Lorde of a towne or of a Citie, might alſo for neceſſitie execute withall the office of teaching. But it was ſufficient for Chriſt to declare what the office Apoſtolicall woulde beare, and what was againſt the ſame. Yet it is demaunded why Chriſt who appoynted diſtinct orders in the church, refuſeth all degrees in this place. For he ſeemeth ſo to ouerthrow all, or at the leaſt ſo to make them equall, that none ſhoulde be lift vppe aboue others. But the courſe of nature teacheth vs a farre other order. And Paul deſcribing the gouernement of the Churche, ſo rehearſeth diuers offices of the miniſterie, that he preferreth the office of the Apoſtles before the office of the Paſtours: and he commanded Timothie and Titus without doubte by the commaundement of God, to be aboue others in authoritie. I aunſweare, if we ſearche all things throughly, Kinges themſelues doe not rule rightly and lawfully, except they ſerue: yet heerein the office of the Apoſtleſhip differeth from the earthly gouernement, for that kinges and magiſtrates are not hindered by their ſeruice, but that they may rule and be ouer their ſubiectes with royall glorye and pompe. So

Dauid,

Dauid, Ezechias, and ſuche like, when as willingly they became the ſeruaunts of all menne, yet were they adorned with the Scepter, Diademe, throane, and other ſuche Enſignes. But the gouernment of the Churche admitteth no ſuche thinge: for Chriſte gaue no more allowance to the paſtours, then that they ſhoulde be miniſters, and that they ſhoulde altogither abſtaine from Lordly gouernement.

Heere is alſo to be noted, that this is ſpoken rather of the thing it ſelf, then of the affection. Chriſt ſeparateth his Apoſtles from the degree of kings, not becauſe it was lawfull for them to lift vppe themſelues aboue kinges, but becauſe there is a greate difference betweene the eſtate of kinges, and the office of the Apoſtleſhippe. Therefore when as it behoueth them bothe to be humble and lowly, the Apoſtles muſte alwayes looke what fourme of gouernement the Lord hath appoynted vnto his Churche.

As concerning the woordes, where Mathew ſayeth, the Kinges exerciſe authority ouer them, Luke ſayeth, they are called gratioſus Lordes, or bountifull, bothe meaning one thing. As if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde: Kings flowe in wealth, and haue aboundaunce of richeſſe, that they might be bountifull and liberall. For thoughe kings reioyce more in their power, and had rather to be feared, then to be loued, yet they deſire to be praiſed, and to be accoũted bountifull. VVhercof they haue in the Hebrewe tounge the name bountifull, ſo called of giuing or beſtowing: for the cuſtomes & tributes are payed them to no other ende, but that they may haue ſufficient for their neceſſary charges of their honour and glory.

26. It ſhall not be ſo among you. It is not to be doubted but that Chriſte reprooueth the fooliſh imagination wherewith he ſawe the Apoſtles deceiued. It is fooliſhly and fondly done of you, to imagine that you ſhall haue a kingdome, which I abhorre. Therefore, if you deſire to ſerue mee faithfully, you muſt think vpõ another courſe, that euery one of you do earneſtly apply themſelues to ſerue others. But hee ſpeaketh vnproperly, commaundinge him that will be greateſt, to become a ſeruaunt, for ambition will not ſuffer him to ſerue and ſubmitte himſelf to the brethren. I graunt that they which doe aſpire to honour, doe vſe a ſeruile flatterie, but their purpoſe is nothing les then to ſerue. But the meaning of Chriſt is plaine: for ſithe euery manne is caried away with the loue of himſelfe, he ſayeth that this affection muſt be otherwiſe altered. As if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde: Lette this be your onely greatneſſe, excellency and dignity, to ſubmitte your ſelues to the brethren: lette this alſo be your ſuperiority to be the ſeruaunts of all.

28. As the Sonne of manne. Chriſte confirmeth the former doctrine by his owne example, becauſe he had willingly humbled himſelfe, and taken vppon him the eſtate of a ſeruaunt, as Paule alſo teacheth, Phillip. 2. 7. Further, that he might more euidently declare howe farre hee was from ſuche ambitious pomp, he calleth them backe to his death: as if he ſhould haue ſayde: Becauſe I haue choſen you in honour nexte vnto my ſelf, corrupt ambition prouoketh you to deſire to raigne. I (after whoſe example you ſhould frame your life) came not to liue vppe my ſelfe, or to take vppon mee any kingly dignitie: but doe rather take vppon me the ſhame of the croſſe, togither with the baſe and contemptible eſtate of the fleſhe.

If

If any man obiecte that Chriſte was therefore exalted of the father, that euery knee ſhoulde bowe before him, is eaſily anſweared, for that he nowe ſayeth, is to be referred to the time of his humiliation. Therefore it is added by Luke, that hee was ſo conuerſant amongeſt them, as if hee were their ſeruaunt: not that he was inferiour to them, either in ſhew or in title, or in deede (for he would be acknowledged for their maſter and Lord) but becauſe he humbled himſelfe to ſo great lowlineſſe, ſo that he ſubmitted himſelfe to beare their infirmities. Furthermore, it is to be remembred, that he compareth heere the greater with the leſſe, as he doeth in Iohn 13.14. If I which am your Maiſter and your Lord, haue waſhed your feete, much more ought you to doe this one to an other.

To giue his life for the raunſome of many. Chriſt doeth therefore make mention of death (as we ſayd) that he might withdraw his diſciples from that peeuiſh fantaſie of an earthly kingdome. In the meane while, is the force and frute of the ſame aptly and very well expreſſed, while he ſayeth that his life ſhoulde be the price of our redemption. Whereof it followeth that our reconciliation with God is a free gift, the raunſome whereof is no where elſe to be found, but in the death of Chriſt. Therefore in this one woorde, is ouerthrowne what ſoeuer the Papiſts doe prattle of their filthy ſatisfactions. Furthermore, when as Chriſt ſhould raunſome vs to himſelfe by his death, ſo that this ſubmiſsion whereof hee ſpeaketh, is ſo farre from derogating from his great glory, ſo that it greatly adorneth the ſame. Hee ſpeaketh of Many not definitely for any certaine number, but for diuers: becauſe he oppoſeth himſelf againſt all others. And in this ſenſe is it taken in the Epiſtle to the Ro.5.15. where Paule ſpeaketh not of any one ſort of men, but it comprehendeth all mankinde.

34. And Ieſus moued with compaſsion, touched their eyes, & immediatelye theyr eyes receiued ſight, & they followed him.

51. And Ieſus anſweared and ſayde vnto him: VVhat wilt thou that I doe vnto thee ? And the blinde ſayd vnto him: Lord that I may receiue ſight.
52. Then Ieſus ſayd vnto him: Goe thy way, thy faith hath ſaued thee. And by and by, hee receiued his ſight, and followed Ieſus in the way.

41. Sayinge, what wilte thou that I doe vnto thee? And hee ſayde, Lorde, that I may receiue my ſight.
42. And Ieſus ſayd vnto him: Receiue thy ſight, thy faith hath ſaued thee.
43. Then immediately he receiued his ſighte, and followed him praiſing God : and all the people, when they ſawe this, gaue praiſe to God.

29. And as they departed thence. Oſiander ſeemeth very ſubtilly, to make of one blinde man foure. But his deuice is very friuolous. Becauſe he ſaw the Euangeliſtes differ in many woordes, he imagined that he gaue one blinde man his ſight at his entrance into the city: but the ſecond and two others had their ſight giuen them, when Chriſt departed thence. But all the circumſtances do ſo agree, that no wiſe man wil beleue that they entreat of diuers hyſtories. For (that I may omitte the reſt) when they that followed Chriſt, endeuoured firſt to make him hold his peace, and ſawe him healed beyond their expectation, would they ſo ſoone haue attempted the like in the other three? But it is not needefull to followe euery poynte, out of the which euery manne may gather eaſily, that they doe ſet downe one and the ſame hyſtorie. But the difference offendeth them, for that Mathewe and Marke doe ſay that the myracle was wroughte vppon one or two blinde menne, as Chriſt went out of the Citie: And Luke maketh mention that it was done before he came into the Citie. Then that Marke and Luke doe ſpeake but of one blinde man, and Mathewe addeth two. But ſith wee knowe that this doeth often fall out among the Euangeliſtes, that in ſettinge downe one and the ſame hyſtorie, one letteth paſſe that which is reported of the others: and againe, that is more plainly expounded by one which is paſſed in ſilence by the other: it muſt ſeeme no newe nor ſtraunge thinge in this preſent place. And I doe ſuppoſe that the blinde manne cried out as Chriſt came toward the citie: but ſith he was not hearde then, becauſe of the noyſe, hee gate him into the way, at his comming out of the citie, and then at lengthe Chriſt called him.

So Luke beginninge at the very beginninge, doeth not proſecute the whole hyſtorie, but paſſeth ouer the time of Chriſtes tariaunce in the citie: and the other two doe onely touche the time whiche was neareſt to the myracle. And it may be coniectured, that Chriſt oft times for the triall of the faith of menne, doeth ſometimes deferre them, and ſo hee tried this blinde manne. The ſeconde knotte is eaſily looſed: for we haue ſeene in an other place before, that Marke and Luke reported, that one man poſſeſſed with a deuil was healed, where Mat. nameth two, euē as in this place, and yet they diſagree not. But it may rather be coniectured, when one blinde manne at the firſt ſoughte for helpe of Chriſte, an other was mooued by his example, and by this occaſion two receiued their ſighte. But Marke and Luke doe ſpeake of one onely, either becauſe hee was more knowen then the other, or becauſe the power of Chriſte was as notably ſhewed in one as in two. And ſurely, Marke ſeemeth to ſpeake of him that was ſo well knowen, and therefore ſetteth downe as wel his owne name as his fathers. For he doeth not commende either his birth or his welth: for he was of the meaneſt ſort of the people, a begger. VVherby it appeareth that the myracle wrought vppon him, was the more notable, becauſe that his calamity was commonly knowne. And thys ſeemeth to me to be the reaſon, why Marke and Luke do onely name him, and ſaye nothinge of the other, who was as an inferiour addition. But Mathew who was an eye witneſſe, woulde not omit this other, thoughe he was not ſo well knowen.

30. O Lorde, the ſonne of Dauid, haue mercy on vs. I ſayd euen nowe, that one of theſe beganne to cry: but the like neceſsity doeth eaſily driue the other to ioyne himſelf alſo with him. Alſo, they giue no ſmall honor to Chriſt, in this that they deſire him to haue mercy vpon them, and to help them. For they were perſwaded that he hadde helpe and remeady in his hand, which they needed: but their faith is more to be marueiled at in this, that they confeſſe him to be Meſsias, whome we knowe the Iewes noted with this title. Therefore they flee to Chriſt, not onely as to ſome Prophet, but the onely authour of ſaluation, which was promiſed of God. The crying doeth ſhew the vehemencie of their affection: for when they knew that their woordes were odious to manye, that regarded not the honour of Chriſt, their earneſt deſire ouercame their feare, ſo that notwythſtãding they freely lifted vppe their voyce.

31. The multitude rebuked them. It is marueile that Chriſtes diſciples, which followed him for duety and reuerence, would driue theſe poore wretches from the grace of Chriſte, and as muche as in them lay, ſtopte the paſſage of his power. But this commeth oft times to paſſe, that the greateſt number of them, whiche profeſſe the name of Chriſte, doe rather hinder and ſtaye vs from commynge to him, then call vs to him. If Sathan wroughte by godlye and ſimple menne, whiche followed Chriſte for ſome religion, to be a hinderance to theſe two blinde menne, howe muche more will he bringe his purpoſe to paſſe by hypocrites and faithleſſe menne, if we take not diligent heede to our ſelues? Therefore we haue neede of conſtancy, whereby we may paſſe all ſtoppes and hinderances: yea, the moe ſtoppes Sathan layeth in our way, the more it behooueth vs to bend our ſelues earneſtly to prayer: as we ſee theſe blinde men doubled their cry.

32. VVhat will yee that I ſhal do? He doeth louingly and gently aske, what they deſire. For hee had determined to graunt their requeſts: for it is not to be thought, but that they prayed with a ſpecial motiõ of the ſpirit. For as the Lorde will not deliuer all men from bodily diſeaſes: ſo doeth hee not allowe them ſimply to pray after their pleaſure. There is a rule preſcribed vs, what we ſhould aske, and howe, and in what reſpect: it is not lawfull to decline from the ſame, except the Lorde by the ſecreat motion of the ſpirite, reache anye peculiar and ſpeciall petition. But Chriſte aſketh them this queſtion, not ſo muche in reſpecte of their priuate cauſe, as in reſpecte of all the people. For wee knowe that the worlde deuoureth the bleſsings of God without ſenſe, except it be moued and ſtirred vppe.

There-

Therefore Chriſte by this ſayinge,ſtirreth vppe the multitude there preſent to obſerue and marke the myracle,as he doeth alſo moue them with a viſible ſigne, while he openeth their eyes with touching them. VVhen Mathewe ſayeth that Ieſus hadde compaſsion of them, it is not the participle of that verbe, which he vſed euen now in the perſon of the blinde menne. They beſought Chriſte of his mercye,that he woulde helpe them miſerable creatures: but the Euangeliſt nowe declareth,that Chriſte was not onely mooued of his free goodneſſe, to heale them, but becauſe hee was mooued to ſorrowe and griefe together with them for their euill. For the Metaphore is borowed of the bowelles,wherein humanitye and mutuall compaſsion reſteth,which ſtirreth vs vp to helpe our neighbors.

MARKE. 52. Thy faith hath ſaued thee. By the woorde faith,he doeth not onely meane the hope of recouering of his ſight,but a deper perſwaſion that this blind man had,in this that he acknowledged Ieſus to be the Meſsias promiſed of God. Neither is this to be thoughte to be a confuſe knowledge,for we haue ſeene before,that this confeſsion was taken out of the lawe and the prophets. For the blinde manne did not raſhly call Chriſte by the name of the ſonne of Dauid,but receiued him for ſuche a one,as he was taught by the promiſſes of God,ſhould come. But Chriſte aſcribeth it to faith,that the blinde manne receiueth his ſight: for though the power and grace of God doeth ſometime extende euen to the vnbeleeuers,yet no man vſeth his benefites rightly & profitably,but he which enioyeth the ſame by faith: naye,the vſe of the giftes of God, is ſo farre from profiting the vnfaithfull,that it is rather hurtfull. VVherefore this ſaluation,whereof Chriſt maketh mention, is not reſtrained to the outward health,but alſo comprehendeth the curing and ſauing of the ſoule. As if Chriſt ſhould haue ſayd,that the blind man had obtained by faith, that by Gods mercy he ſhould haue his requeſt graunted. If that the Lord in reſpect of faith,beſtoweth his grace vppon the blinde man,it followeth that he was iuſtified by faith.

MATH. 34. They followed him. This was a ſigne of thankefulneſſe, that the blinde menne applied themſelues to follow Chriſt. And though it is vncertaine,whether they did tary longe in this office and calling:yet it was a token of a thankefull minde, to ſhew foorth the grace of Chriſt in this iourney to many. Luke addeth that the people gaue the glorye to God:which maketh for the aſſured proofe of the myracle.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 9.
		1. Nowe, when Ieſus entered and paſſed throughe Iericho,
		2. Behold there was a man named Zacheus,which was the chiefe receiuer of the Tribute, and hee was riche:
		3. And hee ſought to ſee Ieſus, who he ſhoulde be, and coulde not for the preaſe, becauſe hee was of a lowe ſtature.

4. VVherefore he ranne before, and climed vp into a wilde figge tree, that he might see him: for hee shoulde come that way.

5. And when Iesus came to the place, hee looked vppe, and sawe him, and saide vnto him, Zacheus, come downe at once: for to day I must abide at thine house.

6. Then hee came downe hastily, and receiued him ioyfully.

7. And when all they sawe it, they murmured, sayinge, that he was gone in to lodge with a sinful man.

8. And Zacheus stoode foorth, and sayde vnto the Lorde: Beholde, Lorde, the halfe of my goodes I giue to the poore: and if I haue taken from any manne by forged cauillation, I restore him foure folde.

9. Then Iesus saide to him: This day is saluation come to this house, for as muche as he is also become the sonne of Abraham.

10. For the sonne of man is come to seeke, and to saue that which was lost.

Hereby it appeareth that Luke was not very curious in obseruing the order and course of times. For after that he hath declared the myracle, he now rehearseth what befell in the citie of Iericho. And he saith, when Christe offered himselfe to all menne, walkinge by the wayes, there was one Zacheus, who was very desirous to see him. For this was a signe of his great desire, that he climed vppe vppon a tree, when as riche men for the moste parte are proud, and chalenge a shew of grauity in themselues. It maye bee that other also desired the same: but Luke especially maketh mention of this manne, rather then of any of the other, partly in respect of the estate of him, partly in respecte of the woonderfull conuersion of the manne so sodainly wrought. And though Zacheus hadde not as yet faith planted in him, yet this was a certaine preparation to the same. For hee coulde not so earnestly desire to see Christe without a heauenly instincte: especially to that ende, as it presently appeareth. For it is certaine, that some of a vaine curiositie came to see Christe from places farre distant: but it appeareth by the successe, that Zacheus hadde the seede of godlinesse in his minde. So the Lord before he manifesteth himselfe vnto men, doeth often inspire them with a blinde affection, whereby they are caried to him, whome they haue not yet knowen nor seene. And though they haue no certaine apparante reason why they doe so, yet hee deceiueth them not: but reuealeth himselfe in time vnto them.

5. Zacheus, come downe at once, for this day I must. An example of grace worthy to be remembered, in that the Lorde preuenteth Zacheus, and tarieth not for his biddinge, but of himselfe seeketh entertainment at hys house. VVe knowe how odious and how detestable the name of a Publicane was, and that doeth Luke shortly after declare. Therefore it was great kindnesse of the sonne of God to come to him, whose companye the common people abhorred, and that before hee was bidden. But it is no maruaile that hee doeth him this honour, whome hee had drawen

vnto him by the secreate motion of the spirite before: for it was a more excellent gifte, to dwell in his heart, then to enter into his house. And by this speache hee declareth that men which doe sincerely desire to knowe him, shall neuer seeke him in vaine. For Zacheus obtaineth muche more then he hoped for. Further, the force and direction of the holy Ghoste doeth more plainly appeare in this, that Zacheus obeyed so readily, and came so speedily from the tree, and receiued Christ with ioy. For though he had not as yet a perfect faith, yet this readinesse to learne, and obedience, was a beginning of faith.

7. When all they sawe it. The inhabitants of the towne doe murmure, & so it may be that some of them that followed Christ, did, because that he went in to a man diffamed and of an euill name, yea when no manne bad him. So, when as the world neglecteth the grace of God offered vnto it, it murmureth and grudgeth that it is bestowed vpon others. But let vs see how farre their grudging is from equitie: they thinke it an absurd thing that Christ shoulde make that account of that wicked manne. For Sinner is not taken heere in the common sense, as in diuers other places: but it signifieth a man of a filthy and notorious euill life. Lette vs graunt that Zacheus was such a manne: yet it must first be considered, for what purpose Christe chose to lodge at his house. For while they murmured without the doores, God mightely shewing the glory of his name within, confuted their wicked cauill. For the conuersion of Zacheus, was a wonderfull worke of God: yet there was no iust cause why they should speake so infamously of Zacheus. Hee was a receiuer of customes: and of it selfe it was not wicked to gather customes: but the Iewes were odious and enuious against that sort of people, because they thought it not mete for them to be tributaries. But what maner of man soeuer Zacheus was Christe was yet to be praised, and not to be blamed for his kindnesse for helping this miserable man: in that he brought him from destruction to saluation. For that offence feared him not, but that he went forwarde to doe that which his father commaunded. And it behooueth all the ministers of the Gospel to haue this courage, that they should make more account of the saluation of one soule, then of the murmuring woordes of all the wicked, and therefore, thoughe they see their deedes and all their sayings subiect to slanders, yet they should not cease from their office.

8. And Zacheus stoode foorth. Christes woorke may be iudged of by this comming foorth: but men make such prepostrous haste, that they leaue no place to God. Also Zacheus conuersion is described by the frutes and the outward signes, because it was probable that he encreased his wealth, by the hinderance of many men, he is ready if he hath defrauded any man, to restore foure fold: furthermore, he bequeatheth halfe of his goods to the poore. Some man might in deede haue bestowed all his goodes vpon the poore, whose liberalitye yet might be nothinge accounted of before God: but though heere be no mention made of the inward repentance, yet Luke meaneth that this godly purpose which he commēdeth in Zacheus, sprang from that liuely roote. So Paule speaking of repentaunce, exhorteth vs so to behaue our selues, that men may thereby vnderstande that we are become better. Let him that stoale, steale no more: but lette him rather labour and worke with his hands, that he may haue to helpe the poore and needy. Ephes. 4. 28. Therefore we must beginne at our heart, but our repentance muſt be ſhewed by our workes. But let vs note that Zacheus woulde not offer to God a portion of thoſe things whiche he had gotten by ſpoyle, as many rich men do giue a part of their theftes to God, that they might haue the more libertye to ſpoile afterwarde, and that they may goe free for the wrongs they haue done before. But Zacheus doeth ſo ſacrifice the one halfe of his goodes to God, that hee alſo recompenceth what iniuries ſoeuer he hath done. Whereby we gather that he had not gotten his goodes by vnlawfull gaine. So Zacheus is not only ready to ſatisfie any thing he had gotten by fraud, but he imparteth his lawfull patrimonie with the poore: whereby he declareth that hee is turned from a wolfe, not only into a ſhepe, but alſo into a ſhepheard. And now amending the faultes before committed, he renounceth thoſe euill practiſes hereafter: as God requireth of his this firſt, that they ſhould abſtaine from all offence. But Zacheus doeth not of neceſsity binde others to follow his example, and to ſpoyle themſelues of the one halfe of their goodes: but that rule only muſt be kept, which the Lord preſcribeth, that we ſhould yeelde our ſelues and all we haue, to holy and lawfull vſes.

9. This day is ſaluation come to this houſe. This teſtimonie whiche Chriſte giueth to Zacheus, declareth that he did not diſſemble: neither yet doeth he aſcribe the cauſe of ſaluation to his good woorkes: but becauſe that conuerſion was a ſure pledge of the adoption of God, hee doeth thereby gather very well, that that houſe ſhoulde enherite ſaluation: and this doe the woordes alſo ſignifie. For becauſe Zacheus was one of the children of Abraham, hee argueth that his houſe ſhould be ſaued. Further, it is neceſſary that he which woulde be accounted amongeſt the children of Abraham, ſhoulde followe his faith: yea, the ſcripture giueth this commendation properly to faith, for that it putteth the difference betweene the natural children of Abraham, and ſtraungers. Therefore we muſt know that that is principally cõmended, which is the cauſe wherefore his good woorkes do alſo become acceptable to God. Neither is it to be doubted, but that Chriſtes doctrine went before the conuerſion of Zacheus. Therfore that was the beginning of ſaluation, the hearing of Chriſte teaching of the free mercy of God, of the reconciliation of men with him, of the redemption of the Church, and by faith to receiue that doctrine. Becauſe that Houſe is the maſculine gender in Greeke, this place may be expounded two wayes. The olde interpreater referreth this to Zacheus: which iudgement I doe alſo like beſt. Eraſmus had rather tranſlate it, that the houſe it ſelfe was the childe of Abraham: which though I do not refell, yet I doe thinke that it is moſt aptly applied to Zacheus. For while God adopteth the houſholder, hee alſo promiſeth that hee will be God of his whole houſe, by right the ſaluation reacheth from the heade to the whole body. But this worde Alſo, or And, is of importance: for Chriſte declareth that Zacheus is no leſſe the childe of Abrahã then the other Iewes, which in their pride deſpiſed him. And leaſt his former life ſhould ſeme to haue ſhutte the gate of ſaluation againſte him, hee reaſoneth of his office, and prooueth that there is nothing in this chaunge, that ſhoulde offende any man: becauſe he was ſent of the father to ſaue them which were loſt.

Mathew 25.

14. For the kingdom of heauen is as a man that going into a straunge countrey, called his seruaunts, and deliuered to them his goodes.
15. And vnto one he gaue fiue talents, and to an other two, and to an other one, to euery manne after his owne abilitie, and straight way went from home.
16. Then he that had receiued the fiue talents, went & occupied with them, & gained other fiue talents.
17. Likewise also, he that receiued two, he also gained other two.
18. But he that receiued that one, went & digged it in the earth, & hid his masters money.
19. But after a longe season, the master of those seruaunts came and reckened with them.
20. Then came he that had receiued fiue talents, and brought e other fiue talents, saying: Maister, thou deliueredst vnto me fiue talentes: behold, I haue gained with them other fiue talents.
21. Then his master said vnto him: It is well done good seruaunt and faithful: thou hast been faithful in litle, I will make thee ruler ouer much, enter into thy masters ioy.
22. Also, he that had receiued two talents, came and sayd: master, thou deliueredst vnto mee two talents: behold I haue gained two other talents with them.
23. His master said vnto him: It is wel done, good seruant & faithful. Thou hast been faithfull in litle, I will make thee ruler ouer muche, enter into thy masters ioy.
24. Then he which had receiued the one talent, came and said: master, I knew thou wast an hard man, which reapest where thou sowedst not, and gatherest where thou strawedst not:
25. I was therfore afraid, & went and hidde thy talent in the earth: behold, thou hast thine owne.
26. And his master answeared & sayd

Luke 19.

11. And whiles they heard these things, he continued & spake a parable, because he was neare to Ierusalem, and because also they thought that the kingdome of GOD should shortly appeare.
12. He sayd therefore, A certaine noble man went into a farre countrey, to receiue for him a kingdom, and so to come againe:
13. And he called his ten seruants, & deliuered ten pieces of money, & said vnto them, occupy till I come.
14. Now his citizens hated him, & sent an embassage after him: saying, Wee wil not haue this manne to raigne ouer vs.
15. And it came to passe, when he was come againe, and hadde receiued his kingdome, that hee commaunded the seruauntes to be called to him, to whome hee gaue his mony, that he might know what euery man had gained.
16. Then came the first, sayinge: Lord, thy piece hath encreased ten pieces. 17. And he said vnto him: wel, good seruant: because thou hast ben faithful in a very litle thing, take thou authoritye ouer x. cities.
18. And the second came, saying: Lord, thy piece hath encreased fiue pieces. 19. And to the same he said: Be thou also ruler ouer fiue cities.
20. So the other came and saide: Lorde, beholde thy piece whiche I haue laide vp in a napkin.
21. For I feared thee, because thou art a straite man: thou takest vppe that thou laidest not downe, and reapest that thou diddest not sowe.
22. Then he sayde vnto him, of thy own mouth wil I iudge thee, O euil seruaunt: Thou knowest that I am a straite manne, takinge vppe that I laide not downe, and reaping that I did not sowe.
23. Wherefore then gauest not thou my mony into the banke, that at my comminge I might haue receiued it with vantage? 24. And ſayd vnto him: thou euill ſeruaunt and ſlouthfull, thou knoweſt that I reape where I ſowed not, and gather where I ſtrawed not.

27. Thou oughteſt therfore to haue put my mony to the exchangers, & then at my comming, ſhould I haue receiued mine owne with vantage.
28. Take therfore the talent from him, and giue it vnto him whiche hath ten talents.
29. For vnto euery man that hath, it ſhalbe giuen, and hee ſhall haue aboundance, and from him that hath not, euen that he hath ſhalbe taken away.
30. Caſt therefore that vnprofitable ſeruaunt into vtter darkeneſſe: there ſhalbe weeping, and gnaſhing of teeth.

24. And hee ſayde to them that ſtode by, take from him that peece, and giue it him that hathe tenne peeces:
25. (And they ſayde vnto him, Lord, he hath ten peeces:)
26. For I ſay vnto you, that vnto all them that haue, it ſhall be giuen: and from him that hath not, euen that hee hath, ſhall be taken from him.
27. Moreouer, thoſe mine ennemies, which would not that I ſhould raigne ouer them, bring hither, & ſlay them before me.
28. And when he had thus ſpoken, he went foorth before, aſcending vp to Ieruſalem.

LV. 11. And whiles they heard theſe things. This was a wonderfull thing, that the diſciples being ſo oft admoniſhed of the death of Chriſt, do paſſe ouer to a kingdom. And this was a double error: firſt that they dreamed of a bleſſed reſt without affliction, then that they valued the kingdom of God after their owne fleſhly vnderſtanding. VVherby it appeareth how ſmall & darke their faith was: for though they had taſted of the hope of the reſurrection, yet that taſt was ſo little, that they helde not any thinge certainly and firmly of Chriſt as they ſhould. They beleeue that he is the redemer, which was promiſed in times paſt, by whō they hope ỹ church ſhall be renued: but that knowledge doth preſently vaniſh into fantaſies, which do either peruert or darken the force of his kingdom. But nothing is more abſurd, then that ſo many admonitions giuen them, ſhuld be forgotten without profite. This truely was a beaſtly blockiſhneſſe in them, not onely to remaine ſecure and careleſſe, but to haſte as it were to the triumph, when as Chriſte had ſo lately and expreſly tolde them, that his bitter and ſhameſull death was at hand.

12. A certaine nobleman. Mathewe not regarding the order of the times, placeth this parable amongſt others. But becauſe his purpoſe was frō the beginning of the 22. chapt. to gather togither the laſt ſpeaches of Chriſt: there is no cauſe why the readers ſhoulde much ſeeke what was ſpoken the firſt, the ſecond, or the thirde day, within ſo ſhort a time. Nowe it is worth the labour to note, what Math. and Luke do differ amongſt them ſelues: for whē he toucheth only one part, this latter toucheth two. Thys they do both ſette downe, that Chriſt is like to a noble man, who going into a farre country to get a kingdom, deliuered his mony to his ſeruāts to occupy, and ſo forwards. But that other part is only touched by Luke, that his ſubiects abuſed the abſence of the prince, mooued a tumult, that they might ſhake off his yoake from them. Chriſt in bothe poyntes bent to this, that the Diſciples were farre deceiued, in that they thoughte that they ſhould now haue a kingdom eſtabliſhed, and that they went now to Hieruſalem, preſentlye to erecte a gloryous eſtate of the ſame. So the hope of a preſent kingdome being taken awaye, he exhorteth them to hope and patience. For hee telleth them that they muſt abide manye troubles a long time, and carefully, beefore they ſhall enioy that glorye, which they ſo earneſtly gape after.

Into a farre countrey. VVhereas the diſciples thought that Chriſte went euen then to take poſſeſsion of his kingdome, hee reproueth this errour firſt: becauſe he muſt take a longe iourney to get him his kingdome. Further, they which hunt after curious pointes, do ſubtilly diſpute what that farre countrey ſhuld meane. I ſuppoſe that Chriſt meant no other thing, then his long abſence from the time of his death, vntill his laſt cõminge. For though he ſitting at the right hande of his father, hath obtained the rule ouer heauen and earth, and ſince hee aſcended into heauen all power is giuen, that euery knee ſhuld bow before him: yet, becauſe he hath not throughly brought all his enemies vnder, nor yet appeared as iudge of the world, nor manifeſted his glorye, it is not vnaptly ſaid that hee is abſent from his, vntill he returne againe furniſhed with a new kingdõ. It is true that he reigneth now, in that he regenerateth his into a heauẽly life, and reneweth them after the image of God, and accompanieth them with Angelles, while he gouerneth his Church by his worde, preſerueth it by his might, enricheth it with the gifts of the ſpirit, cheriſheth it with his grace, and ſuſtaineth it by his power: and to be ſhorte, he beeſtoweth vppon it whatſoeuer is neceſſary for the ſaluation of the ſame, while he ſtayeth the rage of Sathan, and of all the wicked, and bringeth al their deuiſes to nothing: but becauſe this manner of gouernment is hid from the eye of the body, the manifeſtation of the ſame is properly deferd vnto the latter day. Therfore when as the Apoſtles did fondly take hold of the ſhadow of a kingdome, the Lorde ſaieth that he muſt ſeeke the kingdom a farre off, that they might learne to abide that delay.

13. He called his ten ſeruaunts. The number of the ſeruants, is not ſo much to be reſted vpon, as the ſummes of mony. For Math. ſpeaking of diuers ſummes, containeth the more plentiful doctrine: for that Chriſt doth not lay the like burden of trauell vpon all men, but committing a ſmall ſum to one, he maketh an other ruler ouer more. They both agree in this, that Chriſt after a ſort goeth a iourney into a far country from his, vntil the laſt day of the reſurrection: but in the meane while it is not meete that they ſhould ſit idle and do nothing: for euery perticular man hath a certaine calling laid vpon him, wherin he ſhould exerciſe himſelfe: therefore they ought to apply their buſineſſe, that they might diligently further the Lordes worke. Luke ſayeth ſimply, that euery man hath a picce of mony giuen him, becauſe that whether the Lorde committeth vnto vs more or leſſe, euery man ſhall giue a like account for himſelf. Mathew (as I ſayde) dealeth more fully and plainly, for he ſpeaketh of diſtincte and ſeuerall portions. For we know that the Lord doth not giue to al men without differẽce, the like meaſure of gifts, but diuideth them diuerſly as he thinketh beſt, that ſome ſhuld excel others, 1. Cor. 12. 7. & Eph. 4. 7. Alſo we muſt know, that what gift ſoeuer the Lord beſoweth vpon vs, is committed vnto vs as mony, that ſome gaine ſhuld ariſe thereof. For there is not a viler thing, then that the graces of God (the force wherof conſiſteth in the frute of them) ſhould lie buried, and not be applied to ſome vſe.

MAT.

MAT. 15. To euery man after his own ability. Chriſt doth not in theſe words diſtinguiſh nature from the gifts of the ſpirit. For there is no power nor abilitie, which is not to be acknowledged to be receiued frō god. Therfore whoſoeuer would parte with God, ſhal leaue nothing for him ſelf. Then what is the meaning of this, that the maiſter gaue to euery mā more or leſſe after his own ability? That is, becauſe God, as he hath diſpoſed euery man, and adorned him with naturall gifts, ſo alſo dooth he lay this or that vpon him, exerciſeth them in doing of things, hee carieth them forwardes to diuerſe callinges, he furniſheth them notably, for the woorke, and giueth occaſion for them to bee occupied in. But the Papiſtes are to bee laughed at, while they doe hereof gather that the gyftes of God are beſtowed vpon euery man, according to the meaſure of his deſeruing. For though the old interpreter vſed this worde vertue, yet he meant not that God would beſtow vpon men, according as they ſhould behaue themſelues, and get the praiſe of vertue: but onely as the maiſter ſhould eſteeme them fitte. And wee know that God findeth no man fitte, vntill he hath made him ſo. And there is no ambiguitie in the Greek word Dunamis, which Chriſt vſeth.

20. He which had fiue talents. They are ſayde to gain, which do profitably employ whatſoeuer God hath left with them. For the life of the godly is aptly compared to gayning by occupying, for they ought to deale to & fro for the maintenaunce of ſocietie amongſt themſelues. And the induſtry which euery man applyeth in the occupying of the gyft committed to him, & the calling it ſelf, the faculty of wel doing, and the other gifts, are accounted for marchandiſe: becauſe they belong to this vſe and end, that there may be a mutuall fellowſhippe amongſt men. And the gayne whereof Chriſt maketh mention, is the common profitte, which ſetteth forth the glory of God. For though God doth not enrich nor encreaſe our works, yet as euery man doth profit moſt his brethren, and doth profitablye apply for their ſaluatiō the gifts, which he hath receiued of God: ſo is he ſayd to profit or to gaine to God himſelf. For the heauēly father doth ſo much accoūt of the ſaluation of men, that whatſoeuer is imploied that way, hee woulde haue it reckoned amongſt his accountes.

Further, leaſt we ſhould waxe weary of well doing, Chriſt ſaith that their labour ſhall not be in vaine, which doe exerciſe themſelues faythfully in their calling. Luke ſaith, that he was made ruler ouer fiue cities, which had gayned fiue pieces: by which wordes hee declareth that the glory of his kingdome ſhalbe farre otherwiſe at his laſt comming, then it now appeareth. For now we labour and trauayle as it were about the buſineſſe of one abſent, but then hee ſhall haue great aboundaunce and ſtore of honours in his hand, wherewith he will royally ſette vs vp. The manner of ſpeache ſet downe by Matthew is more ſimple and playne, Enter into thy maiſters ioy: wherby he declareth that faythful ſeruants, whoſe labours he ſhall allow ſhall be made partners with him of the bleſſed aboundaunce of all good thinges: but it is demaunded what he meaneth by this, which is added, Take the talent from him, and giue it to him that hath ten: for then all maner of occupying ſhal ceaſe. I aunſwere, that muſt be remembred, which I ſpak of before: they doe amiſſe, which doe curiouſlye ſearch euery perticular poynt. But the naturall meaning is, that though ſlouthful and vnprofitable ſeruants are now furniſhed with gifts of the ſpirit, ſpirit, at length they ſhal be ſpoyled of all, that theyr want and ſhameful pouertie may turne to the glory of the good . Chriſte ſaieth, that theſe ſlouthfull ſeruauntes doe hyde eyther their talent or piece in the earth: becauſe they wil take no paynes, while they prouide for their own pleaſures and eaſe: as we ſee manye while they giue themſelues to thēſelues and to their owne commodities, they do flye al dueties of charitye, and haue no reſpect of the common profit. VVhere it is ſayde that the maſter after his returne called his ſeruauntes to an accounte, as the good may hereby receiue comfort, beecauſe they knowye that their labour is not in vaine: ſo againe it ſtriketh no ſmall terrour to the ſlacke and ſlouthfull. Therefore let vs learne before the Lord commeth and reckoneth with vs, to reckon with our ſelues euery day of our own accorde.

v. 24. I knew that thou waſt an hard man. This hardneſſe appertaineth nothing to the ſumme of this parable: and they doe gather a fond fancye, which do here diſpute, how auſterely and ſtraightlye God dealeth with his. For it was as farre from Chriſtes purpoſe here to note any ſuch rigour, as to prayſe vſuries, when as hee bringeth in the maiſter, ſpeakinge thus: Thou oughteſt to haue put my money to the exchaungers, that at the leaſt it might haue encreaſed by vſury. Chriſt onely declareth that no excuſe ſhall ſerue for theyr ſlouth , which both ſuppreſſe the gyftes of God, and conſume their age in ydlenes. VVhereby wee doe alſo gather, that no kinde of lyfe is more commendable before God , then that whereof ſome profit doth ariſe to the ſocietie of men. This ſentence, To euery one that hath, ſhalbe giuen , is expounded beefore in the thirteene chapter.

Alſo in the eight Chapter before, we haue taught, that the vtter darknes is oppoſed to the home light. For when as in olde time the ſuppers were kept in the night, and had many torches and lamps to light them, Chriſt ſaith, that they which are caſt out of the kingdōe of God are caſt out into darknes.

LVK. 27. Morecouer, thoſe mine enemies. In this ſecond parte hee ſeemeth ſpecially to reproue the Iewes, yet hee toucheth all, which in the abſence of the maſter do bend themſelues to fall away. And Chriſt purpoſed not onely to terrifie ſuch with denouncing of horryble vengance: but alſo to keepe his in faythful obedience. For it is no light temptation to ſee the kingdome of God ſhaken with the faythleſneſſe and rebellion of many. Therefore that wee myght remayne quyet amongſt ſo manye tumultuous ſtyrres, Chriſte ſaieth, that hee will come agayne, and wyll be reuenged at hys comming of that vngodlye fallyng away.

Math. 21	Mark. 11	Luk. 19.

3. And if any manne ſaye ought vnto you, ſaye yee that the Lord hath neede of thē, and ſtraight way he will let them goe.

4. All this was done, that it might be fulfilled whiche was ſpoken by the Prophet, ſaying,

5. Tell yee the Daughter of Sion, beholde, thy king cōmeth vnto thee meeke, and ſitting vppon an Aſſe, and a Colt, the foale of an Aſſe vſed to the yeake.

6. So the diſciples went, and did as Ieſus had commaunded them:

7. And brought the Aſſe and the Colte, and putte on them their clothes, and ſette him thereon.

8. And a great multitude ſpread their garments in the way, and other cutte downe braunches from the trees, and ſtrawed them in the way.

9. Moreouer, the people that went before, and they that followed, cryed, ſayinge, Hoſanna the ſonne of Dauid: bleſſed be hee that cōmeth in the name of the lord, Hoſanna, thou which art in the higheſt heauen.

your wayes into that towne that is ouer againſt you, and as ſoone as yee ſhal enter into it, ye ſhal finde a Colte bounde, whereon neuer man ſate: loſe him, and bring him.

3. And if any man ſay vnto you, why do ye this? ſay that the Lord hath neede of him, and ſtraightway hee will ſend him hither.

4. And they wente theyr way, and found a Colt tied by the dore without, in a place where two wayes mette, and they loſed him.

5. Then certeine of them that ſtoode there, ſayde vnto them, what doe yee looſing the Colte?

6. And they ſaide vnto them, as Ieſus hadde commaunded them. So they lette them goe.

7. And they brought the Colte to Ieſus, and caſt their garments in him, and hee ſate vpon him.

8. And manye ſpread their garmentes on the way: other cut downe braunches of the trees, and ſtrawed them in the wayes.

9. And they that went before, and they that followed, cryed, ſaying, Hoſanna, bleſſed bee hee that commeth in the name of the Lord.

10. Bleſſed bee the kingdome that commeth in the name of the Lorde of our father Dauid: Heſanna, O thou which art in the higheſt heauens.

30. Sayinge, goe to the towne, which u before you, wherein aſſoone as yee are come, yee ſhall finde a Colte tyed, whereon neuer manne ſate: loſe him, and bring him hither.

31. And if anye man aske you, why yee loſe him, then ſhall yee ſaye vnto him: becauſe the Lorde hath neede of him.

32. So they that were ſent, went their waye, and found it, as he had ſaide vnto them.

33. And as they were loſinge the Colte, the owners thereof ſaide vnto them, why loſe yee the Colte?

34. And they ſayde, the Lorde hath neede of him.

35. So they brought him to Ieſus, and they caſte their garmentes on the Colte, and ſet Ieſus thereon.

36. And as he went, they ſpred their clothes in ẏ way.

37. And when hee was newe come neere to the going downe of the mounte of Olyues, the whole multitude of the diſciples began to reioyce, and to praiſe God with a loud voice, for al the great workes that they had ſeene.

38. Saying, bleſſed be the king that cōmeth in the name of the Lord: peace in heauen: & glory in the higheſt places.

Chriſte ſent for the Aſſe by his Diſciples, not becauſe he was wearye of the iourney, but to an other ende. For ſith the time of his death was now at hand, his minde was to ſhew, what ſhoulde bee the nature of his kingdome.

He

He beganne to doe so at his Baptisme: but this remained to be shewed towardes the end of his calling. For why should hee thus long abstaine from being called king, and now at the length of himselfe profesteth himselfe to be a king, but because he is not farre from the ende of hys race? Therefore the time being neere of his departure into heauen, he openly beganne his kingdome vppon earth. But this pomp had beene very ridiculous, if it had not aunswered to the prophesie of Zachary. Christ challenging a kingly honour to himselfe, entreth into Ierusalem, riding vpon an Asse, a royall shew I warrant you. Note also that he had borowed the Asse of another. Now in that he wanted saddle and other furnyture, so as his disciples were compelled to lay theyr cloathes vpon it, was a token of vile and shamefull pouertie. He had, I graunt, a great company following him, but of what manner of men, but such as vnadui sedly had runne to him out of the next villages? There are many ioyful shoutes heard: but of whome? namely, of poore men, and of the basest sort of the people: as if he had of purpose set himselfe to be scorned of all men. But, because he was to doe two thinges togeather, as to giue some shewe of his kingdome, and to teach that it is not like to earthly empires, nor stādeth in the transitory riches of this world, it was meete that hee should holde this very course. Yet this also might seeme a fonde thing to prophane men, if God had not declared before by his Prophet, þ there should come such a king to restore the sauing health of his people. Therefore least the contemptible estate of Christ should hinder vs from beholding his spirituall kingdome in this shew, let vs alwayes haue that heauenlye Oracle before our eyes, wherewith God more adorned his sonne vnder that contemptible shew of a begger, then if he should haue shone withal the ensignes of all the kinges of the earth. VVithout this sauce this hystory will neuer bee sauory to vs: therefore Matthewes wordes are of great weight, when hee saith, that the saying of the Prophet was fulfilled. For when he saw that men which are too much giuen to glorious and pompous shewes, can hardlye be brought by theyr owne wisdome of the flesshe to profitte any thing by this hystorye, he leadeth them from the simple beeholding of the thing to the consideration of the prophesie.

2. Goe into the towne. Hee borowed not the Asse to ease him in hys iourney: for being come as farre as Bethanie, hee might easily haue gone the rest of the iourney on foote. But as kinges goe vp into their charets that they may be seene a farre off: so the Lorde woulde by this meanes moue the people to look vpon him, and by some token to ratifie the cries of his followers, least any man should thinke that they gaue him the honour of a kinge againste his will. It is vncerteine from whence the Lorde commaunded them to bringe the Asse, but that it is supposed from some countreye village. For it is verye ridiculous that some doe allegorically expound it of Ierusalem. As vnapt also is that allegory which they doe coyne of the Asse and the Colte, they woulde haue the Asse to be a figure of the Iewish people, which had beene before brought vnder, and accustomed to the yoke of the law: and that the Colt whereon neuer man had rydden represented the Gentiles. And that Christe did therefore first ride vpon the Asse, because he was first to begin with the Iewes: and that then he shifted ouer to the Colt, because that he was alſo in the ſecond place ſet ouer the Gentiles. And Mat. ſeemeth to note his riding vpon them both. But conſidering this figure Synecdoche is ſo often vſed in the ſcripture, it is no meruaile if hee name two for one. But it plainely appeareth by the other Euangeliſtes, that he ridde onely vpon the Colte. And Zachary taketh away this doubt: for becauſe of the familiar vſe of the Hebrew tongue, he rehearſeth one thing twiſe. And anon yee ſhall finde. Leaſt he ſhould hinder the Diſciples from yeelding a readye obedience, the Lord ſpeedily aunſwereth theſe queſtions. And firſt he telleth them that he ſendeth them not at aduenture, when he ſaith, that at the firſt entraunce of the towne they ſhould finde a young Aſſe with his damme, then that no man ſhould hinder them, but that they ſhuld bring him, ſo that they anſwered that he had neede of it. And by this meanes he proued his Godhead. For it belongeth to God alone to knowe that, which is abſent, and to bend the heartes of men to yeeld conſente. For though it might haue beene, that the owner of the Aſſe hauing no euill opinion of him, would willingly graunt it: yet to ſay whether he ſhould be at home or no, or whether he would then lend it him, or whether he would giue credit to thoſe men vnknowne to him, it was not in mortal man to ſay. And as Chriſt ſtrengtheneth his diſciples, that they might be the readier to obey: ſo we ſee how diligent and ready they ſhewe themſelues in obeying. And the ſucceſſe declareth, that this whole matter was gouerned of God.

5. Tell yee the daughter of Sion. This is not in Zachary word for word: yet the Euangeliſt doth aptly and fitly apply that to al godlye teachers, which God gaue in commandement to one Prophet to declare. For this was the onely hope, whereupon the children of GOD ſhould ſtaye and ſtrēgthen themſelues, that the Redeemer ſhould come at the length. And therefore the Prophet teacheth that the comming of Chriſt ſhould bring full and perfect matter of reioyceing to the faythfull. For becauſe God is not otherwiſe merciful to them, but by putting a Mediatour betweene them, and the ſame Mediatour is he which delyuered his from all euilles, what can there be without him, that can comfort men loſt by their own ſinnes, and oppreſſed with miſeries. And as Chriſt being abſent, it is of neceſsity that we ſhould be altogeather ouerwhelmed with ſorowe: ſo againe the Prophet telleth the faythfull, that they haue iuſt cauſe to reioyce, when the Redeemer is preſent with them. And though he commendeth Chriſt with other titles, as that he is iuſt and furniſhed with ſaluation: yet Matthew tooke but that one poynt, which ſerued for hys purpoſe, namelye, that he ſhoulde come poore or meeke, that is vnlike to earthly kinges, which excell in royall and pompous eſtate. And this is added as a token of his pouerty, that he ſhould ride vpon an Aſſe, or the Colt of an Aſſe. For it is not to be doubted, but that hee oppoſeth thys meane manner of riding, againſt a princely pompe.

6 The diſciples went. It is already ſpoken before, that the diſciples are here commended for their diligence and readines to obey. For the authority of Chriſt was not ſo great that his bare name ſhoulde ſuffice to moue ſtraungers. Alſo it was to be feared, leaſt they ſhoulde bee charged with theft. Therefore it doth hereby appeare, howe much they credited the maiſter, in that they anſwere not againe, but truſting to his promiſe, they haſted to execute that which they were commaunded.

Let

Let vs alſo learne by their example, to go through all lets and hinderances, that we maye obey the Lorde in thoſe things, which he requireth of vs. For all lets ſet aſide, he ſhal finde paſſage, and he wil not ſuffer our endeuours to be in vaine.

5. And a great multitude. The Euangeliſtes doe here declare, that the people acknowledged Chriſt as a king. But it might ſeeme to bee but a ieſt, that the ſimple people by cutting downe of boughes, and ſpreading of garmentes in the way, ſhould giue to Chriſt the vaine title of a king. Yet as they did this in earneſt, and teſtified their obedience from their heart: ſo Chriſt accounted them as fitte harauldes or proclaymers of his kingdome. Neither is there any cauſe why we ſhould meruaile at ſuch a beginning, when as at this day alſo he now ſitting at the right hande of his father, euen frō his heauenly throane calleth obſcure men, by whō his maieſtie is ſet forth in baſe manner. That they cutte downe the boughes of Palmes (as many interpreters doe geſſe) according to an auncient and ſolemne cuſtome of that day, I ſee no probability nor likelihood. But it rather appeareth that they were moued with a ſoden inſtinct of the ſpirit, to giue this honour to Chriſt, when as the diſciples, which were examples of this matter to the reſte of the multitude, had thought of no ſuch thing: and this alſo may be gathered out of Lukes words.

9. Oſanna the Sonne of Dauid. This prayer is taken out of the Pſalm, 118.25. Matthew alſo doth purpoſely ſet down the Hebrew words, that wee might knowe that theſe greetinges were not raſhly giuen to Chriſte, nor that the Diſciples ſpake at randon without regarde, what wordes ſoeuer came vppon their tongues ende: but they reuerently followed that forme of prayer, which the holy Ghoſt by the mouth of the Prophet had taught the whole Church. For though he ſpeaketh there of his kingdome, yet no doubt, but that he had ſpeciall regard, and would haue others to haue regard to that eternall ſucceſsion, which the Lorde had promiſed him. For hee had preſcribed vnto the Church a perpetuall order for prayer, which was alſo vſed, when the wealth of the kyngdome was decayed. So it came to paſſe by cuſtome, that they euerye where vſed theſe wordes in theyr prayers for the redemption promyſed.

And Mathewes purpoſe was (as wee touched euen now) to ſet down in Hebrew a verſe notably and commonly vſed, to declare that the people acknowledged Chriſt to be the Redeemer. The pronunciation of the wordes is ſomewhat altered: for it ſhould rather haue beene ſayde, Hoſchia: na, Saue, I beſeech: but wee know that the wordes can ſcarſly be tranſlated into an other tongue, but that ſomwhat of the ſounde muſt be chaunged. And the ſpirit did not onely teach the old people to praye for the kingdome of Chriſte, but alſo preſcribeth the ſame rule vnto vs now. And when as God will not raigne but by the hande of his ſonne, the ſame is noted in theſe wordes, when wee ſaye, Thy kingdom come, as it is more plainely declared in the Pſalme. Furthermore, this praying to God, that hee would preſerue his Sonne our king, we graunt that this kingdome is not erected by manne, nor vpholden by the power of menne: but ſtandeth inuincible by his defence from heauen.

He is ſayd to come in the name of God, which doth not intrude himſelf, but taketh the kingdom at the cōmandemēt & appointment of god which.

which is more certeinely gathered out of Marke, where there is another cry ſette downe, Bleſſed be the kingdome that commeth in the name of the Lord of our father Dauid. For ſo they ſay in reſpect of the promiſes: becauſe the Lord had ſaid that he would at the length deliuer that people, & had appoynted the meane of the reſtoring of the kingdom of Dauid. Then we ſee that the honour of the Mediatour, from whom the reſtitution and ſaluation of all thinges was to be hoped for, is attributed to Chriſt. But when as they were common, rude & ſimple people, which called the kingdom of Chriſt, the kingdome of Dauid: hereby we learn that this doctrine was commonly knowne, which at this day ſeemeth to be ſo ſtraung and hard, becauſe they are but litle exerciſed in the Scriptures.

In Luke, are theſe few wordes added, Peace in heauen, and glory in the higheſt places. VVherein there is no difficulty, but that they aunſwere not to the ſong of the Aungels, which we had in the ſecond chapter. For there the Aungelles aſsigne the glory to God in the heauens, and peace to menne vpon the earth: here the peace aſswell as the glory is referred to GOD. Yet in the ſenſe there is no diuerſitie. For though the Aungels do ſhew the cauſe more plainely, why it was meete that glory ſhould be ſong to God: (namely, becauſe that by his mercy men enioy peace in this world) yet the meaning is all one, of that, and this that the multitude now ſaith, that peace is in heauen: for we know that miſerable ſoules can otherwiſe haue no peace in the world, except God reconcile himſelf vnto thē from heauen.

Math.	Mark.	Luke. 19.
		41. And when he was come neere, hee behelde the citie, and wept for it,
		42. Saying, O, if thou hadſt euen knowne at the leaſt in this day thoſe thinges, which belong vnto thy peace! but now are they hid from thine eyes.
		43. For the dayes ſhal come vpon thee, that thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench about thee, and compaſſe thee round, and keepe thee in on euery ſide,
		44. And ſhal make thee euen with the grounde, and thy children which are in thee: and they ſhall not leaue in thee a ſtone vpon a ſtone, becauſe thou kneweſt not the time of thy viſitation.

41. Hee wept vpon it. VVhen as Chriſte deſired nothing more, then to diſcharge that office layde vpon him by his father, and he knew that this was the end of his calling, to gather together the loſt ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael: he deſired that his comming might be to the ſauing health of al men. This was the cauſe why he being moued with mercy, wept for the deſtruction of the citie of Ieruſalem, which was at hand. For when hee conſidered that it was choſen of God to be the ſacred ſeate, wherin the couenaunt of eternal ſaluation ſhould reſt, and the ſanctuary frō whence ſaluation ſhould proceede into the whole world: it could not be but that he ſhould greatly bewayle the deſtruction of it. Alſo, when he ſhould ſee the the people which he had adopted into the hope of eternall life, miserably to perish through their own vnthankfulnes and malice: it is no meruaile if he could not refraine from teares. Some thinke it an absurditie that Christ should bewaile that mischiefe, which he could haue remedied, but this knot is easily dissolued. For as hee descended from heauen, that by taking vpon him the flesh of man, he might be a witnesse and minister of the saluation of God: so tooke hee vpon him indeede humane affections, so farre forth as was meete for the calling he had taken vpon him. And that must alwayes be wisely noted, what person hee taketh vpon him when he speaketh, or laboureth for the saluation of men, as in this place, that he might faithfully fulfill the commaundement of the father, it was necessary for him to seeke that the fruite of the redemption might extend to the whole body of the elect people. Therefore for so much as he was appoynted a minister of saluation to this people, hee bewailed their destruction in respect of his office. He was God, I graunt: but as oft as he supplied the office of a teacher, his Godhead rested, and after a sorte hid it selfe, least it should be any hinderaunce to him in dooing the office of a Mediatour. But by this weeping he declared, that he did not onely loue them brotherly, for whose sake he was made manne, but that God had also powred into his humane nature the spirit of a fatherly affection.

42. O, if thou hadst knowne. This speach is patheticall or affectionate, and therefore abrupt. For wee know that they which are moued with vehement affections, can vtter but halfe their meaninges. Note also that two affections are mixed here together. For Christ doth not onely take pitie of the destructiō of the citie, but he also reproueth this vnthankful people of a haynous offence, in that they refusing saluation offred thē, could willingly vpon them the horrible iudgmēt of god. And the copulatiue which is put betweene is very forceable. For Christ doth secretely cōpare Ierusalem with the other cities of Iudea and of the whole woorlde, in this sense: If thou also, which hast a speciall prieledge aboue the reste of the world, if thou (I say) at least, which art a celestiall sanctuarie vppon earth hadst known. Presently there followeth after an other amplification gathered of the time. Though hetherto thou hast wickedly, vngodly and stubbornely behaued thy selfe against God, nowe at the length, it were time for thee to repent. For he sieweth that the day is now come, which was ordained before in the secrete counsell of God, and spoken of beefore by the Prophetes for the saluation of Ierusalem. This is the acceptable tyme (saith Isaias, 49.8. and 2. Cor. 6.2.) This is the day of saluation. Seeke the Lord while he may be found: call vppon him, while hee is neere, Esay, 55.6. By this word peace he noteth after the Hebrew phrase all poyntes of happinesse. Hee dooth not simplye saye that Ierusalem knewe not her peace, but those thinges which belonged to peace: for it falleth often out, that men are not ignoraunt of theyr happynesse: but the waye and meanes (as they saye) they knowe not, they are so blinded with malice. But sith this reproofe is mixed with mercy, lette vs note that the excellenter giftes menne are endued with, the greater punishment are they worthy of, beecause that to their other sinnes is added a sacrilegious prophanation of the heauenly grace.

Secondly, let vs note that the neerer God approacheth vnto vs, and proffereth the light of ſound doctrine, if we neglect this occaſion, we are ſo much the leſſe to be excuſed. The gate of ſaluation is alwayes open: but becauſe he ſomtime is ſilent, it is no ſmal nor common benefit, when as he calleth vs vnto him with a loud voice and familiarlye: and therefore there remaineth the ſharper reuenge for that contempt. But now are they hidde. This is not ſpoken for the leſſening of the fault of Ieruſalem: for her wonderfull blockiſhneſſe is noted as a ſhamefull cauſe, why ſhee could not ſee God being preſent. I graunt that it belongeth only vnto GOD to open the eyes of the minde of them that are blinde: and no man can be able to ſee the miſteries of the heauenly kingdome, but hee whome GOD lyghteneth inwardlye with his ſpirite: but they are not therefore worthye of forgiueneſſe, which periſhe through their owne beaſtlye blindneſſe. Chriſte alſo purpoſed to take awaye the offence, which otherwiſe might be a hinderaunce to the rude and weake. For when as the eyes of al men were caſt vpon that citie, the example of that Citie was of great importaunce of both ſides eyther to worke myſchiefe or to doe good. Therefore leaſt theyr incredulitie and proude contempt of the Goſpell ſhould hinder any man, it is condemned of filthy blindnes.

43. The daies ſhall come vpon thee. Nowe taking vppon him, as it were the perſon of a iudge, he rebuketh Ieruſalem more ſtarply. So alſo the Prophets, thoughe they lamented with teares their deſtruction, for whome they ought to be carefull, yet they gather their courage and hearts, and fal to ſeuere threatnings: becauſe they knowe that not onely the care of the ſaluation of men was laied vppon them: but alſo that they were appoynted preachers of Gods iudgements. Further, he ſayeth that Ieruſalem for this cauſe ſhould ſuffer horrible puniſhments, becauſe ſhee knewe not the time of her viſitation: that is, they contemned the redeemer whiche was ſent them, and did not embrace nor accept his fauour. Nowe let the crueltye of the puniſhments which they ſuffered terrifie vs, leaſt we with our ſlouthfulneſſe doe put out the light of ſaluation, but lette vs be carefull to receiue the grace of God: yea let vs ſpeedily runne foorth to meete it.

Math. 21.	Mark.	Luk. 19.
10. And when he was come into Ieruſalem, all the Citie was moued, ſayinge, who is this?	11 So Ieſus entred into Ieruſalem, and into the Temple: and when he had looked about on all thinges, and nowe it was euening, hee wente forth vnto Bethania with the twelue.	39. Then ſome of the Phariſes of the company ſaide vnto him, maiſter, rebuke thy diſciples.
11. And the people ſaide, this is Ieſus the prophet of Nazaret in Galile.	12 And on the morowe, when they were come out from Bethania, he was hungry.	40. But he anſwered & ſaid vnto them, I tell you, that if theſe ſhoulde holde their peace, the ſtones would cry.
12. And Ieſus wente into the temple of God, and caſte out all them that ſolde and bought	13. And ſeeing a figtree a farre off, that had leaues, hee went	A litle after. 45. Hee wente alſo into the bought in the Temple, and ouerthrewe the tables of the money chaungers, & the seats of them that sold doues,

13. And said vnto them, it is written, mine house shal be called the house of prayer: but yee haue made it a denne of theeues.

14. Then the blind and the halt came to him in the temple, and he healed them.

15. But when the chiefe Priestes and Scribes sawe the meruailes that he did, & the children crying in the temple, and sayinge, Hosanna, the sonne of Dauid, they disdayned,

16. And sayde vnto him, hearest thou what these saye? And Iesus sayde vnto them, yea: reade yee neuer by the mouth of babes and sucklinges thou hast made perfecte the prayse?

17. So hee left them, and went out of the Citie vnto Bethania, and loged there.

18. And in the morninge, as hee returned into the citie, he was hungry.

19. And seeing a figgetree in the way, hee came to it, & founde nothinge thereon, but leaues onely, and saide to it: neuer fruit grow on thee hence forwardes. And anon the figtree withered.

20 And when his disciples saw it, they meruailed, saying, how soone is the figtree withered?

21. And went to see if hee might finde any thing thereon: but when he came vnto it, he found nothing but leaues: for the time of figs was not yet.

14. Then Iesus awnswered and said to it: neuer man eate fruite of thee hereafter while the world standeth: and his disciples heard it.

15. And they came to Ierusalem, and Iesus went into the Temple, and beganne to cast out them, that solde and bought in the Temple, and ouerthrew the tables of the money chaungers, and the seates of them that sold Doues.

16. Neither would he suffer that any many should carye a vessel through the temple.

17. And hee taught, saying vnto them, is it not written, mine house shal be called the house of praier vnto all nations? but you haue made it a denne of theeues.

18. And the Scribes and high Priestes hearde it, and sought how to destroy him: for they feared him: beecause the whole multitude was astonied at his doctrine.

19. But when euen was come, Iesus went out of the city.

19. And in the morning as they passed by, they saw the fig tree dried vp from the rootes.

21. Then Peter remembred, and said vnto him, maister, behold, the figgetree, which thou cursedst is withered.

22. And Iesus answered and said vnto them, haue fayth in God.

the Temple, and began to caste out them that solde therein, and them that bought.

46. Saying vnto them, it is written, mine house is the house of prayer, but ye haue made it a denne of theeues.

47. And he taught daily in the temple. And the high priests, & the Scribes, and the chiefe of the people sought to destroy him.

48. But they could not finde what they might doe to him: for all the people hanged vppon him, when they heard him.

21. And Ieſus anſwered and ſayde vnto them, verelye I ſaye vnto you, if yee haue faith, and doubt not, yee ſhall not onely doe that, which I haue doone to the figtree, but alſo if you ſaye to this mountaine, take thy ſelfe awaye, and caſt thy ſelfe into the ſea, it ſhalbe done.

22. And whatſoeuer yee ſhal aſke in prayer, if ye beleeue, yee ſhal receiue it.

23. For verelye I ſaye vnto you, that whoſoeuer ſhall ſay vnto this mountaine, take thy ſelfe away, and caſte thy ſelfe into the ſea, and ſhall not waner in his heart, but ſhall beleeue that thoſe thinges which he ſaieth, ſhall come to paſſe, whatſoeuer hee ſaith ſhalbe done to him.

24. Therefore I ſaye vnto you, whatſoeuer yee deſire when ye pray, beleeue that ye ſhall haue it, and it ſhalbe done vnto you.

There ſeemeth to be ſome diuerſitie betweene Mathew and Mark in the report of the hyſtory of the withering of the figgetree. For Mathew ſaith that this was doone the next day after Chriſt hadde ſhewed himſelfe as a king: but Marke ſeemeth to referre it to the day following that. Yet the aunſwere is eaſie: for in this they agree, that Chriſt accurſed the tree, when he came into the citie, the next day after his ſolemne entraunce. Onely Marke reporteth (that which Matthew omitted) that the diſciples marked it the day following. Therefore though Mark noted the order of time more diſtinctlye, yet there is no diuerſitie betweene them. He ſeemeth to differ aſwell from Matthew, as from Luke in the hyſtory of reforming of the buying and ſelling. For when as both of them ſaye that Chriſt draue out the buyers and the ſellers aſſoone as he entred into the citie and Temple: Marke ſimply ſaith, that he looked about vpon all thinges: but referreth that caſting of them forth to an other day. But I do thus reconcile it, that when as he hadde not ſpoken of the cleanſing of the temple, and had after ſet it in an other place; hee ſaith that he came the firſt day into the temple, and there looked aboute vpon all thinges. For to what end did he looke ſo diligently about, but that he might reforme ſowhat that was amiſſe? For he was wont to viſit the temple often, ſo that it was not the newneſſe of the ſight that moued him. Further, where as Marke ſhould haue added preſently after the caſting of them out of the Temple, which bought and ſolde there, hee ſaith that Chriſt went out of the citie: and that which hee had omitted worthy of rehearſall, he reporteth after. Except that any man had rather ſay, that Marke in this hyſtory alſo obſerued the circumſtaunce of the time, which was omitted by the other two. For though they ſeeme to keepe a continuall courſe in the text: yet becauſe they ſet downe no certeine day, it were no abſurditie to deuide that which is read ioyntlye togeather in them. Yet I doe rather allowe of that opinion, which I ſette downe beefore. For it is verye lykely that Chriſte before that great aſſembly of the people ſhewed that great token of hys power. But whoſoeuer ſhall obſerue howe litle curioſitie the Euangeliſtes doe vſe in noting the tymes, the diuerſitie in ſetting down this hiſtory wil not offend them.

20. When he was come into Ieruſalem. Mathew ſaith that the citie was moued, that we might know that it was not a matter don ſecretly, nor by ſtelth, but but in the sight of all the people the Priestes and Scribes knowing of it. VVherefore the maiestie of the spirite euidentlye appeared in that contemptible estate of the flesh. For how would al men haue suffred Christ to their great perill to bee brought into the Citie in a kingly pompe, if they had not beene all amased? Therefore this is the summe, Christ entred not secretely, neyther were his enemies content therewith: for they despised him: but were rather restrained by a secrete feare, because that God had striken them, so that they durst not attempt any thing. In the meane season the slouthfull security of the city is reproued, and the religion of straungers is commended. For in that the Citisens hearing that noyse, doe demaund who that should bee, it appeareth that they are not of the company of them that followed Christ.

12. Iesus entred into the temple. VVhen as he had gone often vp into the temple, and had seene this corruption, he put his hand but twyse to reforme the same: once at the beginning of his ambassage, and nowe agayne when hee was come nye to the ende of the same. But sith there reigned filthy and prophane confusion, and the temple with the sacrificers was appoynted to be destroyed, it was sufficient for Christe twyse to reproue openly the prophaning of the same. VVhen as hee shewed himself a prophet and a teacher sent from God, that he might waken the Iewes, and make them the more attentiue, he tooke vpon him to cleanse the temple. And onely Iohn toucheth this former historye in his seconde chapter. And now towardes the end of his course, he againe challenging the same authority to himselfe, admonisheth the Iewes of the pollutions of the temple, and sheweth withall that there is a newe reformation at hand. And in the meane season it is not to bee doubted but that hee shewed himselfe both king, and high Priest, and president of the temple, & of the worshippe of God: which must therefore bee noted, least anye priuate manne thinke it lawfull for him to doe the lyke. It is meete that all godlye menne shoulde haue this zeale, wherewith Christ was moued to doe this: but least any manne vnder pretence of immitation shoulde runne headlong rashly, it must be seene what his calling wyll beare, and how farre it behoueth vs to goe by the commandement of GOD. If any corruptions shall creepe into the Church of God, let all the children of God be grieued: but because God hath not armed euery mans hand, let them which are priuate men sigh for sorowe, vntyll God shall giue remedy.

I graunt that they are to too blockish, that are not displeased with the pollution of the temple of God: neither is it sufficient for them to be inwardly grieued, except they abstaine from that corruption, and testifie with theyr tongue so ofte as occasion shall suffer, that they desire that such thinges should be reformed. But they which haue not publike authoritie, the faultes which they cannot remedy with the hand, let them speak against with the tong, which they haue at liberty. Yet it is demanded, when as Christe sawe the temple stuffed with grosse superstitions, whye should he only reforme that so smal a corruption, or at leaste more tollerable amongst them. I aunswere, it was not Christes purpose to restore al the holy ceremonies into their auncient vse, neither did he make choyce, which corruptions were greater or leſſer: but onelye bent to this to ſhew by this one viſible ſigne, that God hadde committed to him the charge of reforming the Temple, and would alſo declare that the worſhippe of GOD was corrupted by this filthy and palpable abuſe. They wanted not a pretence for that merchandiſe as that it eaſed the people of much trouble, that ſacrifices ſhuld not be farre to ſeeke: alſo that there might be money ready at hand, for euery man that would offer. Neither were the tables for the money chaungers ſet, or the ſacrifices offred to be ſolde, in the ſanctuarye, but onelye in the courte or porch, whiche is ſometime called by the name of the temple. But becauſe that nothinge was more inconuenient to the maieſtie of the temple, then to haue a market ſet vp there of thinges to be ſold, and to haue the money chaungers ſit there to make their gaine by exchaunge, this prophanation was not to be borne with. And Chriſt inueighed ſharplye againſt the ſame, for that it appeared that the couetouſnes of the Prieſtes for filthye gaine ſake, had brought in that cuſtō. For as he which entreth into a ſhop richlyfurniſhed with diuers kinds of wares, though he purpoſeth to buy nothing, yet being caught by thoſe baightes, altereth his purpoſe, ſo the prieſts caſt forth their nets to catch offrings, that they might milk ſome gaine from euery one of them.

13. It is written. Chriſte bringeth two teſtimonies taken out of two Prophetes: one out of the fiftie ſixe Chapter of Iſaiah, the other out of the ſeuenth of Ieremy. Further, that which Iſaiah writte agreed to the circumſtaunce of the time: for there is the calling of the Gentiles foretolde. Therefore Iſaiah promiſeth that God will not onely bringe to paſſe, that the Temple ſhalbe reſtored to the former bewtie, but alſo that all the Gentyles ſhall come from euery place thither. It is certeine that he ſpeaketh metaphoricallye: for the Prophetes doe vnder the ſhadowes of the law ſet forth the ſpirituall worſhippe of God, which ſhuld be vnder the kingdome of Chriſt. But this was neuer fulfilled, that all people ſhould come to Ieruſalem to worſhippe. Therfore when he ſaith that the Temple ſhall be the place of prayer for all the Gentiles, is aſmuch as if he ſhould haue ſayde, the Gentiles ſhall be gathered into the Church of God, that togeather with the children of Abrahā they might with one mouth call vpon the true GOD. But becauſe hee maketh mention of the temple, for ſomuch as it was then the viſible ſeate and place of religion, Chriſt dooth worthily reproue the Iewes, for that they moſt vilelye applyed the ſame to other vſes, then thoſe whereto it was ordained.
